HISTORY OF LITCHFIELD COUNTY CONNECTICUT

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS

now 26

1. Woodbury 1674
2. Litchfield 1724
3. New Milford 1725
4. Torrington 1732
5. New Hartford 1738
6. Harwinton 1737
7. Kent 1739
8. Canaan 1739
9. Sharon 1739
10. Cornwall 1740
11. Salesbury 1745
12. Goshen 1749
13. Norfolk 1758
14. Winchester 1771
15. Barkhamsted 1779
16. Washington 1779
17. Colebrook 1779
18. Weleton 1780
19. Warren 1786
20. Bethlehem 1787
21. Plymouth 1795
22. Roxbury 1801
23. Bridgewater 1856
24. North Canaan 1858
25. Morris 1859
26. Thomaston 1875

orginal 11

1. Canaan
2. Cornwall
3. Goshen
4. Harwinton
5. Kent
6. New Hartford
7. New Milford
8. Salisbury
9. Sharon
10. Torrington
11. Woodbury

HISTORY

OF

LITCHFIELD COUNTY,

CONNECTICUT,

WITH

ILLUSTRATIONS AND BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

OF ITS

PROMINENT MEN AND PIONEERS.

PHILADELPHIA:
J. W. LEWIS & CO.,
1881.

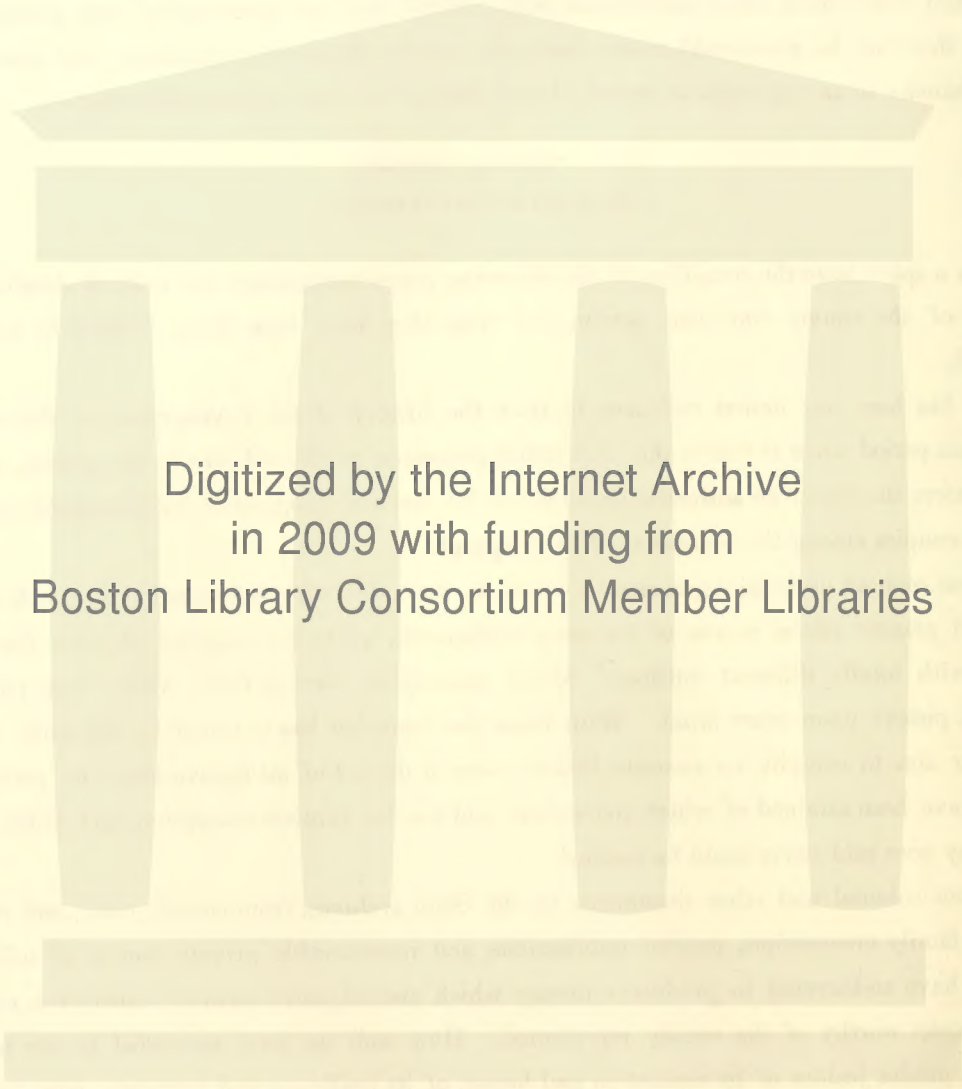
PRESS OF J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO., PHILADELPHIA.

PREFATORY.

THE province of the historian is to gather the threads of the past ere they elude forever his grasp, and weave them into a harmonious web, to which the "art preservative" may give immortality; therefore he who would rescue from oblivion the deeds of a community, and send them on to futurity in an imperishable record, should deliver "a plain, unvarnished tale,"—

> "Nothing extenuate,
> Nor aught set down in malice."

In such a spirit have the compilers of the following pages approached the work of detailing the history of the county embodied herein, and trust they have been fairly faithful to the task imposed.



It has been our honest endeavor to trace the history of the development of this section from that period when it was in the undisputed possession of the red men to the present, and to place before the reader an authentic narrative of its rise and progress to the prominent position it now occupies among the counties of New England.

That such an undertaking is attended with no little difficulty and vexation none will deny; the aged pioneer relates events of the early settlements, while his neighbor sketches the same events with totally different outlines. Man's memory is ever at fault, while Time paints a different picture upon every mind. With these the historian has to contend; and while it has been our aim to compile an accurate history, were it devoid of all inaccuracies that perfection would have been attained of which the writers had not the faintest conception, and which Lord Macaulay once said never could be reached.

From colonial and other documents in the State archives, from county, town, and village records, family manuscripts, printed publications, and innumerable private sources of information, we have endeavored to produce a history which should prove accurate, instructive, and in every respect worthy of the county represented. How well we have succeeded in our task a generous public, jealous of its reputation and honor, of its traditions and triumphs, must now be the judge.

We desire to acknowledge our sincere thanks to the editorial fraternity generally for much valuable information, which has greatly lessened our labor in the preparation of this work, and also to each and every one who has assisted in its compilation, and would cheerfully make personal mention of each, but it is impracticable, as the number reaches over a thousand.

PHILADELPHIA, June 10, 1881.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2009 with funding from Boston Library Consortium Member Libraries

http://www.archive.org/details/historyoflitchfi00jwle

CONTENTS.

HISTORICAL.

CHAPTER I.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

Geographical—Topographical—Organization of Litchfield County—Location of County-Seat—Conflicting Claims—First County Officials—County Buildings—List of Sheriffs, Treasurers, Clerks, and State's Attorneys from 1751 to 1882—Chief Judges Court of Common Pleas from 1751 to 1854 13

CHAPTER II.

BENCH AND BAR 14

CHAPTER III.

MEDICAL HISTORY.

Organization of Medical Association in 1767—Early Physicians—Names of Members of Medical Society from 1808, with Dates of Admission—List of Presidents and Secretaries from 1808 to 1881—Present Members—Present Officers 48

CHAPTER IV.

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Second Regiment—The Fifth Regiment—The Eighth Regiment—The Ninth Regiment—The Tenth Regiment—The Eleventh Regiment—The Twelfth Regiment—The Thirteenth Regiment 50

CHAPTER V.

MILITARY HISTORY (Continued).

THE NINETEENTH REGIMENT 53

CHAPTER VI.

MILITARY HISTORY (Continued).

The Twenty-third Regiment—The Twenty-eighth Regiment—First Regiment Heavy Artillery 98

CHAPTER VII.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

The Housatonic Railroad—The Naugatuck Railroad—The Connecticut Western—The Shepaug—The New Haven and Northampton 100

CHAPTER VIII.

POPULATION AND SCHOOL STATISTICS.

Population of Litchfield County 104

CHAPTER IX.

LITCHFIELD.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indian Purchase—The Explorations of the Township—List of Proprietors—The Town Divided into Sixty Shares—Court of Probate, 1719—Original Cost of the Town—One Penny Three Farthings per Acre—The Patent of Litchfield—The First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—"House Lots"—The Pioneer Homes—The Forts—Indian Depredations—Incident—Litchfield in the French War, 1755-63—Names of Soldiers 105

CHAPTER X.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

First Indications of Revolutionary Spirit in Litchfield—Letter of Aaron Burr—The First Company of Soldiers—Capt. Bezaleel Beebe—The Bowling Green Statue of George III. Demolished—Carried to Litchfield—Converted into Cartridges—Continental Stores—Army Workshops—Prisoners of War—Arrest of David Matthews, Mayor of New York—Conveyed to Litchfield—Governor Franklin a Prisoner here—Visit of Count Rochambeau and Gen. Lafayette—Gen. Washington Visits the Village—Various Votes of the Town—Rev. Judah Champion's Prayer—Resident British Soldiers—Incidents, etc., etc 110

CHAPTER XI.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

Ethan Allen—Elisha Sheldon—Oliver Wolcott—Andrew Adams—Bezaleel Beebe—Jedediah Strong—Benjamin Talmadge—Tapping Reeve—Moses Seymour—Elisha Mason 120

CHAPTER XII.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

Congregational Church, Litchfield—Congregational Church, Milton—Congregational Church, Northfield—St. Michael's Church, Litchfield—Methodist Church, Litchfield—St. Paul's Church, Bantam Falls—Trinity Church, Milton—Baptist Church, Bantam Falls—Roman Catholic Church, Litchfield 129

CHAPTER XIII.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

The Village of Litchfield—Incorporation—First Officers—Presidents and Clerks from 1818 to 1882—Borough Organization—The Press—The Weekly Monitor and American Advertiser—The Witness—The Editors Convicted of Libel—Imprisoned—Political Excitement throughout Immediate and Distant States—Grand Oration to the Imprisoned Editor—Excitement in the Town—The Litchfield Gazette—The Litchfield Journal—The Litchfield Republican—The Miscellany—The American Eagle—The Litchfield County Post—The Litchfield Enquirer—The Litchfield Democrat—The Litchfield Sun—The Mercury—The Democratic Watchman—The Litchfield Republican—The Litchfield Sentinel—The Litchfield Law-School—The Post-Office—Banks—Savings Society—Insurance Company—"Spring Hill"—St. Paul's Lodge, No. 11, F. and A. M.—Minerals—Temperance in 1789—Slavery in Litchfield—Bantam Falls—Northfield—Milton—Biographical Notes—College Graduates—Physicians—Lawyers 137

CHAPTER XIV.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

Incorporation of the Town—First Town Officers Elected—Representatives from 1740-1882—Military History 152

CHAPTER XV.

WINCHESTER.

Geographical—Topographical—List of Proprietors of Winchester—Allotment of Lands—Survey, etc.—Indian History—First Conveyance of Land—First Roads—The Pioneers—Their Locations—Incidents of Pioneer Life—Initial Events—Reminiscences of Mrs. Swift—The First Forge—The Pioneer Grist-Mill—The First Saw-Mill—The Revolution—Names of Soldiers, etc.—Assessment Roll of 1783 167

CHAPTER XVI.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

Pioneers in Winsted Society—Manufacturing Interests—The Winsted Bank—The Hurlbut Bank—The Hurlbut National Bank—The First National Bank—The Winsted National Bank—The Winsted Savings Bank—The Mechanics' Savings Bank—St. Andrew Lodge, No. 64, F.

and A. M.—Meridian Chapter—Tyrian Council—Orion and Union Lodges, I. O. of O. F.—Temperance Organizations—Palmer Post—Knights of Pythias—Libraries—Early Schools—The Winsted Herald—The Winsted Press—The Winsted News—Post-Office Difficulties—List of Old Inhabitants—The Borough of Clifton—The Borough of Winsted—Incorporation—First Officers Elected—Wardens from 1858 to 1881—Burgesses from 1858 to 1881—Clerks, Treasurers, and Bailiffs from 1858 to 1881—Water-Works—Fire Department, etc.—Population of Town from 1756 to 1880 186

CHAPTER XVII.

WINCHESTER (Continued)..... 198

CHAPTER XVIII.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

First Congregational Church, Winchester—First Congregational Church, Winsted—Second Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—St. James' Church—St. Joseph's Church—The Women's Christian Temperance Union..... 206

CHAPTER XIX.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary History—List of Senators—Representatives—Judges of Probate—Town Clerks—Selectmen—Military Record..... 216

CHAPTER XX.

BARKHAMSTED..... 237

CHAPTER XXI.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued)..... 239

CHAPTER XXII.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued)..... 243

CHAPTER XXIII.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued)..... 246

CHAPTER XXIV.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued)..... 249

CHAPTER XXV.

BETHLEHEM.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Grant—The Indian Purchase—The Survey—The First Settlements—The Pioneers—Petitions for "Winter Privileges"—Incidents—Prices of Provisions in 1747—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Christ Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Bethlehem Library Associations—Physicians—The "Great Sickness" of 1760—Civil and Military History—Organization of Town—Officers Elected—Town Clerks—Selectmen from 1787 to 1881—Representatives from 1787 to 1881—Present (1881) Town Officers—Military Record..... 251

CHAPTER XXVI.

BRIDGEWATER.

Geographical—Topographical—Incorporation of Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—List of Town Clerks—Representatives from 1857 to 1881—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—St. Mark's Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Baptist Church—Roman Catholic Church—Grand List, 1881—Military Record..... 255

CHAPTER XXVII.

CANAAN.

Geographical—Topographical—The Housatonic Falls—Sale of the Town—First Meeting of Proprietors—Held at Wethersfield—Name of the Town—First Settlement of the Town—Names of Pioneers and Grantees—Early Births and Marriages—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church, South Canaan—Congregational Church, Falls Village—Methodist Episcopal Church, Falls Village—The Iron Bank—The Falls Village Savings Bank..... 264

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CANAAN (Continued).

Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meetings—Bounty on Rattlesnake Tails—Religious Service—The Ringing of Swine—Pounds—Church Service—Extracts from Town Records—Unwholesome Inhabitants—Fire-Locks—Grist-Mill—New County—Petition for Bank—Trouble with Proprietors—Inhabitants Admitted—Bounty on "Squirrels," etc.—List of Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military Record..... 267

CHAPTER XXIX.

COLEBROOK.

Geographical—Topographical—Towns Patented to Hartford and Windsor—The Controversy—Survey of the Town—Ministerial and School Lots—Initial Events—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Highways—Early Settlers and their Locations—The First Death—The First Birth—The Church Controversy—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Representatives from 1796 to 1882—Military Record..... 274

CHAPTER XXX.

CORNWALL.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indians—"Tom Warrups"—Sale of the Town—Its Bounds—The First Meeting of Proprietors—Early Regulations—The First Settlers and their Locations—Grand List of 1742—Family Sketches—The Old Emmons Tavern—The Whipping-Post and Stocks..... 287

CHAPTER XXXI.

CORNWALL (Continued).

Congregational Church, Cornwall—Congregational Church, North Cornwall—Cornwall and Sharon Baptist Church—Baptist Church, Cornwall Hollow—Baptist Church, East Cornwall—Methodist Episcopal Church, Cornwall Bridge—Educational—The Foreign Mission-School—Cream Hill Agricultural School—W. C. and Miss L. Rogers' School—Noah R. and E. Burton Hart's School—Young Ladies' Institute—The Alger Institute—Physicians—Cemeteries—Organization of Town—Representatives from 1761 to 1882—Soldiers of the Revolution—Soldiers of the Rebellion, 1861-65..... 300

CHAPTER XXXII.

GOSHEN.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—The Laying Out of the Town—New Bantam—Goshen—Troubles between the Town and the Colony—The Mob—Committee of Investigation—Settlement of the Controversy—The First Grant and Survey—The Surveyor—The College Farm—Division of the Town into Rights—First Proprietors' Meeting—The First Birth—The First Meeting-House—The Pioneer Minister—The Pioneer Taverns—Location of Early Settlers—Pioneer Merchants—The First Saw- and Grist-Mill, etc..... 322

CHAPTER XXXIII.

GOSHEN (Continued)..... 333

CHAPTER XXXIV.

GOSHEN (Continued).—ECCLESIASTICAL, CIVIL, AND MILITARY.

The Congregational Church—The Episcopal Church—The Methodist Episcopal Church—Methodist Episcopal Church, North Goshen—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Extracts from Records—Representatives from 1700 to 1880—Military History—The Heroes of Three Wars—The French War—War of the Revolution—War of the Rebellion—Names of Soldiers—Interesting Statistics..... 346

CHAPTER XXXV.

HARWINTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Original Proprietors—The Pioneers—Early Schools—Votes—The Revolution—Names of Soldiers, etc.. 374

CHAPTER XXXVI.

HARWINTON (Continued).

The Congregational Church—The Episcopal Church—Incorporation—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Representatives from 1757 to 1882—Military..... 379

CHAPTER XXXVII.

KENT.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indians—The Moravians—The Grant—First Proprietors' Meeting—List of Proprietors—The First Settlements—Grand List, 1745—The First School—The Congregational Church—St. Andrew's Church—St. Luke's Lodge, No. 48, F. and A. M.—Civil History—Incorporation of Town—The First Town-Meeting—First Marriage, Births, etc.—Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military Record..... 384

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

MORRIS.

Geographical—Topographical—Pioneer Settlement—Parish of South Farms Incorporated—History of Congregational Church—The Advent Society—James Morris and Morris Academy—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Extracts from Societies' Records—Representatives from 1860 to 1882—Military Record..... 388

CHAPTER XXXIX.

NEW HARTFORD..... 393

CHAPTER XL.

NEW MILFORD.

Geographical—Topographical—Indian History—Documentary History—Original Indian Deed, etc..... 422

CHAPTER XLI.

NEW MILFORD (Continued).

Early Explorations—Purchases—Indian Map of the Town—The Patent—The First Settlement—First Proprietors' Meeting—List of Original Proprietors—Initial Events—The North Purchase—Names of Proprietors—Biographical Notes of Some of the First Settlers—Town Hill and Town Street..... 426

CHAPTER XLII.

NEW MILFORD (Continued).

Home-Lots of Original Purchasers—Proprietors of Common Fields—Proprietors' Meetings—Record of Highways..... 438

CHAPTER XLIII.

NEW MILFORD (Continued)..... 445

CHAPTER XLIV.

NEW MILFORD (Continued).

Congregational Church, New Milford—Methodist Episcopal Church, New Milford—Methodist Episcopal Church, Gaylordsville—Baptist Church, Northville—Baptist Church, Gaylordsville—Jemima Wilkinson, the Universal Friend—Quaker Society—Roman Catholic Church. 451

CHAPTER XLV.

NEW MILFORD (Continued).

The Press—The New Milford Republican—The New Milford Journal—The Housatonic Ray—The New Milford Gazette—First National Bank—Savings Bank—Library—St. Peter's Lodge, No. 21, F. and A. M.—Ousatonic Chapter, No. 33, R. A. M.—Good Shepherds' Lodge, No. 65, I. O. O. F.—Fire Department—Adelphic Institute—Old Advertisements—The Tobacco Interest—Grand List, 1880—Incorporation of Town—Representatives from 1725 to 1881—Probate Judges from 1787 to 1881—Military History..... 455

CHAPTER XLVI.

NORFOLK.

Geographical—Topographical—The Pioneers—Sale of the Town—First Proprietors' Meeting—War of the Revolution—Names of Soldiers—Labor Regulations, 1778—Pioneer Mills—Schools—The First Post-Office—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Temperance Society—Civil History—Incorporation of the Town—List of Representatives from 1722 to 1881—List of Physicians—College Graduates—Military History—Names of Soldiers—Soldiers' Monument..... 468

CHAPTER XLVII.

NORTH CANAAN.

Geographical—Topographical—Incorporation of the Town—The Revolution—Incidents—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Selectmen from 1859 to 1882—Clerks from 1859 to 1882—Probate Judges from 1847 to Present Time—Representatives from 1859 to 1882—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Christ Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Connecticut Western News—Villages—Military Record..... 482

CHAPTER XLVIII.

PLYMOUTH.

The First Settlements—The Old Lead-Mine—Petition for "Liberty of Planting"—Petition for Winter Privileges—Charter of the Town—Organization of the Society, etc..... 486

CHAPTER XLIX.

PLYMOUTH (Continued).

Congregational Church, Plymouth—Congregational Church, Terryville—St. Peter's Church, Plymouth..... 492

CHAPTER L.

PLYMOUTH (Continued)..... 500

CHAPTER LI.

ROXBURY.

Organization—Topographical—The Indians—The First Exploration—The First Settlements—Initial Events—The War of the Revolution—Ethan Allen—Col. Seth Warner—Capt. Remember Baker—War of 1812—The Schools—Prominent Citizens—Physicians, etc.—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Episcopal Church—The Baptist Church—The Methodist Church—Civil and Military—Organization of Town—List of Representatives from 1797 to 1881—Organization of Probate District—List of Judges—Military Record..... 512

CHAPTER LII.

SALISBURY.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indians—The First Purchase of Lands—The First Grant—The First Settlements—Early Highways—The Pioneers—Early Schools—Iron Interests—Lawyers, Physicians—Prominent Citizens—Grand List, 1742—Market-Place—The First Post-office—Pioneer Mill—Indian Mounds—The Revolution—War of 1812—The Iron Interests..... 518

CHAPTER LIII.

SALISBURY (Continued)..... 533

CHAPTER LIV.

SALISBURY (Continued).

Congregational Church—St. John's Church—Trinity Church, Lime Rock—Methodist Episcopal, Lakeville—Methodist Episcopal, Lime Rock—Catholic, Lakeville..... 541

CHAPTER LV.

SALISBURY (Continued).—CIVIL AND MILITARY.

First Proprietors' Meeting—Incorporation of the Town—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary—Origin of the Name of Town—Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military History..... 547

CHAPTER LVI.

SHARON.

Geographical—Topographical—Conflicting Claims to Territory—Survey of the Town—Line Between New York and Connecticut Defined—Indian History—The First Settlement—Richard Sackett—Sale of the Town—List of Original Purchasers—Patent of the Town—The Settlement in Distress—The First Death—The First Birth—First Marriage—The Moravians—The Revolutionary War—Shay's Rebellion—List of Early Settlers..... 563

CHAPTER LVII.

SHARON (Continued).

Congregational Church, Sharon—Congregational Church, Ellsworth—Episcopal Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Representatives from 1755 to 1881—Members of the Governor's Council—Senators—Judges of the County Court—Justices of the Peace—Town Clerks—Attorneys—Physicians—College Graduates—Military Record..... 583

CHAPTER LVIII.

THOMASTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Thomaston in 1825—Seth Thomas—The Seth Thomas Clock Company—Ecclesiastical History—Civil History—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Present Town Officers—Representatives..... 599

CHAPTER LIX.

TORRINGTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Naming the Town—List of Proprietors—Grand List, 1733—Division of Lots—The First Settlers and their Locations—Initial Events—First Deeds of Conveyance—The Indian Fort—The First School-house—Pioneer Taverns—War of the Revolution—Proceedings of the Town—Names of Officers and Soldiers—Taxes During the Revolution—The Whipping-post—A Prosecution for Profanity—Slavery—Organization of County Anti-Slavery Society at Wolcottville—The Convention Routed by a Mob—"Nigger Pew" in Torrington and Torringford Churches—Emancipation of Slaves in Torrington—John Brown..... 610

CHAPTER LX.

TORRINGTON (Continued).

Wolcottville—Its Inception—United Movements—The Village in 1819—In 1836—In 1881—Seneca Lodge, F. and A. M.—Wolcottville Savings Bank—Brooks Brothers' Banking-Office—Physicians—Attorneys—Torringford—Holbrook's Mills—Hart's Hollow—Torrington Hollow—Wrightville—Burrville..... 620

CHAPTER LXI.

TORRINGTON (Continued).

Congregational Church, Torrington—Congregational Church, Torringford—Wolcottville Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church, Wolcottville—Trinity Church, Wolcottville—St. Francis' Church, Wolcottville—Baptist Church, Newfield—Methodist Episcopal Church, Newfield..... 626

CHAPTER LXII.

TORRINGTON (Continued).

The Coe Brass Manufacturing Company—The Coe Furniture Company—The Union Manufacturing Company—The Turner & Seymour Manufacturing Company—The Excelsior Needle Company—The Hardware Company—C. H. Hotchkiss & Sons—The Alvord Manufacturing Company—The Hardware Manufacturing Company—The Hendy Machine Company, Etc..... 634

CHAPTER LXIII.

TORRINGTON (Continued).

Incorporation of Town—Representatives from 1762 to Present Time—Military Record, 1861–65..... 637

CHAPTER LXIV.

WARREN.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—Names of Settlers—Early Marriages—Organization of Parish and Town—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary History—Ecclesiastical History—Representatives from 1786 to 1881..... 641

CHAPTER LXV.

WASHINGTON.

Geographical—Topographical—Judea and New Preston Societies—The First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—Organization of Judea Society—Ecclesiastical History—The Congregational Church, Washington—Congregational Church, New Preston—Congregational Church, New Preston Hill—St. John's Church—St. Andrew's Church—Rising Sun Lodge, No. 27, F. and A. M.—Physicians—Revolutionary Incident—Gunn's Seminary—The Shepaug Railroad—Lake Weroamaug—Civil and Military History—Organization of the Town—The First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary History—List of Selectmen from 1786 to 1881—List of Representatives—Probate Judges—Military Record..... 651

CHAPTER LXVI.

WATERTOWN.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—The Pioneers—Organization of the Parish of Westbury—Incidents—Reminiscences of Hon. F. J. Kingsbury—Physicians—Men of Prominence—Lawyers—War of 1812—Notes—Evergreen Cemetery—Mortality List—Agricultural—Summer Resort—Railroad—Reminiscences of Mrs. Rev. Frederick Holcomb..... 660

CHAPTER LXVII.

WATERTOWN (Continued).

Congregational Church—Christ Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Methodist Episcopal Church in North Part of Town..... 670

CHAPTER LXVIII.

WATERTOWN (Continued).

Incorporation of Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Extracts from Town Records—The Revolution—Division of the Town—Representatives from 1780 to 1881—Town Clerks—Probate Judges—Military Record, 1861–65..... 672

CHAPTER LXIX.

WOODBURY.

Introductory—Six Purchases from the Pootatucks—First, or Pomperaug Purchase—Kettletown Purchase—Fourth, or Nonnewaug Purchase—Fifth Purchase—Sixth, or Confirmatory Purchase—Reservation, or "Purchase"—Indian "Marks"—A Buried Race..... 685

CHAPTER LXX.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Church Dissensions in Stratford the Cause of the Settlement of Woodbury—Action of the General Court in 1667, 1669, 1670—Pomperaug Granted, and Settlement Commenced in 1672—Fresh Arrivals Next Year—Pomperaug made a Town and called Woodbury in 1674—Signification of the Name..... 687

CHAPTER LXXI.

WOODBURY (Continued).

King Philip's War in 1675—Inhabitants of Woodbury go back to Stratford—Orders of the General Court—Rev. Mr. Walker's Letter—Inhabitants Return in 1677—The First Three Corn-Mills—Town First Represented in the General Court in 1684—Patent Granted to the Town in 1686—General Court grants the North Purchase to the town in 1703—Same Purchased of the Indians in 1710..... 691

CHAPTER LXXII.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Character of the First Settlers—Capt. John Minor—Capt. William Curtiss—Hon. Samuel Sherman—Hon. John Sherman—Lieut. Joseph Judson—Lieut. Israel Curtiss—Col. Joseph Minor—Hackaliah Preston—Hon. William Preston..... 693

CHAPTER LXXIII.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Home-Lots—Rev. Z. Walker's House—Palisaded Houses—First School-House—Second, or Stoddard Parsonage—First Meeting-House—First Birth, Marriage, and Death—First Clothier—First Physician—First Blacksmith—First Divorce—Parson Stoddard Kills Two Indians—Wood Creek Expedition—Slavery..... 695

CHAPTER LXXIV.

WOODBURY (Continued).

Character of Rev. Zechariah Walker—Rev. Anthony Stoddard Settled—Rev. Noah Benedict Settled—Half-Way Covenant Abolished, 1760—Rev. Samuel R. Andrew Settled—Remaining Pastors of the Church—Recapitulation—Strict Congregational Church—Rev. Grove L.

Brownell Settled—Rev. John Churchill Settled—W. L. R. Wychorf Settled—Episcopal Church—Methodist Church—Catholic Church. 697

CHAPTER LXXV.

WOODBURY (Continued).

French and Indian Wars—War of the Revolution—War Convention at Litchfield in 1766—Town-Meetings in 1774—Boston Alarm—Committee of Observation—Capture of Ticonderoga and Crown Point by Woodbury Men—Woodbury the Birthplace of Col. Ethan Allen, Col. Seth Warner, and Capt. Remember Baker—Tories—Events of 1775—Events of 1776—Events of 1777—Events of 1778—Shadrach Osborn—Commissary Supplies—Events of 1779—Events of 1780—Volunteers till New York should be taken—Events of 1781 and 1782—Conclusion 700

CHAPTER LXXVI.

WOODBURY (Continued).

List of Public Officers in Ancient Woodbury—Representatives, 1684–1881—List of Soldiers in Fort William Henry Alarm—List of Soldiers in the Revolutionary War—List of Soldiers in the War of 1812—Woodbury's Roll of Honor—War of the Rebellion, 1861–65—Alphabetical List of the Soldiers of Woodbury in the War of the Rebellion..... 705

SUPPLEMENT..... 723

BIOGRAPHICAL.

	PAGE
Patridge Thatcher	14
Daniel Everitt	15
Tapping Reeve	15
John Allen	16
Barzillai Slosson	17
Samuel W. Southmayd	18
Jno. C. Smith	20
Nathaniel Smith	20
James Gould	21
Noah B. Benedict	22
Jabez W. Huntington	23
Phineas Miner	23
Leman Church	24
Ansel Sterling	24
Stephen T. Hosmer	25
Jno. T. Peters	26
Asa Chapman	27
William Bristol	27
Jeremiah G. Brainard	27
David Daggett	27
John Welch	27
Jabez Swift	28
Adonijah Strong	28
Jos. Canfield	28
Martin Strong	28
Asa Bacon	28
Elisha Sterling	28
David S. Boardman	29
William G. Williams	29
John Strong, Jr	29
Calvin Butler	29
Cyrus Swan	29
Jos. Miller	30
William M. Burrall	30
William Coggswell	30
Seth P. Beers	30
Perry Smith	30
Roger Mills	30
Michael F. Mills	30
Charles B. Phelps	31
Matthew Minot	31
Nathaniel P. Perry	31
Holbrook Curtis	31
William E. Curtis	32
Isaac Leavenworth and R. R. Hinman	34
Joseph H. Bellamy	33
Theodore North	34
William S. Holabird	34
George S. Boardman	34
John Elmore	34
Samuel Church	34
Gideon Hall	34
Truman Smith	34
Charles F. Sedgwick	35
George C. Woodruff	36
J. H. Hubbard	36
O. S. Seymour	36
Miles T. Granger	37
Henry B. Graves	38
William Cothren	38
George A. Hickox	40
Marcus A. Delavan	40
Jacob B. Hardenbergh	42
George Wheaton	43
F. D. Fyler	43
Augustus H. Fenn	44
A. P. Bradstreet	44
Augustus Pettibone	44
John B. Welch	51
L. W. Wessells	76
Julius Deming	155
Gideon H. Hollister	156
Hiram Stone	156
J. P. Brace	157
John Catlin	158
F. H. Catlin	159
Myron Osborn	159
Amos Bissell	160
The Bissell Family	160
Eliada Kilbourn	161
Noah Guernsey	162
Guy Catlin	162
Henry W. Buel	162½
Payne R. Kilbourne	162½
Daniel Sheldon	162½
Samuel H. Dudley	163
Heman Beach	163
Charles D. Wheeler	163
Levi Coe	164
Jacob Morse	164
David M. Grant	165
The Plumb Family	165
Philip S. Beebe	166
George Dudley	224
John Boyd	224
James Welch	224
Jno. W. Bidwell	225
Elliot Beardsley	225
William H. Phelps	225
John G. Wetmore	226
W. L. Gilbert	227
Elias E. Gilman	228
John Hinsdale	228
Harvey B. Steele	between 228, 229
Henry Gay	" 228, 229
Lyman Baldwin	229
David Strong	230
Samuel W. Coe	between 230, 231
Franklin Moore	231
Charles Cook	232
Eugene Potter	232
J. H. Norton	facing 232

	PAGE
William F. Hatch	233
Timothy Hulbert	233
E. Manchester	234
Theron Bronson	235
Henry H. Drake	236
William Lawrence	236
D. H Stephens	241
James Allen	255
Glover Sanford	259
Lyman Smith	259
James H. Keeler	260
Henry Sanford	261
Marcus B. Mallett	261
Roswell Morris	262
John Wooster	263
U. H. Miner	269
A. C. Randall	270
Whiting G. Kellogg	271
Charles Hunt	271
Nathan Millard	272
Milo Holabird	272
Jonathan Bates	273
Pitkin Cowles	273
Edward A. Phelps	284
Reuben Rockwell	284
Timothy Persons	284
John S. Wheeler	285
Asaph O. Pinney	285
Solomon Sackett	286
Lucien O. Bass	286
Wm. P. Lawrence	286
Loren De Wolf	286
Luther Phelps	286
Harvey W. Pinney	287
Theodore S. Gold	311
The Harrison Family	313
John R. Harrison	313
Myron Harrison	314
Frederick Kellogg	315
Edwin White	315
Ezra D. Pratt	316
Isaac Marsh	317
The Noah Rogers Family	318
Sylvester H. Barnum	between 320, 321
Charles N. Shepard	321
Henry Norton	354
Capt. William Gaylord	354
Moses Lyman	355
Erastus Lyman	357
The Waddam Family	358
Daniel N. Lucas	365
Frederick A. Lucas	367
F. E. Hurlbut	370
Henry G. Wright	370
Fessenden Ives	371
Norman Norton	371
William Norton	372
Charles L. Norton	372
Truman P. Clark	373
William L. Griswold	373
Acors W. Lawton	374
Rufus Fuller	facing 386
Russell Stone	388
Dan Throop	facing 390
Phineas W. Camp	391
Lyman L. Griswold	391
Abel C. Tracy	392
William H. Farnham	392
John C. Smith	419
Henry Jones	419
The Goodwin Family	between 420, 421
Charles F. Maxfield	421
Chester W. Gilman	421
E. M. Chapin	421
Ambrose S. Rogers	461
George Taylor	463

	PAGE
D. E. Soule	465
Albert N. Baldwin	465
George S. Noble	466
H. G. Sperry	467
Joseph Eldridge	480
Austin A. Spaulding	481
E. T. Butler	481
William Bennett	486
James Terry	504
Andrew Terry	506
Augustus C. Shelton	507
Byron Tuttle	508
George Pierpont	509
Lyman D. Baldwin	510
William B. Fenn	511
Aaron P. Fenn	511
Oliver Smith	512
Charles Beardsley	517
George Hurlbut	facing 518
John M. Holley	550
A. H. Holley	551
The Moore Family	553
Frederick Miles	554
Henry M. Knight	554
Peter P. Everts	556
Newton J. Reed	558
H. P. Harris	558
Daniel B. Cook	559
Robert Little	559
James M. Selleck	560
Erastus D. Goodwin	560
James Landon	560
Charles H. Bissell	562
John F. Cleaveland	562
Thomas N. Smith	562
John C. Jackson	590
John S. Jewett	591
Ralph Deming	591
Gamaliel H. St. John	592
The Peck Family	592
Lemuel Peck	594
Charles M. Parsons	594
F. L. Pierson	594
Samuel Skiff, Jr.	595
Gibbs W. Skiff	595
Seth B. St. John	596
Henry St. John	596
Samuel Dean	597
Asa Everitt	598
Ichabod S. Everitt	598
Augustus Everitt	598
Benjamin S. Reed	599
Seth Thomas	602
Seth Thomas, Jr.	603
Edward Thomas	603
Aaron Thomas	603
Thomas J. Bradstreet	603
William Woodruff	605
George W. Gilbert	606
Marcus Prince	606
Randal T. Andrews	607
Benjamin Platt	607
George B. Pierpont	608
Miles Morse	608
Israel B. Woodward	608
F. E. Warner	between 608, 609
Henry F. Reynolds	609
William P. Judson	609
Hiram Pierce	610
Milo Burr	640
Jesse B. Rose	640
F. P. Hills	641
Orson Barber	641
William Hopkins	650
Daniel N. Brinsmade	656
Daniel B. Brinsmade	656

	PAGE
F. W. Gunn	657
Henry Upson	657
Gregory Seeley	658
Samuel J. Averill	659
Leman W. Cutler	675
Merrit Heminway	675
John De Forest	676
Samuel Elton	676
A. M. Hungerford	677
Eli Curtiss	678
Benjamin De Forest	678
E. B. Dickerman	679
Alanson Warren	680
Frederick Holcomb	681
E. C. Bowers	682
Caleb T. Hickox	683
William G. French	683
Frederick J. Partree	684
The Curtiss Family	717
Daniel Curtiss	718
Stanley E. Beardsley	719
Thomas Bull	720
Benjamin Fabrique	720
Horace Hurd	720
George B. Lewis	721
Harmon W. Shove	721
Joseph Battell	723
The Coe Family	724
Rufus Babcock	725

ILLUSTRATIONS.

	PAGE
Outline Map of County	facing 13
Portrait of James Gould	" 22
" Ansel Sterling	" 24
" Michael F. Mills	" 30
" Holbrook Curtis	" 31
" William E. Curtis	" 32
" Charles F. Sedgwick	" 35
" O. S. Seymour	" 36
" George C. Woodruff	between 36, 37
" John H. Hubbard	" 36, 37
" M. T. Granger	facing 38
" W. Cothren	" 39
" George Wheaton	" 43
" Augustus Pettibone	between 44, 45
" Albert P. Bradstreet	" 44, 45
" John Sedgwick	facing 50
" John B. Welch	" 52
" L. W. Wessells	" 76
LITCHFIELD.
Portrait of Moses Seymour	facing 128
" Julius Deming	" 155
" Hiram Stone	" 156
" J. P. Brace	" 157
" John Catlin	" 158
" F. H. Catlin	" 159
" Myron Osborn	between 160, 161
" Amos Bissell	" 160, 161
" Henry B. Bissell	" 160, 161
" Elnada Kilbourn	" 160, 161
" Noah Guernsey	facing 162
" Guy Catlin	between 162, 162½
" H. W. Buel	facing 162½
" Dan. Sheldon	" 162½
" S. H. Dudley	between 162, 163
" Henman Beach	" 162, 163
" Charles D. Wheeler	" 162, 163
Residence of Charles D. Wheeler (two views)	" 162, 163
" Levi Coe	" 162, 163
Portrait of Levi Coe	" 164, 165
" Jacob Morse	" 164, 165
" David M. Grant	" 164, 165
" Seth F. Plumb	facing 165
" William Beebe	between 166, 167
" Philip S. Beebe	" 166, 167
WINCHESTER.
Residence of George W. Phelps	facing 220
Portrait of George Dudley	" 223
" Jno. Boyd	between 224, 225
" W. H. Phelps	" 224, 225
" James Welch	" 224, 225
" J. W. Bidwell	" 224, 225
" J. G. Wetmore	" 224, 225
Residence of J. G. Wetmore	between 226, 227
Portrait of William L. Gilbert	facing 227
" Elias E. Gilman	" 228
" Harvey B. Steele	between 228, 229
" Henry Gay	" 228, 229
" John Hinsdale	" 228, 229
" Lyman Baldwin	facing 229
" David Strong	" 230
" Samuel W. Coe	between 230, 231
" Franklin Moore	facing 231
" Charles Cook	232
" J. H. Norton	facing 232
" Eugene Potter	between 232, 233
" W. F. Hatch	" 232, 233
" Timothy Hulbert	facing 233
" E. Manchester	234
Residence of E. Manchester	facing 234
Portrait of Theron Bronson	" 235
" William Lawrence	" 236
Residence of L. S. Nash	" 237
BARKHAMSTED.
Portrait of D. H. Stephens	facing 241
BETHLEHEM.
Residence of James Allen	between 252, 253
Portrait of James Allen	facing 255
BRIDGEWATER.
Portrait of Glover Sanford	between 258, 259
" Lyman Smith	" 258, 259
" James H. Keeler	260
" Marcus B. Mallett	facing 261
" Henry Sanford	261
" Roswell Morris	facing 262
" John Wooster	" 263
CANAAN.
Portrait of Joel Miner	facing 269
" U. H. Miner	between 270, 271
" A. C. Randall	" 270, 271
" W. G. K. Hoyt	facing 271
" Charles Hunt	" 272
" W. W. Millard	between 272, 273
" Jonathan Bates	" 272, 273
" Milo Holabird	facing 273
COLEBROOK.
Residence of E. A. Phelps	facing 282
Portrait of E. A. Phelps	" 284
" Timothy Parsons	between 284, 285
" John S. Wheeler	" 284, 285
" Reuben Rockwell	" 284, 285
" A. O. Pinney	" 284, 285
" Solomon Sackett	286

PAGE

Portrait of William P. Lawrence....facing 286
" L. O. Bass....between 286, 287
Residence of L. O. Bass.... " 286, 287
Portrait of Loren DeWolf.... " 286, 287
" Luther Phelps.... " 286, 287
Residence of Harvey W. Pinney....facing 287

CORNWALL.

Portrait of T. S. Gold....facing 311
" George C. Harrison.... " 312
Residence of George C. Harrison....between 312, 313
Portrait of John R. Harrison....facing 313
" Myron Harrison.... " 314
" Frederick Kellogg.... " 315
" Edwin White.... " 316
" E. D. Pratt.... " 316
" Isaac Marsh....facing 317
" Dwight Rogers.... " 320
" Sylvester H. Barnum....between 320, 321
" Charles N. Shepard....facing 321

GOSHEN.

Portrait of Henry Norton....facing 354
" William Gaylord....between 354, 355
" Moses Lyman.... " 354, 355
Residence of Moses Lyman....facing 355
Portrait of Erastus Lyman.... " 357
" John M. Wadhams.... " 363
" Daniel N. Lucas.... " 365
" Frederick A. Lucas.... " 367
" F. E. Hurlbut.... " 370
" Henry G. Wright....between 370, 371
" Fessenden Ives.... " 370, 371
Residence of Fessenden Ives.... " 370, 371
Portrait of Norman Norton....facing 371
" William Norton....between 372, 373
" Charles L. Norton.... " 372, 373
" Truman P. Clark....facing 373
" William L. Griswold....between 374, 375
" Acors W. Lawton.... " 374, 375

KENT.

Portrait of Rufus Fuller....facing 386
" Russell Stone.... " 388

MORRIS.

Portrait of Dan Throop....facing 390
" P. W. Camp....between 390, 391
" Lyman L. Griswold.... " 390, 391
" William H. Farnham.... " 392, 393
" Abel C. Tracy.... " 392, 393

NEW HARTFORD.

Portrait of John C. Smith....between 418, 419
" Henry Jones.... " 418, 419
" E. M. Chapin....facing 420
" Caleb C. Goodwin....between 420, 421
" Charles F. Maxfield.... " 420, 421
Residence of Charles F. Maxfield.... " 420, 421
Portrait of C. W. Gilman....facing 421

NEW MILFORD.

Portrait of Ambrose S. Rogers....between 460, 461
Residence of Ambrose S. Rogers.... " 460, 461
Views of A. S. Rogers' grounds.... " 462, 463
Portrait of George Taylor....facing 463
Residence of D. E. Soule.... " 464
Portrait of D. E. Soule.... 465
" Albert N. Baldwin....facing 465
" George H. Noble.... " 466
" H. G. Sperry.... " 467

NORFOLK.

Portrait of Joseph Battell....facing 478
" Joseph Eldridge.... " 480
" E. T. Butler....between 480, 481

PAGE

Residence of E. T. Butler....between 480, 481
" Austin A. Spaulding....facing 481
Portrait of Austin A. Spaulding.... 481

NORTH CANAAN.

Portrait of William Bennett....facing 486

PLYMOUTH.

Portrait of James Terry....facing 504
" Andrew Terry.... " 506
" A. C. Shelton.... " 507
" Byron Tuttle.... " 508
" George Pierpont.... " 509
" L. D. Baldwin....between 510, 511
" William B. Fenn.... " 510, 511
" Aaron P. Fenn....facing 511
" Oliver Smith.... " 512

ROXBURY.

Residence of Charles R. Hurd....between 514, 515
Portrait of Charles Beardsley.... 517
" George Hurlbut....facing 518

SALISBURY.

Portrait of Milo Barnum....facing 530
" Leonard Richardson.... " 532
Residence of A. H. Holley....between 534, 535
" Mrs. M. H. Williams.... " 534, 535
Portrait of John M Holley....facing 550
" Alexander H. Holley.... " 551
" Silas B. Moore.... " 553
" Albert Moore.... " 554
" Frederick Miles....between 554, 555
" H. M. Knight.... " 554, 555
" Peter P. Everts....facing 556
" Newton J. Reed.... " 558
" H. P. Harris....between 558, 559
" Daniel B. Cook.... " 558, 559
" Robert Little....facing 559
" Albert Selleck.... " 560
" James M. Selleck....between 560, 561
" Erastus D. Goodwin.... " 560, 561
" James Landon....facing 561
" Charles H. Bissell.... " 562
" John F. Cleaveland....between 562, 563
" Thomas N. Smith.... " 562, 563

SHARON.

Residence of John C. Jackson....facing 588
Portrait of John C. Jackson.... " 590
Residence of S. B. Jewett....between 590, 591
Portrait of John S. Jewett.... " 590, 591
" Ralph Deming....facing 591
" Gamaliel H. St. John.... " 592
" Enoch P. Peck....between 592, 593
" Augustus L. Peck.... " 592, 593
" E. R. Peck.... " 592, 593
" Charles W. Peck....facing 593
" Lemuel Peck.... " 594
" Charles M. Parsons....between 594, 595
" Gibbs W. Skiff.... " 594, 595
" Samuel Skiff....facing 595
" Frederick L. Pierson.... 595
Residence of Ichabod S. Everitt....facing 596
" Henry St. John.... " 596
Portrait of Seth B. St. John....between 596, 597
" Henry St. John.... " 596, 597
" Samuel Dean.... 597
" Ichabod S. Everitt....facing 598
" Asa Everitt....between 598, 599
" Augustus Everitt.... " 598, 599
" Benjamin S. Reed....facing 599

THOMASTON.

Portrait of Seth Thomas....between 602, 603
" Seth Thomas, Jr.... " 602, 603
" Aaron Thomas.... " 602, 603

PAGE

Portrait of Edward Thomas.....between 602, 603
" Thomas J. Bradstreet.....facing 603
" William Woodruff..... " 605
" G. W. Gilbert.....between 606, 607
" Randal T. Andrews..... " 606, 607
" Marcus Prince..... " 606, 607
" Benjamin Platt..... " 606, 607
" George B. Pierpont..... " 608, 609
" Miles Morse..... " 608, 609
" Israel B. Woodward..... " 608, 609
" Henry F. Reynolds..... " 608, 609
" F. E. Warner..... " 608, 609
" William P. Judson.....facing 609

TORRINGTON.

View of John Brown's birthplace..... 620
Residence of John M. Burr.....between 638, 639
Portrait of Milo Burr.....facing 640
" Jesse B. Rose.....between 640, 641
" Frederick P. Hills..... " 640, 641
" O. Barber..... " 640, 641

WARREN.

Residence of H. H. Morehouse.....facing 646
Portrait of William Hopkins..... " 650
Residence of George C. Hopkins.....between 650, 651

WASHINGTON.

Portrait of Daniel N. Brinsmade.....between 656, 657
" Daniel B. Brinsmade..... " 656, 657
" F. W. Gunn..... " 656, 657
" Henry Upson..... " 656, 657
Upson Seminary.....facing 657

PAGE

Portrait of Gregory Seeley.....facing 658
" Samuel J. Averill..... " 659

WATERTOWN.

Residence of Buell Heminway.....facing 670
" the late Eli Curtiss..... " 672
Portrait of Leman W. Cutler.....between 674, 675
" Merrit Heminway..... " 674, 675
" John De Forest..... " 676, 677
" Samuel Elton..... " 676, 677
" A. M. Hungerford.....facing 677
" Eli Curtiss..... " 678
" Benjamin De Forest.....between 678, 679
" E. B. Dickerman..... " 678, 679
" A. Warren.....facing 680
" Frederick Holcomb..... " 681
" E. C. Bowers..... " 682
" Caleb T. Hickox.....between 682, 683
" Dayton Mattoon..... " 682, 683
" Wm. G. French.....facing 683
" F. J. Partree..... " 684

WOODBURY.

Portrait of John Curtiss.....facing 716
" Henry S. Curtiss..... " 717
" Daniel Curtiss..... " 718
" Stanley E. Beardsley..... " 719
" Thomas Bull.....between 720, 721
" Benjamin Fabrique..... " 720, 721
" Horace Hurd..... " 720, 721
" H. W. Shove..... " 720, 721
" George B. Lewis..... " 720, 721

STATE OF MASSACHUSETTS
STATE OF NEW YORK
STATE OF CONNECTICUT
NEW HAVEN Co
FAIRFIELD Co
NORTH CANAAN
CANAAN
SALISBURY
NORFOLK
COLEBROOK
BARKHAMSTED
WINCHESTER
NEW HARTFORD
TORRINGTON
HARWINTON
GOSHEN
CORNWALL
SHARON
KENT
WARREN
LITCHFIELD
MORRIS
PLYMOUTH
WASHINGTON
BETHLEHEM
WATERTOWN
NEW MILFORD
WOODBURY
ROXBURY
BRIDGEWATER
Housatonic River
Naugatuck River
Farmington River
Lake Waramaug
Lake Waramaug
Mount Riga
Mount Tom
Bear Hill
Bald Mt
Bunker Hill
Mt Tom
Mt Prospect
Mt Tom
Mt Tom
Mt Tom

HISTORY

OF

LITCHFIELD COUNTY, CONNECTICUT.

CHAPTER I.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

Geographical—Topographical—Organization of Litchfield County—Location of County-Seat—Conflicting Claims—First County Officials—County Buildings—List of Sheriffs, Treasurers, Clerks, and State's Attorneys from 1751 to 1882—Chief Judges Court of Common Pleas from 1751 to 1854.

GEOGRAPHICAL AND DESCRIPTIVE.

LITCHFIELD COUNTY lies in the extreme northwestern portion of the State of Connecticut, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Massachusetts, on the east by Hartford and New Haven Counties, on the south by New Haven and Fairfield Counties, and on the west by the counties of Dutchess and Columbia, in New York. It comprises about eight hundred and eighty-five square miles of territory, and is the largest county in area in the State.

The physical features of Litchfield County present a bold outline of irregular hills and deep valleys. The county is watered by the Housatonic, Naugatuck, Shepaug, and Farmington Rivers, and numerous smaller streams. The Naugatuck and Shepaug are tributaries of the Housatonic, which flows into Long Island Sound, while the Farmington empties into the Connecticut River a few miles above Hartford. The soil is generally a gravelly loam, in many portions strong and fertile, and well adapted to grazing. The manufacture of iron is carried on in this county—principally in the town of Salisbury—more extensively than in any other section of the State.

ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTY.

Litchfield County was organized in the year 1751, and at that time consisted of the following towns: Canaan, Cornwall, Goshen, Harwinton, Kent, New Hartford, New Milford, Salisbury, Sharon, Torrington, and Woodbury,—eleven in number. As the population increased new towns were formed, and at the present time the county consists of twenty-six civil subdivisions. The following is a list, with dates of incorporation: Barkhamsted, 1779; Bethlehem, 1787; Bridgewater, 1856; Canaan, 1739; Colebrook, 1779; Cornwall, 1740; Goshen, 1749; Harwinton, 1737; Kent, 1739; Litchfield, 1724; Morris, 1859; New Hartford, 1733, about; New Milford, 1725, probably; North Canaan, 1858; Norfolk, 1758; Plymouth, 1795; Roxbury, 1801; Salisbury, 1745; Sharon, 1739; Thomaston, 1875; Torrington, 1732; Warren, 1786; Washington, 1779; Watertown, 1780; Winchester, 1771; Woodbury, 1674.*

When the movement started for the organization of the county much diversity of opinion existed regarding the location of the county-seat. Cornwall and Canaan made their claims and had their advocates, but the chief contest was between Litchfield and Goshen. The latter town was supposed to occupy the geographical centre, and many persons had settled there in expectation that that would become the fixed seat of justice, and, among others, Oliver Wolcott, afterwards Governor of the State. But at the October session of the General Court, in 1751, Litchfield County was organized with Litchfield as the county-seat.

THE FIRST COUNTY OFFICERS.

The following were appointed by the General Court first officers of the county: Chief Justice, William Preston, of Woodbury; Associate Justices, John Williams, of Sharon; Samuel Canfield, of New Milford; and Ebenezer Marsh, of Litchfield; Clerk, Isaac Baldwin; Sheriff, Oliver Wolcott.

Mr. Kilbourne in his history says,—

"Even after this county was thus formed and its officers appointed the town of Woodbury continued to manifest her dissatisfaction in various ways and at all reasonable times. Instead of being made the central and shire town of the new county, she was left quite in the corner. She first petitioned the Legislature in May and again in October, 1751, to be reannexed to the county of Fairfield. Twenty years later an effort was again made to persuade the General Assembly to organize a county to be called Woodbury. On this occasion the town of Woodbury cast a rate of a penny and a half on the pound, in addition to the regular tax, to be applied towards erecting the county buildings; and, further, she generously offered the use of her Town-Hall for a COURT HOUSE.

"Mr. Cothren informs us that in May, 1748, the inhabitants of Woodbury appointed Col. William Preston an agent to prefer a memorial to the General Assembly for the organization of a new county to be called the counties of Woodbury, to embrace the towns of Woodbury, Waterbury, New Milford, Litchfield, and New Fairfield, and as many of the northern towns as might choose to join them, with Woodbury for the county seat. The result need not be told."

* Hartland, Hartford Co., originally belonged to this county.

The County Court at its first session in December of the same year appointed Samuel Pettibone, of Goshen, to be King's attorney, who was within a few years succeeded by Reynold Marvin, of Litchfield, and these two gentlemen were the only ones in this county in this capacity who ever represented the King's majesty in that administration of criminal justice.

COUNTY BUILDINGS.

The first jail erected was a small wooden building, on the north side of East Street. This stood but a few years, and in its place a more commodious one was built, nearly on the same foundation. The present jail was built in 1812, and has been subsequently improved. The first court-house stood on the open grounds a little easterly from the West Park. It was a small building, but in it were often witnessed some of the most able efforts of American eloquence. In this humble temple of justice Hon. S. W. Johnston, of Stratford, Edwards, of New Haven, Reeve, Tracy, Allen, and the Smiths, of this county, exhibited some of the best essays of forensic power. The present court-house was erected in 1798.

CHIEF JUDGES COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.*

William Preston, Woodbury, 1751–54; John Williams, Sharon, 1754–73; Oliver Wolcott, Litchfield, 1773–86; Daniel Sherman, Woodbury, 1786–91; Joshua Porter, Salisbury, 1791–1808; Aaron Austin, New Hartford, 1808–16; Augustus Pettibone, Norfolk, 1816–30; David S. Boardman, New Milford, 1831–36; William M. Burrall, Canaan, 1836–38; Ansel Sterling, Sharon, 1838–39; Calvin Butler, Plymouth, 1839–40; Ansel Sterling, Sharon, 1840–42; William M. Burrall, Canaan, 1842–44; Abijah Catlin, Harwinton, 1844–46; Elisha S. Abernethy, Litchfield, 1846–47; Holbrook Curtis, Watertown, 1847–49; Hiram Goodwin, Barkhamsted, 1849–50; Charles B. Phelps, Woodbury, 1850–51; Hiram Goodwin, Barkhamsted, 1851–52; Charles B. Phelps, Woodbury, 1852–54; Hiram Goodwin, Barkhamsted, 1854.

SHERIFFS FROM 1751-1882.

Oliver Wolcott, 1751–72; Lynde Lord, 1772–1801; John R. Landon, 1801–19; Moses Seymour, Jr., 1819–25; Ozias Seymour, 1825–34; Albert Sedgwick, 1834–35; Charles A. Judson, 1835–38; Albert Sedgwick, 1838–54; Leverett W. Wessels, 1854–66; H. W. Botsford, 1866–70; George H. Baldwin, 1870–78; John D. Yale, 1878–81; Charles J. Porter, 1881.

TREASURERS FROM 1751-1882.

John Catlin, 1751–61; Elisha Sheldon, 1761–79; Reuben Smith, 1779–1801; Julius Deming, 1801–14; Abel Catlin, 1814–42; Charles R. Webb, 1842–64; G. A. Hickox, 1864–76; William C. Buell, 1876–81.

COUNTY CLERKS, 1751-1882.

Isaac Baldwin, 1751–93; Frederick Wolcott, 1793–1836; Origen S. Seymour, 1836–44; Gideon H. Hollister, 1844–46; Origen S. Seymour, 1846–47; Gideon H. Hollister, 1847–50; Elisha Johnson, 1850–51; Frederick D. Beeman, 1851–61; W. L. Ransom, 1861–81.

STATE'S ATTORNEYS.

King's Attorneys.—Samuel Pettibone, Goshen; J. Whitney, Canaan; Reynold Marvin, Andrew Adams, Litchfield.

State's Attorneys.—Andrew Adams, Tapping Reeve, Litchfield; John Canfield, Sharon; John Allen, Uriah Tracy, Daniel W. Lewis, Uriel Holmes, Jr., Litchfield; Elisha Sterling, Salisbury; Seth P. Beers, Litchfield; Samuel Church, Salisbury (and Litchfield); Leman Church, Canaan; David C. Sanford, New Milford (and Litchfield); John H. Hubbard, Salisbury (and Litchfield); Julius B. Harrison, New Milford; Gideon Hall, Winchester; Charles F. Sedgwick, Sharon; James Huntington, present incumbent.

* Court abolished in 1855.

CHAPTER II.

BENCH AND BAR.†

Among the prominent agencies which give shape and order in the early development of the civil and social condition of society, the pulpit, press, and bar are perhaps the most potential in moulding the institutions of a new community; and where these are early planted, the school, academy, and college are not long in assuming their legitimate position, and the maintenance of these institutions secures at the start a social and moral foundation upon which we may safely rest the superstructure of the county, the State, and the nation.

The establishment of court and judicial tribunals, where society is protected in all its civil rights under the sanction of law, and wrong finds a ready redress in an enlightened and prompt administration of justice, is the first necessity of every civilized community, and without which the forces of society in their changeable developments, even under the teachings of the pulpit, the direction of the press, and the culture of the schools, are exposed to peril and disaster from the turbulence of passion and conflicts of interest; and hence the best and surest security that even the press, the school, or the pulpit can find for the peaceful performance of its highest functions is when protected by and intrenched behind the bulwarks of the law, administered by a pure, independent, and uncorrupted judiciary.

The Litchfield County bar has from its beginning numbered among its members able jurists, talented advocates, and safe counselors. Here many have lived, flourished, and died, while others still are upon the stage of action who have been prominent in the advancement of the interests of the county and figured conspicuously in the councils of the State.

"Patridge Thatcher was the first man who practiced the legal profession in New Milford. He was not educated to the profession, but took up the trade because there were none of the craft hereabout when this county was organized, which was after he came to middle age. He was a native, I have been told, of Lebanon, in this State, and came to New Milford I know not how long ago. He was, however, a married man at the time. He had no children, but a large number of negroes, whom he treated with kindness enough to put to shame the reproaches of all the abolitionists in New England. He was a man of strong mind, of rigid morality, and religious to the letter according to the strictest sect of orthodox Episcopacy. He adored Charles I. as a martyr, and he hated Oliver Cromwell worse than he did the evil one. Loyalty, unconditional loyalty, was the prime element of his political creed. Of course, his name was not found in any list of the wicked Whigs of the Revolution, and had he lived in these days he would most thoroughly have eschewed Democracy and Abolitionism. On the breaking out of the Revolutionary war his loyalty necessarily silenced his voice in court, and he died soon after its conclusion. Lawyer Thatcher, as he was always called, was undoubtedly a very odd, a very honest, and a very good man.

† This chapter embraces the reminiscences of the late David S. Boardman, of New Milford; the remainder, except sketches of living lawyers, being furnished chiefly by Gen. Charles F. Sedgwick, of Sharon, to whom we are under special obligations.

"DANIEL EVERITT was a native of Bethlehem, and settled in New Milford as a lawyer some time during the early part of the Revolutionary war, probably as early as 1776 or 1777, possibly earlier, as from a record I have access to I see he was married to a daughter of the Rev. Nathaniel Taylor on the 1st of January, 1778, and I remember that he lived here some time before that event. He had not a collegiate education, but was a man of good education and received an honorary degree. He read law with Judge Adams, of Litchfield, and I remember to have heard him say that he occasionally officiated in Mr. Adams' place as State's attorney when he (Adams) was absent in Congress, which he often was during the war of the Revolution. Mr. Everitt was a man of much wit, boundless extravagance of expression, quick conception, and in command of language and fluency of utterance unsurpassed, but not a man of much depth of mind, nor had he much legal learning, his library extending little beyond Blackstone and Jacobs' Law Dictionary.

"He had, I believe, a very good run of practice, when the court really opened to do civil business after the conclusion of the war. His success in this respect was, however, of rather short duration, a number of younger lawyers having about that time commenced practice here, and other circumstances conspired to carry business away from him, and he never recovered it. While studying law I heard him argue a case or two, keeping the court-house in a roar by his wit and sarcasm, but by the time I was admitted—viz., in 1795—he had about given up attending courts at Litchfield, though he was not fifty years of age, and indeed he was, I think, but fifty-seven when he died, in 1805. I met him, however, a few times before arbitrators and justices, and had enough to do to parry his home-thrusts of good-natured wit. Before him I often went, as he tried almost all the justice cases, which he always did with entire integrity and usually came to a correct conclusion. He represented this town, I think, three times in the General Assembly, and as a member of the convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States. He was a man of strict honesty, entire moral rectitude of conduct, and a professor of religion. He was, however, much given to sociality, and to that conviviality which sometimes borders on a kindred indulgence. Mr. Everitt succeeded the late Col. Samuel Canfield as judge of probate in this district in 1790, and held that office till his death, at the time above mentioned.

"TAPPING REEVE.*—I saw much of Judge Reeve's practice at the bar for nearly five years, during which time he was engaged in almost every case of importance tried in the Superior Court at Litchfield, and never failed to argue every one in which he was engaged, if argued at all. In the County Court, after I became acquainted with him, he did not practice. His school had become numerous, and he gave up his practice in that court because (I suppose) it too much interrupted his course of daily lectures, and knowing as he did that he should have a part in every cause expected to be tried in the Superior Court. And, by the way, trials were then managed and got through with in a reasonable time, and not suffered to be dragged out to the abominable and shameful length which they now are, to the disgrace of the profession for indulging in it, and of the courts for permitting it.

"I joined Judge Reeve's school in the fall of 1793, and he was not placed on the bench till the spring of 1796; so that I saw him at the bar during nine sessions of the Superior Court, and never failed to listen to him, if I could avoid it, with unqualified love and admiration through every speech he made to its conclusion. I say with love, for no instructor was ever more generally beloved by his pupils, and indeed entirely so, except it was by those whose love would have been a reproach to the object of it. As a reasoner he had no superior within the compass of my observation of forensic performances. I mean true, forcible, and honest reasoning. In sophistry he was too honest to indulge, and too discerning to suffer it to escape detection in the argument of an adversary.

"As a speaker he was usually exceedingly ardent, and the ardor he displayed appeared to be prompted by a conviction of the justice of the cause he was advocating. His ideas seemed often, and, indeed, usually, to flow in upon him faster than he could give utterance to them, and sometimes seemed to force him to leave a sentence unfinished to begin another, and in his huddle of ideas, if I may so express it, he was careless of grammatical accuracy, and, though a thorough scholar, often made bad grammar in public speaking. Careless as he was of his diction, and thoughtless as he was of ornament in ordinary cases, yet some elegant expressions and fine sentences would seem, as if by accident, to escape him in almost every speech. But in such cases as afforded the proper field for the display of eloquence, such as actions of slander, malicious prosecutions, etc., and in that part of such cases as usually prompt to exertions of the kind, his hurried enunciation and grammatical inaccuracies all forsook him, and then he never failed to electrify and astonish his audience. Many of these used to be recited to me by those who had often heard him, and it fell to my lot to witness one such occasion. In an action for malicious prosecution, in closing the argument on entering upon the subject of damages, he burst forth into such a strain of dignified and soul-thrilling eloquence as neither before nor since has ever met my ear. The first sentence he uttered thrilled through every nerve of my entire frame to the very ends of my fingers, and every succeeding sentence seemed to increase in overwhelming effect. I was perfectly entranced during its delivery, and for an hour afterwards I trembled so that I could not speak plain. His manner was as much changed as his language, and to me he looked a foot taller than before. The next day I went to him and asked him to commit to writing the concluding part of his speech, to which request he said in the simplicity of his nature, 'Why, if I should do that, perhaps I should make it better than it really was, and that would not be fair.' We told him (Mr. Bacon was with me) there was no danger of that, for we knew it could not be bettered. Well, he said, he would try, but he did not know whether he could recall it to memory, for there was not a word of it written beforehand. A day or two after he saw me in court, behind his seat, and beckoned me to him and said he had tried to comply with my request, but it was so gone from him that he could make nothing of it.

* See history of Litchfield, elsewhere in this work.

"I believe I have said enough in regard to Judge Reeve as an advocate, and that is the extent of your inquiry. As a judge you are acquainted with his reputation historically, though you probably never saw him on the bench, as he left it in May, 1816, to the regret of all admirers of legal learning and lovers of impartial justice.

"JOHN ALLEN was born in Great Barrington, Mass., some time, I believe, in 1762, of respectable parents, though not distinguished in society, as I remember to have heard him say that he was the son of a joiner. There were but two children in the family, a son and a daughter, both much distinguished in life for many good qualities, and especially for dignity of manner and deportment, but the winning and amiable accomplishments all fell to the lot of the female, gaining her many admirers, and among others a husband worthy of her in that excellent man, Elizur Goodrich, of New Haven. Their father died during the minority of both the children. Mr. Allen, having an excellent common-school education, though not a classic education, became a teacher, and, being impelled by a spirit of adventure, somewhat romantic as he was thought in those days, went suddenly, and without the knowledge of his friends, and while yet a minor, to Germantown, near Philadelphia, where he obtained a place as instructor of the younger classes of an academic establishment of some note at the time. How long he remained in the above-mentioned establishment I do not know, but soon after leaving that place, and I believe almost immediately, he came to New Milford, and taught a school for some six months, and from here went immediately into Mr. Reeve's law-school, and after the accustomed period of study was admitted to the bar, and immediately settled in practice in Litchfield, where he spent his life. He confined himself almost entirely to the practice of Litchfield County, though occasionally, when called, in consequence of the eminence to which he soon attained in the profession, he practiced in other counties in some cases of importance, and especially in the Federal Circuit Court, in which, for a few years after the formation of the present Constitution of the United States, some considerable business was done. Mr. Allen, however, never went abroad in quest of business, thinking that the very great share of attorney business which he acquired in being always found in his office equal, at least in point of profit, to what counselor business he might obtain by attending courts in other counties, considering that all the counselor business flowing from the attorney business which he did he was sure to be engaged in. From the time I entered the law-school, in the fall of 1793, I occupied a room in his office, and had free access to his ample library, and boarded at the same house with him. During all that time, and all the remaining years of his prosperous practice, which indeed lasted till the apparent commencement of his rapid decline, soon followed by death, he was engaged in almost every case of any importance in the Superior and County Court. He was certainly a very successful and powerful advocate, equally with the jury as with the court, a thoroughly read lawyer, equal in point of legal science to any one at our bar during the fore part of the time I am speaking of, except Tapping Reeve, who had no rival, and in the latter part of the period James Gould, of whom I need say nothing, as you knew him in his meridian light. Mr. Allen always made diligent and faithful preparation of all cases committed to his care, and made himself fully acquainted with every point of law and every accessible point of evidence which could arise in the case, and was, therefore, usually successful when the case deserved success.

"He was six feet four or five inches high, very erect, and with an attitude and walk well calculated to set off his full stature, and, though quite lean, weighed full two hundred and thirty pounds. His countenance was strongly marked and truly formidable, his eyes and eyebrows dark, his hair dark, what little he had, for he was quite bald, far back, even before middle age, and indeed his whole appearance was calculated to inspire dread rather than affection. His manners and conversation were, however, such as to inspire confidence and respect, though little calculated to invite familiarity, except with his intimates, of whom he had a few, and those, knowing the generous and hearty friendship of which he was capable, were usually much attached to him and ready to overlook all his harsh sallies, imputing them to the 'rough humor which his mother gave him.' His feelings were not refined, but ardent, generous, and hearty. His friendships were strong and his aversions equally so, and, as I used to say of him speaking to others,

'his feelings were all of the great sort.' He neither enjoyed nor suffered anything from many of those little incidents which so often affect, either pleasingly or painfully, minds of a more refined texture. As he had no taste for such things, nor, as it would seem, any faculty of perceiving, so he knew no language appropriate to their description, but in respect to those things and principles which he thought worthy of his regard he lacked no power of language to make himself fully and forcibly understood. For neutral ground, either in morals or politics, he had no taste, and but little less than absolute abhorrence. As a specimen of his feelings and language, better than I describe, I will give you the laconic answer to an inquiry of him, why he took the Aurora, the leading Democratic paper in the county, then under the guidance of that arch-Democrat, Duane; he replied it was because he wanted to know what they were about in the infernal regions. And after giving this specimen I need make no further attempt to give you an idea of his humor, manners, and language.

"After Mr. Allen was married, which was not till he was towards forty years old, and went to housekeeping, I boarded at his house at his express solicitation for many years while attending court, though he took no other one, nor ever named to me any price, nor would he count the money I handed to him when leaving for home, seeming to receive it only because I refused to stay on any other terms. I therefore saw much of him in his family, where his conduct was always dignified, proper, and kind. He was proud, very proud, and justly so, of his wife, who was a woman of much personal beauty, polished manners, and great and even singular discretion, and for whom he entertained, I believe, an ardent affection.

"Before his marriage and at the age of thirty-five Mr. Allen was elected a member of the Fifth Congress, where he distinguished himself at a time when Connecticut was never more ably represented in the House of Representatives, and would undoubtedly have been chosen for as long a period as he would have desired to be a member of that body, but he declined a further election. He was elected an assistant in 1800, and was re-elected for the five succeeding years, and as such was one of the judges of the Supreme Court of Errors. For several years previous to his election to Congress he had represented the town of Litchfield in the General Assembly. His wife was a granddaughter of the first Governor Griswold.

"Barzillai Slosson.—In speaking of Mr. Slosson, I must first observe that I had formed a tolerably correct notion of him before I ever saw him. When I was a boy his father was often at my father's house, intimately acquainted there, and, I believe, scarcely ever passed that way without calling and holding a pretty long chat, for he never was in a hurry, and his peculiar turn of mind, abundance of common sense, and great fund of wit, joined to his singularly slow, emphatic, and sententious mode of talking, was such as to secure the attention of any one, and especially a boy. He used occasionally to speak of his children, and especially of his oldest son, Barzillai, of whom he was manifestly very proud, representing him to be always at the head of the school when small, and afterwards used to speak with high gratification of his industry and tact at acquiring the higher branches of knowledge without the aid of an instructor, and more particularly the knowledge of the dead languages, of which he knew nothing himself. And this account given by the old gentleman, from intimate intercourse and frequent conversation with his son when I afterwards became acquainted with him, I found was by no means exaggerated. And to his excellent and accurate common-school education he owed much, very much, of his character for exact accuracy and correctness in all that he said and did through life. He was about the best reader I ever heard, wrote a fair, handsome, and legible hand, and in the unfailing correctness of his orthography and use of terms no lexicographer excelled him, and in everything pertaining to mere English, home, and common-school education no one appeared to be a more thorough proficient. And in Greek and Latin I never saw his superior, except old President Stiles, nor, with that exception perhaps, his equal, unless it was old Parson Farrand, of Canaan, and in the other branches of collegiate education he was, to say the least, above mediocrity. As he entered college not until the senior year, and, I believe, did not even attend during the whole of that year, he could not, of course, expect to shine and did not shine in the college honors depending upon the faculty, but availed himself of the right to become a candidate for the honors of Dean Scholar, and obtained the first premium for excellence in Greek and Latin in a class of unusually high reputation. This, I suppose, he did merely out of a laudable pride, for he did not avail himself of the pecuniary reward, which would have required him to reside in New Haven; for he went, immediately after his graduation, with one of his classmates (Mr.—afterwards the Rev. Dr.—Smith) to reside in Sharon as one of the instructors in the Sharon Academy, then in full and successful operation. He soon after became a student-at-law under Governor Smith's instruction, and the first County Court, which sat after his two years' clerkship had expired, being in Fairfield County, he went there for examination and admission to the bar. This was, I believe, at the November term, 1793. It was not until he began to attend court at Litchfield, and while I was in the law-school there, that I first became personally acquainted with Mr. Slosson, though I had barely seen him once or twice before. After my admission to the bar, being located in adjoining towns, we often met each other before justices, and consequently before the upper courts. From our frequent meetings and intercourse at Litchfield and elsewhere I became greatly attached to him, and finally for a number of years he and I, with Southmayd for our constant companion, always occupied the same room at Catlin's Hotel during every court until his death, and there was the last time I ever saw him in life. Soon after the court adjourned, hearing of his rapid decline, I set out to visit him, and on the way heard that he had died the night before. I however went on and stayed with the family until I assisted in burying him. This was in January, 1813, and in that grave I felt that I had buried a sincere, and I am sure a much-loved, friend, on whose character and conduct in life I could reflect with melancholy satisfaction unmarred by a single reproachful recollection or one which I could wish to have forgotten.

"Mr. Slosson's great fondness for ancient literature rendered him scarcely just in his comparative estimate of that with modern improvements. As a lawyer he was highly respectable in theory and remarkably accurate in practice; as a pleader I do not remember that he ever had occasion to ask for an amendment or to alter a tittle of what he had written. As an advocate he was clear, deliberate, methodical, and logical in his deductions. He spoke in much of the peculiarly emphatic manner of his father above mentioned, though not with his unusual slowness. He was always cool and self-possessed, rarely warming into any high degree of animation or aiming at effect to appear eloquent, but he never failed to secure a respectful and satisfied attention. Though not one of the most leading advocates, of which there are always some three or four at the bar, he might, at least, be estimated an equal to any of the second class of the Litchfield bar, which was then certainly a highly respectable one.

"Though not an aspirant after public preferment, and from his habitually modest and retiring habits not calculated to push his way when opportunities offered, he was yet at the time of his decease in a fair way of promotion. He was early and often elected to the Legislature from his native town, and indeed their usual representative until the October session, 1812, when he was elected clerk, which in those days was a sure stepping-stone to future advancement; and having myself been a witness of the manner in which he performed the duties of that office, for which no man was better qualified, I am sure he established a reputation, which, had Providence permitted, promised a solid and lasting existence.

"Mr. Slosson's political opinions were of the genuine Washingtonian political school. None of your heady, rash, and merely partisan notions found favor with him. He was a constant and honest adherent to the political views then prevalent in this State.

"The foregoing sketch of the leading incidents in Mr. Slosson's life may be a sufficient indication from which to deduce his true character, but I must indulge myself in adding that I never knew or heard of a single act of his life, either in youth or mature years, that left even a shade upon his reputation. Cool and deliberate in his temperament, never hurried away by enthusiasm,—for enthusiasm never manifested itself in his nature except in his passion for ancient literature,—he was sure to think and act with propriety. He was nevertheless warm and faithful in his attachments, but not so far as to warp his conscientious regard for integrity. He was perfectly just and generous in his intercourse with the world, honest in his predilections, and uncompromising in his love of virtue and detestation of vice. In morality his principles were without a taint, and his practice through life in conscientious conformity with them. In religion he was a firm and steadfast believer in the great doctrines of the gospel, though not a public professor. His principles were those of true rational Calvinism, unswayed by vindictive zeal or hysterical weakness.

"He was a small man, not much, if any, under medium height, but of slender frame and countenance. Though not dark complexioned his countenance was rather dusky, his skin not clear; his features, though far from handsome, bespoke intelligence, and were therefore not disagreeable. His general appearance was more like that of the late Leman Church than any other member of the bar I can think of, though he was somewhat larger and more erect.

"SAMUEL W. SOUTHMAYD.—In the life, conduct, and character of Samuel W. Southmayd there were some peculiarities, such as render it a matter of difficulty to describe him in such a manner as to make them intelligible to one who did not personally know him.

"I never saw or heard of him until I became a member of the law-school, in the fall of the year 1793, of which he had then been a member about one year, I believe, and of which he continued a constant attendant during the eighteen months which I spent there. He was admitted to the bar the next term after I was,—to wit, September term, 1795,—and passed as good an examination as I ever heard there or elsewhere, he having been for the full period of three years under Judge Reeve's tuition. He was a native of Watertown, where he settled in practice, and where he spent his life. Like Mr. Slosson, he had an excellent common-school education. Beyond that his acquirements did not extend far in an academic course, enough, however, I believe, to enable him to understand the homely law Latin used in our books. Few have entered upon the practice of law with a better store of legal learning than Mr. Southmayd, but the place in which he settled was not calculated from its location and the habits of the people, by no means litigious, to furnish much practice, and he was too honest to promote litigation; and furthermore, he had no legal adversary there except an old gentleman who never had any more legal learning than was necessary for a church warden, and whose ignorance made him the victim of Southmayd's merry witchery and innocent cunning, of both of which he had a superabundance, though he never indulged in malicious or even very serious mischief, and indeed in none except such as would do to relate for the purpose of making fun in merry company. Anecdotes of that description used to be related in great numbers. As a pleader Mr. Southmayd was always sure to have all in his drafts which was requisite and pertinent to the object in view, and in all his declarations affording room for coloring circumstances to be inserted there was pretty sure to be found, slyly slipped in, some ingenious slang whang, or Southmaydism, as we used to call it. He was not ambitious of arguing cases in court, but when he did he always displayed much ingenuity, and attracted respectful attention from the audience as well as from the triers. And before arbitrators, referees, and committees a more formidable opponent could hardly be found. And although his practice was not large, and as was observed of Mr. Slosson he was not among the leading practitioners at the Litchfield bar, he was certainly a very respectable lawyer, upon a par with the foremost of the second class, and much beloved and respected by all whose good opinions are desirable.

"As was observed in the outset, there were peculiarities in Mr. Southmayd's private character and deportment which it is difficult to describe or reconcile. Though of a benevolent disposition and full of good nature and kind feelings, there was yet in him a vein of adventure after intellectual amusement, which, from its very nature, could not be gratified but at the expense of others, and often to such an extent as to render them ridiculous in the view of third persons to whom the result of the adventure was related. I have many times joined most heartily in the laugh at the relation of the result of many such seemingly innocent pieces of roguery, though I could not help condemning the mischief while participating in its fruits. In all such indulgences Southmayd never entertained the least malice, for his heart was a stranger to it, but his intense love of fun and enjoyment of the ridiculous often impelled him to go beyond the line of honest propriety. I used often to reproach him with it, but my admonitions were not well calculated to take effect when given at the close of a hearty laugh.

"From what I have been saying of Mr. Southmayd you would, I presume, be ready to conclude that he was one of the most cheerly and happy of men. But the case was directly the reverse, and during a considerable period of his life, and that, too, the most valuable part of it, he was a very unhappy man indeed, and I have no doubt he had recourse to much of the indulgence of that peculiar propensity I have attempted to describe for the purpose of dispelling a mental malady which for a long time oppressed and preyed upon his heart. He was for many years the victim of the strongest species of hypochondria that ever mortal man was. It never showed itself in long fits of settled melancholy or monomania, but in sudden fits and starts. After hours of cheerful conversation, and while in entire health, he would suddenly complain of great distress, and exhibit unmistakable evidence of great terror and apprehension of immediate dissolution. One very extraordinary instance I will relate. He and I had been alone many hours, conversing and reading together, and he not in the least complaining, when he at once sprung from his seat and with a scream as would have alarmed me had it been any other person, and pressing both hands upon his breast, he exclaimed that he was going to die immediately. I stepped to him and gently and calmly said to him, 'Don't be alarmed, you are not going to die' (for we never treated him as if we thought his distress imaginary), and put my hand gently upon him to lead him to the bed, when he raised one hand from his breast and thrusting his finger against the side of his head declared, with another outcry, that something was passing through his head. I persuaded him to lie down, telling him the feeling would pass off in a few minutes, but he continued to groan for some time. I, knowing what would cure him, took up and began to read to him one of Burke's finest essays, which lay by me, and, turning to a passage of extraordinary eloquence, read it, on which he sprung up on end in the bed, and exclaimed, 'Was ever anything finer than that!' I continued on reading, and in the course of half an hour he was well and cheerful as ever. This was the most extraordinary instance I ever saw in him, but those in a degree like it were frequent. He always went to bed an hour or two before Slosson and I did, he saying that he never was able to get asleep until he had gone through a great deal of such feelings as he never would attempt to describe.

"Mr. Southmayd was greatly esteemed in his native town by, I believe, almost every one, both old and young. He was early in life sent to the Legislature, and that often, and was so, I know, the last year of his life. He died of lung fever in March, 1813, about two months after the death of his friend Slosson. At the December term, 1812, the three who had so long occupied the same room in perfect harmony were for the last time there together. At the February term of the Supreme Court, Southmayd and I occupied it, but felt that we were in solitude, and in the next term it seemed to me most emphatically a solitude, and more like a family vault than like an abode for living men, and I believe I have never been into it since.

"Mr. Southmayd was undoubtedly an honest and honorable man, of uncommon pleasing manners and much beloved, and I never heard that he had an enemy. Indeed, the amenity of his manners and the gentleness of his temper almost forbade it.

"The family to which Mr. Southmayd belonged was of the Congregational order, and two of his sisters married Congregational clergymen. He, however, joined himself to the Episcopal Church, of which he was a member after he settled in life, and of which I believe he was a communicant, but am not sure. He died unmarried, and I believe in the thirty-ninth or fortieth year of his age.

"Hon. John Cotton Smith, the most eminent citizen of the town of Sharon, was a son of Rev. Cotton Mather Smith, and was born Feb. 12, 1765. He was graduated at Yale College in 1783, admitted to the bar of Litchfield County in 1786, and married to Miss Margaret Evertson, of Amenia, N. Y., in October of the same year. Their only child, the late William M. Smith, Esq., was born in August, 1787. Mr. Smith was soon introduced into the active duties of his profession in his native town by reason of the pecuniary embarrassments of the community in consequence of the Revolutionary war, and particularly from the extensive and embarrassed affairs of his uncle, Dr. Simeon Smith, who removed to Vermont, leaving the management of his extensive and complicated concerns in the hands of his young and inexperienced nephew. Through unwearied exertions he was able to extricate the affairs of his uncle from a nearly hopeless condition by the full payment of all just demands against him, and leaving him at last in the enjoyment of a handsome estate. It is but justice to his uncle to say that he, having no children of his own, made ample compensation to his nephew by the bequest in his will of a large and valuable estate. He was first elected to the Legislature in 1793, and was very frequently a member, and twice Speaker before 1800, when he was elected a member of Congress. There he remained six years, when the declining health of his father compelled his resignation. He was immediately elected to the Legislature of the State, and represented the town without intermission till 1809, and held the place of Speaker at each session. He was then elected to the Council, and in the October session of the same year was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court. In 1811 he was elected lieutenant-governor, and in 1813 Governor, of his native State. In this office he was continued till 1817, when the public voice demanded a change in the form of the government of the State, and the substitution of a written constitution for the less stable provisions of the charter of King Charles II. Governor Smith, not sympathizing with the majority on this question, retired to private life, and lived, for nearly thirty years, a private citizen of Sharon. In public life he was never appointed to a position which he was not fully competent to fill. As a presiding officer in a deliberative assembly he had no peer, and although while he was member of Congress, except for one short term, he was associated in principle and feeling with the minority, he was called upon to preside in committee of the whole more frequently than any other member. The late Luther Holley, an eminent citizen of Salisbury, who had been a member of the Legislature when Governor Smith was Speaker, once remarked that he had never seen a man who could take a paper from the table and lay it back again so handsomely as could John Cotton Smith.

"In private life Governor Smith was a fine specimen of the polished Christian gentleman. He devoted some of his time to reviewing the studies of his early life, and in the preparation of useful and entertaining articles for the more elevated literary periodicals. He was for several years president of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and of the American Bible Society, which latter office he retained till his death, which occurred on the 7th day of December, 1845, when he had nearly reached the age of eighty-one years.

"Nathaniel Smith.*—I received a line from my friend, Gen. Sedgwick, stating that it was your desire that he would ask of me, in your behalf, to furnish you with some facts in relation to the late Nathaniel Smith, and my views of his character, which might be of use to you in the preparation of the work you have in hand.

"I am, of course, aware that this application is owing to the accidental circumstance that I am the oldest, if not the only, member of the profession now living who had much personal acquaintance with that truly able and excellent man, or saw much of him in the exercise of his forensic or judicial talents. Judge Smith was indeed one of nature's nobles, and, considering the limited range of his early education, he had few equals and perhaps no superior in the profession which he chose, and which he eminently adorned. You are doubtless aware that Judge Smith had only such an education in childhood and youth as the common schools of the country afforded at the time. It was such, however, as a boy of unusual capacity and industrious habits would acquire from such a source, and such as, under the guidance of uncommon discretion through life, rarely permitted its defects to be disclosed.

"When I first went to the law-school in Litchfield, which was in the fall of 1793, Mr. Smith, though not over thirty years old, was in full practice, and engaged in almost every cause of any importance. Indeed, he was said to have established a high reputation for talents in the first cause he argued in the higher courts. It was upon a trial for manslaughter, which arose in his native town, and in which he appeared as junior counsel, and astonished the court, the bar, and all who heard him. Not long afterwards, in the celebrated case of Jedediah Strong and wife, before the General Assembly (she having applied for a divorce), he greatly distinguished himself again, and thus became known throughout the State as a young lawyer of the first promise, and the reputation thus early acquired was never suffered to falter, but, on the other hand, steadily increased in strength until his elevation to the bench.

"During my stay in Litchfield, and after my admission to the bar, I of course saw Mr. Smith, and heard him in almost all the important cases there; and as I was located in the southwest corner town in the county, adjoining Fairfield, I almost immediately obtained some business which, though small, was such as during nearly all my professional life caused me to attend the courts in that county, where I found Mr. Smith as fully engaged and as highly esteemed as in his own county. In New Haven I also know he had a very considerable practice.

* From Hollister's "History of Connecticut."

"It is worthy also to be observed, in forming an estimate of Mr. Smith's professional talent and character, that there never at any period was an abler bar in Connecticut than during his practice. In Litchfield County were Judge Reeve, Judge Adams, Gen. Tracy, John Allen, Judge Gould, N. B. Benedict, and others; at the Fairfield County bar were Pierpont Edwards, Judge Ingersoll, and Judge Daggett, constantly from New Haven, Judge Edmunds, S. B. Sherwood, R. M. Sherman, Judge Chapman, and Governor Bissell; and in New Haven, besides the three above named, were James Hillhouse, Judge Baldwin, and others.

"As I suppose it not probable that you ever saw Judge Smith, as he ceased to attend courts in 1819, and died when you were very young, I will observe, what you have doubtless heard, that he was a large and fine-appearing man, much of the same complexion of the Hon. Truman Smith, his nephew, with whom you are so well acquainted; less tall than he, but of rather fuller habit. His face was not only the index of high capacity and solid judgment, but uncommonly handsome; his hair was dark and thin, though not to baldness, except on the fore part of his head, and was very slightly sprinkled with gray. His fine, dark eyes were remarkably pleasing and gentle in ordinary intercourse, but very variable; always kindling when highly excited in debate, they became almost oppressive. His voice was excellent, being both powerful and harmonious, and never broke under any exertion of its capacity. His manner was very ardent and the seeming dictate of a strong conviction of the justice of his cause, and his gestures were the natural expression of such a conviction. Mr. Smith's style was pure and genuine Saxon, with no attempt at classic ornament or allusion. His train of reasoning was lucid and direct, and evincive of the fact that the whole of it was like a map spread out in his mind's eye from the beginning. His ingenuity was always felt and dreaded by his opponent. He spoke with much fluency, but with no undue rapidity; he never hesitated for or haggled at a word, nor did he ever tire his audience with undue prolixity, or omit to do full justice to his case for fear of tiring them; and indeed there was little danger of it. Though certainly a very fine speaker, he never achieved or aspired to those strains of almost superhuman eloquence with which his old master Reeve sometimes electrified and astonished his audience, and yet, in ordinary cases, he was the most correct speaker of the two, though Judge Reeve was, and he was not, a scholar. Mr. Smith, though quite unassuming, and often receding in common intercourse and conversation, was, when heated in argument, it must be confessed, often overbearing to the adverse party, and not only them, but to their counsel. Upon all other occasions he appeared to be, and I believe was, a very kind-hearted, agreeable, and pleasant man. To me he always so appeared, and I have been much in his company.

"Mr. Smith came early into public life, and was frequently elected to the General Assembly from Woodbury. In 1795 he was elected a member of the Fourth Congress, and in 1797 he was chosen to the Fifth Congress, but declined further election. In May, 1799, he was made an assistant, and was re-elected for the five following years, when he resigned his seat at that board in consequence of the passage of the act in 1803 prohibiting the members of the then Supreme Court of Errors from practicing before that court. He remained in full practice at the bar until October, 1806, when he was elected a judge of the Superior Court and continued to fill that office until May, 1819, when the judiciary establishment of that year went into operation, from which time he remained in private life until his death.

"In every public station in which Mr. Smith was placed he distinguished himself. He did so in Congress, at a time when our representation was as able, perhaps, as it ever has been, and when the character of the house to which he belonged was far higher than it now is. In the Superior Court he was certainly very greatly respected and admired as an able and perfectly upright judge.

"In private life his name was free from all reproach. A strictly honest and pure life, free from any of those little blemishes which often mar the fame of distinguished men, may, I think, be fairly claimed by his biographer to be his due. As a husband, a parent, a friend, a neighbor, a moralist, and a Christian, I believe few have left a more faultless name."

"James Gould, the son of Dr. William Gould, an eminent physician, was born at Brandford, in this State, in the year 1770. The goodness of his common-school education is inferable from the perfect accuracy of it, which showed itself in all he did or said in after-life. He graduated, when a little over twenty-one, at Yale College, in September, 1791, with distinguished honor in a class distinguished for talents.

"The year next following his collegiate course he spent in Baltimore as a teacher. He then returned to New Haven and commenced the study of law with Judge Chauncey; and in September of that year he was chosen a tutor in Yale College, in which office he continued two years. He then joined the law-school of Mr. Reeve, at Litchfield, and was soon after admitted to the bar. Immediately after his admission to the bar he opened an office for practice in that town, where he resided during the remainder of his life.

"On his first appearance as an advocate he evinced such an apparent maturity of intellect, such a self-possession, such command of his thoughts and of the language appropriate to their expression, that he was marked out as a successful aspirant for forensic eminence. His progress in the acquisition of professional business was steady and rapid.

"Fortunate circumstances concurring a few years before his choice of Litchfield as the field of his professional labors, in the removal by promotion of two very distinguished practitioners at that bar, opened the way to such a choice, and by like good fortune a similar event removed one of the two only remaining obstructions in that town to his full share in the best business as an advocate, the only business to which he aspired. As a reasoner Mr. Gould was forcible, lucid, and logical; as a speaker his voice was very pleasant and his language pure, clear, and always appropriate. He never aspired to high strains of impassioned eloquence, and rarely, if ever, addressed himself to the passions of the court and jury, but to their understanding only, and was a very able, pleasing, and successful advocate. His argument was a fair map of the case, and one sometimes engaged against him, but feeling his superiority, observed that he had rather have Gould against him in a case than any other of anywhere equal powers, because he could perfectly understand his argument, and if susceptible of an answer could know how to apply it. In his practice at the bar he was always perfectly fair and honorable. Within some two or three years after Mr. Gould commenced practice, Mr. Reeve, the founder and until that time the sole instructor of the Litchfield Law-School, accepted a seat upon the bench of the Superior Court. This court made it necessary for him to give up the school or to associate some one with him in its management, and to deliver lectures in his absence upon the circuits. The judge selected Mr. Gould as that associate, and for a number of years they jointly conducted and received the profits of the school; and on the final retiring of Judge Reeve from any participation in the instruction of the school, Mr. Gould became its sole instructor and so continued until elevated to the bench of the Superior Court in the spring of 1816, when he in turn had to have recourse to temporary aid for the short time he remained on the bench. But a thorough political revolution having taken place in this State, and a new constitution formed which entirely new-modeled the courts of law, Mr. Gould took no further share in public employments; and, his health being greatly impaired, he never resumed practice at the bar, but confined himself wholly to his school during the remainder of his life, as far as severe infirmities would permit. He died, as appears by the college catalogue, in 1838.

"In person Mr. Gould was very handsome. Of about medium height, or perhaps a little over, but rather less in body and limbs than medium size; his complexion fair, with fine dark eyes and beautiful brown hair; all his features good, and in connection indicative of much intelligence and good nature, and his form for symmetry and gracefulness could hardly have been mended; and in all respects, in body, mind, and education, he may be fairly styled a finished man. In private and social intercourse he was highly pleasing, facetious, and witty.

"Soon after his settlement in Litchfield he married the eldest daughter of the Hon. Uriah Tracy, so well known for his long and distinguished services in the councils of the State and nation.

"Mrs. Gould in person and mind was a fit wife for such a husband, and partook with him in the happiness of raising a very numerous and promising family of children.

"Judge Gould wrote and published a volume of pleadings, which, together with his fame as an instructor, gave him a distinguished name among the eminent jurists of the country."

"Hon. Noah Bennet Benedict was a native of Woodbury, in which he resided during his whole life. He was the son of the Rev. Noah Benedict, long the pastor of the First Congregational Church in that town. Mr. Benedict's early school education must have been correct and good, as its fruits invariably showed itself in after-life. He graduated at Yale College in September, 1788, when a little short of eighteen years of age. His legal studies commenced soon after his graduation, which were, I believe, pursued principally, if not wholly, in the office of his brother-in-law, Nathaniel Smith, afterwards so highly distinguished as a jurist, which was near the residence of Mr. Benedict's father. As soon as he arrived to lawful age Mr. Benedict came to the bar, and for the remainder of his life—to wit, about thirty-nine years—it is believed he never failed to attend every regular session of the courts holden at Litchfield; and, though he never habitually attended courts in other counties, he occasionally did so for the purpose of arguing a particular case. During the long course of his practice Mr. Benedict had an ample share of business, and for the latter half of that period he was, especially in the Superior Court, the leading advocate on one side or the other in most of the trials either to the court or to the jury. His management of a trial was discreet, his arguments sound, sensible, and, being aided by the well-known and generally esteemed integrity of his character, had their due effect. He never attempted to play the orator or to attract attention by fine turned periods, but contented himself with plain reasoning, of which he was no indifferent master.

"At a very early period Mr. Benedict was a member of the Legislature. But the political majority of the voters in Woodbury, becoming about this time and for long afterwards decidedly Democratic, proved an effectual bar to his political promotion, as far as depended upon that town, but by the vote of the State at large he was elected in 1813 one of the twelve assistants (as they were then styled who composed the upper house of the Assembly), and was re-elected the two following years; but in the year 1818 an entire political revolution took place in Connecticut, and Mr. Benedict shared the fate of almost every one who held any post of dignity or profit depending upon public suffrage at large in the State. He was subsequently many years later elected once more to the lower house. He was also for several years judge of probate for the district of Woodbury, an appointment then depending upon the Legislature. Mr. Benedict was twice married, but left no living issue. He died in June or July, 1831, at the age of sixty, or in his sixtieth year.

JAMES GOULD.

"In private life Mr. Benedict was entirely unassuming, and a very pleasing companion to all who could relish purity of moral character and conduct, which his whole life was an eminent example; his feelings were peculiarly sensitive and delicate; a loose or profane expression never escaped his lips; and indeed so fastidious was he in respect to the former that it used to be a matter of amusement with his less scrupulous associates in jocose conversation to tease his feminine delicacy upon such subjects. Though when alone and unoccupied he had a propensity to indulge in somewhat gloomy reflections, yet he was not averse to participate in facetious conversation when due delicacy was observed. He had a profound respect for religion, and was in all respects a good, a very good, man.

"Mr. Benedict was of somewhat less than middling size, of a medium complexion, but his eyes and hair rather dark.

"Hon. Jabez W. Huntington, son of the late Gen. Zachariah Huntington, of Norwich, and grandson of the Hon. Jabez Huntington, of that place, the assistant and associate of the first Governor Trumbull, was born in Norwich in the year 1787 or 1788. He received his early training and instruction in his native town, which after-times evinced to be accurate and good. He became a member of Yale College in September, 1802, and graduated in September, 1806, with the reputation of a good scholar. Soon after his graduation he became a teacher in an academic school under the government of its founder, Esquire Morris, of Litchfield South Farms, as then called, now the town of Morris, named after the founder of said school. After about a year thus employed, Mr. Huntington entered Judge Reeve's law-school, in which he continued a diligent student until admitted to the bar in Litchfield County, of which he soon showed himself to be a worthy member, and in due time a distinguished one, he having commenced the practice of his profession in Litchfield, and there continued it until its final termination by an office conferred upon him incompatible with its further pursuit. In practice his whole aim and ambition was to become an advocate, and had no desire to obtain any share of collecting business, though in many hands not less lucrative, and, as he was always ready to aid the less ambitious of speaking, he early acquired a very considerable share of the portion of practice of which he was ambitious, and which was improving to him. His forte as an advocate was in detecting error in declarations and other parts of pleadings, and in a lucid manner of pointing them out. Upon the whole, he was an advocate clear and accurate, rather than peculiar for the gracefulness of manner or refinement of diction, though his manner was by no means disgusting, and his language entirely free from any approach to vulgarity. His manners were pleasing and popular, and he repeatedly represented Litchfield in the General Assembly, and distinguished himself there. He was elected to the Twenty-first Congress, and re-elected to the Twenty-second and Twenty-third Congresses, and near the expiration of the last of his congressional career he was chosen a judge of the Superior Court, and held that office until 1840, when, being chosen a senator of the United States, he resigned the judgeship and accepted the latter appointment, and continued to hold it by virtue of a second appointment until his death, in 1847, in all which stations he performed the duties thereof with honor to himself and to the entire satisfaction of the public. His moral character was irreproachable; a professor of religion and an observer of its precepts. Late in life he was married, but it is believed left no issue. Soon after election to Congress he removed to his native town, and died there.

"Phineas Miner, a very respectable and somewhat eminent member of the Litchfield County bar, was a native of Winchester, in that county, and there, and in that region, as far as by the writer hereof known, received his entire training and education in all respects. At an early period in life he commenced the practice of law in the place of his birth, in the society of Winsted, as is believed, a place of a great deal of active manufacturing business and furnishing an ample share of employment for gentlemen of the legal profession, of which Mr. Miner soon acquired an ample share, and at no distant period an engrossing one, with which he appeared in court from term to term until he felt warranted in the expectation of drawing after him an engagement in all the disputable cases from that fruitful quarter, when he removed to Litchfield, and was much employed as an advocate for a number of years, and until his health rather prematurely failed, and he became the victim of great mental and bodily suffering, until relieved by death before reaching the ordinary period at which old age begins to make its effects much perceptible in the human frame. As an advocate Mr. Miner was ardent, impassioned, and fluent, but in his apparent great ambition to be eloquent he often made use of figures of speech which a more chastened and correct training in youth would have taught him to avoid, and less wounding to an ear of taste, but the fault apparent to all was the extreme prolixity of his arguments, but, these faults notwithstanding, Mr. Miner was a respectable and able advocate.

"Before his removal to Litchfield, Mr. Miner was an early and frequent member of the Legislature from his native town, and after his removal there a member of the State Senate for the Fifteenth District, and was also elected to fill a vacancy in the second session of the Twenty-third Congress.

"Mr. Miner was twice married, but, it is believed, left no issue, but of this the writer is uncertain. He led a strictly moral life, and was justly esteemed a good man.

"LEMAN CHURCH, a late member of the Litchfield County bar, was a native of Salisbury, in this county, a son of an opulent farmer of that town, and in it, it is supposed, he received his education, both scholastic and professional, the latter in the office of his half-brother, Samuel Church, afterwards a judge of the Superior Court, and finally chief justice of the same; and after his admission to the bar he opened an office in North Canaan, where he resided during the remainder of his life. Mr. Church was successful in acquiring at an early period a promising share of professional business, which steadily increased, until by the middle of professional life he occupied a stand among the leading advocates at the bar; and towards the close of life there was scarce a cause, especially in the higher courts, of considerable importance, discussed in which he was not engaged.

"In September, 1833, Mr. Church was appointed by the court State's attorney as successor to his brother Samuel, on the latter's elevation to the bench of the Superior Court, and held that office by annual reappointments until September term, 1838, when by a political change in the court he was required to yield the place to another; it is believed, however, that he afterwards for a time reoccupied that place, but not positively recollected.

"As a speaker he was cool, unimpassioned, and ingenious; he never attempted to affect the passions of those he addressed, and, being destitute of passion himself, was consequently incapable of moving the passions of others; he never attempted to be eloquent or made use of a merely ornate expression, his object in speaking was effect, and that wholly directed to his cause and not to himself; in the management of a case he was always cool and self-possessed; no sudden and unexpected turn in the progress of a trial disconcerted him or appeared to be unexpected by him; no collision at the bar ever appeared to affect his temper in the least. With such a temperament, it is obvious that the legal profession was of all the professions the one for him, and that in which he was calculated to excel.

"Mr. Church was always entirely regardless of personal appearance and dress; he was very small, meagre, and ill formed, his features quite ordinary, but all this very indifferent appearance was rescued from inattention by a most remarkably attractive and intelligent eye.

"Mr. Church was frequently a representative to the Legislature from Canaan, and never failed to make an impression upon that body; and to his sagacious management is attributable the preservation of the Housatonic Railroad from ruin, as a commissioner thereon appointed by the Legislature, with power, together with his associate in office, Mr. Pond, to sell and consequently to destroy the road, which seemed to be a favorite object with them for a time.

"Mr. Church died in the midst of life as a professional man, July, 1849."

The HON. ANSEL STERLING was born in Lyme, Conn., Feb. 3, 1782, the seventh son of William Sterling, a man of position and considerable wealth in that town. His grandfather, Joseph Sterling, born in 1700, was one of the early settlers of Lyme. The name originally was spelt Stirling, as seen in the old cemetery in that place.

On the maternal side Judge Sterling is descended from William Hyde, whose name is on the monument in the old cemetery at Hartford, Conn., as one of the original settlers of 1636, and one of the original proprietors of the town of Norwich, Conn.

Mr. Hyde's great-great-great-granddaughter, Jemima Sill, married Capt. William Stirling, Jan. 3, 1763, the subject of this sketch being their tenth child and seventh son.

Judge Sterling, at the early age of twenty-three, was a practicing lawyer at the bar of Litchfield County, and for forty years there were no interruptions to his attending each session of the different courts. He studied his profession with his eldest brother, Hon. Elisha Sterling, of Salisbury, Conn., who was a graduate of the class of 1787 of Yale College, "a man of a high order of talent."

Judge Sterling settled in Sharon in the year 1808, where he spent his life. Oct. 8, 1804, he married Isabella Canfield, seventh daughter of Hon. John Canfield and Dorcas Buell, of Sharon.

Hon. John Canfield was a son of Samuel Canfield, Esq., of New Milford, Conn., a judge of the court of Litchfield County, and deacon of the Congregational Church in that place. Samuel Canfield's wife was Elizabeth Judson, the great-great-granddaughter of William Judson, who came from Yorkshire, England, in 1634.

The Hon. John Canfield was born in New Milford, Conn., 1740; was graduated at Yale College 1762. He was a great-grandson of Matthew Canfield, an original settler of Norwalk, Conn., a judge and leading man in the colony. Hinman says,—

"As a proof of his standing, I may only mention he was one of the nineteen signers of the petition to King Charles II. for the Charter of the colony, and his name is mentioned in that invaluable grant to Connecticut in 1662. This is ample proof of his exalted standing in the colony, as no gentleman would have been called upon to sign the petition but such men as had sustained a high reputation in England before they came to New England."

Amos Phelps

John Canfield established himself in his profession in Sharon, 1765, being the first lawyer in the town.

He fitted for the legal profession several gentlemen who afterwards rose to eminence; among them his son-in-law, Ambrose Spencer, chief justice of the State of New York, Hon. John Cotton Smith, and Noah Webster.

"Mr. Canfield enjoyed a most enviable reputation and was held in the highest estimation by his fellow-citizens. He represented the town in the Legislature at ten different sessions." In 1786 he was elected a member of the Continental Congress, but died on the 26th of October of the same year. Not living to take his seat in that body, his name is omitted from the honorable roll of those early days.

Mr. Canfield was a friend of Benjamin Franklin, with whom was held many earnest consultations, the "tax on tea" being at one time a subject of special interest. His wife, Dorcas Buell, was the only daughter of Solomon Buell, eighth son of John Buell, and grandson of William Buell, who came from England in 1643. Their children, eight in number, were Laura, wife of Ambrose Spencer; Annis, wife of Andrew Adams, Jr., son of Chief Justice Adams, of Litchfield; Eunice, wife of Samuel Rockwell, M.D.; Avis, who died aged thirteen years; Alma, wife of Hon. Elisha Sterling; Almira, wife of Gen. Elisha Buel; John Montgomery, married Fanny Harvey; Isabella, wife of Ansel Sterling.

Judge Sterling was a man of unimpeachable integrity, "of diversified talent. As a lawyer his forensic ability was of a high order, nor was he deficient in legal science. His language flowed rapidly, and at times his appeals to the jury were very effective."

Judge Church, of the Supreme Court, thus writes of him:

"This distinguished gentleman was long an active and prominent member of the bar of Litchfield County, for many sessions an influential member of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, a circuit judge of the County Court, a member of Congress for two sessions, and an estimable man in all the relations of social and domestic life."

Judge Sterling died Nov. 6, 1853, aged seventy-one. His wife died July 26, 1855, aged seventy-four. Their children, eight in number, are Laura Spencer; George Augustine, who graduated at West Point, served for a time in the United States army stationed at Fort Gibson, in the then Territory of Arkansas, resigned and entered the ministry of the Episcopal Church. He died at Sharon, Oct. 17, 1869. He married Flora J. Chamberlain. Their children were Mary Isabella, wife of Walter M. Patterson, Esq., who died Feb. 18, 1864; George Ansel, M.D., married Mary P. Havens.

Ambrose Spencer, second son of Ansel Sterling, died July 1, 1880. His wife, Louisa M. Clarke. Their children were Louisa M., wife of L. H. Stewart; Pierre Clarke; George Edward.

Charles Ansel, third son, married Augusta A. Shelton. Two children: Charles Frederick, M.D., wife, Mary C. Anthony; Isabella Canfield, wife of William C. Atwater.

Isabella Dorcas, married Rev. George Ryerson; one son, George Ansel Sterling Ryerson, M.D.

Thomas Sterling, fourth son, married Louisa T. Winchell, deceased.

Avis Canfield, married Frederick S. Bogue.

Rev. John Canfield, fifth son, was graduated at Trinity College, Connecticut, a clergyman of the Episcopal Church; died at Hartford, Conn., Dec. 10, 1874. He married Caroline Sargent Upson. Their children are Caroline, Isabella, Alice, Clarance Canfield.

For notices of Ephraim Kirby, Uriel Holmes, E. C. Bacon, Francis Bacon, and John Bird, see Litchfield history; and for John and Judson Canfield, see history of Sharon.

"Stephen Titus Hosmer was a lawyer of eminence in his peculiar way. He had no very high standing as an advocate, but, as a lawyer learned in elementary principles, his position was a very good one. A gentleman who had heard him told me that his manner was hard and dry and his elocution very defective, but in some branches of legal science he had few superiors. He seemed to delight in exploring ancient paths in search of legal principles, and in getting up old legal tracts and dissertations. In the first volume of Day's Reports there is a note of forty pages of fine print containing an opinion of Lord Camden, of the English Court of Common Pleas, which has hardly a rival in judicial learning or eloquence. Mr. Day informed me that this was presented to him in manuscript by Mr. Hosmer, there being then no printed copy of it on this side of the Atlantic. He was appointed a judge of the old court in 1815, but, being one of the younger judges, it never fell to his lot to preside on the trial of a case until his accession to the chief justiceship. His career on the whole was very successful, both at nisi prius and on the bench of the Supreme Court. His apprehension of the points involved in the case before him was very quick, and the first intimation he gave on incidental matters occurring in the course of the trial was a sure indication of what the result would be, and, although he would take special pains to say to the counsel that he had formed no opinion, the party against whom he leaned knew that his fate was sealed. His labors in his official duties must have been immense. It fell to his lot to give the opinion of the court in nearly all the cases tried in the Supreme Court for several years after his appointment, and nearly all the material of the third, fourth, and fifth large volumes of the Connecticut Reports are the result of his study of the cases before the court, and some of them are very learned and labored. His illustrations in the case of Mitchell vs. Warner, in the second of Connecticut Reports, of the extent of the obligations incurred in the covenants of a deed, explained the subject to me when I was young better than anything I had before read on the subject.

"It seemed to be his object to render himself as agreeable as possible to the members of the bar, sometimes employing his leisure moments on the bench in furnishing prescriptions for human ailments, such as corns on the toes, and handing them over to such members as stood in need of them. Then he would hand over a formula for making, as he said, the best kind of liquid blacking for our boots. In fact, everything which he had prescribed he always designated as the very best. At one term of the court, Phineas Miner, Esq., who had lived a widower for several years, was about being married, which fact was intimated to the judge. While he sat waiting on the bench for the preparation of some business, he spoke out suddenly: "Gentlemen, is there a vacant cell in your jail? Won't it be necessary for me to commit Mr. Miner to prevent his doing some rash act?" The laugh was thoroughly turned upon poor Miner, and the whole scene was very enjoyable. He employed all his leisure hours in obtaining all the relaxation which was within his reach. He played on the piano and violin, and sang with great power and effect.

"There was no perceptible waning of his powers, physical or mental, during the time of his service on the court. He retired from the bench at the age of seventy years, in February, 1833, and died, after a short illness, in less than two years thereafter."

"John Thompson Peters was the senior associate judge of the court, and he held his first circuit in this county. He was a native of Hebron, and a lawyer of respectable standing. His fellow-citizens had often honored him with a seat in the Legislature, and thus he had become tolerably well known in the State. When the United States direct tax was laid, in 1814, he was appointed collector for the First District, removed to Hartford, and held that office when he was appointed judge. He had been one of the leaders of the Democratic party from its formation, and as an Episcopalian had opposed the claims of the 'Standing Order' to ecclesiastical priority, and some apprehensions were felt lest his well-known views on these subjects might temper his opinions on those questions incidentally involving them. Many fears were entertained as to the stability of ecclesiastical funds which existed in almost every Congregational parish, and those who desired to break them down looked to Judge Peters and to his influence with the court to aid them. But those who entertained such hopes were destined to an early disappointment, as their past experience of his administration on such questions showed him to be disposed to stand firmly on the old paths. He used to tell an amusing anecdote relating to his first trial of such a case in one of the eastern counties of the State, where he was appealed to very strongly to decide that a promise to pay money in aid of such funds was without consideration. But he told the parties that the law on that subject was well settled, and, in his opinion, founded on correct principles, and that if he had the power he had not the disposition to change it. It had been the practice of the Congregational pastor of the village to open the proceedings in court with prayer, but, considering Peters to be a heretic (I use the judge's own language), he had never invited Divine favor for him, but after that decision every prayer was charged with invocations of blessings upon 'thy sarvant, the judge.'

"He was very severe in meting out the punishments of the law to convicted criminals, generally inflicting the severest sentence that the law would allow. One case was tried before him which excited much remark and some reprehension. A man had been convicted before Judge Lanman of a State-prison offense; had been sentenced to four years' imprisonment, and had served a part of a year, when he obtained a new trial. He was tried again, before Judge Peters, and again convicted. When the time came to pass sentence on the last conviction, his counsel asked for some mitigation on account of the imprisonment already suffered. Said the judge, 'He must settle that account with Judge Lanman. He owes me five years' imprisonment in State prison,' and such was the sentence. One prisoner who had received a severe sentence at his hands after the expiration of his confinement burned the judge's barn, and he petitioned the Legislature of the State to pay for it in 1831, but they declined to make the compensation.

"For a few years the services of Judge Peters on the bench were very acceptable. His decisions were prompt and generally founded on a sensible view of the matter before him, without any affectation of learning or a display of oratory. His entire candor and fairness were never called in question, and the decay of his powers, which was very apparent towards the close of his career, was observed by the bar with sorrow and regret. I witnessed an affecting scene connected with his experience on the bench which excited a deep feeling of sympathy. He had a favorite son, Hugh Peters, Esq., whom he had educated at Yale College, and in whom all his hopes seemed to centre. This young man, in connection with George D. Prentice, the noted editor, had much to do in conducting the New England Weekly Review, a paper just established in Hartford, and which was the organ of the party which elected William W. Ellsworth, Jabez W. Huntington, and William L. Storrs to Congress. He had acquired a wide reputation as a writer of brilliant promise, and after a while went to Cincinnati to go into business as a lawyer. On his way across Long Island Sound he wrote a farewell to New England in poetry, which was published with great commendation in most of the newspapers in the country. Soon after his arrival at Cincinnati his dead body was found floating in the Ohio, several miles below the city, and circumstances were such as to create the belief in some minds that it was a case of suicide. The intelligence of this sad event was brought to Litchfield while the Court of Errors was in session, in June, 1831. It was first communicated to Judge Williams, who sat next to Judge Peters, and he, with all possible tenderness, informed the latter. The reporter, Mr. Day, in giving the report of the case on trial, closes it by saying, 'Peters, Judge, having received, during the argument of this case, intelligence of the death of his son, Hugh Peters, Esq., of Cincinnati, left the court-house, 'multa gemens casuque animum concussus,' and gave no opinion.' I witnessed the mournful scene, and I well remember the loud and plaintive groans of the afflicted old man as he passed out of the court-room and down the stairway to his lodgings.

"When Chief Justice Hosmer retired from the bench, the Legislature, by a very strong vote, elected Judge Peters' junior, Judge Daggett, chief justice. He felt the slight, but did not retire, and held his place till his death, in August, 1834. A few weeks longer and he would have reached the age of seventy years.

"Asa Chapman.—The next judge in seniority was Asa Chapman, of Newtown, in Fairfield County. For several years before he received the appointment he practiced to some extent in this county, and was, of course, well known here. He was the father of the late Charles Chapman, of Hartford. He was somewhat taller than the son, and, with his bald head, white locks, thin face, and gray eyes, he resembled him not a little in personal appearance, but he had none of that bitterness of manner or spirit which characterized the efforts of the younger Chapman. He was an Episcopalian in religious faith, and he had very naturally fallen into the ranks of the new party, and, being well qualified for the place in point of legal ability, he made a very acceptable and popular judge. He was a man of good humor, genial temper, and great colloquial powers, which he exercised very freely on the trial of cases. If a lawyer undertook to argue a case before him, he soon found himself engaged in a friendly, familiar conversation with the judge, the evident intent of the latter being to draw out the truth and justice of the case. His administration was very popular, and his early death was greatly deplored. He died of consumption, in 1826, at the age of fifty-six years.

"Jeremiah Gates Brainard, of New London, the father of the poet Brainard, was next in seniority on the bench. He had been a member of the old court from 1807, and he was elected to the new court under the circumstances which I have mentioned. He was a man of no showy pretensions, very plain and simple in his manners, and very familiar in his intercourse with the bar. He affected very little dignity on the bench, and yet he was regarded as an excellent judge. He despatched business with great facility, and implicit confidence was placed in his sound judgment and integrity. He resigned his place on the bench in 1829, his health not being equal to the duties of the office, having served as judge for twenty-two years.

"William Bristol.—Of all the judges on the bench, William Bristol, of New Haven, was the youngest in years as well as in rank. He had not been much known as a lawyer out of the county of New Haven, and, of course, his coming here was looked for with considerable interest. He evidently had a high sense of judicial dignity, his manners on the bench being very taciturn, approaching severeness, very seldom speaking except to announce his decisions in the fewest possible words, and I doubt if any one ever saw him smile in court. His decisions were sound and well considered, and upon the whole his administration was respectable, although he could not be said to have had much personal popularity with the bar.

"David Daggett.—The decease of Judge Chapman and the resignation of Judge Bristol in 1826 created two vacancies in the court which were to be filled at the session of the Legislature of that year. The same party which had effected the change in the government of the State and in the constitution of the court was still in power, but nearly all the eminent lawyers in the State adhered to the Federal party. Probably the most obnoxious man in the State to the dominant party was David Daggett, not so much from personal dislike as from his prominence in the ranks of his party. His talents, integrity, and high legal abilities were conceded by every one, but when the Legislature assembled there was probably not a man in the State who looked to his election as a judge.

"There were a few men in the State belonging to the toleration party who felt deeply the importance of having a reputable court, and who, on this question, were willing to forego all party considerations. Morris Woodruff, of Litchfield County, Thaddeus Betts and Charles Hawley, of Fairfield County, Walter Booth, of New Haven County, and Charles J. McCurdy, of New London County, were men of that stamp; and it was through the influence of these men, and of others of less prominence, that David Daggett was elected a judge of the Supreme Court. The same influences, exerted by the same men, secured the election of Judges Williams and Bissell, three years later.

"After the election of Judge Daggett was effected no one seemed to care who the other judge might be, as with Chief Justice Hosmer at the head of the court, and Judge Daggett as an associate, it was felt that it could have a highly respectable character. The Hon. James Lanman received the appointment, but after a short term of service resigned.

"John Welch.—The junior judge of the court was the Hon. John Welch, of Litchfield. He was a native of the parish of Milton and a graduate of Yale College in the class of 1778,—a class which is said to have produced more eminent men in proportion to its numbers than any other which ever graduated at that institution. Joel Barlow, Zephaniah Swift, Uriah Tracy, Noah Webster, and the last Governor Wolcott, with many other distinguished men, were of the class.

"Judge Welch never entered either of the professions, but he lived to a very great age. He was appointed a judge of the County Court in the place of Cyrus Swan, Esq., of Sharon, who had resigned his position on the bench of the court in 1819. Judge Welch continued on the bench till he became disqualified by age in 1829. He made no pretensions to legal learning, but his decisions were based on a fair, impartial view of the questions as they came up. He always gave reasons for the opinion he had formed, always made himself well understood, and his candor, fairness, and sound judgment were admitted by all.

"Judges Burrall, Woodruff, and Boardman.—In 1829, when Judge Welch must retire on account of his age, it was deemed proper by the Legislature to make new appointments of both associate judges. Judge Strong had been twelve years on the bench, and in his place William M. Burrall, Esq., of Canaan, was appointed senior associate judge, and Gen. Morris Woodruff took the place of Judge Welch. The court continued thus organized till the resignation of Judge Pettibone, when, not only with the consent, but with the decided approval, of both associate judges, David S. Boardman, Esq., of New Milford, was taken from the bar and installed chief judge of the County Court, which as then constituted held a high position in public confidence.

"Jabez Swift was the first lawyer who settled in Salisbury. He was a native of Kent, and upon the breaking out of the war of the Revolution he joined the army in Boston, and there died.

"Adonijah Strong was a pupil of Mr. Swift, and succeeded him in practice. Col. Strong was a man of vigorous mind, had a large practice, but possessed none of the graces of eloquence. For many years he was an efficient magistrate, and a member of the General Assembly. He died in February, 1813.

"Joseph Canfield, Esq., commenced his professional studies with Col. Strong, and finished them at the Litchfield Law School. He commenced his practice at Furnace Village, in Salisbury, about the year 1789. Mr. Canfield was a gentleman of graceful manners and good talents; he died in September, 1803, having been several times a member of the Assembly.

"Martin Strong, of Salisbury, son of Col. Adonijah Strong, of that town, was a lawyer of the olden time, of whose wit, as well as blunders, many stories were rife fifty years ago. Col. Strong had four sons, all of whom entered into professional life,—two as clergymen, and two as lawyers. His son, the Rev. William Strong, was father of the Hon. William Strong, of Pennsylvania, now one of the associate justices of the United States Supreme Court. Judge Martin Strong had been a member of the bar for several years, but had never made a very high mark in his profession; in fact, he had never devoted himself assiduously to the discharge of its duties. He owned a very large and valuable farm on the town hill in Salisbury, and his principal business was to attend to that. When he came upon the bench he seemed to have a recollection of a few plain legal maxims, but his method of applying them to cases was not always the most skillful. He was a man of immense physical dimensions, and when he had taken his seat on the bench he sat in perfect quiet until the loud proclamation of the sheriff announced the adjournment of the court. He remained in office till 1829, when William M. Burrall, Esq., of Canaan, took his place.

"Asa Bacon was a native of Canterbury, and came to Litchfield as early as 1806, after a short period of practice at East Haddam, and for a while was a partner of Judge Gould. In 1820 he had become a leading spirit at the bar. He had a fine personal appearance, being tall and well proportioned, and usually richly dressed. The first time I saw him before the jury his head was well cased in powder and pomatum, and a long queue was dangling at his back; but he soon laid aside this conformity to old-time fashions, although he was the last member of the bar to do so. He was undoubtedly a very hard student, and his briefs were the result of extensive and faithful study. He was not a very fluent, but was after all an interesting, speaker. He would sometimes interlude his arguments with specimens of drollery and flashes of wit, and the expectation that these would be put forth secured a very strict attention from all his hearers. He frequently quoted passages of Scripture and commented upon them, not always irreverently, but sometimes with rather unbecoming levity. He was a mortal enemy of universal suffrage, and once in commenting upon the parable of the talents he called the bailee of one talent who had hid it in the earth a universal suffrage man. He was a genial, jolly, companionable man, and, although not addicted to excessive liberality in his benefactions, still kept himself in good standing while he remained here. When he had reached the age of sixty years he was appointed president of the branch of the Phœnix Bank, located in Litchfield, and after that was never seen professionally engaged in court. The last years of his life were spent in New Haven, where he died at a very advanced age.

"Gen. Elisha Sterling was a native of Lyme and a graduate of Yale College in the class of 1787. He studied law with the Hon. John Canfield, of Sharon, who was his father-in-law, and settled in Salisbury in 1791. He was a man of a high order of talent, and had he addressed himself solely to professional points would probably have stood at the head of the bar in this county. But he loved money and gave much of his time to different kinds of business, and acquired great wealth for those times. Notwithstanding this propensity he had an extensive practice and was engaged in most of the cases coming from the northern portions of the county. He was a ready speaker, not very select in the choice of his words, and not eloquent by any established rule of elocution, but there was a kind of impetuosity in his manner, accompanied by a rapid but distinct utterance of language, which gave him popularity as an advocate. He was appointed State's attorney in 1814, and held the office six years, when Seth P. Beers, Esq., was appointed in his place. He retired from practice soon after, and died in 1836, at the age of seventy-two years. His wealth enabled him to indulge the strong taste he had for a handsome style of living and equipage, and in that direction his mind had strong aristocratical tendencies.

"DAVID S. BOARDMAN was a native of New Milford, and settled there in the practice of law after his admission to the bar, in 1795. He was a man of retiring disposition, in no way giving showy display of his powers, but he was a finished legal scholar, and was deemed a very safe and prudent professional adviser. He had a very nice literary taste, and the least grammatical blunder by a judge or lawyer attracted his attention and frequently his ridicule. His arguments were pointed specimens of perspicuity, precision, and force, but he failed to attract much attention as an advocate through a defect of vocal power. His voice was feeble and could scarcely be heard except by those who were near him. He had a high character for moral rectitude, and his four or five years' service at the head of the County Court gave it a dignity and moral power which in other years it had scarcely obtained. Sketches from his pen descriptive of some of the members of the bar in this county of the last century may be found in the beginning of this chapter. He was a college classmate of Asa Bacon, and they were warm personal friends. He lived to the great age of ninety-seven years.

"PHINEHAS MINER, the last, because the youngest, of the class of lawyers to whom I have referred, deserves a much more extended notice than I shall be able to give him. His amiable and genial temper as a man seemed to make him very popular as a lawyer. Fidelity to his clients and a laborious attention to their interests was a marked trait in his professional career. He commenced practice in Winchester, his native town, and had there acquired a good standing in his profession, when he came to Litchfield in 1816. He had an extensive practice and was noted for the diligence with which he pressed every point, however unimportant, which could be made to tell in favor of his client. His arguments were generally extended to a great length, and I have known him to receive a gentle hint from the judge recommending a condensation of his thoughts. He died in 1839, at the age of sixty years, and Mr. Day, the reporter, gives a flattering estimate of him in a foot-note on 134th page of the 13th volume of Connecticut Reports.

"WILLIAM G. WILLIAMS, of New Hartford, stood as high as any member of this class. He belonged to the eminent and reputable Williams family, of Massachusetts, his father being a nephew of Col. Ephraim Williams, the founder of Williams College, and himself the first cousin of Bishop Williams, of the Episcopal Church of Connecticut. As a special pleader he had no superior at the bar. He had a tolerably fair standing as an advocate, and was indefatigable in pursuing to the last possible effort any purpose he had undertaken. If he failed in one form of action he would try another, and never gave up till further persistence was hopeless. He commenced business as a lawyer in Sharon, where he married, but after a few years he removed to New Hartford, where he remained during his life. He had scarcely reached the age of sixty years when he died.

"JOHN STRONG, JR., of Woodbury, his native town, was a lawyer of very fair standing. I remember once to have heard Judge Boardman say 'that if he found John Strong differing from himself on a law point, he always doubted the correctness of his own conclusions.' He was a ready speaker and had a peculiar habit of looking all over the hall, frequently directly behind himself, while he was addressing the jury. His arguments were clear and logical, and he was always listened to by the court with attention. He had scarcely reached the age of fifty years when he died.

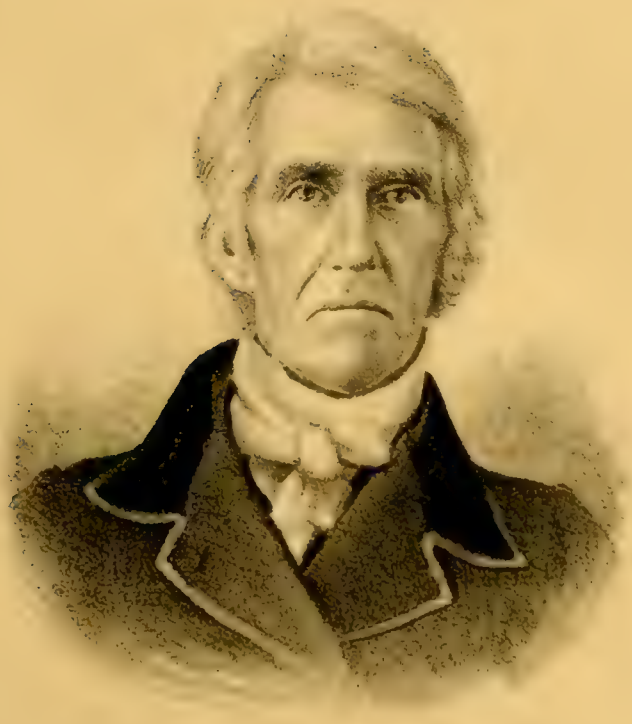
"CALVIN BUTLER, of Plymouth, had a very good reputation as a lawyer. He also stood well with his fellow-citizens of Plymouth, as he was often a member of the Legislature, and he was of the convention of this State. He was also a member of the Senate in 1832. He had a part in all cases which came from that town and managed a trial very well. He was earnest in his manner of addressing the jury, and he was in full practice up to the time of his death, when he had reached the age of seventy-two years. He died suddenly while away from home, and left behind a good record as a faithful lawyer and an honest man.

"CYRUS SWAN, of Stonington, came to the bar of this county in 1798. He settled in Sharon, and continued in full practice for twenty years. He was appointed a judge of the County Court in 1818, and reappointed for the succeeding year, but resigned the office before the close of the term. His health becoming intolerant of sedentary habits and requiring outdoor pursuits, he never resumed full practice, although he occasionally appeared in trials where his old friends demanded his aid. His arguments were clear, sound, and sensible, and were listened to with attention. His mind was well stored with sound legal maxims, and his aim seemed to be to make a sensible application of these to the case in hand. He died in 1835, at the age of sixty-five years.

"JOSEPH MILLER, of Winsted, who died recently in Michigan at a very advanced age, was a man of moral talent and of a higher order of legal acquirements than he usually had credit for. After the removal of Mr. Miller to Litchfield his practice was large, and continued to be so for several years. His arguments were short, compact, and logical, and were listened to with attention and interest. In middle life he removed to Michigan, where he had a prosperous career.

"WILLIAM M. BURRALL, a native, and through life a resident, of Canaan, was a lawyer of very extensive practice in one branch of business. He commenced a great many cases to the court, but never argued one on the final trial. He would sometimes argue motions for continuance or for other purposes, and his success on such occasions showed that he had underrated his own powers. Although he did not argue his cases, he was the master-spirit in managing all the details of the trial, in what order witnesses should be called, and the points of testimony brought out. His associates depended greatly on his skill in conducting this part of the proceedings. He had a kind, affable, and winning way in his social intercourse, and his offices were employed in adjusting and settling legal controversies. He acted as committee and arbitrator in more cases than any other member of the bar of his time, and if a desire to make himself as indifferent as possible to all parties sometimes seemed to hold him back from decisive action, he always, in the end, showed true firmness and integrity. He was an associate judge of the County Court from 1829 to 1836, and after that chief judge for ten years. He died at the age of seventy-seven years.

"COL. WILLIAM COGGSWELL, of New Preston, a very worthy and respectable gentleman, was a member of the bar, and was very seldom absent from the courts. He never engaged in the trial of a case, and very seldom spoke to the bench, but he was always a busy man in the court-room. He was one of the electors who cast the vote of Connecticut for John Quincy Adams for President in 1824. He died before he had reached a very advanced age.



"SETH P. BEERS.—When I came to the bar, in 1820, Seth P. Beers, Esq., was in full practice. He was appointed State's attorney soon after, but resigned in three years, having been appointed commissioner of the school fund, which office he held for twenty-five years. I have heard him say that at some terms of the court he had commenced as many as one hundred and fifty cases, and he was very thorough in all matters committed to his trust. His talents as an advocate were respectable, his briefs being very full and his knowledge of every minute point being very complete.

"PERRY SMITH, of New Milford, held a somewhat prominent place at the bar, and his practice was extensive. So many different estimates have been made of Mr. Smith's real qualities that it is difficult to speak of him with any very strong assurance of correctness. That he had talents and friends the success which he achieved both as a lawyer and a politician renders certain, but those who remember the time of his professional experience here know that he had enemies, and such would be the natural result of the unrelenting bitterness with which he pursued his adversaries in his efforts before the courts. There was a bitterness in his invectives, a persistence in his persecutions, an implacability in his enmities, which gave a decided character to his professional career, and which insured to him the enmity of all against whom his efforts were directed. He was always listened to with a kind of inquisitiveness as to what new fountain of bitterness he would open, or what new invectives he would invent to pour out upon his adversary. These were sometimes directed against the opposing counsel as well as the opposing party, and upon the whole he incurred a great amount of hatred. I am only speaking of what occurred in court, and expressing the opinion which we would form in witnessing his professional conflicts. It cannot be doubted that he had many friends and supporters outside of this scene of action, and it is not unlikely that he was as warm and constant in his friendships as he was bitter and unrelenting in his hatreds. After his election to the United States Senate he retired from the bar and was very seldom seen here.

"ROGER MILLS, of New Hartford, was at one time a partner with Mr. Williams, of whom we have already spoken, from whom he differed in every respect except that both held the position of honorable and worthy gentlemen. Mr. Mills was slow in his conception of thoughts, slow in all the movements of his mind, and very slow in the delivery of his arguments, and yet when all his duties in a case were accomplished it would be seen that he had made a creditable effort, and that he was far from being a lawyer of indifferent pretensions. His son of the same name succeeded him in the practice of law at New Hartford, but has since removed to Wisconsin, where he has had a successful career.

MICHAEL F. MILLS was born in Norfolk, March 22, 1776. He was the youngest of a family of nine children, all of whom attained advanced age except one brother, who died in early life. Mr. Mills survived all of them and most of his early friends, and at the time of his death, with one exception, the late Deacon Amos Pettibone, was the only male first descendant of the original landed proprietors of Norfolk. The other members of the family were born in the town of Simsbury, Hartford Co., from whence Mr. Mills' parents as well as many others of the first settlers of Norfolk emigrated.

Mr. Mills, never having lived out of his native town and never having held any high public station, may not have been as publicly known out of his own town and county as many other men less gifted, but so far as his townsmen could testify their respect and confidence in him they did so by elevating him to every place of trust and responsibility within their gift. He represented his town in several sessions of the Legislature, was appointed judge of probate in 1822, and held the office twenty years; in 1812 was appointed justice of the peace and officiated in that capacity until he was seventy years of age. He was the first postmaster at Norfolk, appointed by Thomas Jefferson in 1804. At that time the mail only arrived twice a week in Norfolk, and only two papers were received at the office,—the Connecticut Courant and Litchfield Monitor.

Michael F. Mills

Hon. Robert Curtis

Mr. Mills never figured conspicuously as an advocate in the higher courts, but was regarded by the ablest lawyers as one of the best men in the State to prepare a case. Most people know how very liable members of the legal profession are to make enemies in discharging the duties of their calling, but in this Mr. Mills was peculiarly fortunate. Being of a happy and generous disposition, whatever he said or did never partook of ill-will or malignity.

Mr. Mills died Aug. 2, 1857, and a friend, in speaking of the departed, says, "As might be expected, the funeral obsequies of the deceased were solemn and impressive to his friends and neighbors and particularly to the aged inhabitants of the town. The funeral discourse was delivered by Rev. Joseph Eldridge. We have attended a great many funerals, but seldom one where we have seen so large a number of mourning relatives, a circumstance that goes to show the antiquity of the family in the town." Mr. Mills was interred in the old burying-ground, where his remains rest amidst departed kindred and friends.

Gen. Charles F. Sedgwick, in speaking of Mr. Mills, says, "He never attempted to argue cases in the higher courts, but on the trial of motions as they came before the courts he was very prominent. We all thought well of 'Uncle Mich,' as we used to call him, and so did the people of Norfolk, for he was always a prominent man in the affairs of the town. He was a member of the Legislature in 1830 and 1831."

Two daughters of Mr. Mills survive,—Mrs. John A. Shepard and Mrs. John K. Shepard.

"Edward Aiken resided in Norfolk, and gained some prominence at the bar.

"Charles B. Phelps settled in Woodbury soon after his admission to the bar, nearly sixty years ago. He continued in practice while he lived. He died suddenly from a disease of the heart, at the age of seventy-two years. He held a respectable position as a lawyer, and for two years was a judge of the County Court while that court was holden by a single judge. All who knew him have a very pleasant memory of his genial humor, pertinent anecdotes, and witty and pungent sayings. The younger members of the bar were delighted with his company, and all deeply deplored his sudden death.

"Matthew Minor, of Woodbury, was a lawyer of good classical education and respectable legal attainments. He had a native diffidence which prevented him putting himself forward very often on the trial of cases, but when his powers were brought out he made a respectable show. He belonged to one of the eminent families of Woodbury, and for personal qualities was very much respected.

"Nathaniel P. Perry, of Kent, was a quiet, unobtrusive, conscientious man. He was the only lawyer in that town during the greater part of his professional life, and did a good local business. He was very diligent in the pursuit of his profession, and generally argued the cases that he commenced. He was a member of the Senate for two successive years, and died at the age of about sixty years."

Holbrook Curtis, lawyer, of the class of 1807, died at Watertown, Conn., Feb. 21, 1858, of apoplexy. The deceased was born at Newtown, Fairfield Co., July 14, 1787. When eleven years of age he was placed by his parents in the family of the Rev. Dr. Burhans to be prepared for college. Remaining with him two or three years, he subsequently pursued his studies with that accomplished jurist and classical scholar, Judge Chapman, from whom he imbibed a taste for the classics, which he cultivated and enjoyed through life. He entered the junior class of Yale College in 1805, and on graduating returned to his native town, studied law with Judge Chapman, and was admitted to the bar, at Fairfield, in 1809.

He pursued the practice of his profession at Newtown until 1813, when upon the death of Samuel W. Southmayd, Esq., a lawyer, at Watertown, Litchfield Co., Conn., he was invited by several gentlemen of that place to remove there. The invitation was accepted and he remained there until his death. During almost fifty years of professional life he received the confidence and esteem of those around him, and his good sense and kindness of heart were very frequently enlisted to make peace and heal dissensions among neighbors and friends. He pursued an honorable, highminded, liberal course in the performance of his duties as a lawyer, as a citizen, and as a man. In the various public trusts he was called upon during periods of many years to discharge, as a magistrate, member of the Legislature, judge of probate and of the county, and member of the general conventions of the Episcopal Church, in which he was educated and through life attached, his sound judgment, strict integrity, and conservative views were pre-eminent.

He was a man of constant and extensive reading, had made some progress in modern languages, and of the Latin poets could repeat large portions of Horace and Virgil from memory. He was warm and social in his feelings and possessed an immense fund of anecdote, not only of the bench and bar of his early days, but the traditional, extending back into the colonial times; and even the unpublished stanzas with which the legal wits honored the king's attorney in the days of the Stamp Act, or the ancient clergy occasionally prepared in commemoration of some ludicrous mishap of one of their number, were stored away in his retentive memory.

The men of those times have long since passed away, and he has been called to follow them, regretted by all who knew him.

"Jam te premet nox, fabulæque Manes, Et domus exilis Plutonia."

WILLIAM EDMOND CURTIS was the eldest son of Holbrook and Elizabeth (Edmond) Curtis, and was born at Watertown, in the same room in which he died, Sept. 29, 1823. A sketch of his father appears elsewhere in this work. His maternal grandfather, Judge William Edmond, of Newtown, Conn., was of Irish descent, but was born in this State, graduated at Yale College in 1773, served as a volunteer, and was wounded in the attack on Danbury in 1777; married, for his second wife, a daughter of Benjamin Payne, Esq., of Hartford; was a member of Congress and a judge of the Supreme Court of this State.

Young Curtis had a brother Henry, near his own age, and the two boys grew up together, studying partly at the schools of the town and partly with their father until about twelve years of age, when Henry died, leaving William the only child of his parents. He had begun the study of Latin with his father at the age of eight, and pursued his classical studies under his guidance until he was fifteen, when he went for a year to the Episcopal academy at Cheshire, then under the care of the Rev. Allen C. Morgan and the Rev. Dr. Beardsley, where he finished his preparation for college, and entered Trinity College, Hartford, the ensuing year. He graduated with distinguished honor in 1843, and entered the law-office of Hon. William Curtis Noyes, then a prominent member of the New York bar.

He undertook, in addition to his legal studies, the acquisition of a more thorough knowledge of the French and Spanish languages, and with such success that by the time he was admitted to the bar he was able to speak both languages with sufficient facility for business purposes, and immediately reaped the benefit of his labors by attracting French and Spanish clients, and thus early laying the foundation of an extensive and successful practice.

It is worth while to notice, however, for the encouragement of younger members of the profession, this entry in his diary:

"June 26, 1846. Nothing to do; business dull. If things are not better, I shall emigrate to Texas."

This probably does not indicate any intention of going to Texas, but was a figurative expression of the time, indicating merely the intention of making some change of location for the purpose of bettering his fortunes.

Soon after his proposed emigration to Texas business prospects began to improve, and from that time forward he never lacked professional occupation. He was not only a careful student of the law, but he was a man of excellent business judgment, so that his advice was much sought and greatly valued. Faithfulness to duty was a marked feature of his character. He prepared his cases with care and fidelity, giving careful thought to every consideration by which his clients' interest might be affected. As a consequence of this he won many causes without a trial. He was fair and honest by nature, and people instinctively confided in him in regard to their property interests and their personal affairs. His courtesy was remarkable, and it was only when occasion seemed to demand it that he assumed a tone of severity with the air of discharging a duty rather than of giving way to the indulgence of personal feeling. His whole demeanor was eminently dignified and judicial, and when, in 1871, he was elected on the Reform ticket one of the judges of the Superior Court of the City of New York, there was a very general feeling that he was in his right place. His career on the bench fully justified this feeling, and on the death of Chief Justice Monell, in 1876, he was with great unanimity selected as presiding judge.

One of his late associates, in speaking of his character at a meeting of the bar held with reference to his death, said, "He seemed to have an intuitive idea of right and justice from which he never swerved. He was a safe guardian of every interest committed to his management, and allowed no selfish purpose to swerve him from entire justice to others. This sentiment was carried in instances to self-sacrifice. He was a large-minded man, and the current of his thoughts and actions was limited by no narrow bounds; it deepened and widened according to the subjects he was called upon to consider."

Perhaps the highest praise that can be given to a judge is that he has no history but the reports.

Outside of his profession Judge Curtis' chief efforts were in the cause of education. To Trinity College, as his Alma Mater, his ties were strong and his relations intimate. In 1846 he was appointed to deliver the Master's oration. In 1857 he became a Fellow of the college and a member of the corporation, and in 1862 he received the honorary degree of LL.D.

In 1857 he was elected a member of the board of education of the city of New York, and served in that capacity for nine years and, during the last four years, as president of the board. He was a vestryman of St. George's Church, a member of the council of the New York Geographical Society, and of various other religious, literary, and social organizations. All these duties he discharged with conscientious fidelity, and especially to those connected with the board of education he devoted a large amount of time.

His personal friendships, though not demonstrative, were lasting, and an old friend or acquaintance in need never appealed to him in vain. Many could testify to this, but he was naturally secretive, and probably few comparatively of these acts of kindness were ever known beyond himself and the recipient.

Wm. E. Curtis

His local attachments were very strong. He always retained the old place in Watertown which he had inherited from his father, where he himself was born, and which had always been his home. Here his family spent their summers, and here he came to rest when rest was permitted, thoroughly enjoying the scenes of his childhood and the familiar faces and voices that greeted each return. He was deeply attached to the place and greatly respected and esteemed by the people. "We have lost our great man," was the simple tribute paid to him by one of his townsmen.

The character of his mind was in all things strongly conservative, and although he kept pace with the time in knowledge and habit of life, yet to him personally change was painful, and he endured rather than enjoyed the little that circumstances compelled him to adopt of what was new in all his personal belongings.

In his youth he was tall, slender, and delicate, and although in later years he became a large man, and had the appearance of physical vigor, he was not as strong as he appeared. Nearly two years before his death he had a severe sickness which prostrated him for many weeks. The following summer he spent in Europe and partially regained his health; but the severe work of a long winter was too great a tax upon his enfeebled vitality, and on the 6th day of July, 1880, at his old home, and surrounded by his family, he suddenly sank under what appeared to be but a slight indisposition.

Judge Curtis married, Sept. 2, 1851, Mary A., daughter of William H. Scovell, Esq., of Waterbury, and great-granddaughter of the Rev. James Scovill, a native of Watertown, and the first Episcopal minister of Watertown and Waterbury.

His widow, with five sons and two daughters, survive him.

"Isaac Leavenworth and Royal R. Hinman.—There were two lawyers in Roxbury fifty years ago, Isaac Leavenworth and Royal R. Hinman, who made a considerable show of business before the courts, but who retired from practice in the course of a few years. Mr. Leavenworth went into other business in New Haven, where it is said he has been very successful, and is still living at a very advanced age. Mr. Hinman held the office of Secretary of State for eight years, and published several pamphlets containing the statistics of many of the most prominent families in the State.

"Joseph H. Bellamy, of Bethlehem, deserves more than a passing tribute. He was a grandson of the celebrated divine of that name, and was a man of great moral worth. He never had a very extensive practice as a lawyer, but was much employed in various branches of public business. He was frequently a member of the Legislature, and once represented the Sixteenth District in the Senate. He died in middle life, and all, of all names and parties, pay him the tribute of an affectionate and respectful remembrance.

"Theodore North, of Goshen, his native town, removed to Chenango Co., N. Y., about 1823. He graduated at Williams College in 1806 with the highest honors of his class. He was a remarkably well-read lawyer, and had a respectable standing as an advocate. He attained to eminence in his profession in the State of New York. He died some twenty years since.

"Hon. William S. Holabird, a native of Canaan, Conn., studied law with Hon. W. M. Burrall, attended the law lectures of Judge Gould at Litchfield, was admitted to the bar about 1820, and soon after commenced practice at Colebrook, Conn., whence he moved to Winsted in 1824, and soon after secured a large practice and high standing at the bar. He held the appointment of district attorney for four years under President Jackson, and was Lieutenant-Governor of the State in 1842 and 1844; besides which, he held the offices of postmaster and assignee in bankruptcy. He was a man of commanding person and pleasing address. As a lawyer he was adroit rather than learned, thorough in preparing his cases, quick to discern the weak points of his adversary, and energetic beyond most men in carrying forward his cases to a final issue. The same qualities were prominent in his political career, but his success as a lawyer was more decided than as a politician. About 1850 he withdrew from legal practice and devoted himself to financiering with decided success. He died May 22, 1855, at the age of sixty-one.

"George S. Boardman, son of the Hon. Elijah Boardman, of New Milford, was admitted to the bar in 1821. He was a young man of decided promise, and was a special favorite of his uncle, Judge Boardman. His death was greatly lamented throughout the community. His efforts at the bar gave proof of decided talent, and he had made himself a special favorite among the members.

"John Elmore was a native of Sharon. He settled as a lawyer in Canaan about 1793. He had no great eminence at the bar, but was a great favorite with his associates for his genial humor, pertinent anecdotes, and witty sayings. He lived to a very advanced age. The last years of his life were devoted to zealous efforts in the cause of temperance. His son, of the same name, was also in the practice of the law for several years in Canaan.

"George Wheaton spent a somewhat protracted life in Cornwall in the practice of law. He was admitted to the bar about 1812, and at once engaged in professional occupations. He was an ingenious, sagacious, and perhaps it may be said crafty, lawyer, for opposing counsel were always fearful that he would spring upon them some new points to which their attention had not been directed. He was deficient in early education, but even his blunders in the use of language were often witty, and he was always listened to in his arguments with close attention. He understood well all the points in his case, and presented them with great skill to the court. He had a successful career, and left a good name behind him.

"SAMUEL CHURCH was a native of Salisbury, and a graduate of Yale College of the class of 1803, and he continued his residence in Salisbury while he was a member of the bar. He held quite a respectable standing as a lawyer, and for several years was the State's attorney for the county. He had not attained to the higher ranks in his profession when, in 1832, he was appointed a judge of the Supreme Court, but to the duties of the latter office he devoted himself with great assiduity and success, and was in no degree inferior to his associates on the bench in those qualities which go to make a good judge of our highest court. On the expiration of the term of Chief Justice Williams, in 1847, he was appointed his successor, and held that position during the remainder of his life. After his appointment as judge he removed to Litchfield. He died a few months before he had reached the age of seventy years.

"JABEZ W. HUNTINGTON, a native of Norwich, graduated at Yale College in 1806; came to Litchfield as a teacher and student-at-law in 1807, and continued to reside here until October, 1834, when he returned to Norwich, and died there in 1847, in his sixtieth year. While a resident of Litchfield he was elected a representative member of Congress, and judge of the Superior Court. From 1840 until his death he was a member of the United States Senate.

"GIDEON HALL was a native of Winchester, and had abundant early advantages for an education, although he did not go through a college course. His father was a man of large estate, and the son was left in easy circumstances. He had a fair standing at the bar and did a considerable amount of professional business. Towards the close of his life he received the appointment of judge of the Supreme Court, but after a short term of service in that office consumption terminated his life."

HON. TRUMAN SMITH was the oldest son of Phineas and Deborah Ann (Judson) Smith, and was born in Roxbury, on the 27th day of November, A.D. 1791. His father was the oldest son of a family, two of whose members, Nathaniel Smith, of Woodbury, and Nathan Smith, of New Haven, became very distinguished at the bar and in public life in Connecticut. Phineas Smith was a farmer, and was in no degree inferior in intellectual ability to either of his brothers. The subject of this notice was brought up on his father's farm, and owes whatever success he achieved in after-life to habits formed and principles inculcated in the home of his childhood. He was graduated at Yale College in 1815, and soon after commenced the study of law. He was admitted to the bar of Litchfield County in March, 1818. In the fall of the same year he opened an office for the practice of the law in Litchfield, and that village was his home until 1854. The bar of Litchfield County then numbered more than forty members, and several of them were eminent in the profession. Mr. Smith felt that at such a bar as this faithful study and indefatigable labor alone would insure success, and to such study and labor he devoted himself strictly, and he soon became known as a young lawyer of decided promise and marked ability. He soon acquired professional business, and at the end of ten or twelve years took rank among the able members of the bar in the management of the most important cases before the courts in Litchfield County, and was sometimes engaged in such cases in other counties in the State. His habits and methods of practice were peculiar to himself. In the examination of witnesses and in the discussion of interlocutory questions he showed peculiar ability. The reluctance of a witness to disclose the truth and give a fair statement of the matters of which he was testifying, would sometimes provoke the most severe reprehension of the advocate, which he was not backward in exhibiting in court. He never went into the trial of an important case without having made a thorough study of all questions likely to arise in the course of the proceedings, and was generally well prepared to give such questions a thorough discussion. His method of argument to the court and jury was also peculiar to himself. His style and manner showed nothing of the polished refinement which marked the performances of James Gould and Roger M. Sherman, but there was a power of thought and a strength of argument attending his oral deliveries which made him a popular advocate. In his arguments at the bar he discussed nothing but the merits of the question, and he was heard with strict attention by the triers whom he was addressing. Upon the whole, his career as a lawyer was eminently successful.

Mr. Smith early took a deep interest in public affairs, and a considerable portion of his subsequent career was devoted to public employments, to which he was appointed by the voice of his fellow-citizens, and to all matters which agitated the public mind he devoted the same assiduous attention and thorough examination which marked his professional labors. It followed, of course, that he became a prominent member of the different legislative bodies to which he was elected, and all the speeches which he delivered in either house of Congress, to which he was elected, bore evidence of thorough labor in their preparation. He was elected to the Legislature of Connecticut, by the town of Litchfield, in 1831, 1832, and 1834, and had much to do in shaping the legislation of those years. But a wider field soon opened before him, and higher posts of duty awaited him. It was not the fashion of those times for candidates to urge their own claims, or spend their money in promoting their own advancement in public life. It has been said of Mr. Smith, and probably with truth, that he never packed a convention, never solicited a nomination, never asked a man to vote for him, and never addressed a political meeting when he was a candidate for office.

Chas. J. Sedgwick

In 1839, and again in 1841, he was elected to the National House of Representatives by decided majorities in the district to which he belonged, which then embraced the county of Litchfield. The census of 1840 rendered necessary a new apportionment of members of Congress in the different States, and under that arrangement the counties of Fairfield and Litchfield were embodied into a single district, and from this district, thus enlarged, he was twice elected by large majorities. He was elected to the Senate of the United States for the term commencing March 4, 1849, but he resigned his place before the expiration of the time to which he had been appointed. His career in both branches of Congress was honorable and successful, and the speeches which he made in each were marked by the evidence that much study and reflection had been employed in their preparation. In the House of Representatives his published speeches were: 1. On the New Jersey Broad Seal election case. 2. On our wool-growing and wool-manufacturing interests. 3. On the territory to be acquired from Mexico by a treaty then pending. In the Senate he delivered speeches on the following subjects: 1. On removals from office. 2. On a bill to admit California into the Union, and to establish several territorial governments. 3. On French spoliations, etc. 4. On the proposition of Mr. Douglas to levy tonnage on the States for the improvement of rivers and harbors. 5. On the construction of a railroad to the Pacific coast. 6. On the Nebraska question. Of the speech on the bill to admit California into the Union, and to establish several territorial governments, Mr. Webster, in a speech on the same question, made a few days afterwards, said, "It contained one of the clearest and strongest demonstrations that I have heard from the mouth of man." All the speeches of Mr. Smith were fraught with good sense and sound logic. The last one delivered, Feb. 10 and 11, 1854, was a discussion on the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and expressed his full conviction that the measure foreboded incalculable mischief to the country, and he felt bound to oppose to it an uncompromising resistance. He undertook to demonstrate that there was, and had ever been, an entire harmony in the elements on which the prosperity of the different sections of the Union depended; that there was an utter impossibility of maintaining an equilibrium between the free and slave States, and that such equilibrium, if attainable, would be useless to the latter; that the slavery question, which, during the few preceding years, had made so much disturbance in and out of Congress, was of very little importance. Subsequent history has disclosed events which no one then foresaw.

Mr. Smith had a decided preference for Gen. Taylor as a candidate for the Presidency in 1848, and was a member of the convention which gave him the nomination. He was also the chairman of the National Whig committee by which the canvass for the general was conducted. One of his colleagues on this committee was Abraham Lincoln, who spent a considerable time in Washington as a member of the committee during the canvass.

On the accession of Gen. Taylor to the Presidency he proposed to Mr. Smith to make him Secretary of the Interior, thus constituting him a member of his cabinet, but Mr. Smith preferred to occupy his seat in the Senate as best suited to his habits and method of life.

Soon after the accession of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency, a treaty was entered into between the United States and Great Britain for establishing international courts, to be located, two in Africa and one in the city of New York, to adjudicate slave-trading cases, each to consist of two judges, one representing the United States and the other Great Britain. Mr. Smith was appointed to the New York court, and held the situation for several years; but our coast having been blockaded during the war, and slavery in the United States being abolished, there could be no cases to be submitted to the court except in connection with Cuba or some other slave-holding country, of which there was very little probability, the two governments, by a new treaty, abrogated the courts and left the matters regarding them to the ordinary courts. This was the last public office held by Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith established his home in Stamford in 1854, where he has ever since resided. He had a law-office in New York, and practiced in the courts of that State and in the Supreme and Circuit Courts of the United States till 1872, when he retired from the profession. He has, to some extent, of late years occupied himself in submitting his views to the public on topics which he deemed important, sometimes in pamphlets, but more generally through the newspaper press. He has taken much interest in the temperance cause, and his articles on that subject furnish very strong arguments in favor of the entire suppression of the traffic. Various other matters of much public interest have also received his attention.

Mr. Smith was married, June 2, 1832, to Miss Maria Cook, daughter of Roger Cook, Esq., of Litchfield. She died April 24, 1849. He was again married, Nov. 7, 1850, to Miss Mary Ann Dickinson, who still survives.

He now (1881), at the age of ninety years, enjoys comfortable health and has a good share of mental activity.

CHARLES F. SEDGWICK, of Sharon, was born in Cornwall, Conn., Sept. 1, 1795. He prepared for college with Rev. Truman Marsh, of Litchfield, and Rev. A. R. Robbins, of Norfolk, principally with the latter. He entered Williams College in 1809, and graduated in 1813. After graduation he taught about three years and fitted several young men for college. He studied law with Gen. Elisha Sterling, of Salisbury, and Cyrus Swan, Esq., of Sharon, and in March, 1820, was admitted to the bar. He married a daughter of Mr. Swan in 1821. He has been much in public life, and has ever been faithful to the trusts imposed. He was a member of the House of Representatives in the Legislature in 1830 and 1831, and of the Senate in 1832; was appointed brigadier-general of militia in 1829 and major-general in 1831; was appointed State's attorney in 1856, and held that office by reappointment for eighteen years. Soon after he retired from office, and has since been a citizen of Sharon.

Gen. Sedgwick has a decided taste for literary pursuits, and has added many highly interesting and valuable works to the historic literature of this section, among which may be mentioned "Sedgwick's History of Sharon," two editions, an excellent work, sketches of members of the Litchfield bar, various historical addresses, etc. Gen. Sedgwick has taken an active interest in historical matters, and to him more than any other person is due the preservation of the history of the bar of Litchfield County.—(EDITOR.)

ORIGEN STORRS SEYMOUR was born at Litchfield, Conn., Feb. 9, 1804; has always resided in his native village and within a few rods of the place of his birth. After graduation he commenced the study of law. His own eyes were too weak to allow him to read for himself; his friend and classmate, Treat, therefore read aloud to him. He was admitted to the bar September, 1826, and at once commenced the practice of the law. He devoted himself without interruption to his professional duties for the space of twenty-five years; during that time, however, he several times represented his town in the General Assembly, and in 1850 served as Speaker of the House.

In 1851 he was elected a member of the United States Congress, and then for four years was occupied in public political life. He was elected as a Union Democrat, pledged to the earnest support of the compromise measures then recently adopted on the subject of slavery. He strenuously opposed the well-known Kansas and Nebraska bills as being a violation of those compromises.

On his retirement from Congress he was elected a judge of the Supreme Court, and held that laborious office eight years, from 1855 to 1863, that being the term for which he was elected. He then resumed the practice of law in copartnership with his son, Edward W. Seymour, and continued in a full practice till 1870. He was then chosen judge of the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut, which office he held until he became seventy years of age, having been chief justice during his last year of service. The constitution of the State limits the term of judicial life to the age of seventy. Since his retirement from judicial life he has declined to appear as an advocate at court. He, however, spends some of his time in office business and as arbitrator and referee.

Mr. Seymour was married, Oct. 5, 1830, to Lucy M. Woodruff, daughter of Hon. Morris Woodruff, by whom he had four children,—Edward Woodruff, settled at Litchfield in the legal profession; Storrs Ozias, clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, settled in Litchfield, Conn.; Maria (deceased); Morris Woodruff, settled in the legal profession at Bridgeport, Conn., present State senator.

He is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and as such was one of the lay delegates for the Diocese of Connecticut in the Triennial General Conventions of 1865, '68, '71, '74, '77, and '80. Received the degree of LL.D. from Yale in 1873.

GEORGE C. WOODRUFF, descended from Matthew Woodruff, one of the earliest settlers of Connecticut, and from Nathaniel Woodruff, one of the first settlers of Litchfield, is the eldest son of the late Gen. Morris Woodruff, of said town, and was born in Litchfield, Dec. 1, 1805. He graduated at Yale College in 1825, studied at the Litchfield Law School, and came to the bar in 1827. For more than half a century he has been in the successful practice of his profession in his native town, where he has ever been intrusted with positions of honor and responsibility, besides representing his district in the Thirty-seventh Congress. In 1845 he published a history of his town. In 1829 he married Henrietta S. Seymour, daughter of the late Ozias Seymour, and sister of ex-Chief Justice Origen S. Seymour, by whom he has one child living, —George M. Woodruff, of Litchfield.

JOHN HENRY HUBBARD was born in Salisbury, Conn., in 1804. His childhood and youth was spent on his father's farm, with only those advantages for education which the district school afforded. Of these he made such diligent use that at the early age of fifteen he was found qualified to be a teacher. Shortly after this he entered the office of the Hon. Elisha Sterling, of Salisbury, then a very prominent lawyer, as a law student. While a student he supported himself by teaching school winters.

In addition to his studies in the law, before he reached his majority he had acquired a very good knowledge of Latin, and had read many standard books with great care, such as "Rollin's Ancient History," "Plutarch's Lives," "The Spectator," and others. He also attained some proficiency in mathematics. In these studies as well as in law he was guided and encouraged by the sound advice of Mr. Sterling. In later life he extended his reading into works of fiction, and somewhat into the realm of poetry; of Wordsworth and Burns he was especially fond, reading and rereading their poems with the keenest interest.

At the April term of the County Court in Litchfield County, 1826, and before his twenty-second birthday, he was admitted to the bar, and immediately established himself in practice at the village of Lakeville, in his native town, where he continued to reside for nearly thirty years. At that time Samuel Church, afterwards chief justice of the State, was living in Salisbury, and was in full practice at the bar, as was

Augustus Seymour

Geo. C. Woodruff

John H. Hubbard

Philander Wheeler, a man of high ability. Leman Church and Judge Burrill were in Canaan; Ansel Sterling, Cyrus Swan, and Charles F. Sedgwick were in Sharon; George Wheaton was at Cornwall, all of them men of eminence and lawyers of great skill. Surrounded by such opponents and competitors, young Hubbard found no time for idleness. He was spurred to his best. But whatever he may have lacked, he did not lack industry. Genuine mettle was in him, and before he left Lakeville he had literally conquered for himself a place among the very foremost lawyers in the State, and had secured a very handsome estate.

As a practitioner he was painstaking to the last degree. He spared no effort. He was always intensely in earnest, believing thoroughly in his client and his cause. As a student of the law he practiced all his life upon the maxim, which he said was given him by Gen. Sterling, "to know a few books well." He had studied "Swift's Digest," "Starke's Evidence," and "Chitty's Pleadings," till he knew them by heart. He knew the "Connecticut Reports" so familiarly that there was no case and hardly a dictum that he could not recall. Other books were to him books for reference and not for study in the sense that they were. He was wont to say that everything could be found in our own reports; if not expressly decided, the principle was there which would control.

In 1847, and again in 1849, Mr. Hubbard was chosen State senator from the Seventeenth District. The latter year he gained considerable celebrity for a very able and vigorous opposition to the scheme for bridging the Connecticut River at Middletown. He defeated the project for a time, but lived to see it accomplished more than twenty years later. The same year, 1849, he was appointed State's attorney for Litchfield County, which office he held for four years. In 1855, Mr. Hubbard removed to Litchfield, where he resided till his death.

All his life Mr. Hubbard had been a Whig, and subsequent to 1850 he was one of the "Conscience Whigs," sympathizing deeply with the anti-slavery feeling then prevailing all over the North, and so naturally he became a leader in the Republican party from its formation. He took an active part in the campaign of 1860, which resulted in the choice of Mr. Lincoln to the Presidency. On the breaking out of the Rebellion he sacrificed a large part of his practice. The cause of the Union was to him in the place of a client. He actively engaged in rousing up a war feeling and in enlisting men. Enjoying a generous income, he spent money liberally to promote these objects. He made presents of needful articles to the men who volunteered, or gave them money. Many times he provided for their families, and in all other ways he sought to carry forward the work of defeating secession. He devoted himself to this work for the greater portion of the time during the years 1861 and 1862, rendering especial aid in recruiting the Thirteenth and the Nineteenth Regiments. The latter regiment (afterwards the Second Heavy Artillery, Connecticut Volunteers) was composed entirely of Litchfield County men.

In the spring of 1863 he was elected a member of Congress from the Fourth District, and was re-elected in 1865. In the Thirty-eighth Congress he served on the committee on patents, and also on committee on post-offices and post-roads. In the Thirty-ninth Congress he was continued on the committee on patents and was on committee on roads and canals. He also was placed on several special committees. No man was ever more faithful to public duties than he. During the entire four years of his service in Congress he never failed to answer on a call of the House, except when absent on official duty by its direction, and once when sick. Outside this official labor, Mr. Hubbard while in Washington found himself under great responsibility in caring for the soldiers from his State. Many Connecticut regiments were in the army of the Potomac, among them the Litchfield County regiment. In the terrible battles of the Wilderness hundreds of their numbers were killed, and hundreds more were brought wounded to the hospitals around Washington. In the battle of June 1, 1864, more than four hundred men of his own county regiment were killed and wounded. They were his neighbors, his acquaintances, his friends. Many of them had enlisted at his solicitation. It was an anxious time. Every hour that he could snatch from his public duty he devoted to the soldiers. There was not a day that he did not visit one or more of the hospitals. He sought out every Connecticut man, sat by their bedsides, wrote letters for them, procured for those who were themselves unable medicine and delicacies at his own expense. No one appealed to him in vain. Many dying messages he faithfully transmitted to loved ones at home. He assisted friends to identify and obtain the bodies of their dead, and in more than one instance he paid from his own pocket for embalming bodies to be sent North. All this was to him a labor of love. He never regretted it. He always declared that he had his abundant reward in the success of the cause for which these men had fought.

After his return from Congress, Mr. Hubbard engaged again in the practice of his profession, and continued in it up to a short time before his death. He died on the 30th day of July, 1872.

Miles T. Granger, son of James L. Granger and Abigail Tobey, was born in New Marlborough, Berkshire Co., Mass., Aug. 12, 1817. Early in life he became dependent upon his own resources for a livelihood, having commenced at the early age of ten years to work in a woolen-mill for twelve and a half cents per day. He remained in this employment about two years and then hired to a farmer in Norfolk, receiving twenty-five cents per day, and continued working as a farm-hand in various localities until 1835, when, concluding that farming was a hard life, and, at the wages then paid hired men, not a quick way to get rich,—besides his health was failing,—he concluded to try teaching school. He entered the office of Dr. Benjamin Welch, in Norfolk, and began "reading up" for a schoolmaster. In the fall of the same year he passed examination and engaged as a teacher at twelve dollars and fifty cents per month for four months. He continued chiefly in this occupation until 1838, when he was induced to attend the seminary at Amenia, to better qualify him for the work he had chosen—teacher of common school. He remained here one term, and returned to Canaan, helped his uncle do the "harvesting" on the Benedict farm; worked out in haying during the balance of season, and then concluded to return to Amenia, complete two or three branches of study which he had commenced, and at the close of the term find a school for the winter. He fully expected to close his "going to school" at the expiration of this term, but things transpired quite otherwise. Upon his arrival at the seminary the second term, the principal, Davis W. Clark, sent for him to come to his room, and, after paying him some compliments upon his scholarship, etc., advised him to prepare for college. He followed his advice and commenced the studies required at Wesleyan University to enter freshman year. Went over the course during the academic year, and, with what he had done the first term at the seminary, he entered Wesleyan a freshman, in August, 1839, and was allowed to enter the sophomore class in mathematics. He was then, and always had been, without any means or money except what he had earned, and his earnings were well-nigh exhausted; but he obtained a school in Glastonbury in the winter after entering college (six months for twenty dollars per month), kept the school and kept up with his class, except that he fell back at the end of the college year in mathematics. Entered on sophomore year without condition in all studies. Kept school that year three months, and managed to be up with the class at the end of the year. Junior year he asked and obtained from the faculty the privilege of taking the junior and senior year together—to do two years' work in one. He undertook it, had double recitations every day in most of the studies, kept school three months that winter, was examined in both classes at end of year, passed, and received his diploma as A.B., August, 1842. In August, 1845, received the degree of A.M. In 1843 went to Louisiana; employed as preceptor in family of Francis A. Evans, parish of West Feliciana; engaged for a year. Read law at same time. In April, 1845, was admitted to the bar in Wilkinson Co., Miss. Came back to Canaan, June, 1845. Entered the law office of Leman Church, Esq., as student. In October, 1845, he was admitted to the bar in Litchfield County. Remained in Mr. Church's office till the spring of 1847, when he opened an office at the old village of "Canaan Four Corners," in Couch's "hat-shop." Here he remained a year, and then went to the Depot, where he remained during his whole practice. In 1849 he was elected judge of probate, and held the office, with exception of two years, till elected judge of Superior Court. Was town clerk and treasurer. In 1857 was elected member of House of Representatives; General Assembly of Connecticut in 1866. Elected senator of Seventeenth District in 1867. Re-elected senator, and during this session was elected judge of Superior Court for eight years. At expiration of term was re-elected, and in 1876 elected to present position —associate judge of the Supreme Court of Errors; term commenced Nov. 16, 1876. He was married Oct. 22, 1846, to Miss Sarah C. Ferguson, of Sheffield. Judge Granger says, "For the benefit of young men dependent on brain or muscle in the battle of life, it might be stated that I never had but one dollar in my life except what I earned by hard work. My father once gave me a silver dollar,—my whole inheritance and patrimony."

HENRY B. GRAVES was born in Sherman (formerly a part of Litchfield County) on the 4th day of April, 1823. He received a good common-school education, and for a few months pursued more liberal studies in an academy with a view of entering college, but, owing to a sudden death in his father's family of an elder brother, the boy of fourteen was needed upon the farm, where he remained till he was eighteen years of age, when he entered the law-office of James C. Loomis, Esq., of Bridgeport, and after pursuing the study of the law with that gentleman for three years and a half was admitted to the bar, at Litchfield, in April, 1845, and upon the 1st of May, 1845, commenced the practice of his profession at Plymouth, and continued there till October, 1849, when he opened an office in Litchfield, where he has since continued in the active labors of the forum. He represented Litchfield in the General Assembly in 1858, 1866, 1867, 1876, 1877, and in 1879, taking a leading position in the legislation of the State, and drafting many of the laws now to be found in the public statutes. For many years he has been regarded as one of the prominent attorneys of the county, and has been engaged in a large practice, as the dockets of the courts will attest, and the volumes of the Supreme Court of the State will verify.

As a counselor he has been faithful and true to his clients, deferential to the court, courteous to opposing counsel, and kind and helpful to his younger brethren.

WILLIAM COTHREN, son of William and Hannah Cooper Cothren, was born at Farmington, Me., Nov. 28, 1819. He prepared for college at the Farmington Academy; graduated at Bowdoin College (Maine) in 1843; received his second degree in course at the same institution in 1846, and the degree of Master of Arts, ad eundem, from Yale College in 1847. He studied law under the direction of Hon. Robert Goodenough, of Farmington, Me., a member of Congress from his district, and the leader of the bar in his county, and with the late Hon. Charles B. Phelps, of Woodbury. He went to Woodbury in 1844, taught school for a while, continuing his law studies at the same time, and was admitted to the Litchfield County bar October, 1845. He immediately commenced the practice of his profession at Woodbury, and has continued there in the performance of his duties as counselor to the present time. He immediately acquired a large practice in the several courts of the western half of Connecticut, and later in the District, Circuit, and Supreme Courts of the United States. For many years he has taken rank among the leading members of the bar of Connecticut. He takes great pride in his profession, and prefers excellence in that to any official station. He has mingled little in the political controversies of his time, preferring to devote his energies to professional and literary pursuits. In the practice of his profession he prefers the investigation and discussion of intricate legal questions to the more strong display of forensic eloquence before a jury, though he holds himself ready for the performance of any duty of his profession. In short, he has a sincere love of his profession, and believes in no higher honor than that of a wise and upright counselor.

M. T. Granger

Yours truly
W. C. Othman

A marked feature in the professional career of Mr. Cothren is his faithfulness and untiring devotion to the interests of his clients. No matter how trifling the amount at stake, or how uncertain the prospects of remuneration for his services, he labors just as hard and with the same zeal as though the case involved large interests and abundant reward. As a man of unflinching rectitude and integrity, as a careful and sagacious counselor, as a bold and successful advocate, ever contending for the right, he occupies an enviable position.

He has a strongly contemplative mind, and he is never happier than when he can steal a passing hour to be "alone in nature's fane," in the grand old woods, by the falling waters of the silvery cascade, or in the shaded dell, where he can hold silent communion with nature, in all her beauty and grandeur.

He has a strong, logical, and practical mind, an exceedingly retentive memory, and great clearness and quickness of apprehension. He seizes a point at once, and states it clearly and precisely. He makes careful preparation, and manages his cases with skill and ability. Difficulties do not discourage him; obstacles do not embarrass him; they but serve the purpose of making the attainment of his object the more secure. He is endowed with a will of the very highest order. It subjects the material to the spiritual in a degree rarely attained. He is the most diligent and laborious of men, never losing a moment from his occupations.

No man treats his equals with more courtesy and candor, his superiors on the bench or elsewhere with more respect and deference, and his juniors and inferiors with more affability and kindness. Liberal and honorable in his practice with his professional brethren, he scorns all subterfuge, trick, or unfair advantage. As a citizen he is public-spirited and generous. His liberality is bounded only by his ability, and he gives freely to every worthy object for which application is made to him for assistance. His hand has aided every public work or improvement in his community during his time.

On the 3d of September, 1849, he was married, in Woodbury, to Miss Mary J. Steele, daughter of the late Dr. Samuel Steele, of the same place. They had one son, who died young. They have now an adopted daughter. He joined the First Congregational Church in Woodbury, July 7, 1850, of which he continues an influential member.

He was elected a county commissioner for Litchfield County at the May session of the General Assembly in 1851. He was elected senator of the Sixteenth Senatorial District in 1855. In April, 1856, he was admitted an attorney and counselor of the United States Circuit Court, and on the 8th of March, 1865, he was admitted an attorney and counselor of the Supreme Court of the United States. He was elected corresponding member of the New England Historic Genealogical Society at Boston, Mass., May 5, 1847; a member of the Connecticut Historical Society, Nov. 23, 1852, of which for many years he has been a vice-president; an honorary member of the Old Colony Historical Society, at Plymouth, Mass., April 24, 1854; a corresponding member of the Wisconsin Historical Society, Jan. 17, 1855; a corresponding member of the Vermont Historical Society, Feb. 3, 1860; a corresponding member of the Maine Historical Society, Sept. 18, 1861; an honorary member of the Rutland County Historical Society, Oct. 8, 1868; and a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Society, Alpha of Maine, Sept. 20, 1873.

From the twentieth year of his age he has been a frequent contributor, in prose and verse, to the press and the standard magazines of the day. He has steadily pursued this course in his leisure moments as a sort of rest and recreation, his latest literary labor being the preparation of the article on Woodbury for this volume. No one holds a more ready and facile pen. It has been well said that a lawyer who confines himself exclusively to the study of his profession is a "man of one book." A dread of being impaled in this category led him, in part, to literary labor.

A short time after his settlement in Woodbury he turned his attention to the collection of the historical data of the town. The result has been the publication of an elaborate history of that town, comprising three octavo volumes, and containing about two thousand five hundred pages in the whole. The first volume was issued in 1854, and was the pioneer work, as a full history of a town, that had been issued. Many histories of towns have succeeded, but none have excelled it. It has received the highest commendations of the public press and of well-informed critics. Though professedly a local work, it contains a very complete epitome of the historical events of Connecticut. His chapter on the early ecclesiastical troubles of the colony of Connecticut is the most complete, exhaustive, and authoritative that has yet been published.

Of this work the late Rev. Dr. Chapin, of Glastonbury, Conn., remarked: "The author has made a place for himself among the 'men of the times,' and his name will be blessed as long as 'Ancient Woodbury' has a son living worthy of herself." The late Governor Dutton, of Connecticut, said of it, "It embodies a large number of historical facts not to be found in other publications, of great interest not only to those who have a peculiar regard for the town of Woodbury, but to all who cherish the memory of our forefathers." Rev. Dr. Fuller, late of Andover, Mass., said of it, "The historical portion, extending through a period of nearly two centuries, has all the absorbing attractions of a romance. The author has placed Connecticut, and the community generally, under perpetual obligations to him." Judge Williams, late chief judge of Connecticut, said, "It will be highly valuable to the future historian of Connecticut." Ex-President Day, of Yale College, remarked, "That the style of composition is such as history, biography, and statistics require; simple, lucid, and unostentatious." Hon. Thomas Day, LL.D., late of Hartford, Conn., speaking of the work, said of it, "As a part of the history of the State, no authority is more reliable. It is minutely accurate, without being in the least degree tedious." In a letter to Mr. Cothren, President Wayland, late of Brown University, assured him, "I have no doubt yours will take an honorable place in this most interesting class of historical works; for you have done laborious and patriotic service to our common country, and will have the thanks of all those who cherish a veneration for our Puritan forefathers."

In all the social and confidential relations in life the character of Mr. Cothren is worthy of imitation. Few men have had truer or more devoted friends than he has always found for himself wherever he has been intimately known. The sentiment of friendship with him partakes of a high nobility. Of course it is not promiscuous, but is confined to those who can appreciate the same affection which he himself feels. For such his respect and esteem are entire. Those that are once loved are loved to the end. He does not see, or seeing, has not the heart to notice a fault in one whom he admits as a friend. To others he is generous; with a friend he is more than paternal. He reverences only what he truly admires, and can love no one whose character he does not really respect. With these sentiments he has won for himself a circle of warm friends both in his public and private relations. It is to be hoped that he may long enjoy their friendship, and live many years to add to the well-earned fame which already gathers around his name.

George A. Hickox was born in Washington, Conn., in 1830, and graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, in 1851. He pursued the study of the law in the law school at Ballston, N. Y., and Yale law school, and in the office of Hollister & Beeman, in Litchfield. In 1853 he was admitted to the bar and commenced practice in Litchfield, where he has since resided. Since 1866 he has combined the practice of his profession with editorial work, having in that year become editor of The Litchfield Enquirer, and three years later its sole proprietor. He was a member of the Legislature in 1862.

Marcus L. Delavan.—When nearly half a million of Huguenots left France because of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, they sought homes in those countries where their Protestant faith would be respected and could be enjoyed. Every nation that opened its arms to receive them brought within its limits a class of citizens honest, conscientious, deeply religious, industrious, energetic, intelligent, and generally far advanced in all arts of industry,—a class whose presence was of immense benefit to it. Many came to what, about a century later, became these United States. Among them was the progenitor of the present Delavan family, the name then being spelled De La Van. Later the last capital was dropped and the last two syllables were united, making the name De Lavan, and in process of time it became the more convenient Delavan of the present time. At the time of the Revolutionary war there were eleven brothers, descendants of the progenitor alluded to, all of whom took an active part in our struggle for national independence. Gen. Daniel Delavan was the trusted friend and adviser of Gen. Washington, and the warm, personal, and intimate friend of Lafayette, who presented him with a beautiful sword as a mark of his esteem. Gen. Delavan was wounded in the engagement at Stony Point, but not one of the brothers was killed,—a fact which, historians have declared, finds no parallel in the recorded history of this or of that of any other country. The general was also actively engaged in the war of 1812. The subject of this sketch came from the same stock. On the maternal side his ancestors, as far back as can be traced,—which is for several generations,—have been among the most solid, respectable, influential, and well-to-do natives of the towns adjoining New Haven, Conn., in which city, on the 23d day of August, 1832, Mr. Delavan first saw the light. By the dishonesty of those who should have protected the defenseless, the property his mother should have received was never permitted to come to her, and when she married she could call only a few hundred dollars her own. Having a large family, and her husband being laid up for many years with consumption, the little pittance which had been inherited, and that which had been accumulated in the early life of their union, was swept away before our subject was born. At three years of age one of the members of the church with which his parents were identified called upon them, and, taking the little one upom his lap, began to question him about religious subjects. He was so pleased with the child's answers, questions, and remarks that he wrote a Sunday-school book about him,—a work, however, which he never saw, the only copy his parents had carefully treasured up to present to him when he became old enough to fully appreciate it having mysteriously disappeared before that time arrived. When he was five years of age his father died, leaving one son younger than our subject, and one son and four daughters older. The death of his father forced his mother, in order that she might engage in the means of supporting those who were too young to care for themselves, to send him to the orphan asylum, where, however, she paid his board weekly. His health had always been quite poor, and, after several months of living on the the meagre and innutritious food of the institution, it was found necessary to send him to a seaside country town in order to save his life. There his health improved, and, returning to the place of his birth, he was sent to school until he was ten years of age; then, with a maturity unusual in one so young, he saw the necessity of contributing to the support of the family, which, by the second marriage of his mother, was increasing. The illness and death of his step-father, at about this time, strengthened his conviction that he should be a help to, and not a drain upon, the family; so he obtained a situation in a printing-office,—that of the New Haven Daily Herald. This was finally merged into the Courier, and made a morning paper. As this change required night-work, and only the poorest kind of lights were used,—for gas had not then been introduced into New Haven,—our subject's eyes compelled him to give up his position, after about seven years' service in the same office without the loss of a single hour. Finishing his trade, a few months later, in the Waterbury American office, he worked there for a while as a journeyman, in Litchfield, and in Chicopee, Mass., and other places, in the same capacity, for a short time, and then gave up the mechanical part of the business. From his earliest recollection he had had an intense desire to qualify himself for the practice of law, but he saw the necessity of a general education before he could properly pursue legal studies; so, before his day's work was begun, and after it was finished, until long after midnight, it was his daily custom to take his books to a quiet place and study them. So intense was his desire for an education that he used to carry his dinner and his books to the office where he was employed, and devote the noontime to study. This course was adopted when he first entered a printing-office, at about ten years of age, and was persevered in until after his admission to the bar. He has often said he "never had a boyhood." He seldom engaged in the pastimes which gave others of his age great delight, but always preferred his books, or the society of much older persons than himself, to them. He had also a strong love of disputation and of public speaking, and while in his "teens" he would walk ten miles any evening, however bad the walking was, or however stormy it might be, for the purpose of attending a lyceum. He was "brought up" in the Democratic party, and his first votes were cast for that party; but when the struggle for prohibitory legislation was going on in this State, and slavery was pushing itself into the Territories, he thought the main-springs of that party were "Rum, Romanism, and Human Bondage," so he left it, and as soon as the Republican party was organized he united with it, and at every Presidential election since then he has "stumped" some portions of this or some other State for that party. He has been elected a number of times collector of taxes of the town of Naugatuck, and has often been named for other offices, for which he has declined to run. As we have intimated, he qualified himself for admission to the bar before people were generally awake in the morning, or after they were asleep at night, though he attended a course of lectures before the law-school of Columbia College. An incident connected with his admission to the bar may be worth giving here. His strong political convictions, and his outspoken manner of presenting them, gave great offence to a former judge of one of the highest courts in the State and his son-in-law, and when his application for admission was presented by the State's attorney of the county, who was his warm friend, the judge and his son-in-law objected to its reception. Being pressed for the reason for such an unusual objection, they claimed that the applicant was not a resident of that county. Literally, at that moment, that may have been the fact, but it was not when the application was placed in the State attorney's hands, nor would it have been at any time for many months before that. Some of the members of the bar learned that the reason assigned was not the real one entertained, and it did not take them long to become convinced that the opposition was really for political reasons. Still the judge and his obedient son-in-law had succeeded in presenting the matter in such a way that the members present were fearful of offending them if they were found to be very strongly opposed to them, so, though they voted to accept the application and examine the applicant, not a single member would consent to be one of the committee of examination. For forty years three attorneys, appointed by the bar, had constituted the examining committee, but so much feeling had been excited in this case that it was decided the whole bar should conduct the examination. There were about thirty or thirty-five members of the bar present. Mr. Delavan had listened to all that had been said in opposition to him, and, taking into consideration the bitterness shown, the fact that he, though nominally in a law-office during his studies, had really had to pursue them when he should have been asleep, that he had not had the most ordinary advantages of law-students, and that instead of being examined by a committee of three who were without prejudice, he must be examined by the entire bar, some of whom were known to be strongly opposed to his admission, he keenly felt the injustice, and also the danger of rejection. It seems, however, to have made him all the more cool and determined, and, after an examination lasting nearly three hours, conducted by some of the best lawyers in the State, in which he answered correctly every question put to him except two, and corrected himself on one of those before it passed from consideration, the bar voted unanimously for his admission, paying him a very high compliment for the way in which he passed through the trying ordeal.

When the war broke out Mr. Delavan was under bonds of many thousands of dollars as tax-collector, but, collecting all he could collect, he made a satisfactory arrangement with the authorities of the town, by which another collector took his place and his bondsman was released, and he hurried to enlist in the Fifteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, influencing many to go with him.

For his interest and activity in the Union cause he was offered various official positions, but his reply always was, "No! If I live through this struggle I want to feel that no man can say he has borne more of the 'brunt of the battle' than I have; and I do not mean that any one shall have even the shadow of a reason for saying that I enlisted only for some office." So he remained a private until physical disability rendered him unfit for military duty and confined him in the hospitals at Washington and Darby, near Philadelphia, from which latter place he was discharged, greatly to his surprise, and in opposition to his earnest protest. From the age of sixteen he had been a prolific writer for newspapers, and before the close of the war he was employed editorially on various papers. Twice he was one of the editors of the New Haven Palladium, for extended periods; for about two years he edited the New Britain Record, and for over five years he was the owner and chief editor of the Meriden Daily Republican. For a number of years he also owned and edited the State Temperance Journal. All these papers were in Connecticut. While editing the Daily Republican his health became so shattered that his physician insisted upon a change. For a number of years he had been a licensed preacher in the Methodist Episcopal Church, supplying the pulpits of pastors who were ill or absent, and visiting the various school districts in Meriden, evenings, to hold religious meetings, and when he was compelled to give up his Meriden paper a church in Hartland, Conn., which is situated in a very mountainous and healthy region, invited him to become their pastor. Believing that he could recover his health there while laboring in a cause to which he was warmly wedded, his presiding elder sent him there, putting him in charge of three churches. Five months after he went there the greatest revival ever known in that section broke out, and about forty professed conversion. The labor of attending meetings every evening for a month, and being out until about midnight every night, brought his health back to the point where it was when he first went there, and recuperation seemed impossible. He remained more than a year afterwards with his people, but finally had to bid them good-by. Believing that a weekly paper would furnish sufficient mental exercise to keep him in working order, he purchased a paper in New Milford, named it The Housatonic Ray, and has published it ever since. Though so attached to newspaper labors, he has, much of the time while engaged in them, been in the full practice of his legal profession. In this State he has practiced at Southington, at New Britain, in New Milford, where he now is, and in other places. He has taken a somewhat unusual stand in his practice, publishing to the world that he will be connected with only those cases in which he feels that the moral right is on his client's side, and no inducement is sufficient to make him violate that rule.

Col. Jacob B. Hardenbergh was born in Wawarsing, Ulster Co., N. Y., Aug. 4. 1831, the son of Col. L. Hardenbergh. At the age of thirteen he entered the Kingston Academy, at Kingston, for a four years' business course, from which he graduated in 1848. Immediately after his graduation he took up the study of law, in the office of Judge J. O. Linderman, with whom he remained four years, being admitted to the bar in 1852. He practiced in Kingston until the breaking out of the Rebellion in 1861, when the Twentieth New York militia, of which he was a member, under Col. George W. Pratt, entered the "three months' service," during which term he was elected major. At the expiration of the engagement the regiment returned home and immediately proceeded to reorganize for the war, entering the service again in October, 1861. Col. Pratt was killed in the battle of Second Bull Run, when Lieut.-Col. T. B. Gates took command, Maj. Hardenbergh succeeding the latter as lieutenant-colonel. He was appointed colonel on the muster out of Col. Gates in the fall of 1864, and by that title he is familiarly known, although justly entitled to the preface of "general," having received the appointment of brevet brigadier-general, "for gallant and meritorious services," in 1865. His regiment participated in some of the fiercest and most decisive battles of the war, Second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Wilderness, Petersburg, and earned a most honorable record. They were mustered out Feb. 1, 1866, after having served nearly five years.

At the close of the war, Col. Hardenbergh returned to Kingston, and resumed the practice of law until the fall of 1867, when he came to North Canaan, and purchased the law-office of Judge M. T. Granger, his present location. He was appointed clerk of the Probate Court—Frederick Watson, judge—the same year, and was subsequently elected by the Democrats judge of probate, town clerk, treasurer, registrar, etc., which offices he still holds. He was married in April, 1869, to Miss Delia Watson, of North Canaan. In 1870 he was elected to represent the town in the General Assembly, and in 1876–77 was senator from the Seventeenth Senatorial District of Litchfield County. He has several times been chosen as delegate to attend Democratic conventions, and is identified with almost every enterprise relating to the welfare of his town. He purchased the Connecticut Western News on Dec. 18, 1878, from which, in connection with his law business, he derives a comfortable income.

George Wheeton

As a lawyer, Col. Hardenbergh is widely known for his natural ability, dignified courtesy, and thorough knowledge of the science of law; and his biting sarcasm, combining these three elements, makes him an opponent to be respected. Of the confidence reposed in him by his fellow-citizens, witness the various town offices he has held consecutively since his location here.

The fraternal disposition of Col. Hardenbergh can be felt and appreciated only by those whose privilege it is to enjoy his confidence and intimate acquaintance. His unconscious dignity, almost severe, inspires at once respect, and the impression that his stern experience on the field and the cynical character of his profession have blunted the susceptibility in his nature that is calculated to insure success in one's social and domestic relations. But a thorough acquaintance with the man discovers the contrary to be the fact. Few men have a faculty for retaining friends and commanding their respect to a greater extent than Col. Hardenbergh, and no man has a greater respect for the rights and opinions of others than he. No adequate review of his life and characteristics can be given in a brief sketch like this. In him are combined the qualities found only in that rarity to which can truly be applied the words—without the irony—of Antony: "An honorable man."

GEORGE WHEATON was born in East Haven, Conn., in 1790. He lost his father when very young, and went to live with a Congregational clergyman, probably in Southbury, when about twelve years of age. His mother died soon after. He availed himself with eagerness of his advantages for education, soon became a teacher, and steadily pursued his studies in preparation for the profession of his choice—law; and in course of time came to Salisbury to become a student in the office of Judge Church, who occupied a high standing in legal circles. He was a close and careful student, was admitted to practice in 1813, and settled in Cornwall Centre, then a thriving place. He there married Lewey, daughter of Medad Alling, an early settler of Canaan. Their children were Nancy (Mrs. William Baldwin), Cynthia (Mrs. Elbert Shepard), and George A. Mr. Wheaton soon became an important factor in Cornwall, and was selected to hold various positions of public trust, was many times the representative of Cornwall in the General Assembly of the State, and for twenty years the postmaster at Cornwall Centre. For his second wife he married Eliza, daughter of Andrew Cotter, of Cornwall. Their only child, Lucetta, married Dr. P. C. Cummings.

About 1840, Mr. Wheaton moved to West Cornwall, then making rapid growth from the advantages given by the opening of the Housatonic Railroad, and made that place his home until his death, Nov. 5, 1865, at the age of seventy-five years.

For over half a century Mr. Wheaton moved among the citizens of Cornwall, active in political, educational, and religious matters, and none ever questioned the purity of his motives, the honesty of his convictions, or the soundness of his judgment. He was a member of the Congregational Church for years. In politics he was in early life a Whig, afterwards a Republican.

As a lawyer he was not so much noted as an advocate as for the thorough manner in which he prepared his cases. They were carefully arranged, and every little point on which dispute might arise was properly fortified. His knowledge of law was extensive, and it has been said of him that he never gave advice that was not the very best that could have been given under the circumstances as expressed to him. In preparing a case he was absorbed in his work, paying no attention to meals or sleep, and when made up and presented to a court he was uniformly found to be successful. Of one thing his clients were assured: all the law favoring their side would be presented, and in the clearest, briefest manner, and the court always listened when they were presented. As a consequence, he had many and good clients and acquired a handsome property.

As a citizen, Mr. Wheaton was conservative, and in favor of all things tending to improve, elevate, and dignify society, but he did not assume that all things claiming to be of benefit were really so. If, on investigation, they proved to be desirable, he gave them his persistent and unwavering support. By his death Cornwall lost an able lawyer, a good citizen, and an honest man, one lamented by all of the better class of the community.

G. W. Shepard, son of Elbert Shepard, bears his grandfather's name, and inserts his portrait in this work.

FLORIMOND D. FYLER was born in Torrington, Conn., Dec. 11, 1834. He commenced the study of law in the office of Judge Gideon Hall, at Winsted, where he continued as his health would allow until the spring of 1864, when he attended Yale Law School that term. He was admitted to the bar in 1864, and returned to Yale Law School and studied one year, and received the degree LL.B., July, 1865. In September, 1865, he located in Winsted as an attorney-at-law. He was a member of the Legislature in the May session of 1872. He was elected by the Legislature of 1877 judge of the District Court of Litchfield County for four years from July 1, 1877.

Augustus Hall Fenn was born in Plymouth, Conn., Jan. 18, 1844. In March, 1862, he commenced the study of the law in the office of Ammi Giddings, of Plymouth, and in the following August enlisted in the Nineteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, subsequently the Second Artillery.

The following extract concerning his military career is taken from Vaill's history of the regiment:

"He proved himself one of the best drill-masters and disciplinarians in the regiment, and one of the most competent officers in every position. Before going to the front he was made captain of Company C. On the 22d of June he led his company into the skirmish at Petersburg as far as it advanced, and was then and there detailed assistant adjutant-general on Upton's staff, vice Capt. Sanborn, of the Fifth Maine, and, mounting a horse which had been brought to him, commenced his duties at once. When the regiment left the Sixth Corps at Tenallytown, in July, he was relieved. In September he was appointed judge-advocate of the division court-martial, which tried twenty-five cases. At Cedar Creek he lost his left arm. The surgeons at Annapolis proposed to muster him out and discharge him for disability, but he protested, and wrote to Gen. Mackenzie, urging his interference. The consequence was that he was retained, and in less than seven weeks from the time he had an arm taken off at the shoulder he reported for full duty at the front, and was at once detailed as assistant adjutant-general of the brigade again, which detail was afterwards changed to brigade inspector. He subsequently participated in several fights. He was detailed as judge-advocate five different times, was brevetted major after Cedar Creek, promoted to major in January, 1865, brevetted lieutenant-colonel for Little Sailor's Creek, and colonel for services during the war."

At the close of the war he returned, and in September, 1865, resumed his studies in the office of Kellogg & Terry, in Waterbury, Conn. He remained there until Feb. 15, 1867, when he was admitted to the bar at Litchfield. After passing one year in the law school of Harvard University, obtaining the degree of LL.B., he commenced practice, Jan. 1, 1868, in Waterbury. Removed to Plymouth, April 1, 1869, remained there until March 14, 1876, but opened an office in Winsted, July 1, 1875, where he has since practiced and now resides.

Col. Fenn was city clerk of Waterbury in 1866–67; judge of probate, town clerk, and register of births and deaths in Plymouth, 1869 to 1876; and is now judge of probate for the Winchester District. In 1875 he was the Republican candidate for Secretary of State.

Albert P. Bradstreet, son of Thomas J. and Amanda T. Bradstreet, and grandson of Seth Thomas, deceased, was born in Thomaston on the 9th day of June, 1846. He attended school in his native village and worked upon his father's farm until the fall of 1867, when he entered Yale College, where he graduated in the year 1871. In October of the same year he entered the law department of Columbia College in New York City, and graduated with the degree of LL.B. in the spring of 1873. After remaining in the office of Webster & O'Neil, in the city of Waterbury, a few months, he opened a law-office in Thomaston, where he has since remained, in the enjoyment of a lucrative practice. He was elected as representative of Thomaston in the Legislature in the years 1877 and 1878, and in the year 1880 was elected senator from the Sixteenth District for two years, being the first Republican elected to that position in his district since 1873. He was also appointed deputy judge of the Waterbury City Court in 1879, a position which he now holds. Mr. Bradstreet has held the office of town clerk of Thomaston since the incorporation of the town in 1875, and is at present a member of the board of education. Mr. Bradstreet is held in high esteem by the bar of Litchfield County, and his legislative experience has brought his name quite prominently before the people of the State.

Hon. Augustus Pettibone was born at Norfolk, Conn., Feb. 19, 1766. He was a descendant of John Pettibone, who came from Wales, and served under Cromwell until the end of the wars, and emigrated to America about 1650. He was admitted a citizen of Windsor in 1658. John Pettibone shortly after this removed from Windsor to Simsbury, and was the ancestor of the Pettibone family now spread abroad through most of the United States. Giles Pettibone, a descendant of this John Pettibone, removed from Simsbury to Litchfield County, and settled in that portion of it which the next year (1758) was incorporated under the name of Norfolk. At the first town-meeting, held in 1758, forty-four citizens attended, three of whom were Pettibones,—Eli, Isaac, and Giles, the father of Augustus Pettibone. Giles Pettibone was the first representative from Norfolk in the General Assembly, a position which he occupied for twenty-six sessions; he was also judge of probate from 1779 to 1807; justice of the peace for thirty years; and treasurer of the town for forty years. He served in the war of the Revolution, as a commissioned officer, at the battles of Saratoga and the capture of Burgoyne, and in the campaigns on the Hudson, carrying his title of colonel during his life. He was twice married and had eleven children. The mother of Augustus Pettibone was the daughter of Col. Michael Humphrey, of Simsbury, and left four children. Augustus Pettibone, at the age of fourteen, accompanied his father to the field and served several months. In 1784 he entered Yale College, where he continued about two years, but did not graduate. In 1787 he began reading law with Dudley Humphrey, Esq., of Norfolk, then in practice there, and continued with him from September to the following April, when he went to Litchfield, and attended Judge Reeve's lectures until March, 1790. He was admitted to the bar in Litchfield in 1790, and settled in practice at Norfolk. He continued in active practice until 1812, when from infirm health he relinquished his practice; but in the same year he was appointed associate judge of the County Court for Litchfield County, and continued such until 1816, when he was appointed chief judge of the County Court, and held that office until May, 1831. At the age of sixty-five years he resigned, declining to hold any public office. Judge Pettibone represented the town of Norfolk in thirty-two sessions of the General Assembly, and in 1830 and 1831 he was senator from the Seventeenth Senatorial District. In 1818, Judge Pettibone was a member of the constitutional convention, and a member of the committee which drafted the constitution for consideration of the convention, and voted for its adoption. He was a justice of the peace for nearly forty years, and judge of probate from 1807 to 1822, succeeding his father in that office.

Albert P. Rawlstone

Judge Pettibone occupied an honorable position in his profession, and was greatly esteemed by his brethren of the bar for his ability and integrity. He was forcible and logical in his address, but wholly without effort at display, and with little personal ambition. Thoroughly sincere and earnest himself, he despised all attempts at deception or trifling, and could not endure any resort to subterfuge, or any hypocrisy.

The latter years of his long life were spent at his home in Norfolk, in the care of a small farm, which afforded him needed exercise and recreation, and in the management of the estate he had accumulated in his business. He died Oct. 4, 1847, leaving a wife, but no children.

The following inscription, found upon the monument of his father, Col. Giles Pettibone, in the old burying-ground at Norfolk, so fitly describes and applies to the life of Judge Pettibone that it is inserted here:

"His life was honorable to himself and useful to society. He was distinguished by various marks of honor from his fellow-men, was prompt in their service and enjoyed their confidence through a long life devoted to public employments. To the needy and unprotected poor he was a father and a friend. Tears of sorrow bedew his grave who felt for the sufferings of others. Mortality, tho' it presents a barrier to the works of good men, does not obscure their virtues. The life of the just man shines with lustre beyond the grave."

Rufus Pettibone, a brother of Hon. Augustus Pettibone, graduated at Williams College in 1805, studied law, and about 1818 emigrated to Missouri, then a territory, and settled there as a lawyer. He was a man of brilliant talents and education, and immediately took high rank as a lawyer. He was a member of the constitutional convention of Missouri, and was chosen one of the circuit judges of the State. Afterwards he was appointed chief justice of the State by Governor McNair, the first Governor of the State, and held the office until his death in 1825.

S. Pettibone, another brother of Augustus Pettibone, a man of excellent ability and education, also a lawyer, was a graduate of Williams College, class of 1800. He died in Norfolk, Conn., in the prime of life.

Levi Pettibone, another brother of Augustus Pettibone, was the companion of Henry R. Schoolcraft in his exploring tour through Southwestern Missouri and Arkansas in 1817, and afterwards settled in Missouri, where he was many years in responsible positions, as judge of probate and clerk of the Circuit Courts. He is still (in 1881) living in the city of St. Louis, in his one hundred and first year, in the enjoyment of fair health and considerable vigor. Until his eyesight failed, when he was ninety-seven years of age, he was an excellent correspondent, and engaged to a considerable extent in active business pursuits.

HIRAM P. LAWRENCE was born at Norfolk, Conn., in 1833. Was a member of the class of 1855 in Yale College, but did not graduate. Read law with Hon. F. D. Fyler, of Winsted, in 1870, was admitted to the bar in Litchfield County in 1873, and is settled in practice at Winsted, Conn.

JAMES HUNTINGTON was born in South Coventry, Conn., June 4, 1833. He studied his profession in the office of Loren P. Waldo and Alvan P. Hyde, at Tolland, Conn; subsequently graduated at the law school at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; was admitted to the bar of Fulton County in 1859, and in the same year commenced practice in Woodbury, where he has since resided. He is judge of probate for Woodbury District, and State's attorney for Litchfield County.

ATTORNEYS' FEES IN 1793.

The following interesting extracts are from the records of a "Barr" meeting held Dec. 18, 1793:

"At a meeting of the bar held Dec. 18, 1793, of which Adonijah Strong, Esq., was chairman, it was voted, 'that Frederick Wolcott, Esq., of Litchfield, be Clerk of this Barr, and have power to make Records of all Resolves of this Barr, to make and certify Copies thereof, and to perform all other Duties Incident to said Office.'

"Resolved, That in future the Fees to be charged by each Member of this Barr in all Causes in which he may be employed be established as follows, viz[t]:

"In Common Pleas.

	£	s.	d.
"Retainer	0	12	0
Term Fees	0	18	0
On appointment of Auditors	1	16	0
Arguing Remonstrance to Report of Auditors	2	2	0
Attending Arbitrator each Day	1	10	0
" Before a justice, nine Shillings at least, and more in proportion to the distance and importance of the case.

"The Members present and who subscribed to the above table of fees are as follows: Tapping Reeve, Adonijah Strong, Daniel Everit, David N. Brinsmade, Isaac Baldwin, Jr., Ephraim Kirby, Benjamin Stiles, Jr., Nathan Preston, Judson Canfield, Samuel Bestwick, John C. Smith, Nicholas S. Masters, John Allen, Uriel Holmes, Nathan Smith, John Elmore, Joseph Canfield, Augustus Pettibone.

	£	s.	d.
"Arguing Plea of Abatement, there being no other defense in the case	1	4	0
The same with further defense	0	13	0
Arguing Demurrer or Petition for new trial	1	16	0
" Bill in Chancery	2	2	0
Silent Appeal, to be long term fees	1	4	0
Arguing Issue in fact	2	2	0
" Motion in Arrest of Judgment	1	4	0
On appointment of Auditors	1	4	0
Arguing Remonstrance to report of Auditors	1	4	0

"In Superior Court.

	£	s.	d.
"Retainer	0	18	0
Term Fee	1	4	0
Arguing Plea of Abatement	1	10	0
Demurrer	2	8	0
Issue in fact	4	0	0
Arguing Motion in Arrest of Judgment	1	10	0
" Bill in Chancery	4	10	0

"Elnathan Akins, Philo Ruggles, Daniel W. Lewis, William Edgewell, Matthew B. Whittlesey, Frederick Wolcott, Elisha Sterling, James Dem-son, David Tallman, Eli Curtis, Aaron Smith, Roger Skinner, David Daggett, Isaac Mills, M. Strong, Joel P. Pettett."

THE COURTS IN 1820.

Under the old government the Superior Court consisted of nine judges, and they were selected annually by the Legislature. Under the constitution the number was reduced to five, and they held their office during good behavior or until they reached the age of seventy years. In like manner the judges of the County Courts were reduced from five to three. Formerly these judges held the Superior Courts, but now they are holden by one judge.

THE SUPERIOR COURT.

There were sessions of the Superior Court in each year, holden on the third Tuesdays of August and February, and the terms rarely extended beyond two weeks. If they reached to the third week, they were deemed to be of extraordinary length. The Superior Court had no original jurisdiction except as a court of equity. All its actions at law came up by appeal from the County Court, and generally important cases were carried up without a trial in the court below. The party wishing to appeal his case would demur either to the declaration or plea, as the case might be, suffer a judgment to be entered against him, and appeal from it, and then change his plea in the Superior Court as the exigencies of his case may require. The making of copies in the case appealed was a very profitable item in the business of the clerk. All cases at law wherein the matter in demand exceeded seventy dollars were appealable, and all matters in equity in which the sum involved exceeded three hundred dollars were brought originally to the Superior Court. In criminal matters the jurisdiction of both courts was concurrent, except in crimes of a higher grade, which were tried exclusively in the Superior Court. A case was pretty certain to reach a trial at the second term after it was entered in the docket unless special reasons could be shown for its further continuance.

THE COUNTY COURT.

The County Court had an important agency in the administration of justice fifty years ago. Under the old form of government it consisted of one judge and four justices of the quorum; under the constitution, of one chief judge and two associate judges.

There were three sessions of the old County Court in each year, in March, September, and December. The September term was generally short, merely disposing of the criminal business and such other preliminary matters as could not be passed over. The March term lasted three weeks, and the December term from four to six weeks, as the business might demand. The first half day was always taken up in calling the docket. Mr. Wolcott had his files arranged alphabetically, corresponding with the entries on the docket, and of these some member of the bar, usually one of the younger, had charge. The sheriff took his station in the centre of the bar, and as the cases were named by the clerk the proper entries were made both on the docket and on the file, and then the file was passed to the sheriff, who delivered it to the party entitled to it, and thus, at the close of the proceedings, all the files had passed into the hands of the members of the bar, where they remained until the case received final disposition. Three hundred cases were considered as constituting a small docket, and there were as many as nine hundred entered at a single term.

In 1820 there were two grades of lawyers in the State. The first admission only authorized the candidate to practice at the County Court, and a service of two years was required at that bar before he was allowed an examination for admission to the bar of the Superior Court. The statutes of the State were subsequently revised under the superintendence of Judge Swift, and many and material alterations had been made to conform the provisions of the law to the new order of things under the constitution. The question came before Judge Mainard, and he decided that under the revised statutes an admission to the bar of the County Court gave the candidate authority to practice in all the courts in the State; and that decision was assented to by all the judges.

The matter of examining candidates for admission to the bar was, in those days, an imposing solemnity, and the day for that proceeding was a marked day of the term. All the members of the bar were expected to be present, and few failed of attending. The committee of examination occupied the judges' seats, the chairman, holding the place of the chief judge, indicating to each separate member of the committee the subject in which he was expected to examine the candidate, and thus a thorough and searching examination was had. After the examination was closed the candidates retired, and the members of the bar gave their opinions seriatim on the question of the admission of the applicant. Sometimes candidates were rejected. It had been the practice in early times to have an entertainment at the close of the examination at the expense of the successful condidates, but this had been dispensed with when I was examined. Stories were told of some eminent members of the bar who, on such occasions, indulged in practices which were not credible to their reputation for temperance and sobriety. Perhaps it was for this reason that the practice was abolished.

PRACTICE.

Statutory provisions and the advance of legal science, as well as a more just sense of what is due to the best interest of litigation, have made great changes in the course of proceedings before the courts during the last fifty years. Then it was customary for counsel to take advantage of any trivial omission which could be found in the proceedings, and a case never came to trial until every possible effort for abatement or delay had been exhausted. Our statute in relation to amendments had not then received so liberal a construction, nor was it in itself so liberal in its provisions as it now is; and thus opportunity was afforded for the display of much ingenuity in the prosecution of dilatory pleas.

Then there were no statutory provisions relating to injunctions, all the power which the court had in that matter being that with which it was invested by the common law as a court of equity, and hence very little will be found in our reports on this subject until about 1826, after the statute authorizing the judges to grant temporary injunctions had been passed. This statute was introduced into the Legislature by Judge Swift, who was a member for several sessions after his retirement from the bench. Since then many cases relating to this branch of jurisprudence have been before our courts.

Probably more than half the suits commenced in our County Courts fifty years ago were brought to enforce the collection of debts, and in some localities this was a profitable business. The County Court then had jurisdiction in all cases where the matter in demand exceeded the sum of fifteen dollars, and this brought into it a great number of suits now tried by single justices, and accounts for the great diminution in the number of cases now brought here.

Piles of learning were devoted to destruction by the edict of the Legislature admitting parties and other persons in interest to be heard as witnesses. The nicest and most refined legal questions were frequently brought before the courts for decision in matters relating to the interest of witnesses, but now they are almost forgotten by the most learned of the profession.

THE AUTHORITIES THEN IN USE.

The statutes then in force were the revision of 1808, by far the most elaborate and complete of any ever published. It contains a complete history of the legislation of Connecticut on all subjects of statutory enactment from the first, and is still a useful book for study by the profession. The principal labor of its preparation for publication was performed by Thomas Day.

Comparatively few American authorities were cited in our courts then. Mr. Day had published four volumes of Day's Reports, and then had suspended further publication for want of encouragement. The Legislature, in 1815, had authorized the court to appoint a reporter, and had given him a salary. Under such an appointment Mr. Day had commenced publishing the Connecticut Reports, and had published three volumes of them when he published the fifth of Day, thus filling the gap between the fourth of Day and the first of Connecticut. The New York Reports, by Caine and Johnson, down to the twelfth of Johnson, and twelve volumes of the Massachusetts Reports were out, and these, with our own reports, were about all the American authorities which were cited in our courts. Not a single American elementary work had then been published except Swift's System and Swift's Evidence. The English Reports from Burrows down, including Douglas', Cowper's, Term, and East's Reports, down to the twelfth volume, with Blackstone's Commentaries, which were always on the table, were the staple authorities of the times. Judge Reeve said that he considered Cowper's Reports the best that had then been published of the decisions of the Court of King's Bench.

The following is a list of the present members of the Litchfield bar:

Litchfield.—George C. Woodruff, George M. Woodruff (railroad commissioner), Origen S. Seymour (does not appear in court as counsel), George A. Hickox, Henry B. Graves, Henry H. Prescott, Dwight C. Kilbourn, Wm. L. Ransom (clerk of the Superior Court), Charles B. Andrews, Frank W. Wessells, Edward W. Seymour.

Winchester.—R. Hitchcock (judge of the Superior Court), Augustus H. Fenn, Hiram P. Lawrence, Wellington B. Smith, Samuel B. Horne, William H. Ely, William F. Hurlbut, Florimond D. Fyler, Samuel A. Herman.

New Hartford.—Jared B. Foster, John B. Betts, Nathan Morse.

Riverton.—Hiram Goodwin.

Wolcottville.—Gideon H. Welch, George W. Cole.

Thomaston.—Albert P. Bradstreet, F. W. Etheridge.

Terryville.—Henry Plumb.

Harwinton.—Abijah Catlin.

Woodbury.—James Huntington, William Cothren, George F. Shelton.

New Milford.—John S. Turrill, James H. McMahon, T. Dwight Merwin.

Sharon.—J. Wade Hughes, Charles F. Sedgwick.

West Cornwall.—Arthur D. Warner, N. A. Nickerson.

Lakeville.—Hubert Williams.

Salisbury.—Donald J. Warner, Donald T. Warner.

Canaan.—M. T. Granger (judge of Court of Errors), Jacob B. Hardenberg, A. T. Roraback.

Falls Village.—Lee P. Dean, Dwight W. Clarke.

Washington.—William H. O'Hara.

The senior members of the bar of this county have, many of them, made up their records; those still left are soon to follow, and the juniors are to assume their places at the bar and on the bench; to them will soon be committed these great responsible trusts. The perpetuity of our free institutions is committed to the guardianship and keeping of the bar and judiciary of our free country, for the history of the world teaches, and all free government illustrates, this truth,—treat the subject lightly as you will,—that to the profession of the law civil government is indebted for all the safeguards and intrenchments with which the liberties of the people are protected; that legislation is shaped, constitutions enlarged, amended, and adopted by the enlightened administration of the statesmen, both of England and the United States, who have been in both, and are in all free governments, educated for the bar, and, ascending by the inherent force of their disciplined, professional life, they become the directors of the destinies of states and nations.

Military chieftains may spring into power, tyrants may dazzle with the glamour of military parade and the pomp of war an oppressed and frenzied people, but they turn as the cannonade dies away to the statesmanship of the country, and call to the parliaments and congressional halls for final debate the arbitraments of the liberties of the people.

From the days of King John to the present hour the bench and bar have furnished the statesmen who have erected the bulwarks of constitutional law, and extorted from tyrants the Magna Chartas which have secured to the oppressed the guarantees of free institutions.

Imbued with the historical traditions of their predecessors, and tracing the paths they have trod, emulating their good example, it should become more and more the resolute purpose of the Litchfield County bar to so walk in the light of their professional teachings that when they are called to follow them to that upper court, and file their judgment-roll of the great trial of life with that Supreme Judge from whose bar they can take no appeal,—

> "Thou go not like the quarry-slave at night
> Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
> By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
> Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
> About him and lies down to pleasant dreams."

CHAPTER III.

MEDICAL HISTORY.

Organization of Medical Association in 1767—Early Physicians—Names of Members of Medical Society from 1808, with Dates of Admission—List of Presidents and Secretaries from 1808 to 1881—Present Members—Present Officers.

As early as January, 1767, a medical association was formed in this county, composed of the most eminent physicians then in practice here. Its object was to establish rules of practice and intercourse, promote medical science by providing for annual consultations and dissertations, and to protect the reputation of the profession and the health of the community from the inroads of ignorant pretenders to medical science. Among the gentlemen composing this body were Joshua Porter, Lemuel Wheeler, Joseph Perry, Seth Bird, William Abernethy, Samuel Catlin, Simeon Smith, Cyrus Marsh, Ephraim Gitteau, John Calhoun, etc. One of the earliest physicians of the county was Oliver Wolcott. He was the son of Hon. Roger Wolcott, of Windsor, a former Governor of the colony. He had served as an officer in the French war, and settled himself in Goshen before the organization of the county in the practice of his profession. Whether he continued in practice as a physician after his removal to this town is not known; probably, however, his official duties as sheriff prevented it. He was subsequently honored with almost every official place which a good man would covet: he was a member of the House of Representatives, of the Council, a judge of probate, a judge of the County Court, a representative in Congress, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, lieutenant-governor and Governor of his native State, and, more than all, the father of an excellent family. He is said to have been a man of uncommon diffidence and distrustful of his own ability. His public communications display sound judgment, and his more confidential correspondence a warm affection and a pure purpose.

Dr. Seth Bird, of Litchfield, probably held the first place among the early physicians of the county. His reputation was widespread. For acuteness of discrimination and soundness of judgment he was not excelled.

Dr. Joseph Perry, of Woodbury, was not only eminent in his profession, but, what was unusual in his day, he excelled as a belles-lettre scholar and was a gentleman well read in various branches of science.

Later generations produced eminent and accomplished physicians: Dr. Nathaniel Perry, son of the gentleman just named; Dr. Daniel Sheldon, of Litchfield; Dr. Fowler, of Washington; Rockwell, of Sharon; Welch, of Norfolk; Ticknor, of Salisbury.

Dr. Samuel Woodward, of Torrington, was not only a physician of high repute himself, but he was almost literally a father of the faculty.

Among the surgeons of note, in earlier times, were Dr. Samuel Catlin, of Litchfield, and at a later period Dr. Samuel R. Gager, of Sharon.

The medical profession in this county has produced some writers of respectability. Dr. Elisha North was for several years a physician of extensive practice in Goshen, and he afterwards removed to New London. He published an approved treatise on spotted fever, which extensively prevailed in Goshen and its vicinity while he resided there.

Dr. Caleb Ticknor, of Salisbury, was brother of the late excellent Dr. Luther Ticknor, of that town, and of Dr. Benajah Ticknor, for many years a surgeon in the navy of the United States, and, although a young man when he removed to New York City, about the year 1832, he rose rapidly to a high place in his profession. He published several medical works, the most popular of which was the "Philosophy of Living."*

* The above reference to the physicians of the early days is taken from the address delivered by the late Judge Samuel Church at the Litchfield centennial, in August, 1851.

THE MEDICAL SOCIETY.*

The records of the old society are doubtless lost. The following is a list of members of the Litchfield County Medical Society in 1808: Samuel Woodward, President; Samuel Buel, Clerk; Anson Tuttle, John Raymond, Aaron Coleman, P. B. Fowler, Ebenezer Smith, William H. Taylor, Roswell Abernethy, Jesse Carrington, John Calhoun, Samuel Rockwell, J. R. Eastman, Elijah Lyman, Samuel Orton, Timothy Clark, Gideon Woodruff, Asahel Humphrey, Joshua Cornwall.

Since then the following admissions have been made:

1808.—Anson Wright, John C. Warner, David Warner, Launcelot Phelps.
1809.—Samuel B. Woodward, Henry Tuttle.
1810.—Jehial Williams, Edmond Allen.
1811.—Elisha North.
1812.—Frederick Graves, John Warner.
1813.—James R. Dodge, Conant Catlin, Asahel Hale, E. L. Hart, Ira N. Bronson.
1814.—John M. West, Elmore Everitt, Curtis Hurd.
1815.—Norman Smith.
1816.—William Buel, Erastus Bancroft, William Marsh.
1817.—Benjamin Platt.
1818.—Samuel Enstie.
1819.—Henry Fish, Luther Tichnor, Gaylord Wells, Samuel Andrews, George O. Jarvis, Orvid Plumb.
1820.—Roswell Abernethy, John M. West.
1821.—Horatio Gridley, Chauncey B. Foot, Samuel W. Gold, Johnson C. Hatch.
1822.—Benjamin Welch, Elias W. Williams, Thomas Brinsmade.
1823.—Sherman Woodward, Clark Chapman, Samuel Chittenden.
1824.—Jehial Abbott, Uriah Turner.
1825.—Benjamin F. Cleaveland, Samuel R. Childs.
1826.—Eli Reed, Ives Cowles, William Woodruff.

The following is the first complete list of members, made in 1827:

Alanson Abbe, William Buel, Samuel Buel, John M. West, Samuel R. Childs, Manly Peters, John W. Russell, Norman Landon, Samuel W. Gould, Solyman Russell, William Marsh, Luther Tichnor, Henry Fish, Adonijah Strong, Benjamin Welch, Joshua S. Cornwall, Amasa Kellogg, Benjamin Welch, Jr., John Calhoun, Uriah Turner, John Sears, George Taylor, Jehial Williams, Clark Chapman, Ralph Denning, Reuben Warner, Lyman Catlin, Royal Cook, Ives Cowles, William Woodruff, Gaylord Wells, Joel G. Caudee, Roswell Abernethy, Frederick B. Woodward, Conant Catlin, Elias Williams, Norman Buel, Johnson C. Hatch, Remus M. Fowler, William C. Williams, George O. Jones, Erastus Bancroft, H. Scovill, William O. Talcott, Andrew De Wolf, Wells Beardsley, Howell B. Graham, Miles Belden, Garry H. Miner, Jarvis Case, Amos Beecher, William Erwin, Andrew Abernethy, Paul W. Cluseborough, Eli Reed, William Carrington, Warren R. Fowler.

The following have been admitted since that date:

1828.—Stephen Reed, Jethro Hatch, Bushrod Camp.
1829.—Norman Lyman, —— Hollister, John De Forest, Josiah Barnes, Amos Butler, Jefferson Stone, C. S. Ticknor, A. S. Lewis.
1830.—Moses A. Lee, Albert Wright, William P. Buel, J. G. Beckwith, Burritt North, Myron Downs.
1831.—George L. Hurd, Theodore C. Hurd, George M. Fowler, Charles Vaill, Edwin C. Ely, L. S. Adams.
1832.—Charles H. Webb, Stanley Griswold, G. H. St. John, Samuel McAlpen, Ambrose Ives.
1833.—Walter Peck, Asahel Humphrey, —— Kibbe, Horace Judson, A. M. Huxley, Ozias Lewis, Albert C. Knight.
1834.—Aaron Wildman, J. R. Eastman, E. D. Hudson, —— Karson.
1835.—Horace K. Beach, Wells Beardsley, Philando Stewart.
1836.—James Barry, Joseph McComb, Elmore Everett, Russell Everett.
1837.—Samuel T. Salisbury.
1838.—John S. Wolcott, R. Tiffany, Loomis North, Horace Buttolph, Reuben M. Woodruff, W. J. Barry, William B. Lacy, J. A. Gillette.
1839.—George Adams, C. H. Reed, —— Moody, Sylvanus Stewart.
1840.—William W. Welch, Eliada Osborn, —— Perry, —— Platt, —— Freeman.
1841.—Henry Baldwin, William B. De Forest.
1842.—George Seymour, L. S. Turner, Myron K. Hubbard, Sidney P. Lyman, Charles Byington.
1843.—Baldwin Seeley, Thomas Seeley, William Cockie, Edward P. Lyman, Joseph North.
1844.—John Stootcote, George Lyman, John Yale.
1847.—W. E. Bulkley, David E. Bostwick, Seth Porter.
1848.—John L. Wakefield, Graham Lee, J. Edward Smith.
1849.—G. S. Bissell, P. Beardsley.
1850.—William Werden, Ithaneer H. Smith, H. G. Westlake.
1851.—Orlando Brown, Erastmus Hugins, Asahel Catlin, Jr., J. W. Phelps, J. B. Whiting, Seth Pease, John H. Welch, Samuel Catlin.
1852.—Charles B. Maltby, George B. Parsons.
1854.—Henry M. Knight, William J. Burge, Gaylord B. Miller, J. H. T. Cockey, J. W. Bidwell.
1855.—Albin E. Barber, Henry W. Buel.
1856.—John B. Derrickson.
1857.—William W. Knight, William Deming.
1858.—William Bissell.
1859.—Harmon W. Shove.
1860.—Edward Sanford.
1863.—Henry Davis.
1867.—Francis J. Young.
1868.—J. K. Bacon.
1869.—G. W. Bell, J. H. Blodgett.
1870.—J. Morgan, H. E. Gates, William Porter, R. S. Goodwin, T. S. Hanchett, W. S. Munger, C. W. Bull, W. J. Beach.
1871.—Franklin Booth, R. E. Ensign.
1872.—E. B. Heady, L. T. Platt, C. F. Couch.
1873.—T. G. Wright, J. H. North, L. H. Wood.
1874.—F. P. Esterley, C. W. Camp.
1875.—Virgil Buel, J. J. Newcomb.
1876.—J. H. Stevens, A. M. Kessler.
1877.—A. G. Heaney, W. L. Barbour, B. S. Thompson, Samuel H. Huntington, F. W. Brown.
1878.—J. H. Trent, W. P. Swett.
1879.—George K. Roberts, Jerry Burwell, C. L. Blake, Isaac R. Sanford.
1880.—Frederick E. Barrows.

LIST OF OFFICERS.

The following is a list of presidents and secretaries from 1808 to 1880:

PRESIDENTS.

1808, Samuel Woolward; 1809-10, Jesse Carrington; 1811-13, Nathaniel Perry, 1814, Jesse Carrington, 1815-16, Nathaniel Perry, 1817, Jesse Carrington, 1818, William Buel, 1819, Nathaniel Perry, 1820-22, Samuel Rockwell, 1823, William Buel; 1824, Samuel Rockwell; 1825, Warren S. Fowler; 1826, Roswell Abernethy; 1827-29, William Buel; 1830, Roswell Abernethy, 1831, Reuben S. Woodward, 1832, William Buel; 1833-34, Norman Lyman; 1835, Johnson C. Hatch; 1836, Remus M. Fowler; 1837, Samuel Buel; 1838, Gaylord Wells; 1839, Benjamin Welch, 1840, Samuel W. Gold, 1841, G. H. St. John, 1842, Manley Peters, 1843, Charles Vaill, 1844, Reuben Woodruff, 1845, William J. Barry, 1846, Harvey Baldwin, 1847, A. M. Huxley, 1848, Johnson C. Hatch, 1849, Burritt B. North, 1850, Ralph Deming; 1851, James Welch, 1852, Myron Downs, 1853, S. T. Salisbury, 1854, Sidney H. Lyman, 1855, William H. Welch, 1856, William Woodruff, 1857, George Seymour, 1858, Henry M. Knight, 1859, James Welch, 1860, Henry W. Buel, 1861, J. H. Welch, 1862, D. E. Bostwick, 1863, C. H. Webb, 1864, J. W. Phelps, 1865, H. M. Knight, 1866, J. W. Phelps, 1867, Henry M. Knight, 1868, J. W. Phelps, 1869, F. S. Young, 1870-71, Henry W. Buel, 1872, J. W. Bidwell, 1873-74, Orlando Brown; 1875-76, Burritt B. North; 1877, William Deming; 1878-79, R. S. Goodwin; 1880, W. S. Munger.

SECRETARIES.

1808-11, Samuel Buel; 1812-15, Elijah Lyman; 1816-18, Conant Catlin; 1819, Erastus L. Hart, 1820-21, Roswell Abernethy, 1822-25, Horatio Gridley, 1826-28, Samuel Childs, 1829-30, Samuel Gold, 1831,

* Contributed by J. J. Newcomb, M.D., of Litchfield.

Moses A. Lee; 1832–47, J. G. Beckwith; 1848–49, A. M. Huxley; 1850–54, George Lyman; 1855–57, Henry W. Buel; 1858–59, David E. Bostwick; 1860–62, G. B. Miller; 1863–66, Henry Davis; 1867–68, J. G. Beckwith; 1869, G. W. Bell; 1870–71, Howard E. Gates; 1872, William Porter; 1873–74, Willis J. Beach; 1875–77, T. G. Wright; 1878–80, J. J. Newcomb.

The following record appears among the proceedings of the society under date of April 21, 1828:

"A communication from the American Temperance Society was laid before the society, and the following resolution was passed:

"'Resolved, That this society highly appreciate the exertions of the Temperance Society for the suppression of the deplorable evils under which our country is suffering from the abuse of ardent spirits, and that we will use our best endeavors to further the views of that highly-respectable association; and we hereby pledge ourselves that we will at this and at all future meetings of our society abstain from and discourage the use of that highly deleterious article.'"

The present officers and members are as follows: President, Walter S. Munger, Watertown; Vice-President, Willis J. Beach, Litchfield; Secretary, J. J. Newcomb, Litchfield; Committee on Membership and Ethics, Henry W. Buel, J. W. Bidwell, Luther H. Wood; Fellows to the State Society, R. S. Goodwin, G. H. Miner, J. B. Derrickson, Orlando Brown, W. J. Beach.

Reporter, L. H. Wood.

Members, Henry W. Buel, W. J. Beach, J. W. Bidwell, O. Brown, William Bissell, T. W. Brown, J. Burwell, C. L. Blake, T. E. Barrows, C. W. Camp, C. F. Couch, William Deming, J. B. Derrickson, Myron Downs, H. E. Gates, R. S. Goodwin, F. P. Esterley, T. S. Hanchett, A. G. Heavey, W. W. Knight, E. P. Lyman, G. H. Miner, W. S. Munger, J. J. Newcomb, J. H. North, Edward Sanford, J. H. Stevens, H. W. Shove, W. P. Swett, I. R. Sanford, B. S. Thompson, James Welch, William Woodruff, L. H. Wood.

CHAPTER IV.

MILITARY HISTORY.

The Second Regiment—The Fifth Regiment—The Eighth Regiment—The Ninth Regiment—The Tenth Regiment—The Eleventh Regiment—The Twelfth Regiment—The Thirteenth Regiment.

THE lightning had scarcely flashed the intelligence to the expectant North that Maj. Anderson and his gallant band had surrendered as prisoners of war to the Southern confederacy ere the patriotic sons of old Litchfield were rallying to the support of their imperiled country. Men and money were promptly raised, and the record of the county during the whole struggle is one in which her citizens may justly feel a patriotic pride.

SECOND REGIMENT INFANTRY.

The Second Regiment of Infantry was enlisted for three months and recruited from the volunteer militia. It was mustered into the service May 7, 1861, under the command of Alfred H. Terry, of New Haven, an efficient and accomplished officer. The regiment left for Washington, May 7, 1861, numbering seven hundred and eighty. There were two companies from Litchfield County in this regiment,—infantry company B, Abram G. Kellogg, of New Hartford, captain, Charles W. Morse first lieutenant, and Charles Warren second lieutenant, and rifle company E, with Sherman T. Cooke as captain, Wheelock T. Batchellor first lieutenant, and Charles E. Palmer second lieutenant. The former company was recruited principally from Winchester and New Hartford, and the latter, except eight men, entirely from Winchester. The regiment was present at the battle of Bull Run, where both officers and men acquitted themselves with honor. It was mustered out of the service Aug. 7, 1861.

THE FIFTH REGIMENT

was organized in the summer of 1861, and entered the service with Orris S. Ferry, of Norwalk, as colonel. He was subsequently United States senator. There was one company principally from this county in the regiment,—Company I,—with G. A. Stedman, of Hartford, captain. The first and second lieutenants, W. S. Cogswell and W. H. Webster, were also from Hartford. The regiment participated in the following engagements: Winchester and Cedar Mountain, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Resaca, Dallas, Marietta, Peach-Tree Creek, Atlanta, Chesterfield Courthouse, and Silver Run.

THE EIGHTH REGIMENT.

This regiment was mustered into the service in September and October, 1861, under the command of Edward Harland, of Norwich. Litchfield County was represented by two companies,—C and I. Company C was officered as follows: Captain, Charles W. Nash; first lieutenant, Samuel Glasson; second lieutenant, Robert H. Burnside; sergeant, Henry R. Jones. Company I had for its officers F. W. Jackson, of Danbury, captain; William J. Roberts, of New Milford, first lieutenant; and F. E. Nearing, of Brookfield, second lieutenant. The regiment left Connecticut Oct. 17, 1861, one thousand and twenty-seven strong, and at Annapolis, Md., was joined to Burnside's corps. "Its earliest services were in the battle of Newbern, N. C., March 14, 1862, and the siege of Fort Macon the following month. It accompanied Gen. Burnside when he was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac, and subsequently went with the corps into Maryland. At Antietam, in September, 1862, the regiment lost: Killed, one officer—Lieut. Mason Wait, of Norwich—and 33 men; wounded, 10 officers and 129 men; missing, 21 men; total, 194.

"In December the Eighth was engaged at Fredericksburg, but suffered slightly, and in February, 1863, was sent to Southeastern Virginia. In April the regiment was in the fight at Fort Hagar, Va., and remained in Virginia until January, 1864. It then returned to Connecticut on veteran furlough, three hundred and ten men having re-enlisted as veterans. In March it returned to its old camp near Portsmouth, Va., and, after outpost- and picket-duty at Deep Creek and vicinity, was in the battle at Walthall Junction, May 9th, and lost eighty men. Col. Harland having been promoted to be a brigadier-general, the regiment was at this time in command of Col. John E. Ward, who was severely wounded by a shell at the battle named. A week later the regiment participated in the engagement at Fort Darling, and on the night of the 16th returned within the fortification, the men worn out with eight days' constant warfare. In this short time the Eighth lost one-third of its fighting strength. Early in June it was engaged with the enemy at Cold Harbor, and from June 16th to August 27th in skirmishes and siege-work around Petersburg, losing heavily. The following four weeks were spent on the James River, picketing the Bermuda Hundred post, and September 27th the regiment lost seventy-three men in the storming of Battery Harrison. This was the last general engagement of the regiment, which was mustered out Dec. 12, 1865."

The regiment saw severe service, and participated in the following engagements: Newbern, Fort Macon, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Fort Hagar, Walthall Junction, Fort Darling, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Fort Harrison. There were killed, 72; died of wounds, 40; died of disease, 132; missing, 11.

THE NINTH REGIMENT

was mustered into the service in the fall of 1861 as the "Irish Regiment," under the command of Thos. W. Cahill, of Hartford, with Richard Fitzgibbons, of Bridgeport, lieutenant-colonel. It had a few men from this county.

Its principal engagements were Baton Rouge, Chackaloo Station, Deep Bottom, and Cedar Creek. Mustered out Aug. 3, 1865.

THE TENTH REGIMENT

was recruited in the fall of 1861, and mustered into the service during September and October of that year, with Charles L. Russell, of Derby, as colonel, and A. W. Drake, of Hartford, as lieutenant-colonel.

There was one company from this county,—Company D,—commanded as follows: Captain, Lewis Judd, of Roxbury; first lieutenant, Charles H. Hurlburt, of Roxbury; second lieutenant, Sanford B. Palmer, of Sharon.

The regiment left for the seat of war in October, and was assigned to Gen. Burnside's command. The Tenth received its baptism of fire at the battle of Roanoke Island, where it fought nobly, and its gallant colonel, Russell, was killed while leading the charge.

"A month later the regiment lost twenty-three killed and wounded in the battle of Newbern, and then had rest from close warfare until the 14th of December. It then participated in the sanguinary battle of Kingston, N. C., and lost one hundred and six officers and men, and only two days later was in another fight at Whitehall. March 28, 1863, after a winter's rest, the Tenth was in the battle of Seabrook Island, S. C., and spent the spring, summer, and fall before Charleston. December found the regiment in Florida, where twenty-two men were lost in a fight at St. Augustine.

"In the spring of 1864 the regiment went to Virginia, and suffered the loss of all the garrison and camp equipage and regimental and company records by the sinking at Norfolk of the transport on which they were stored. Its first fight in the Virginia campaign was at Whitehall Junction, May 7th, and from this time the history of the organization shows battle after battle clear through to the surrender of Appomattox, the Tenth being 'in at the death.'"—Battle-Flag Day.

A total of 2124 was credited to the organization during its existence, embracing the original 996; recruits, 848; re-enlisted veterans, 280. Casualties: Killed in action, 57; died of wounds, 59; died of disease, 152.

The regiment sustained a very heavy loss of officers and otherwise. It had four colonels during its first eighteen months of service.

The Tenth participated in the following engagements: Roanoke Island, sieges of Charleston and St. Augustine, Walthall Junction, Drury's Bluff, Bermuda Hundred, Strawberry Plains, Deep Bottom, Deep Run, siege of Petersburg, Laurel Hill Church, New Market Road, Darbytown Road, Johnson's Plantation, Hatcher's Run, Fort Gregg, and Appomattox Court-house.

THE ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

This regiment had one company from Litchfield County,—I,—officered as follows: captain, John D. Griswold, of Old Lyme; first lieutenant, P. C. Cummings, North Canaan; second lieutenant, William H. Sackett, of Hartford. The regiment was raised in 1861, and December 16th left Hartford for the front, under command of Thomas H. C. Kingsbury, of Franklin. It participated in the following engagements: Newbern, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Suffolk, near Suffolk, Swift's Creek, Drury's Bluff, Cold Harbor, before Petersburg. Total loss of men, 85.

THE TWELFTH REGIMENT.

The Twelfth Regiment was mustered into the service in the winter of 1861-62. It had but few men from this county. Dr. John B. Welch was assistant surgeon.

JOHN BENJAMIN WELCH.

John Benjamin Welch was born at Winsted, Conn., Sept. 14, 1838. He commenced regularly the study of medicine with his father at the age of seventeen.

During the term of his professional study, his time, when not in attendance upon lectures, was divided. A portion of it was spent in the office of his father, and portions of it in the offices of his uncles, Dr. Benjamin Welch, of Salisbury, and Dr. William W. Welch, and Dr. John H. Welch, of Norfolk. He attended his first course of medical lectures in Washington, D. C., his second and third at the medical college in New Haven, where he received the degree of M.D., January, 1860. Much the larger part of the two years after his graduation he spent with his father, more or less engaged in the practice of his profession, the last year especially, doing quite as much business as was best for so young a man.

He was ardently devoted to his profession, nobly ambitious to excel in it, and eager to avail himself of every opportunity within his reach to fully qualify himself for its responsible duties.

On the breaking out of the late Rebellion there arose a demand for surgeons for the army. He presented himself to the Military Board of Medical Examiners for the State of Connecticut, and underwent an examination. He applied for the post of assistant surgeon, for which he was recommended by the board of examiners and by others. He obtained the position, and received his commission, which was dated Dec. 11, 1861, as assistant surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment, Connecticut Volunteers, then stationed at Hartford.

He immediately went to Hartford, signified his acceptance of the appointment, and soon entered upon its duties. The regiment remained in Hartford till Feb. 24, 1862, when it left to join the division of Gen. Butler, at Ship Island.

During the voyage he was quite sea-sick in rough weather. On pleasant days he often mounted the wheel-house, and appeared to enjoy very much ocean scenery. On the 6th of March he began to complain of headache and debility. These symptoms, however, excited no serious alarm, as they were attributed to the effects of the sea-sickness; and it was confidently anticipated that they would disappear on his reaching land.

The steamer came to anchor off Ship Island at sunrise, March 7th, when Dr. Brownell hastened to the state-room of Dr. Welch to give him the information and to offer him his congratulations. He requested Dr. Brownell to look at his throat, remarking that it felt sore. Two or three small ulcers were visible, and the next day the rash made its appearance,—decisive symptoms of scarlatina.

The accommodations being much better on ship-board than ashore, Dr. Brownell decided that it would be better for Dr. Welch not to attempt to land in the condition in which he then was. Dr. Brownell came off shore to see him daily, and Dr. Fernandez, the surgeon of the ship, was constantly at hand.

Dr. George W. Avery, in his letter, says,—

"When the steamer 'Fulton' dropped anchor in our harbor, I hastened to the wharf to greet your son, my old college friend and professional brother. I was disappointed as to seeing him, and was told by Dr. Brownell that he was slightly ill, and that it would not be advisable to attempt to bring him ashore. Immediately I obtained permission of Gen. Phelps to visit him. He was much rejoiced to see me, and I spent nearly all of Sunday afternoon with him. I found a bad pulse; it was soft and small. On Tuesday following, the 11th, I visited him again, and found him, as before, very glad to see me. It had now been decided to send him home, a furlough to that effect having been granted by Col. Deming. I found him so weak that it was with great difficulty that he could speak. He complained very much of his throat."

The late Dr. Eldridge, who preached his funeral sermon, in speaking of his prominent traits, said,—

"His intellect was clear, strong, and remarkably well balanced. Endowed with strong common sense and a sound practical judgment, he was peculiarly reliable, and always proved himself adequate to an emergency. Though modest and unobtrusive, he shrunk not from responsibility, and on several important occasions met and sustained it with a composure, self-possession, independence, and ability that even surprised his most intimate friends. They hardly looked for so much vigor and force in one whose kindness of heart had been deemed his most prominent characteristic. He evidently possessed traits that gave promise of the highest distinction as a physician and as a man. His disposition was exceedingly amiable and affectionate. He was greatly beloved. He soon won a place in the hearts of those who were brought into association with him.

"Dr. Brownell says,—

"'His affectionate disposition had endeared him very much to myself. My heart grows heavy as I think of the many dull hours I shall pass in my tent alone, when I had expected to have his pleasant face before me; for I had decided that he and I should have quarters together.'

"Dr. Avery observes in his letter,—

"'When your son was a student in New Haven I formed a very strong attachment to him, and have always considered him as a man of great purity of character. I had anticipated much pleasure in having him here.'"

Dr. Welch had gained the confidence and the love of the soldiers of his regiment, who deeply deplored his death. His piety was humble, sincere, and unquestionable. He had quarters with the chaplain at Hartford and on ship-board. Rev. Mr. Bradford, the chaplain, mentions a circumstance that was very significant. He says, "I have seen Dr. Welch in his private devotions, both in Hartford and on the steamer." Hence, it is evident that he did not intend to be deprived of his communion with his God, though he could not command that degree of retirement that he would have desired. He was sincere;

he had a true, manly independence. How clear it is that he was getting ready for that event which, though then unlooked for, was so near at hand!

Such was the young man whom God in his Providence removed from the earth. He summoned into eternity a native of this place, known, esteemed, and beloved by all; he took from the family a beloved and devoted son and brother; he called away from the medical profession a well-educated and promising young physician; he struck from the roll of the United States army a genuine patriot; he took to Himself, from the bosom of the Church here, a sincere, humble, devoted member.

"It were easy," says Dr. Eldridge, "to imagine reasons, many and weighty, why the life of such a young man should be prolonged: his promise of usefulness in his profession and as a man; the comfort and the stay he would have been to his parents; the honor he would have done religion. Oh, how many such things crowd on the mind!"

The reasons why God took, though satisfactory to God, are hidden from man. Still it is the Lord that hath done; be content to leave the mystery unexplained now. You shall know hereafter.

Then the affliction is very severe; the sensibilities wounded are very tender; the hopes blighted were very bright; the object taken away was very dear. Yet complain not; murmur not. It is the Lord, your Father, and the Father of him who is gone.

"For God has marked each sorrowing day,
And numbered every secret tear,
And heaven's long years of bliss shall pay
For all his children suffer here."

THE THIRTEENTH REGIMENT

was organized in November, 1861, and mustered into the service with Henry W. Birge as colonel, and Alexander Warner as lieutenant-colonel.

Only one company was recruited entirely from this county,—C,—officered as follows: Captain, Charles D. Blinn, of Cornwall; first lieutenant, Isaac F. Nattleton, of Kent; second lieutenant, Charles E. Tibbetts, of New Milford. Company I was raised principally from this county, its captain being H. L. Schleiter, of New London. Its first lieutenant, Frank Wells, was from Litchfield. The second lieutenant, Joseph Strickland, was also from New London.

The regiment enjoys the distinction of having been in the service longer than any other Connecticut organization. In January, 1864, the Thirteenth, almost to a man, re-enlisted. In the following December it was consolidated into five companies, called "The Veteran Battalion Thirteenth Connecticut Volunteers."

During the regiment's long service it participated in numerous hard-fought battles, a few of which are here enumerated: Georgia Landing, Irish Bend, siege of Port Hudson, Cane River, Mansura, Opequan, Winchester, and Fisher's Hill. It was mustered out April 25, 1866, and paid off May 5th following, having been in the service four years and six months.

CHAPTER V.

MILITARY HISTORY (Continued).

THE NINETEENTH REGIMENT.*

THIS regiment was raised during the dark days of 1862, when the glamour of military life had died away and grim-visaged war in all its horror stood out before the people of the country. At the close of Gen. McClellan's disastrous Peninsula campaign, 1862, President Lincoln called for three hundred thousand volunteers, and on the 22d of July a meeting of the citizens of this county was held at Litchfield, and it was resolved to recruit an entire regiment from this county, and the convention unanimously recommended Leverette W. Wessells, of Litchfield, for colonel, and requested the Governor to rendezvous the new regiment at Litchfield. Recruiting immediately commenced, and on the 24th of August nine companies had been raised, as follows: Company A was recruited by Wm. Bissell, A. B. Shumway, and C. B. Hatch; was composed of men from the following towns: Litchfield, 63; Harwinton, 10; Morris, 7; Washington, 5; other towns, 7. Company B, recruited by James Hutton and F. A. Cooke: Salisbury, 43; Kent, 24; Canaan, 7; other towns, 14. Company C, recruited by James Q. Rice and W. T. Spencer: Goshen, 42; Torrington, 34; other towns, 12. Company D, recruited by A. H. Fenn, W. H. Lewis, Jr., and Robert A. Potter: Plymouth, 53; Watertown, 18; Harwinton, 13; Burlington, 1; Morris, 1. Company E, recruited by Jeffrey Skinner, B. F. Hosford, and H. D. Gaylord: Winchester, 62; Norfolk, 16; Barkhamsted, 5; other towns, 7. Company F, recruited by E. W. Jones and James Dean: New Hartford, 30; Canaan, 16; North Canaan, 19; Colebrook, 14; Barkhamsted, 9. Company G, recruited by Lyman Teator and George N. Smith: Sharon, 41; Conwell, 34; other towns, 15. Company H, recruited by G. S. Williams: New Milford, 37; Washington, 21; Warren, 5; other towns, 3; Company I, recruited by Eli Sperry: Woodbury, 61; other towns, 29. Company K was composed of recruits from the different towns in the county. The rendezvous of the regiment was at Camp Dutton, Litchfield.

"On the 10th of September the regiment marched to the village to receive an elegant stand of colors from Mrs. William Curtis Noyes, and to listen to a presentation address by her husband, then in the zenith of his power and fame. On the 11th the regiment was mustered, by Lieutenant Watson Webb, into the service of the United States 'for three years or during the war;' and on the 15th, having formed in line and given three parting cheers for Camp Dutton, the long and firmly-treading battalion, consisting of eight hundred and eighty-nine officers and men, moved to Litchfield Station, where a train of twenty-three cars stood ready to take them to New York. The journey was a continuous ovation. The deep interest everywhere felt in the 'Mountain County' regiment was attested by crowds of people at the stations and all along the railway, and by white handkerchiefs and white hands that waved us a farewell and a blessing from window and veranda and hill-top. The good people of Bridgeport and Stamford entered every car without ceremony, and fortified the soldiers with melons and cakes and sandwiches, and with the last cup of real, civilized, cultivated Connecticut coffee that they were to taste for months and years. The next day found us in Philadelphia, that noblest city of America, where we were treated like royal guests, as hundreds of other regiments had been, by the beneficence of her private citizens. At night we slept on the floor of the immense railway station at Baltimore, and the next night in the barracks at Washington, where the government insulted us with coffee that was viler than anything else in the world except the unwashed cups that held it. On the 18th we moved to Alexandria in transports, and bivouacked after dark just north of the city. The line wheeled into 'column by company,' and, being informed that that would be their rest for the night, the tired men spread their blankets on the ground, and, with their blue overcoats for a covering and their knapsacks for pillows, were soon deeply and earnestly sleeping their first sleep on the 'sacred soil,' all unconscious of the rain that washed their upturned faces.

* Compiled and condensed from the excellent "History of the Second Connecticut Volunteer Heavy Artillery, originally the Nineteenth Connecticut Volunteers," by Theodore F. Vaill.

"'What are they going to do with us?' was the question in every man's mind the next morning, as soon as he was sufficiently awake to take his reckoning. Would an hour later find us en route for Harper's Ferry to join McClellan's army and take the place of those who had fallen at Antietam only forty-eight hours before? or on board a transport bound for Charleston or the Gulf? Nobody knew. Out came pencils and rumpled paper from hundreds of knapsacks, and behold a bivouac of reporters, all briskly engaged in informing friends at home that we had got so far, but there was no telling where we might be to-morrow. But the order which was to decide our fortunes for at least eighteen months had already been issued, and before night the regiment moved to a pleasant slope about a mile west of Alexandria which had been selected for a permanent camp; and it was announced that we were attached to the command of Gen. John P. Slough,* military governor of Alexandria, and that our first actual military service was to consist in doing patrol- and picket-duty in that city. On the following day we received our first hard bread, and our arms and A tents; and the Nineteenth Connecticut thenceforth had a local habitation as well as a name.

"Yes, a name. Alexandria, under martial law ever since the breaking out of the war, had suffered unspeakable things from the troops on duty in her streets or quartered in her environs, and the Alexandrians had come to regard a soldier as a scoundrel, always and everywhere. But the Nineteenth Connecticut had not been a week in Virginia before the self-respecting good behavior of its men became the general theme, and the authorities were petitioned by the citizens—nearly all of whom were rebels—not to remove that regiment from Alexandria.

"The arms were Enfield muskets. In process of time the men became acquainted with the nomenclature and functions of every part of the weapon from bayonet to butt-plate, although at first it seemed wonderful how so awkward and inconvenient a tool could ever have been constructed. Emery paper and crocus cloth were soon brought to bear upon the bronzed barrels, and by the middle of October there were a good many men—the foremost of whom was Pendleton, of Company C—who could use their 'lock-plate' or 'upper band' for a looking-glass. The A tents were of linen, woven about as compactly as a sieve, and were intended for just five men and no more; and woe to the squad that contained a fat man or one over six feet long, for somebody, or at least some part of somebody, must sleep out of doors. 'Spoon-fashion' was the only possible fashion; no man could make a personal revolution on his own axis without compelling a similar movement on the part of each of his tent-mates, and a world of complaint besides. Most of the days of that autumn were warm, and even hot; but the chill of night would penetrate the bones of the soldiers and cause them to turn over and over from midnight until dawn, when each company, without waiting for réveille, would rally in a huddle on the long sheet-iron cook-stove at the foot of the street, and endeavor to burn the pain out of their marrows while toasting their bread.

"On the 22d of September a detail of five officers and seventy men relieved the patrol of the Thirty-third Massachusetts in Alexandria, and the same was daily furnished during the remainder of 1862. It was the duty of the patrol to move about the city in small squads, or stand guard at theatres and certain other places, and arrest all soldiers who could not produce passes, or who were in mischief, and bring them to the provost-marshal's office, whence they were usually escorted to the 'Slave-Pen' in Duke Street,—a horrible den, with the following sign in large letters over the door: 'Price & Burch, Dealers in Slaves.' It had a large room or yard, about fifty feet square, with windowless brick walls fifteen or twenty feet high, a door of iron bars, and no floor except the earth. It had been one of the chief institutions of Alexandria, and any urchin could direct a stranger to the 'Slave Pen' as readily as a New York boy can point out the City Hall.

* Pronounced like "plow."

"From the soft beds and regular habits of Connecticut homes to the hard ground, severe duties, irregular sleep, bad food, and worse water of a Virginia camp was a change that could not be made without loss of health and life. Measles and mumps began to prevail, rheumatism made the men lame, chronic diarrhœa weakened them, typhoid fever fired their blood, and jaundice painted their skins and eyeballs yellower than saffron. Two hospital tents were soon filled to overflowing, and an African church near by was appropriated as regimental hospital; while the 'sick call' brought to the surgeon's quarters a daily-increasing crowd who desired medical treatment or an excuse from duty. The first death— that of Daniel E. Lyman, of Company C—occurred on the 2d of November. Corporal Frederick B. Webster, of D Company, followed him on the 6th, and Arthur G. Kellogg, of C Company, on the 10th; and by New Year the number had increased to seventeen. Some of them were embalmed and sent home, and some buried in the soldiers' cemetery in the southern edge of the city with military honors, which consisted of an escort of their comrades with reversed arms, a roll of muffled drums, the mournful 'Pleyel's Hymn' tremulously executed upon the fife, and a salute fired over the grave, with sometimes a prayer from the chaplain, and sometimes without.

"Colonel Wessells, having been taken ill soon after reaching Alexandria, was confined at King Street Hospital during the greater part of the fall, and went home about New Year on a two months' leave of absence; so that Lieut.-Col. Kellogg had almost uninterrupted command from the time the regiment left Connecticut until the following April.

"Company A was sent into the city and quartered at the foot of Duke Street on the 15th of November, to guard the government stores, where it remained until about New Year, when the regiment was transferred to Gen. Robert O. Tyler's command, which now consisted of the Nineteenth Connecticut, First Connecticut Artillery, Fourteenth Massachusetts, and a New York regiment, and was entitled the 'Military Defenses of Alexandria.'

"Jan. 12, 1863, the regiment moved up the Leesburg pike, passed Fairfax Seminary, and encamped among the stumps a few rods from the abatis of Fort Worth. The liability of an immediate call to the front was now so far diminished that there was a very noticeable relaxation of military rigor. Dress parade, guard mounting, and camp guard were for some days the only disciplinary duties required, and great was the enjoyment afforded by the respite. Stumps were to be cleared away, and ditching and draining done for a camp and parade-ground, and the change from constant duty under arms to chopping, grubbing, and digging fresh earth was extremely grateful and beneficial. True, the month of January witnessed a greater mortality than any other of the entire twenty months passed in the 'Defenses,' but it was the result of disease previously contracted. The improved and improving condition of the regimental health is shown in the record of deaths for 1863, which is as follows: January, 16; February, 5; March, 3; April, 5; May, 1; June, 1; July, 0;* August, 1; September, 3; October, 3; November, 2; December, 2.

"Fort Worth was a neat little earthwork, situated about a quarter of a mile in rear of Fairfax Seminary, overlooking the broad valley of Hunting Creek and the Orange and Alexandria Railway, and mounting some twenty-four guns of all kinds,—Rodman, Parrott, Whitworth, eight-inch howitzers, and iron and Coehorn mortars. Here the winter was passed.

"After the middle of March a large number of men were daily sent to load cars with wood, several miles out on the Orange and Alexandria Railway, and each man always brought home a stick on his shoulder, so that firewood was no longer dug out of stumps. On the 13th of April orders were received from Gen. Heintzelman, the commander of the Department of Washington, directing the Nineteenth Connecticut Volunteers to be provided with shelter tents and seven days' cooked rations, and to be held in readiness to march. The regimental pulse was instantly quickened. Troops were hourly passing, on their way to join Hooker's army, and the command to 'fall in' and take the 'route step' in the same direction was hourly expected. Superfluous property was disposed of, and bushels of letters dispatched northward. Capt. Bissell, quite as much excited as any of his men, gave an enormous ham to a squad in Company A, with much the same liberality wherewith a death-doomed voyager flings his gold and jewels about the cabin of a sinking ship. But army life is full of various surprises. Troops sometimes unexpectedly go, and sometimes unexpectedly stay. Not only that April, but the next April also, left us still in the defenses of Washington.

"On the 12th of May the regiment was for the first time broken up into separate garrisons. Companies B, F, and G went to Fort Ellsworth; Company A, to Redoubt A; Company D, to Redoubt B; Companies C and K, to Redoubt C; and Companies E, H, and I, to Redoubt D; and this arrangement continued during the summer. These redoubts were small works in the vicinity of Fort Lyon, on the Mount Vernon road, and commanding the land and water approaches to Alexandria on the south. About this time Gen. Tyler was relieved in command by Gen. De Russy, and all the fortifications from Alexandria to Georgetown received the name of the 'Defenses of Washington South of the Potomac,' and the troops stationed therein constituted the Twenty-second Army Corps. During the entire season the Nineteenth was called upon for nothing more laborious than drilling, target practice, stockade-building in Alexandria, picking blackberries, drinking a quarter of a gill of whisky and quinine at reveille and retreat, and drawing pay from Maj. Ladd every two months. Yet a good many seemed to be in all sorts of affliction, and were constantly complaining because they could not go to the front. A year later, when the soldiers of the Nineteenth were staggering along the Pamunkey with heavy loads and blistered feet, or throwing up breastworks with their coffee-pots, all night under fire, in front of Petersburg, they looked back to the defenses of Washington as to a lost Elysium, and fervently longed to regain those blissful seats. O Happiness! why is it that men never recognize thy features until thou art far away?

* July, 1863, was the only month of the entire three years in which no death occurred.

"Col. Wessells resigned, on account of ill health, on the 16th of September. In October the regiment was withdrawn from the redoubts and brigaded with the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery, under the command of Col. Henry L. Abbott. The regimental headquarters were established at 'Oak Grove House,' and the companies distributed at three forts,—Ellsworth, Williams, and Worth,—where they remained until the following May.

"About the middle of November, Gen. Barry, chief of artillery of the Department of Washington, reviewed Col. Abbott's brigade, and made a particularly careful inspection of the Nineteenth Connecticut; and, from what occurred a day or two thereafter, it was inferred that he bore to Washington a good report of Col. Kellogg and his command, for on the 23d of November the War Department issued an order changing the Nineteenth Connecticut Infantry to a regiment of heavy artillery,* and directing it to be filled up to the maximum artillery standard. This was joyful news. It did not take long (for every man was his own tailor) to exchange the faded blue straps and chevrons for bright red, and that soldier could not be accused of overmuch ambition who did not see some chance for promotion among the two majors, two companies, two captains, twenty-eight lieutenants, forty-six sergeants, and sixty-four corporals that would be required in addition to those already on hand. Lieuts. Edward W. Marsh and Oren H. Knight were already in Connecticut on recruiting service, and on the 30th of November Lieut. Benjamin F. Hosford, with a party of ten enlisted men, left for home on the same duty. A draft was then pending and enormous bounties were offered for volunteers, and these officers and men entered upon their duties with vigor, and achieved a success which, it may safely be said, had no parallel in the history of recruiting during the entire war. The first installment—68 men—arrived on the last day of the year; on New Year's day (1864), forty-four more; fifty on the 6th of January; another lot on the 9th; one hundred and fifteen on the 10th; more on the 17th; and so on until the 1st of March, by which time the regiment had received over eleven hundred recruits, and now contained eighteen hundred men. The newcomers were divided equally among the several companies, and the full complement of officers and non-commissioned officers forthwith ordered. It was astonishing to see with what celerity a promoted sergeant would shed his enlisted man's coat and appear in all the pomp and consequence of shoulder-straps and terrible scimitar, and it was for some time a question of serious discussion among the older officers whether the fort gates would not have to be enlarged in order to facilitate the ingress and egress of the new lieutenants who drew such an alarming quantity of water.

"After the resignation of Col. Wessells, the colonelcy remained vacant for some time. It was supposed that Governor Buckingham hesitated to give the eagles to Lieut.-Col. Kellogg on account of his rude treatment of Maj. Smith a few months before, and a rumor reached camp that a certain unpopular major of the First Artillery was endeavoring to obtain this position. A petition praying that Kellogg might not be thus ignominiously 'jumped' was instantly signed by nearly every member of the regiment and forwarded to the Governor, who thereupon immediately sent him a colonel's commission.

"It was about one o'clock on the morning of the 17th of May when an orderly galloped up and dismounted at headquarters near Fort Corcoran, knocked at the door of the room where Col. Kellogg and the adjutant lay soundly sleeping, drew from his belt and delivered a package, received the indorsed envelope, and mounted and galloped off again, as little conscious that he had brought the message of destiny to hundreds of men as the horse which bore him. The dispatch, as nearly as can now be remembered, read thus:

"'WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJT.-GENL'S. OFFICE,
"WASHINGTON, May 16, 1864.

"'[SPECIAL ORDERS, No. 438.]

"'The commanding officer of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery will proceed at once, with his command, to join the Army of the Potomac, now in the vicinity of Spottsylvania Court-house. Transportation from Alexandria to Belle Plain will be furnished by Capt. A. S. Lee, A.Q.M. At Belle Plain he will report to Brig.-Gen. Abercrombie for supplies, and for directions how to proceed.

"'Having arrived at the Army of the Potomac, he will report immediately to Maj.-Gen. Meade, commanding, for duty.

"'By order of the Secretary of War,
"'E. D. TOWNSEND,
"'Assistant Adjutant-General.'

"Five minutes had not elapsed before staff-officers and orderlies were hurrying from fort to fort, and in less than five minutes more the sound of the reveille and the sharp command 'Fall in!' broke upon the still night air, and the soldiers came pouring from their cosey bunks, like angry bees when their hive is rudely disturbed, and formed in line to hear the order.

* The name of "Second Connecticut Artillery" was given by Governor Buckingham.

"The day was passed in busy preparation for departure. In the evening the companies assembled near the Arlington House, and the regiment moved to the outskirts of Alexandria, where it bivouacked a little after midnight. Early in the morning* we embarked for Belle Plain, at which place we arrived in the afternoon, in a pouring rain and in mud knee-deep, in floundering through which many a soldier lost one or both of his shoes. Night found us curled up and shivering under shelter tents among the dripping bushes on the steep hillsides, each man supplied with five days' rations and one hundred rounds of ammunition, with orders to carry the same somehow on his person. About midnight the rain ceased, and Maj. Ladd, who had failed to reach us at Alexandria, and had followed right on, paid off the regiment. On the 19th we marched to Fredericksburg, at that time the hospital city, nearly every house of which was filled with wounded, and on the 20th, after passing Massaponax church and crossing the Mat, the Ta, the Po, and the Ny, four small streams that form the Mattapony, we reached the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac, and were at once assigned to the Second Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps. The army had been lying for several days where we found it, resting a little (although with constant skirmishing and picket-firing) after the recent severe fighting in the Wilderness, and waiting for reinforcements, and now, having received them, it began to swing to the 'left,'—i.e., to the southward. On the 21st the Second Connecticut found itself for the first time face to face with the enemy. Yes, that dingy-looking line, slowly moving to the north along that slope, a mile and a half in front of us, was a body of real, live Johnnies, and those puffs of smoke in the woods below were from the muskets of rebels who were firing on our pickets. During that afternoon and evening our regiment, although so lately arrived in the field, occupied a position perhaps more important and hazardous than any other portion of the entire army. The Ninth Corps had been withdrawn from the right and had passed by our rear to the left, leaving the Sixth Corps on the right, and for several hours our men lay with their bayonets pointing over a semi-circular line of breast-works which constituted the extreme right of the vast army, nearly all of which, except our own brigade, was in motion towards the left. Just at dark our batteries opened on the rebel lines, eliciting no reply, but frustrating an attempt of the enemy to get in upon our left and cut us off from the rest of the army. Late in the evening we silently moved out, following the track of the troops that had preceded us, and began that long and terrible series of marches which were continued, almost without a breathing-spell, until the 1st of June. The next day† we passed Guienna Station and reached Bowling Green. About noon of the following day‡ the first rations were issued since we left Belle Plain, and late at night we arrived at the North Anna River, near Oxford. The men were strung along for miles in the rear, so that when a picket detail of one hundred and twenty men was ordered, immediately upon our arrival, it seemed to take half the regiment. The pickets, although hardly able to stand up, were sent across the river that night. The rest of the men, as they came up, tumbled upon the soft and delicious ground of the corn-field where we had halted, and could have medicined them to a sounder sleep than their unutterable weariness quickly brought them. On the 24th the river was crossed by pontons at Jericho Ford, and the corps disposed for action; but no general engagement occurred, although there was lively skirmishing all day, in which the "first blood" of the Second Connecticut was drawn. The rebels fired upon and drove our pickets, but they were rallied behind rifle-pits by Capt. Wadhams, who was in command, with the loss of Patrick Keegan, of Company M, killed, and three others wounded. Our regimental and brigade headquarters that day were at the house of one Fontaine, a wealthy and grand old rebel, who had fled on the approach of our army, with all his household except one or two slave women.

> "'Not poppy nor mandragora,
> Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,'

"While some of the field- and staff-officers were lying on the ground near this house that afternoon, Maj. Hubbard suddenly asked, 'What was that? I thought I heard a "thud" just now.' Maj. Rice, who lay not more than six feet off, replied, 'I guess you did, for I felt something go through me;' and, putting his hand beneath his clothing, drew it forth stained with blood. It was the work of a rebel sharpshooter, who could not have been less than a mile distant, and whose telescopic rifle had probably mistaken the major's gilt leaves for the stars of a major-general, which they resemble. The projectile passed through the scrotum and the fleshy part of the rump, and could not have exceeded the sixteenth part of an inch in diameter. Maj. Rice was disabled but two or three days. It was in this manner that Maj.-Gen. Sedgwick had been picked off a week before, and possibly by the same skillful hand.

"On the 26th the Fifth and Second Corps were engaged on our left, which extended towards Hanover Junction; but our own operations were confined to tearing up a quantity of railroad-track near Noel's Station, and forming a line of battle about nightfall in a thick wood on the crest of a hill adjacent to Little River. Here again we were on the extreme right of the army. Whether this formation was for the purpose of making or resisting an attack I do not know; but, at all events, the attempt to dislodge Lee from his position here seems to have been abandoned about that time, and at daylight we recrossed the river and marched to Chesterfield Station, where we halted from noon until evening. During the afternoon Upton called on Col. Kellogg and said, 'Colonel, let your men know that we are to have a hard march to-night, so that they may get as much rest as possible. We shall probably be within fifteen miles of Richmond to-morrow morning.' At eight o'clock the column was again in motion, on the road following the left bank of the Pamunkey; and oh! what language will convey to those who were not there the least idea of the murderous cruelty of that march? We had already suffered all that flesh and blood seemed able to bear on the road from Spottsylvania to the North Anna, and the future had in store for us many other marches that were grievous beyond expression; but I am persuaded that if all the regiment were to be summoned—the living and the dead—and notified that all their marches except one must be performed over again, and that they might choose which one should be omitted, the almost unanimous cry would be, 'Deliver us from the accursed night-march along the Pamunkey!' In darkness and silence, hour after hour, without a rest of more than five minutes at a time, the corps was hurled along that sandy road. There was no danger that the head of the column would lose its way, for a large body of cavalry had preceded us a day or two before, and dead horses lined the road throughout at intervals averaging not more than a quarter of a mile, sickening all the motionless air. Ten o'clock, — eleven o'clock, — midnight, — two o'clock,—four o'clock,—the darkness began to fade before the inflowing tides of the morning light, but still the jaded men moved on. Capt. Burnham, with stockings and rags bound upon his blistered feet like sandals (his boots having been used up and thrown away), hobbled painfully along beside his men, whose feet, like those of all the rest, were in the same condition. In the morning, after passing Mongohick and turning to the right, we crossed the Pamunkey on pontons, and encamped on the southern bank, not far from Hanovertown, where we lay until the afternoon of the next day, when we moved three miles and encamped again. The whole army seemed to be close along, and there was considerable cavalry skirmishing somewhere in the neighborhood.

* May 18, 1864. † May 22, 1864. ‡ May 23, 1864.

"On the 29th the First Division was sent on a reconnoissance, and marched in a roundabout way until it struck the railroad. Having thrown out a strong picket and destroyed a portion of track, we lay down for the night on the direct road leading from Hanovertown to Richmond. On the 30th we were roused at dawn, returned to the Richmond road, drew three days' rations, and marched five or six miles towards Mechanicsville. Some of our men were on picket, and there was more or less firing all day in front. On the 31st we lay along the edge of a piece of woods near Tolopotomy Creek, behind breastworks, passing the day without much danger of position. During the entire day there was very lively firing along our front, and we had two B men and three L men wounded,—those two companies being on the skirmish-line until afternoon, when they were relieved by A and another company. Here again the Sixth Corps held the right; but only twelve hours elapsed before it had been moved (and our regiment with it, of course) in rear of the rest of the army and appeared on the extreme left at Cold Harbor.

"June relieved May at midnight. Half an hour afterwards we had withdrawn from the Tolopotomy and were swinging along the road, through pitchy darkness, towards the south. Having marched, with short and few rests, nearly until the following noon, we halted along the eastern edge of a pine wood, where we lay for perhaps half an hour. Col. Kellogg remarked that it seemed as though he had been on that ground before, and so he doubtless had in McClellan's campaign. At first there was nothing to indicate that this was more than an ordinary halt, and the men fell to hard-tack and sleep, according as their hunger or weariness predominated, though it was generally the latter, for hard-tack could be taken on the march, while sleep could not. Near us was an unpainted house, inferior looking in everything except its dimensions, and about half a mile to the south were two or three others of the same sort. At the time we did not know, nor care, what buildings these were, but those of us who were alive the next day learned that they constituted the settlement known as Cold Harbor. In a few minutes the advance of several other columns, together with batteries of field artillery and ammunition-trains, began to appear on the open level fields in our rear; but we were so nearly dead with marching and want of sleep that we hardly heeded these movements, or reflected on their portentous character. 'Jim, there's a pile of troops coming. I guess there's going to be a fight. You'd better wake up.' Such a piece of intelligence and advice as this, given to a prostrate soldier by some less exhausted comrade, would elicit some such reply as this: 'I don't care a damn. I wish they'd shoot us and done with't. I'd rather be shot than marched to death.' And the sleeper would not even raise his head to look. But if the prospect of a coming battle could not move them, there was one other thing that could, and that was the command 'Fall in!' The brigade moved again towards the left about one o'clock, and, leaving the road, followed along the edge of the woods until our regiment, which was in the advance, reached a position almost in front of the Cold Harbor houses before mentioned, and about fifteen rods north of the road that led from these houses direct to Richmond. Some of the men began to go for water and to gather fuel for cooking coffee, having eaten nothing except raw hard-tack since the night before; but this was at once forbidden, and they were ordered to keep near the stacks of muskets. Sheridan's cavalry had been skirmishing on this ground the day before, and five dead rebels lay within thirty feet of where we had halted. Our men dug a grave about two feet deep on the spot, and scarcely were the five laid side by side therein and covered up before a few shots from pickets or sharp-shooters came singing over our heads from a little to the left of our front. It was evident, therefore, that the enemy was there, but in how great force we did not know. It is said that Longstreet's corps, which was in front of the Sixth Corps on the Tolopotomy the day before, had moved, in like manner, from one flank of the rebel army to the other, and now again confronted us at Cold Harbor. But it is hardly probable that there was any such force in our front at noon as was found there at five o'clock.

"Just at the left of the spot where we had stacked our muskets was a hollow, basin-like spot, containing about an acre of land and a few pine- and chestnut-trees, and well protected on the front by a curved line of breastworks which were thrown up during McClellan's campaign, two years before, or else had been erected by Sheridan's cavalry. In this hollow the three battalions of our regiment were massed about two or three o'clock, preparatory to a charge which had been ordered by Gen. Meade to take place at five. By this time the field-pieces of the First Division had taken position directly in our rear, while the rebels had batteries directly in our front, and for a long time the solid shot flew back and forth between them, right above our heads, lopping off twigs, limbs, and even large branches, which came crashing down among the ranks. Said Col. Kellogg to the first battalion, 'Now, men, when you have the order to move, go in steady, keep cool, keep still until I give you the order to charge, and then go, arms a-port, with a yell. Don't a man of you fire a shot until we are within the enemy's breastworks. I shall be with you.' Even all this, added to a constantly-increasing picket-fire and ominous signs on every hand, could not excite the men to any great degree of interest in what was going on. Their stupor was of a kind that none can describe, and none but soldiers can understand. In proof of this only one incident need be mentioned. Corp. William A. Hosford, then of Company E, heard the foregoing instructions given by Col. Kellogg, and yet was waked out of a sound sleep when the moment came to move forward.

"Col. Upton, the brigade commander, was in almost constant conference with Col. Kellogg, giving him instructions how and when to proceed, surveying the ground, and anxiously but quietly watching this new regiment, which, although it now constituted more than half his command, he had never seen in action. The arrangement of companies and battalions was the same that had been established in the defenses upon the change from infantry to artillery. The following diagram will show the formation at Cold Harbor:

"At five o'clock—or it might have been somewhat later—the three battalions were moved just in front of the curved breastworks, where they remained for two or three minutes, still closed in mass. Knapsacks were left behind the breastworks. Pine woods—or rather a few tall pine-trees, not numerous enough to hide our movements—extended about ten rods to the front, and then came an open field. Col. Kellogg, having instructed Majs. Rice and Ells to follow at intervals of one hundred paces, placed himself in front, and gave the command, 'Forward! Guide Centre! March!' The first battalion, with the colors in the centre, moved directly forward through the scattering woods, crossed the open field at a double-quick, and entered another pine wood, of younger and thicker growth, where it came upon the first line of rebel rifle-pits, which was abandoned at its approach. Passing this line, the battalion moved on over sloping ground until it reached a small, open hollow, within fifteen or twenty yards of the enemy's main line of breastworks. There had been a thick growth of pine sprouts and saplings on this ground, but the rebels had cut them, probably that very day, and had arranged them so as to form a very effective abatis, thereby clearing the spot, and thus enabling them to see our movements. Up to this point there had been no firing sufficient to confuse or check the battalion; but here the rebel musketry opened. The commander of the rebel battalion directly in our front, whoever he was, had his men under excellent control, and his fire was held until our line had reached the abatis, and then systematically delivered,—first by his rear rank, and then by his front rank. A sheet of flame, sudden as lightning, red as blood, and so near that it seemed to singe the men's faces, burst along the rebel breastwork; and the ground and trees close behind our line were plowed and riddled with a thousand balls that just missed the heads of the men. The battalion dropped flat on the ground, and the second volley like the first, nearly all went over. Several men were struck, but not a large number. It is more than probable that if there had been no other than this front fire, the rebel breastworks would have been ours, notwithstanding the pine boughs. But at that moment a long line of rebels on our left, extending all the way to the Richmond road, having nothing in their own front to engage their attention,* and having unobstructed range on the battalion, opened a fire which no human valor could withstand, and which no pen can adequately describe. The appended list of casualties tells the story. It was the work of almost a single minute. The air was filled with sulphurous smoke, and the shrieks and howls of more than two hundred and fifty mangled men rose above the yells of triumphant rebels and the roar of their musketry. ABOUT Face! shouted Col. Kellogg; but it was his last command. He had already been struck in the arm, and the words had scarcely passed his lips when another shot pierced his head, and he fell dead upon the interlacing pine boughs. Wild and blind with wounds, bruises, noise, smoke, and conflicting orders, the men staggered in every direction, some of them falling upon the very top of the rebel parapet, where they were completely riddled with bullets, others wandering off into the woods on the right and front, to find their way to death by starvation at Andersonville, or never to be heard from again. LIE DOWN! said a voice that rang out above the horrible din. It was the voice of Col. Upton, whose large bay horse was dancing with a bullet in his bowels. The rebels in front now fired as fast as they could load, and those of our men who were not wounded, having worked their way back a few yards into the woods, began to reply with energy. But the wounds showed that nine-tenths of our casualties were inflicted by that unopposed fire on the left flank. The second battalion followed the first, according to instructions, crossed the open field under a scattering fire, and, having moved through the woods until within perhaps seventy-five yards of the first battalion, was confronted by Col. Upton with the command Lie down! LIE DOWN!—which was obeyed with the utmost alacrity. Maj. Ells was wounded very soon after the third battalion commenced to follow, and his command devolved upon Capt. Jones. Upon reaching the woods, this battalion also had orders to lie down. The rebel fire came through the woods from all parts of the line, and most of the losses in these two battalions occured while lying here. 'Put up your sabre,' said Col. Upton to a young officer, 'I never draw mine until we get into closer quarters than this. See the Johnnies! See the Johnnies! Boys, we'll have these fellows yet!' said he, pointing to the front, where a long string of them came running through the lines towards us. They were the very men who had delivered the first two volleys in our front, and (there being a lull in the firing at the moment) they came tumbling over the breastwork in a crowd, within two or three rods of where Kellogg's body lay. We had too much on hand just then to run after safely-bagged prisoners, and when they got to the rear the Third Division (who, by the way, having at first advanced on our right, had broken and run to the rear through our first battalion as it was charging, and were consequently in a convenient position to make the 'capture') put a guard over them and triumphantly marched them to army headquarters; and in due time Gen. Meade issued an order complimenting the Third Division of the Sixth Army Corps for having captured between three and four hundred prisoners, which they never captured at all.† The lines now became very much mixed. Those of the first battalion who were not killed or wounded gradually crawled or worked back; wounded men were carried through to the rear; and the woods began to grow dark, either with night or smoke, or both. The news of Kellogg's death quickly found its way everywhere. The companies were formed and brought up to the breastwork one by one, and the line extended towards the left. As Lieut. Cleveland was moving in with the last company, a squad of rebels rose directly in front, fired a volley very wildly, and dropped. The fire was vigorously returned, and the enemy soon vacated the breastwork in our immediate front and crept off through the darkness. Thousands and thousands of bullets 'zipped' back and forth over the bodies of the slain, now striking the trees high up with a 'spud,' and now piercing the ground under foot. Upton stood behind a tree in the extreme front, and for a long time fired muskets as fast as the men could load and hand them to him. Some sudden movement caused a panic, and they started to flee, when he cried out with a voice that no man who heard it will ever forget, 'Men of Connecticut, stand by me! We MUST hold this line!' It brought them back, and the line was held. Firing was kept up all night long, by a few men at a time, to let the enemy know that we were there and awake, and thus to deter them from attempting to retake the line, which they could easily have done. Maj. Hubbard sent word twice to Col. Upton that if the enemy should attempt to return he could not possibly hold it. Upton's reply was, 'He must hold it. If they come there, catch them on your bayonets and pitch them over your heads.' At the first ray of dawn it was strengthened and occupied by skirmishers; and during our stay at Cold Harbor, which lasted until midnight of June 12th, it remained our front line, the rebel front line being about thirty-five rods distant and parallel with it.

"On the morning of the 2d the wounded who still

* The rest of the brigade—i.e., the One Hundred and Twenty-first and Sixty-fifth New York, Ninety-fifth Pennsylvania, and Fifth Maine—were formed in three lines immediately on our left, and advanced when we did. But they received a heavy fire, and advanced but part of the way. Indeed, the first battalion of our regiment went up to the enemy's breastwork alone. Our right was nobody's left, and our left nobody's right.

† Every surviving man of the Second Connecticut Artillery will bear witness that the Ninth New York Artillery (which belonged to the Third Division) came pell-mell through our regiment towards the rear as we were charging, and that the capture of these prisoners was made by our regiment alone. Col. Upton, who saw the whole of it, said that the matter should be rectified, and the credit given to the Second Connecticut. But it never was.

remained were got off to the rear and taken to the division hospital, some two miles back. Many of them had lain all night, with shattered bones, or weak from loss of blood, calling vainly for help, or water, or death. Some of them lay in positions so exposed to the enemy's fire that they could not be reached until the breastworks had been built up and strengthened at certain points, nor even then without much ingenuity and much danger; but at length they were all removed. Where it could be done with safety, the dead were buried during the day. Most of the bodies, however, could not be reached until night, and were then gathered and buried under cover of the darkness.

"On the morning of the 3d the regiment was again moved forward, under the personal command of Col. Upton, from the same spot whence the fatal charge had been made thirty-six hours before; but this time we proceeded by a circuitous route which kept us tolerably well protected. Several, however, were killed and wounded during this movement, and after we had taken position. The line was pushed to the left, considerably nearer the Richmond road than we had been before, and there speedily covered by breastworks. This, I presume, was our part of the movement of June 3d, which the larger histories regard as the battle of Cold Harbor. Perhaps it was. It has always seemed, however, to the survivors of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery (Upton's Brigade, Russell's Division, Wright's Corps) that the affair of June 1st was entitled to more than the two or three lines of bare mention with which it is tossed off in 'Greeley's American Conflict,' 'Deming's Life of Grant,' 'Howland's Grant,' and probably every other of the more important and comprehensive histories of the war.

"Artillery and picket firing continued through the entire twelve days during which the lines at Cold Harbor were held, and casualties occurred in the regiment almost daily.

"The ranking officer* of the regiment, after the death of Col. Kellogg, was Lieut.-Col. James Hubbard, to whom Governor Buckingham immediately forwarded a commission as colonel. Hubbard, however, was unwilling to assume the responsibility of the command. In common with all the officers and men, he was worn out. The purely murderous charge of June 1st was our first, and thus far our only, fighting experience, and Lieut.-Col. Hubbard drew the hasty inference that all the fighting was likely to consist in a similar walking right into the jaws of hell. He afterwards found that this was a mistake. During the ten months which followed, the regiment was in the hottest of many a hot fight, and did its whole duty, but it never found another Cold Harbor. Col. Upton advised him to head a recommendation from his officers for the appointment of Randal S. Mackenzie, a graduate of West Point, and captain of engineers, who was then on some duty at army headquarters. Hubbard called a meeting of his officers and laid the matter before them. They unanimously opposed the proposition; but he assured them he should decline the colonelcy, and at his request all the officers joined him in recommending to Governor Buckingham the appointment of Capt. Mackenzie. The recommendation was forwarded 'through the regular channel,' favorably indorsed by Upton, Russell, Wright, Meade, and Grant; and on the 6th of June Col. Mackenzie appeared and assumed command.

"New and strong lines of breastworks were built at Cold Harbor during the 10th, 11th, and 12th of June, and it began to be the general opinion that the place was to be permanently occupied and fortified. By the term 'general opinion' I mean the opinion along the line; and that was not always well founded. Things had changed in the Army of the Potomac since the peninsular campaign, and it was not now the custom to inform the rank and file, and the newspapers, and the enemy, of intended movements. Work was continued on the breastworks, by large details of soldiers, until almost the hour of leaving Cold Harbor,—probably to protect the withdrawing troops in case of attack. It was nearly midnight on the 12th of June when we found ourselves in motion on the road to White House, and innumerable were the conjectures as to our destination. The night was intensely dark, and after having marched a mile or two we became entangled with the Second Corps (which was also in motion) in such a manner that there would have been ugly work in the event of an attack. But at length the difficulty was overcome, and we moved rapidly on until morning, when the sun indicated that our destination must be some other place than White House, for we were marching southeast instead of northeast. By seven o'clock that evening we had marched thirty miles, and were encamped a mile and a half south of the Chickahominy, and six miles from Charles City Court-house. On the 14th we marched at seven o'clock A.M., and encamped about noon not far from the river. On the 15th we moved a mile and a half. On the 16th moved again a short distance; heard firing for the first and only time since leaving Cold Harbor; threw up a line of breastworks, and took a bath in the river. It was the only luxury we had had for weeks. Troops were embarking all day at the landing, and at midnight we went aboard,—half the companies on one transport, and half on another,—and soon were so quietly and pleasantly gliding up the broad and beautiful river that imagination and memory could make it seem, for a moment now and then, like some pleasure excursion on the Hudson or Long Island Sound.

"Companies C, D, F, I, L, and M disembarked soon after sunrise at Point of Rocks, on the Appomattox; while the other transport, being a little too late for

* Maj. Nathaniel Smith was promoted to lieutenant-colonel upon the change to artillery, and resigned for disability, May 6, 1864.

the tide, landed A, B, E, G, H, and K at Bermuda Hundred, whence, after a march of three miles, they joined the others, and bivouacked until noon. In the afternoon we moved two miles farther, and encamped in the woods, in the neighborhood of the Sixth and Seventh Connecticut, and the First Connecticut Artillery. At one o'clock next morning we moved out, marched a mile or two in the darkness, halted, and stood in ominous silence for a few minutes while mounted officers rode silently by, after which we returned by the same way to camp. It has always been supposed that this move was intended for a charge, which, for some reason not known (but which would doubtless have been deemed abundantly sufficient by the regiment, if their opinion had been asked), was not made.

"Reveille was sounded next morning* at three o'clock, rations issued, and orders received to be ready to move at four; but the "pack-up" bugle did not sound until five. Such delays may or may not cost a campaign; they are always welcome to soldiers while cooking their breakfast. After marching back for some distance towards the Point of Rocks, and crossing the Appomattox by a ponton, we moved directly towards the city of Petersburg.

"In the afternoon we moved† to Harrison's Creek and relieved a portion of Hinks' Brigade of colored troops, who were holding a line of rifle-pits which, together with two guns, they had captured four days before.

"The day was Sunday,—and what a Sunday! Shells whistled and muskets rattled, both to the right and left, as far as the ear could reach. Petersburg and its inner defenses were in plain sight; and if our troops had not captured the city, we had at least got so near that it would be an uncomfortable place for trade and residence unless we could be pushed farther off. After dark (for no such move could be made by daylight) the regiment moved down a steep bank in front of Harrison's house, relieved the Eleventh Connecticut, and took position on the eastern edge of a broad, level wheat-field. The minie-balls that came singing along overhead with a Kee-ooh! oo-oo, told that the enemy held the opposite side of the wheat-field, and no time was lost in 'covering.' Spades did not come for a long time, and only a few of them at last. Tons of loamy earth were thrown, all night long, with coffee-pots, bayonets, hands, and shovels whittled out of hard-tack boxes. Pickets were sent ahead several rods into the field, and three men stationed at each post. The 'posts' were holes dug in the ground by bayonets and fingers. The deeper the hole, the higher the bank of earth in front; and the pickets very naturally kept digging to strengthen their position. The tall wheat rustled with ripeness as they moved through it to and from their posts. Are these men who lie here and there dead or asleep? Here is one who, at all events, has krinkled and spoiled a good deal of wheat in settling down to his rest. Is he a reb or one of our men? It is difficult to tell, on account of the darkness, but that is the Union blue. Take hold of his arm. Ah! there is a certain stiffness that decides the point at once. He probably answered to his name this morning at the roll-call of the Eleventh Connecticut; but he will not do so to-morrow morning.

"The first and second battalions dug all night. The third went to the rear about nine o'clock, and lay in some old rifle-pits, but were ordered to the front again just after midnight to help dig. The city clocks could be heard tolling the night-hours away, for they were not so far off as Camp Dutton from Litchfield Hill. The morning‡ revealed a magnificent line of earthworks which had grown up in the night for our protection. Had they sprung by magic, like the palace of some Arabian fable? No. Our worn and weary men knew where they came from.

"This was the most intolerable position the regiment was ever required to hold. We had seen a deadlier spot at Cold Harbor, and others awaited us in the future; but they were agonies that did not last. Here, however, we had to stay, hour after hour, from before dawn until after dark, and that too where we could not move a rod without extreme danger. The enemy's front line was parallel with ours, just across the wheat-field; then they had numerous sharpshooters, who were familiar with every acre of the ground, perched in tall trees on both our flanks; then they had artillery posted everywhere. No man could cast his eyes over the parapet or expose himself ten feet in rear of the trench without drawing fire. And yet they did thus expose themselves; for where there are even chances of being missed or hit, soldiers will take the chances rather than lie still and suffer from thirst, supineness, and want of all things. 'Keep down!' roared Maj. Skinner at a man who seemed bent on making a target of himself. 'Tell John Meramble to stop putting his head over,' said Col. Mackenzie, 'or he will get it knocked off.' Harvey Pease, of Company H, straightened himself up and essayed to walk, but was struck in the head before he had taken five steps, and fell like a log. Matthias Walter, of Company D, was wounded in the thigh by a sharpshooter. John Grieder, of D, received a fatal wound in the thigh from a piece of three-inch shell. Corp. Disbrow, of H, was hit in the shoulder; and other casualties occurred, until there were eleven in all. There was no getting to the rear until zigzag passages were dug, and then the wounded were borne off. A new relief of pickets had gone on just before daybreak, and each man was notified to have two canteens of water, because they must remain until night. Reader, do you like to drink warm water? Then enlist in the next war, and stay twelve hours in a hole in the ground, without shelter from the fierceness of a Virginia sun in June, with bullets passing two feet above your head, with dead bodies broiling all around you, and with two tin canteens of muddy water.

* June 19, 1864.

† The term "we," which so frequently occurs in this volume, is used sometimes for the regiment, sometimes for the brigade, division, corps, or army, according to circumstances. And the writer himself does not always know how large a "we" it is. The whole of Russell's Division moved in at Harrison's Creek; but whether the other two divisions of the corps were there the limited range of vision enjoyed by a regimental officer did not enable the writer to know.

‡ June 20, 1864.

"The day wore on, and welcome darkness came at last, giving us a chance to stand erect. Our occupation continued during the night and the next day, the regiment being divided into two reliefs, the one off duty lying a little to the rear, in a corn-field near Harrison's house. But it was a question whether 'off' or 'on' duty was the more dangerous. During the day* Col. Mackenzie directed his staff-officers to occupy separate shelter tents, and to leave him in one by himself, in order to diminish the 'chances' of injury. When one of them looked into his tent an hour afterwards he pointed to a hole through his straw hat, remarking that if any one else had been there somebody would have been hurt. Frequent shells came just overhead and plunged into the corn-field behind us. Company E had a man killed, and K had several wounded. A three-inch shell struck right among the boys of Company H and threw dirt into their coffee, but did not explode. The only shot that was ever unmistakably meant for the author of this history, so far as he knows, was on that day. There was a well in front of Harrison's house, covered by a roof, which was supported by four posts. The writer was sitting and drinking with his head leaning against one of these posts, when a musket-ball buried itself with a 'tunk' in the wood just about four inches too high to prevent the writing of this history. I have ever since had some desire to see that well. If the post is still there, I am quite sure it contains lead.

"At eight in the evening we were relieved by the Eighth Connecticut, and there saw the brave and noble Lieut. Seth F. Plumb, of that regiment, for the last time. Moving by the left-in-front (which, by the way, was the order of march all the way from Spottsylvania to Petersburg), we crossed the City Point Railroad, passed Grant's headquarters, and marched by a semi-circular route towards the east, southeast, south, and west until three in the morning, when we bivouacked, not much farther from Petersburg than before. How can we march so far and yet go so little way? was the question here, as it had been between the Tolopotomy and Cold Harbor. At eight o'clock in the morning† we entered the woods, and after sundry moves and halts came to a square, open field surrounded on all sides by thick woods, where the brigade was disposed in two lines. An officer and twenty men were immediately sent out by Mackenzie, with orders to push into the woods directly in front, and find the left of the Second Corps pickets. They were soon found, and the line was extended from the left by details from our regiment. Upton and Russell were both out in the jungle on foot, to see the connection made. Soon afterwards the first line of the brigade, which contained our regiment, was advanced into the dense wood, perhaps two hundred yards, the second line being not far behind, and a few minutes later the pickets were engaged in a sharp skirmish with Hill's rebel division close in our front, which resulted in a loss to the Second Connecticut of six killed, seven wounded (several of them mortally), and six missing, some of whom were afterwards heard from at Andersonville. Mackenzie had two fingers shot off and afterwards amputated. A good deal of manœuvring followed which was difficult to understand. We retired to the open lot, moved about a regiment's length to the right, and advanced again, somewhat farther than before, into a wilderness of woods, bushes, brambles, and vines so thick that a man could hardly see his neighbor. This position became a permanent picket-line, while the main line was established the next day‡ along the open field in the rear, and daily strengthened until it became impregnable. Here, as at Cold Harbor, there was no telling where we were until the day after the fight. Kellogg, Wadhams, and the multitude who fell with them on the 1st of June, never knew that they fell at 'Cold Harbor,'—indeed, most of them never heard that name, which has since become so familiar to their surviving friends. And so with the victims and the survivors of June 22d. Pine woods, with a jungle of undergrowth, extended to an unknown distance in every direction, and the only data from which any sort of reckoning could be made were the sun and the moon and the firing. Time revealed the fact that we were about three miles south of Petersburg, and a mile east of the Weldon Railroad, which the enemy held.

Here, then, the Army of the Potomac settled down to stay. The little barricade of rails where Knight, Hempstead, Guernsey, and many others had found their deaths grew day by day into breastworks, parallels, batteries, and mighty forts which all the artillery of the world could not shake. The enemy began to fortify with equal strength, and henceforth there was more digging than fighting. The seventeen days following the 22d of June furnished several episodes which might have grown (but happily did not) into events that would have required a chapter instead of a few lines,—such, for example, as moving out on the night of the 23d and massing for a charge; building breastworks all night on the 24th; marching to Reams' Station on the 30th to support troops that were tearing up eight miles of track; and being under arms before daylight, on the 6th of July, in anticipation of an attack. Nevertheless, these were days of comparative rest, quiet, and comfort. Camps were regularly laid out and well policed. The band and drum corps encamped with the regiment, which was an infallible sign that danger had evacuated. Each company dug a well in the clay and provided it with an old-fashioned 'sweep;' and, inasmuch as the deepest well drained all the rest, they were constantly scooping out deeper and deeper. The commissary-wagons came up, and rations consisted of hard-tack, salt pork, coffee, sugar, potatoes, pepper, salt, and rice. The sutlers also—those noble patriots—drew near, and the soldiers renewed their almost-forgotten acquaintance with sardines, bologna, bolivars, condensed milk (sixty cents per can), canned fruits, and a kind of bog hay tea, which, after all, was tea. The region abounded in young pines from one to three inches in diameter, and every man had a bedstead constructed of these pine 'poles,' while the long, needle-shaped pine leaves made bedding which, if not luxurious, was certainly better than none. And thus the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery played its part on the theatre of war, until a sudden bugle blast on the night of the 9th of July announced a shifting of the scene. The regiment was then ordered to City Point.

* June 21, 1864. † June 22, 1864. ‡ June 23, 1864.

"The morning of July 10, 1864, found us—the First and Second Divisions of the Sixth Corps, perhaps twelve thousand men in all — embarking at City Point as fast as the transports could get up to the dock, load, and move off, en route to Washington to defend the capital from the expected attack of Gen. Early.

"We passed Alexandria just after sunrise of the 12th, reached Washington at six o'clock, and marched directly up Seventh Street. At ten in the evening the regiment marched two or three miles up the road, by Fort De Russy, to Fort Kearney, and after much shifting lay down on their arms to sleep. In the morning Companies C and H were sent to man a battery, but returned in half an hour. Early had learned of the presence of the Sixth Corps, and also of the Nineteenth (Emory's), which had opportunely arrived from New Orleans; and he concluded not to capture the capital and Capitol, Congress and archives, arsenal and navy-yard, Lincoln and Cabinet, until (as Pollard says), 'another and uncertain time.' He had begun his retreat towards Snicker's Gap, and pursuit was instantly made by the Sixth and a division of the Nineteenth Corps, under command of Gen. Wright. Our brigade moved up the river at 2.20 P.M., and bivouacked late in the evening near Potomac Cross-Roads. Next morning* we moved at half-past five, but not much progress was made for some hours, on account of a handful of rebel cavalry, who annoyed our advance and covered the enemy's retreat. Two of them were captured. But after noon the pace was quickened, and, it being intensely hot, the march was very severe. Mackenzie stormed at the company commanders on account of the straggling, but it was no use. The men fell out incessantly. At seven in the evening we were only two hours behind the graybacks, whose rear-guard, as we learned from citizens, had skirmished over that region during the afternoon.

"On the 16th we forded the Potomac at Edwards' Ferry, and after marching through Leesburg and a mile beyond encamped in plain sight of the rebels. During this entire march they kept moving as fast as we approached, manifesting little or no disposition to dispute our progress; and there was a delay in the pursuit which Mr. Greeley, in his 'History of the American Conflict,' characterizes as 'timid and feeble.' It was certainly neither timid nor feeble after Ricketts came up with his Third Division on the 17th. Starting before sunrise, the entire force moved all day and had nearly all passed through Snicker's Gap at sunset. The top of the Blue Ridge, overhanging the gap, afforded an excellent position for counting our troops, and several rebels, thus occupied, were captured. As we reached the middle of the gap we caught our first glimpse of the beautiful Shenandoah valley, with which we were destined, before long, to have an intimate and bloody acquaintance. Lively artillery-firing could be seen upon a knoll a couple of miles to the west, and sharp musketry heard to the right of it. We cleared the gap, filed to the right into a blind, steep, and narrow defile, which suddenly became almost impassably blocked by troops who had been driven by the enemy, and were in confused retreat. Having forced a passage through them, we reached an open field sloping to the Shenandoah River, and encamped. Nothing remarkable occurred the next day, except an issue of three days' rations, including beans and dried apples, with instructions to make them last five days. On the 20th we forded the Shenandoah,—which was about four feet deep, and as wide as the Housatonic at New Milford,—and moved towards Berryville, left in front. The Second Connecticut was the advance regiment of the advance brigade, and a portion of it was deployed as skirmishers and marched through the fields parallel with the column, and about forty rods on the right of it. Few of the regiment will ever forget the shower that soaked us that day. A halt was made in the woods not far from Berryville, and foraging-parties detailed, who secured a large quantity of bacon, vegetables, and meal. There must have been some conflict or misunderstanding in the foraging orders, for Lieut. Warren Alford, who was on his way to camp with several head of cattle and a barrel of flour, was directed by Gen. Russell to take them back where he found them. Cavalry scouts reported no enemy within eight miles, and at midnight the column moved eastward. The river was forded again by bright moonlight, and the gap passed before day. It seems to have been the presumption (an erroneous one) that Early, having succeeded in decoying a large army into the valley on a wild-goose chase, was now hurrying back to Petersburg to enable Lee to strike a heavy blow at Grant before the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps could be moved back to City Point. This, then, was the explanation of our return through Snicker's Gap.

* July 14, 1864.

"The march back to Washington was severe enough to be called a forced march. Moseby's guerillas were close upon our rear, and although straggling was continually punished by rail-carrying, yet a vast number of stragglers were 'gobbled' by the enemy, and doubtless found their way to Andersonville or some other prison. Tenallytown was reached, by way of Chain Bridge, on the 23d, and the stiff, lame, sore, tired, hungry men found thirty-six hours' rest, new clothing, new shoes, soft bread, and surreptitious whisky, for all of which they were truly thankful; also cross-cannon to adorn their hats, for which they would have been more thankful if this brazen badge had not been to them such a bitter mockery.

"But it suddenly seemed as though the cross-cannon were to be no longer a mockery. The powers at Washington had been pretty well shaken up by the thunder of the enemy's guns at the gates of the capital, and they resolved that the Sixth and Nineteenth Corps should not embark for Petersburg again without leaving at least a few troops to reinforce the invalids and hundred-days men. For this purpose the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery was detached from the Sixth Corps and ordered to report to Gen. De Russy, at Arlington.

"July 25, 1864, the regiment moved through Georgetown, across Aqueduct Bridge, up to Fort Corcoran, and by noon the companies were distributed at the same eleven forts which they had garrisoned for forty-eight hours before going to the front in May. The Ohio regiment of hundred-days men which had relieved us in May and was still there, with its gawky officers, moved out and turned over its comfortable barracks, bunks, cook-houses, and light duties to those who were able to appreciate them.

"From this time until the following September the time was principally passed in marching and countermarching.

"September 2d found us at Clifton, where we encamped and remained for two weeks, drilling and preparing for the grapple which was hidden in the immediate future.

"At three o'clock on the morning of the 19th of September the advance was in motion. Our brigade started from Clifton about daylight, and, having struck the Berryville pike, moved five or six miles towards Winchester, and halted for an hour about two miles east of the Opequan, while the Nineteenth Corps was crossing. The cavalry had previously moved to secure all the crossings, and firing was now heard all along the front, and continually increasing. The Sixth and Nineteenth Corps, following Wilson's cavalry, which fought the way, crossed at and near the pike bridge, our brigade wading the stream a few rods north of it. West of the creek the pike passed through a gorge over a mile long, from which the rebels had been driven by the cavalry. The Nineteenth Corps and a portion of our own had moved through it and formed a line of battle some distance beyond, under a heavy artillery-fire, when our division emerged from the gorge and filed to the left into a ravine that ran across the pike, where it was held in readiness as a reserve. This was about half-past nine. The fighting now waxed hotter, louder, nearer; nevertheless, some of the men found time while their muskets were stacked in this ravine to dig potatoes from a neighboring field. At length the enemy made a vigorous charge upon the centre of the front line, at the point where the Third Brigade of the Second Division joined the left of the Nineteenth Corps. The line broke and retreated in complete disorder, each broken flank doubling and crowding back on itself and making for the rear. The enemy pushed its advantage and came rolling into the breach. It was the critical moment of the day; for if he had succeeded in permanently separating the two parts of the line, there would have been no possible escape from utter defeat for Sheridan's army. At this juncture Gen. Russell, who was watching from the rise of ground just in front of the ravine where his division lay, exclaimed, 'Look here, it is about time to do something! Upton, bring on your brigade.' The brigade was at once moved out of the ravine, passed through a narrow strip of woods, crossed the pike, halted for a moment in order to close and dress up compactly, then went at a double quick by the right flank into the gap that had been made in the first line, and made a short halt, just in rear of a piece of woods, out of which the remnants of the Second and Third Divisions were still retreating, and on the other side of which was the advancing line of Rodes' and Gordon's rebel divisions. The first fire that struck our brigade and regiment during the day was while coming to this position. Gen. Russell was killed by a shell at the same time, having been previously wounded and refused to leave the field. It was this movement of our brigade that checked the enemy until the lines were restored and the two or three thousand fugitives brought back. Some of our men began to fire, but were quickly ordered to desist. After a very few minutes the brigade was pushed forward, the left half of it being somewhat covered by woods, from which position it instantly opened a terrific fire, while the Second Connecticut, which constituted the right half, passed to the right of the woods into an open field of uneven surface, and halted on a spot where the ground was depressed enough to afford a little protection, and only a little; for several men were hit while lying there, as well as others while getting there. In three minutes the regiment again advanced, passed over a knoll, lost several more men, and halted in another hollow spot similar to the first. The enemy's advance had now been pushed well back, and here a stay was made of perhaps two hours. Col. Mackenzie rode slowly back and forth along the rise of ground in front of this position in a very reckless manner, in plain sight and easy range of the enemy, who kept up a fire from a piece of woods in front, which elicited from him the remark, 'I guess those fellows will get tired of firing at me by and by.' But the ground where the regiment lay was very slightly depressed, and although the shots missed Mackenzie they killed and wounded a large number of both officers and men behind him. Lieut. Candee merely raised himself from the ground on his elbow to look at his watch, but it was enough to bring his head in range of a sharpshooter's ball, and he was instantly killed. About three o'clock, an advance of the whole line having been ordered by Sheridan, the regiment charged across the field, Mackenzie riding some ten rods ahead, holding his hat aloft on the point of his sabre. The distance to the woods was at least a quarter of a mile, and was traversed under a fire that carried off its victims at nearly every step. The enemy abandoned the woods, however, as the regiment approached, in consequence of which the line obliqued to the left and halted. Companies F and D were here detached and taken off to the right on a small reconnoissance, but were soon brought back, and the regiment proceeded to the right of the woods and partly through them, and advanced to a rail-fence which ran along the side of an extensive field. Here, for the first time during the whole of this bloody day, did the regiment have orders to fire, and for ten minutes they had the privilege of pouring an effective fire into the rebels, who were thick in front. Then a flank movement was made along the fence to the right, followed by a direct advance of forty rods into the field. Here was the deadliest spot of the day. The enemy's artillery, on a rise of ground in front, plowed the field with canister and shells, and tore the ranks in a frightful manner. Maj. Rice was struck by a shell, his left arm torn off, and his body cut almost asunder. Maj. Skinner was struck on the top of the head by a shell, knocked nearly a rod with his face to the earth, and was carried to the rear insensible. Gen. Upton had a good quarter pound of flesh taken out of his thigh by a shell, and was laid up for some weeks. Col. Mackenzie's horse was cut in two by a solid shot, which just grazed the rider's leg, and let him down to the ground very abruptly. Several other officers were also struck, and from these instances, as well as from the appended list of casualties, some idea may be gained of the havoc among the enlisted men at this point. Although the regiment had been under fire and losing continually from the middle of the forenoon until it was now almost sunset, yet the losses during ten minutes in this last field were probably equal to those of all the rest of the day. It was doubtless the spot referred to by the rebel historian Pollard when he says, 'Early's artillery was fought to the muzzle of the guns.' Mackenzie gave the order to move by the left flank, and a start was made; but there was no enduring such a fire, and the men ran back and lay down. Another attempt was soon made, and after passing a large oak-tree a sheltered position was secured. The next move was directly into the enemy's breastwork. They had just been driven from it by a cavalry charge from the right and were in full retreat through the streets of Winchester, and some of their abandoned artillery, which had done us so much damage, stood yet in position, hissing hot with action, with their miserable, rac-a-bone horses attached. The brigade, numbering less than half the muskets it had in the morning, was now got into shape, and, after marching to a field in the eastern edge of the city, bivouacked for the night, while the pursuit rolled miles away up the valley pike.

"Roll-call revealed the fact that the regiment had lost one hundred and thirty-six in killed and wounded, fourteen of whom were officers. Company A, out of its entire list of officers and non-commissioned officers, had left only First Sergt. Henry Williams, who had command of the company during nearly the whole of the fight, and two corporals. Company H had three noble officers killed, including Capt. Frederick M. Berry, of whom Col. Kellogg once said that he was the most perfect officer, gentleman, and man, all things considered, in the regiment. Companies A, B, and E suffered heavily; C and G still more; and D, F, and I most of all.

"But, unlike Cold Harbor or Petersburg, there was victory to show for this fearful outlay. And it was the first cup of palpable, unquestionable, unmistakable victory that the Second Connecticut, with all its marching and fighting, had ever tasted.

"Nobly did the valiant regiment sustain itself in this sanguinary conflict, and, summing up his operations in the Valley, Sheridan said,—

"'At Winchester, for a moment, the contest was uncertain, but the gallant attack of Gen. Upton's brigade, of the Sixth Corps, restored the line of battle, until the turning column of Crook, and Merritt's and Averill's divisions of cavalry, under Torbert, "sent the enemy whirling through Winchester."'

"It would seem, from Sheridan's report, that the brunt of the fighting at Fisher's Hill did not fall on Wheaton's division. Nevertheless, the Second Connecticut had five killed and nineteen wounded, while the entire loss of the Sixth Corps was only two hundred and thirty-seven. So that the loss in our regiment was fully eight per cent. of that of the entire corps, although the regiment probably did not constitute more than four per cent. of the corps,—perhaps less. Among the killed was Quartermaster-Sergt. David B. Wooster, of Company D, one of the best men that ever entered the service. The Nineteenth Corps lost sixty, and Crook probably less; so that the victory at Fisher's Hill was very easily and cheaply bought, in comparison with the price paid for some other victories.

"The regiment moved from bivouac near Winchester before daylight on the 20th, and by the middle of the afternoon encamped just south of Cedar Creek, remaining until the afternoon of the next day, when it moved off to the right of the pike, taking a circuitous route through wooded ravines and over wooded hills, and at length came out upon open fields about a mile and a half west or southwest of Strasburg. This was on the evening of the 21st. Here lines of battle were formed, and a stay was made of about two hours, after which the march was continued by the right flank, up a steep and winding hillside, until midnight, when the regiment halted under arms until daylight on the very top of a hill fully as high as Fisher's Hill, and separated from it by Tumbling River. The enemy's stronghold was on the top of the opposite hill, directly across the stream. In the morning breastworks were commenced, part of the men building while the rest remained in line of battle. Lively skirmishing was going on all day, and once or twice things were hastily put in readiness to meet an anticipated charge, which, however, did not come. About three o'clock in the afternoon orders were given to pitch tents, but while the men were at it a general advance was ordered. The regiment had but just commenced to move directly forward when the rebels (who knew every inch of the ground, and could tell where our lines ought to be, whether visible or not) began to drop shells into their new breastworks and upon the very spot where they had begun to pitch tents. The regiment moved down the steep hill, waded the stream, and moved up the rocky front of the rebel Gibraltar. How they ever got up there is a mystery, for the ascent of that rocky declivity would now seem an impossibility to an unburdened traveler, even though there were no deadly enemy at the top. But up they went, clinging to rocks and bushes. The main rebel breastwork, which they were so confident of holding, was about fifteen rods back from the top of the bluff, with brush piled in front of it. Just as the top was reached the Eighth Corps struck the enemy on the right, and their flight was very disordered and precipitate. The Second Connecticut was the first regiment that reached and planted colors on the works from the direct front.* After firing until the rebels were so far off that it was a waste of powder, the pursuit was resumed and kept up all night, although but little progress was made on account of the blockade of the road both by the pursuing army and the property abandoned by the enemy. Although the regiment experienced considerable marching, nothing of especial importance occurred until October 10th, when the Sixth Corps left Strasburg and moved to Front Royal, on its way to Alexandria,—whence it was to embark for Petersburg. It was believed that the punishment inflicted on the rebels at Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and all through the valley would incline them to give up the project of carrying the war across the Potomac. This was evidently the opinion of Grant, Sheridan, and the authorities at Washington; and thus it happened that we were on the way back to City Point, leaving the valley in the care of the Eighth and Nineteenth Corps and the cavalry. After resting near Front Royal until the morning of the 13th, the corps started to cross the Blue Ridge; but, instead of going through Manassas Gap, as was at first intended, the route was changed for the one via Ashby's Gap, a few miles farther north, and we moved in that direction. We had passed through White Post and Millwood, and the advance had almost entered the gap, when there was a sudden 'right about,' and the whole corps moved back and encamped at Millwood. 'What's up now?' was the universal question. And when the answer was given that Early, strongly reinforced, had followed us up again, and was in his Gibraltar at Fisher's Hill, and his outposts challenging another 'set-to,' the next universal and wondering question was, 'Hasn't old Jewball had drubbing enough yet?'

"He doubtless had. But Mr. Davis' government was in a fearful strait, and the suddenness and vigor of Early's return to the 'scratch' proved that even before the roar of battle at Fisher's Hill had died away it had been decreed that one more desperate attempt should be made to defeat Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley.

"The corps moved westward early in the morning,† struck the valley pike at Newtown, rejoined the Eighth and Nineteenth Corps at Middletown, and the whole army encamped between Middletown and Strasburg, along the northern bank of a tributary of the Shenandoah called 'Cedar Creek.' The Eighth Corps was on the left, the Nineteenth in the centre, and ours on the right, and somewhat in the rear. For the next few days there was much quiet, and a good deal of speculation among the troops as to what would be the next shift in the scenes. The enemy was close in front, just as he had been for weeks preceding the battle of Winchester; but this attitude, which might once have been called defiance, now seemed to be mere impudence, and it was the general opinion that Early did not wish nor intend to fight again, but that he was to be kept there, with a small force, as a standing threat, in order to prevent Sheridan's army from returning to Grant. And yet there was something mysterious in his conduct. He was known to be receiving reinforcements, and his signal-flags on Three-top Mountain (just south of Fisher's Hill) were continually in motion. From the top of Massanutton Mountain—the peak at the north end of the range that separates the Luray from the main valley—his

* The men were so bewildered by the daily and nightly marching and fighting that some of them lost their reckoning, and there has ever since been a dispute whether the Fisher's Hill affair came off on the 21st or 22d. It was on the 22d, at about five o'clock in the afternoon.

† Oct. 14, 1864.

videttes could look down upon the whole Union army, as one can look down upon New Haven from East Rock; and there is no doubt that the exact location of every camp and the position of every gun and every picket-post were thoroughly known to him. Nevertheless, it seemed the most improbable thing in the world that he could be meditating either an open attack or a surprise. One would have supposed that the more he saw of our camp, the less inclined he would have been to disturb it. The position was strong, the creek and its crossings in possession of our pickets, both along the front and well out on either flank.

"Mr. Greeley, in his 'American Conflict,' thus describes the surprise:

"'Our forces were encamped on three crests or ridges: the Army of West Virginia (Crook's) in front; the Nineteenth Corps (Emory's) half a mile behind it; the Sixth Corps (Wright's) to the right and rear of the Nineteenth. Kitching's provisional division lay behind Crook's left; the cavalry, under Torbert, on the right of the Sixth. It is a fact, though no excuse, that they had no more apprehension of an attack from Early than from Canada.

"'Early had arranged his army in two columns, in order to strike ours at once on both flanks. He had of course to leave the turnpike and move over rugged paths along the mountain-side, climbing up and down steep hills, holding on by bushes, where horses could hardly keep their feet, and twice fording the north fork of the Shenandoah,—the second time in the very face of our pickets. For miles his right column skirted the left of Crook's position, where an alarm would have exposed him to utter destruction. So imperative was the requirement of silence that his men had been made to leave their canteens in camp, lest they should clatter against their muskets. The divisions of Gordon, Ramseur, and Pegram thus stole by our left, those of Kershaw and Wharton simultaneously flanking our right.

"'At two A.M. the pickets of the Fifth New York Heavy Artillery (Kitching's division) heard a rustling of underbrush and a sound as of stealthy, multitudinous trampling, and two posts were relieved and sent into camp with the report. Gen. Crook thereupon ordered that a good lookout be kept, but sent out no reconnoitring party; even the gaps in his front line caused by detailing regiments for picket-duty were not filled; and, when the crash came, the muskets of many of our men were not loaded. There was some suspicion and uneasiness in Crook's command, but no serious preparation.

"'An hour before dawn the rebels had all reached, without obstruction or mishap, the positions severally assigned them, and stood shivering in the chill mist, awaiting the order to attack. No sound of alarm, no hum of preparation, disquieted them. At length, as the gray light of dawn disclosed the eastern hilltops, a tremendous volley of musketry, on either flank and away to the rear, startled the sleepers into bewildered consciousness; and the next moment, with their well known battle-yell, the charging lines came on.

"'"Tell the brigade commanders to move their men into the trenches," said Gen. Grover, calmly; and the order was given; but it was already too late. The rebels, disdaining to notice the picket-fire, were themselves in the trenches on both flanks before our soldiers could occupy them in effective force. On our side, all was amazement and confusion; on theirs, thorough wakefulness and perfect comprehension. In fifteen minutes the Army of West Virginia was a flying mob; one battalion of its picket-line had lost one hundred killed and wounded and seven hundred prisoners. The enemy, knowing every foot of ground as familiarly as their own door-yards, never stopped to reconnoiter or consider, but rushed on with incredible celerity.'

"The Second Connecticut had its full share of the varied fortunes of that wondrous day. The exact number present for duty on that morning cannot be given,—for there was no time for roll-calls,—but the morning report of a day or two previous showed

Officers.	Enlisted Men.
Present, 25	Present, 708
Absent, 25	Absent, 648
50	1356

"These six hundred and forty-eight absent men were scattered all over. Every hospital at City Point, Alexandria, Washington, Baltimore, Annapolis, Sandy Hook, Georgetown, Philadelphia, Newark, New York, and New Haven had a share of them, sick, wounded, convalescent, or on duty as nurses: besides which, there were prisoners, stragglers, men on sick furlough, men absent without leave, and men on detached service. Of the seven hundred and eight reported present, probably not more than two-thirds were 'present for duty,'—that is, there were not more than four hundred and seventy-two muskets—probably not so many—that went into the fight. The remaining two hundred and thirty-six are to be accounted for in various ways. They were detailed in the medical, commissary, quartermaster, and ordnance departments; also as pioneers, blacksmiths, butchers, cattle-drivers, stretcher-bearers, teamsters, ambulance-drivers, officers' cooks, guards, and orderlies at brigade, division, and corps headquarters. Some were sick in the field hospital. Company L and part of Company E were on picket. Then there were the drummers, fifers, and band. Nor were all the twenty-five 'present' officers available for action with the regiment. Out of that number must be deducted Lieut. Cleveland, who was on duty as inspector-general on the staff of Gen. Hamblin, the brigade commander; Surgeon Plumb and Assistant Surgeons Hassard and Andrews, all of whom were sure to have a multitude of new patients on their hands in a few minutes; Quartermaster Huxley and Chaplain Phelps; and Lieuts. Henry Skinner and Austin P. Kirkham, both of whom were on picket, and were taken prisoners early in the morning. The appended list of casualties will show, therefore, that our losses at Cedar Creek were greater, in proportion to the number engaged, than in any other fight, not even excepting Cold Harbor.

"On the morning of the 19th most of the regiment were up long before reveille, and many had begun to cook their coffee, on account of that ominous popping and cracking which had been going on for half an hour off to the right. They did not exactly suppose it meant anything, but they had learned wisdom by many a sudden march on an empty stomach, and did not propose to be caught napping. The clatter on the right increased. The musket-shots reverberated through the fog, and at last, 'Whang! ng-ng-ng'! went a piece of artillery. And then another. And then a smart cannonading, and more musketry. It began to be the wonder why no orders came. But suddenly every man seemed to lose interest in the right, and turned his inquiring eyes and ears towards the left. Rapid volleys and a vague tumult told that there was trouble there. 'Fall in!' said Mackenzie. 'Shoul*der! Arms!* Battalion!

Left! Face! File Left! March! Double Quick! March!' The brigade moved briskly off towards the east, crossing the track of other troops and batteries of artillery which were hurriedly swinging into position, while ambulances, orderlies, staff-officers, camp-followers, pack-horses, cavalrymen, sutlers' wagons, hospital-wagons, and six-mule teams of every description came trundling and galloping pell-mell towards the right and rear, and making off towards Winchester. It was not a hundred rods from our own camp to the place where we went into position, on a road running north. Gen. Wright, the temporary commander of the army, bareheaded, and with blood trickling from his beard, sat on his horse near by, as if bewildered, or in a brown study. The Sixty-fifth New York was on our left, and then came the Second Division. The First Brigade* (Penrose's) was on the right of ours, and then came the Third Division. The ground was cleared in front of the road, and sloped off some thirty rods to a stream, on the opposite of which it rose for about an equal distance, to a piece of woods, in which the advance rebel line had already taken position. Truly does Pollard say that 'a heavy fog favored them.' The newly-risen sun, huge and bloody, was on their side in more senses than one. Our line faced directly to the east, and we could see nothing but that enormous disk rising out of the fog, while they could see every man in our line, and could take good aim. The battalion lay down, and part of the men began to fire, but the shape of the ground afforded little protection, and large numbers were killed and wounded. Four-fifths of our loss for the entire day occurred during the time we lay here, which could not have been over five minutes, by the end of which time the Second Connecticut found itself in an isolated position, not unlike that at Cold Harbor. 'Go and ask Penrose where he's going with that brigade,' said Col. Mackenzie to the writer hereof. (The Jerseys had withdrawn from our right, and were moving directly across our rear to the left, with Penrose on foot, some distance ahead of his line.) 'Col. Penrose, Mackenzie wants to know where you are going with that brigade.' 'I'm not going anywhere. I'm wounded,' was the energetic reply, which was carried to Col. Mackenzie. Just then Lieut. Cleveland rode up on a keen jump and said, 'Col. Mackenzie, Gen. Wheaton wants you to move directly to the rear by right of companies.' Mackenzie replied, 'My God! I cannot! This line will break if I do.' 'Well,' said Cleveland, pointing to the left, 'there goes the Sixty-fifth, and the First Brigade is gone.' A few seconds later, Mackenzie's horse, 'Old Pop,' was struck square in the head, and after spinning around two or three times on his hind-legs went down dead as a stone; and the colonel, who had previously got a shot through the heel, went off over his head. The fog had now thinned away somewhat, and a firm rebel line, with colors full high advanced, came rolling over a knoll just in front of our left, not more than three hundred yards distant. 'Rise up! Retreat!' said Mackenzie; and the battalion began to move back. For a little distance the retreat was made in very good order, but it soon degenerated into a rout. Men from a score of regiments were mixed up in flight, and the whole corps was scattered over acres and acres, with no more organization than a herd of buffaloes. Some of the wounded were carried for a distance by their comrades, who were at length compelled to leave them to their fate in order to escape being shot.

"About a mile from the place where the retreat commenced there was a road running directly across the valley. Here the troops were rallied, and a slight defense of rails thrown up. The regimental and brigade flags were set up as beacons to direct each man how to steer through the mob, and in a very few minutes there was an effective line of battle established. A few round shot ricocheted overhead, making about an eighth of a mile at a jump, and a few grape were dropped into a ditch just behind our line, quickly clearing out some soldiers who had crawled in there, but this was the extent of the pursuit. Mackenzie and Hamblin now left for the hospital to have their wounds dressed, and the whole brigade (and a very small brigade it was!) was deployed as skirmishers under Col. Olcott, of the One Hundred and Twenty-first New York. Three lines of skirmishers were formed, and each in turn constituted the front line, while the other two passed through and halted; and so the retreat was continued for about three miles, until a halt was made upon high ground, from which we could plainly see the Johnnies sauntering around on the very ground where we had slept.

"It must have been after noon when we left that position, and moved eastward through the wood, by Sheridan's order, to join the Second Division and meet the enemy.

"About two o'clock we were posted, in two lines, in the southwestern edge of a piece of woods, in front of which was an open, side-hill field, at the top of which, along a stone wall, was the rebel skirmish-line, while the main line was not a great distance back of it. Their assault had already been made, and repulsed by the Nineteenth Corps. About three o'clock we could hear the cheering to the right as Sheridan rode along the line, but that personage did not get within sight of our regiment. By this time Hamblin and Mackenzie had returned to take part in the 'left half-wheel' which had been ordered. The lines moved forward over the ascending ground, under a galling but not very destructive fire from the rebel skirmishers, who soon gave up the stone wall to us and retreated on their main line. A square musketry fight was kept up here for ten minutes, when the enemy left, not, however, before inflicting considerable damage on us. Here Col. Mackenzie was again struck by a solid shot or shell which just grazed his shoulder. A remarkably large number of our officers were wounded at this point, but none fatally, nor even very severely. (In the morning the casualties among officers had been few and severe, Hosford being killed, and Fenn and Gregory losing each an arm.)

* Also called the Jersey Brigade.

"The enemy attempted to rally behind another fence, a little farther back, but after a moment or two gave it up and 'retired.' Not only in front of our regiment, but all along as far as the eye could reach, both to the right and left, were they flying over the uneven country in precisely the same kind of disorder that we had exhibited in the morning. The shouts and screams of victory mingled with the roar of the firing, and never was heard

"'So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.'

The sight of so many rebel heels made it a very easy thing to be brave, and the Union troops pressed on utterly regardless of the grape and canister which, to the last moment, the enemy flung behind him. It would not have been well for them to have fired too much if they had had ever so good a chance, for they would have been no more likely to hit our men than their own who were our prisoners and scattered in squads of twenty, squads of ten, and squads of one all over the vast field. At one time they made a determined stand along a ridge in front of our brigade. A breastwork of rails was thrown together, colors planted, a nucleus made, and both flanks grew longer and longer with wonderful rapidity. It was evident that they were driving back their men to this line without regard to regiment or organization of any kind. This could be plainly seen from the adjacent and similar ridge over which we were moving, the pursuers being in quite as much disorder (so far as organizations were concerned) as the pursued. That growing line began to look ugly, and somewhat quenched the ardor of the chase. It began to be a question in many minds whether it would not be a point of wisdom to 'survey the vantage of the ground' before getting much farther. But just as we descended into the intervening hollow a body of cavalry, not large, but compact, was seen scouring along the fields to our right and front like a whirlwind, directly towards the left flank of that formidable line on the hill. When we reached the top there was no enemy there! They had moved on, and the cavalry after them. Thus the chase was continued, from position to position, for miles and miles, for hours and hours, until darkness closed in, and every regiment went into camp on the identical ground it had left in such haste in the morning. Every man tied his shelter tent to the very same old stakes, and in half an hour coffee was boiling and salt pork sputtering over thousands of camp-fires. Civil life may furnish better fare than the army at Cedar Creek had that night, but not better appetites; for it must be borne in mind that many had gone into the fight directly from their beds, and had eaten nothing for twenty-four hours.

"Late in the evening, after many were sound asleep, the regiment was ordered to be formed in line without arms. When the command to 'fall in' was heard the general question was, 'Well, old Jubal hasn't forgotten anything and come back after it, has he?' The clause, 'without arms,' however, showed that he had not, although the soldiers expressed their perfect willingness to fight him in that way if he found himself still unable to restrain his pugnacity. The line being formed, Capt. Jones—now in command of the regiment—said, 'Soldiers, I have just received a dispatch from Gen. Sheridan's headquarters which announces that we have this day taken not less than two thousand prisoners, forty-seven guns and caissons, a large number of battle-flags, all the wagons and supplies taken from us this morning, besides horses, mules, wagon-trains, and material of all kinds in unknown quantities, and that our victory is complete. I now propose three cheers for Sheridan, ourselves, our army, and the Union!' They were given with indescribable heartiness, while all the camps far and near joined in full chorus. The battalion was dismissed, and thus ended the day that had witnessed a battle which was, in many respects, without a parallel in ancient or modern history.

"The killed, wounded, and missing of the Sixth Corps were two thousand two hundred and fifteen, of which the Second Connecticut had its full share. Men from every company started out the first thing after reaching camp to look for our dead and wounded, many of whom lay not fifty rods off. The slightly wounded who had not got away had been taken prisoners and sent at once towards Richmond, while the severely wounded had lain all day on the ground near where they were hit. Some of the mortally wounded were just able to greet their returning comrades, hear the news of victory, and send a last message to their friends before expiring. Corp. Charles M. Burr, of Company E, went into the fight with Company B (his own company being on picket), and was shot above the ankle just after the battalion had risen up and started to retreat. Both bones of his leg were shattered, and he had to be left. In a few minutes the rebel battalion, which I have already mentioned, came directly over him in pursuit, and was soon out of his sight. Then, being alone for a short time, he pulled off the boot from his sound leg, put his watch and money into it, and put it on again. Next a merciful rebel lieutenant came and tied a handkerchief around his leg, stanching the blood.

"Capt. Benjamin Hosford was shot in the morning through the head and instantly killed. His brother and other men of Company D carried the body about half a mile on the retreat, and were compelled to leave it there. At night it was found that the rebels had taken a ring from his finger, the straps from his coat, and the shoes from his feet. Corp. Henry L. Vaill, of Company C, was found alive stripped of everything, and so were many others.

"Company D mustered only nineteen muskets, and its commanding officer was Sergt. Hough. The other companies were reduced to nearly the same extent. The loss in officers was so great that for a few days there were but six officers on duty with twelve companies; while little short soldiers who had always been at the left end of the companies suddenly found themselves corporals and sergeants. We remained at Cedar Creek until the 9th of November, when, on account of the scarcity of wood, and the long distance from our base at Harper's Ferry, the army was moved to Camp Russell, near Kearnstown, about four miles south of Winchester, where it remained until the 2d of December. The morning report for November 20th showed three hundred and seventy-nine men and seventeen officers present for duty, and the regiment was recruited daily both in numbers and condition.

"Now that the rebels had been thrice defeated in the valley, there remained no temptation for another invasion of the Northern States. It was absolutely certain that it would not be again attempted; and therefore the Sixth Corps was ordered to City Point again. On the 1st of December, Wheaton's Division marched to Stephenson's Depot and took the cars for Washington, en route to City Point. The regiment went into camp at Parke Station.

"From this time until the 6th of February the regiment had no fighting to do, and no very startling experiences of any kind. Some mention, however, of the more noteworthy occurrences of this period will be acceptable, at least to my soldier readers; and it will perhaps be well to transcribe them direct from some of the diaries in my possession. The following entries are copied, mostly without alteration, from the diaries of several officers and men, besides my own:

"Dec. 11. Twenty-nine convalescents returned.

"Dec. 12. Fifty convalescents returned.

"Dec. 13. Capt. A. H. Fenn returned and reported for duty, although it is not seven weeks since he lost his arm at Cedar Creek. What has become of the adjutant's desk? It was turned over to the quartermaster at Camp Russell, but does not come.

"Dec. 14. Good deal of anxiety in camp about Sherman's march coastward. A Richmond minister told his congregation last Sunday that God had a hook in Sherman's nose, and was leading him to destruction. Nous verrons!

"Dec. 15. We now have to furnish four officers and one hundred and twenty-five men daily for picket. They are posted out by the rebel lead mines. They frequently see the Johnnies and talk with them.

"Dec. 16. Heavy cannonading. Sergt. Soule and squad of carpenters detailed for duty at division headquarters. They will fix things up gorgeous. This is the regiment they have to apply to when they want things done nice.

"Dec. 18. One hundred guns from Fort Sedgwick in honor of Thomas' victory over Hood. They must enjoy the salute in Petersburg.

"Dec. 21. Rain played lullaby on the tent all last night. Quarters well ventilated this morning, because rain washed mud off logs. Put it on again. Plenty of water to mix mortar with. Kelley, McKinney, Tuttle, Twiss, and Jo Fenn mustered as first lieutenants by Capt. Tyler, commissary of musters.

"Dec. 23. Went clear up to Hancock's Station, ran corduroy, to have a brigade drill under Mackenzie.

"Dec. 26. Sherman presents Lincoln with a X-mas gift of Savannah, one hundred and fifty guns, and twenty-five thousand bales cotton. Much rejoicing thereat. Story afloat that Lee is going to do something surprising on New Year's day.

"Dec. 21. Muster day. Very busy with the pesky rolls. Capt. Marsh's rolls first in, of course.

"1865.

"Jan. 1. Gad Smith and John Wheeler returned.

"Jan. 2. Wheeler mustered as first lieutenant, and goes on brigade staff as A. A. A. G., vice Ed Hubbard, who is discharged and goes home.

"Jan. 3. Eight companies on fatigue duty. News received of Butler's fizzle at Wilmington.

"Jan. 4. Three inches snow. Good many men sit by their fires all night because too cold to sleep.

"Jan. 5. Muddy. New Springfields came to take the place of Enfields. Farewell, old Enfields! Every one of you could tell thrilling tales if you could speak. And you can speak!

"Jan. 6. All our division moved down corduroy, a mile to left, and formed square to witness execution of Peter McCox, deserter from Company A, Fourth New Jersey, First Brigade, First Division, Sixth Corps. Stood 'in place rest' an hour, waiting. Prisoner unable to walk, brought clear round the square in ambulance, preceded by band playing Dead March in Saul. Coffin placed on the ground in front of open grave. Prisoner seated on foot of coffin. Proceedings, findings, and sentence of court-martial read in front of each regiment. Prisoner blindfolded, and firing party of twelve men drawn up in front, in single rank, about twenty paces off. Captain of provost-guard gave the order 'Fire!' Good many men turned away their heads. Prisoner fell back and off on the ground, leaving one leg on the coffin. Division then wheeled into column by companies, marched by the coffin, and then home.

"Jan. 7. Inspection. Mackenzie appeared in stars. Cleanest man in each regiment to go to division headquarters to compete for a twenty days' furlough. One man from each of B, D, K, E, and M Companies sent to brigade headquarters. Sam Terrell, the lucky man out of the whole division.

"Jan. 9. Rebels made charge on Third Division picket-line, a little to our left. Promptly met and defeated. Caused no disturbance in camp.

"Jan. 10. Snowdy returned. Our daily picket detail is now five officers and one hundred and five men. Pretty rough. Makes a man's turn come pretty often.

"Jan. 11. Got eighteen potatoes from brigade commissary. Maj. Jeffrey Skinner appointed to command the Sixty-fifth New York while Col. Fisk is absent on leave.

"Jan. 12. Noisy picket firing. Curtis made regimental ordnance officer. Capt. Cleveland ordnance officer on Wheaton's staff.

"Jan. 14. Picket firing in our front.

"Jan. 15. Commenced to have brigade guard-mounting. Gen Mackenzie rode over to inspection on his munkeen, in that new gawky hat, and inspected the regiment at a support. Niram Buttolph, of Company G, sent to division headquarters, and got the division furlough. Gen. Wheaton said he was the handsomest soldier he ever saw. Cleveland and Fenn are majors.

"Jan. 16. Received four hundred and eighty-nine sets of 'Mann's Patent Accoutrements.' Boys don't like 'em. Call 'em 'belly trunks.' Company F is at Fort McMahon.

"Jan. 17. Salute of one hundred guns for Terry's capture of Fort Fisher and twelve hundred prisoners. Capt. Woodman made A. A. A. G., and Johnny Wheeler A. A. D. C.

"Jan. 18. Lieut. Oscar Platt discharged. Ab. Dunham and Mr. Dewell arrived. Their goods are at City Point, awaiting transportation. Thirty-eight convalescents and substitutes arrived in evening.

"Jan. 20. Mackenzie on fifteen days' leave. Lieut.-Col. Olcott, One Hundred and Twenty-first New York, commands brigade. Lieut.-Col. Skinner returned to regiment.

"Jan. 22. In the evening went with Capt. Marsh and chaplain to Maj Jones' quarters to hear a large discussion on the resurrection. Later, went over to Capt. Marsh's and talked of war, love, and the kindred destructiveness.*

"Jan. 23. Large lot of deserters came in on the left. They come thicker since the fall of Fort Fisher, Charleston, and Savannah. Wonder what is going on at the right? Furious cannonading, heaviest we ever heard; fairly shook the earth.

"Jan. 24. It was the battle of the monitors. Rebels tried to take City Point. We should have been in a pretty fix if they had succeeded! Inspection. Grannis of D Company sent to brigade headquarters as cleanest man, but Olcott villainously threw him out, and sent a One Hundred and Twenty-first man to division headquarters.

* Curtis' diary. (Of course.)

"Jan. 26. Hubbard mustered as colonel, and relieves Olcott in command of brigade. Skinner mustered as lieutenant-colonel, and commands regiment.

"Jan. 29. Inspection. Zelotes Grannis got it this time. Iselton, of H, Dugette, of L, Atwood, of A, and a B man also received furloughs.

"Feb. 1. Orders received at three A.M. to be ready to move at a moment's notice. Ed Sedgwick mustered as second lieutenant of Company C. Somebody checkmated.

"Feb. 2. James W. Dixon, son of Senator Dixon, has been kindly given to the regiment, and mustered into a vacant lieutenancy, to serve on the staff of Gen. Wright. Gen. Wright must have a poor opinion of his corps if he cannot by this time find timber in it good enough to make aides-de-camp of without going to Connecticut. There are plenty of men in this regiment yet uncommissioned, and yet unkilled, as respectable, as able, and probably as brave, as can be found anywhere, and they deem it rather shabby treatment, after they have marched through fire and blood for months, after many of them have been perforated with rebel bullets, and are now on duty with scarcely healed wounds, for Gen. Wright to fill a vacancy in the Second Connecticut by the 'donation' (that is what they call it) of a boy who has remained with his mother all through the war, until the fighting is all over, and the whole world knows that the Rebellion is in the article of death. But then, you know, his father has been of enormous service to the country. Soldiers must take what they can get. They must put their heels together, keep their eyes to the front, and ask no questions. If I ever get home with a whole cuticle, I will be grateful evermore.

"Feb. 4. Brisk firing on right. Officers' recitation at brigade headquarters two evenings per week.

"On the morning of February 5th we had orders to be in readiness to move with four days' rations, leaving our pickets out, and leaving the minimum force necessary to hold the lines. Companies A, K, and portions of H and E were detailed to remain (which was not an unpleasant 'detail'). The Fifth Corps was fighting on the left, in the vicinity of Hatcher's Run, and it was guessed (and truly) that we were to go in that direction. After remaining in readiness until four o'clock in the afternoon, the First Division moved off to the left, and after going about five miles bivouacked for the night. It was bitter cold sleeping that night,—so cold that half of the men stood or sat around fires all night. In the morning the movement was continued, and the day* was mostly consumed in manœuvring. We were there for the purpose of protecting the left flank of the Fifth Corps, which had been fighting all day. A little before sundown we crossed Hatcher's Run, and moved by the flank directly into a piece of woods, the Second Brigade, under Hubbard, leading the division, and the Second Connecticut, under Skinner, leading the brigade. Wounded men were being brought by to the rear, and the noise just ahead told of mischief there. As the brigade was moving into the woods, staff-officers came riding along the column with the order, 'Load your pieces, load your pieces without halting.' Col. Hubbard filed to the left at the head of the column, along a slight ridge, and about half the regiment had filed, when troops of the Fifth Corps came running through to the rear, and at the same moment Gen. Wheaton rode up with, 'Oblique to the left, oblique to the left!' and making energetic gestures towards the rise of ground. The ridge was quickly gained, and fire opened just in time to head off a counter-fire and charge that was already in progress; but between the 'file left' and the 'left oblique,' and the breaking of our ranks by troops retreating from in front, and the vines and underbrush (which were so thick that they unhorsed some of the staff-officers), there was a good deal of confusion, and the line soon fell back about ten rods, where it was re-formed, and a vigorous fire poured—somewhat at random—a little to the left of our first position. The attempt of the enemy to get in on the left of the Fifth Corps was frustrated. Our casualties were six wounded (some of them probably by our own men) and one missing. The position was occupied that night and the next day, until about sundown, when the brigade shifted some distance to the right and again advanced, under an artillery fire, to within a short distance of the rebel batteries and built breastworks. One shot on this occasion was particularly memorable. The regiment was moving across a cleared field, by the flank, when a solid shot came through the woods from directly in front, and passed the column apparently so near as to singe the left ears of the whole line. If it had come ten feet farther towards the right it might have 'flanked' the entire regiment and cut a swath from one end to the other. The rebel picket-shots whistled overhead all the time the breastworks were building, but mostly too high to hurt anything but the trees. At midnight the division moved back to quarters, arriving at sunrise. Again we found our domiciles appropriated, this time by a regiment of engineers,—but out they went, and in went we; and, having taken a ration of whisky,—which had been ordered by Grant or somebody else, in consideration of three nights and two days on the bare ground in February, together with some fighting and a good deal of hard marching and hard work,—the men lay down to sleep as the sun rose up, and did not rise up until the sun went down.

"It was now the 24th of March. The weather was fast improving, and signs of coming great events multiplied. No positive orders of a very important nature had been received; but the discontinuing of furloughs plainly meant something in the aggressive line, while the condition of things on the other side, as revealed by the tattered and cadaverous deserters who now came over to us not only in the night but also in broad daylight, made it evident that Lee must do something of dreadful note or else give over the contest.

"What would be the particular manner of his coup was a question much discussed, but not settled until the coup occurred. Very early on the morning of March 25th, after a noisy night all along the picket-line, heavy firing was heard on the right, but there was nothing uncommon about that, and little notice was taken of it until orders came from brigade headquarters to 'move out instantly.' Shortly after, Gen. Hamblin arrived to expedite matters, and in a few minutes the brigade was on the corduroy moving rapidly to the right, which was of itself quite a noteworthy circumstance, for we usually went to the left when mischief was brewing. 'Oh, we sha'n't get into a fight,' said the men; 'we always have to go the other way to find our fighting.' These remarks were of course made in a partially jocular vein, but they were, nevertheless, entirely true. Indeed, that very day proved both parts of the proposition,—viz., first, that the Second Connecticut never fought to the right, and, secondly, always did fight to the left.

* February 6th.

"The firing subsided after we had gone a mile or so, but there was much moving of troops, and evidently something the matter ahead. The rebel batteries had range on portions of the column, and fired at us as we were on the corduroy, dropping several shots only a few feet away. One struck within a rod of our regiment, splashing into a small puddle of water and burying itself in the earth directly under a soldier of the division who was sitting on the ground and fixing his shoes. He did not stir for a second or two, but then, picking up his musket and shoe, he started on half a dozen double-quicks, and it is to this day a mooted question with our men whether that man has stopped running yet. After moving a little farther, a staff-officer rode up with the information that the rebels had surprised and captured Fort Stedman, on the Ninth Corps front, and a quarter of a mile of breastworks, including three batteries; but that they had been retaken, together with eighteen hundred prisoners, and that therefore our assistance would not be required.

"After a rest of half an hour the division moved homeward. But instead of going into camp there was an ominous halt of a few minutes in rear of our quarters, and then the march was continued towards the left, where a brisk artillery fire was going on. Grant knew that the massing of troops for the assault at Fort Stedman must have left the rebel lines with little or no protection in some places, and he resolved at once to find the weak spots. Accordingly, an advance was ordered in front of Fort Fisher, near the tall frame lookout, about a mile to the left of Warren's Station. Our troops were posted under cover during nearly all the afternoon, while the large guns threw shot and shell at each other over our heads. At length a train of ambulances moved up from the right, and halted just in rear of the division. There was no mistaking that symptom.

"The sun had already begun to grow large and red with its nearness to the western horizon when the brigade was moved down in front within twenty rods of the rebel picket-line, and halted behind a slight rise of ground, just high enough to intercept their fire. After standing there for some ten minutes waiting for orders, Col. Hubbard rode slowly along to the right flank of his line, and said in a low tone to the writer, 'If they don't put us in soon, we sha'n't have much fighting to-night.' After he had gone back, Sergt.-Maj. E. Goodwin Osborne stepped up and asked what the colonel said, and was informed. 'There is time enough yet,' he replied, in a low but foreboding tone. The parting sunset ray had not vanished before his lifeless form was borne on a rubber blanket towards the rear, across the very spot where he had uttered these prophetic words.

"The fire from our batteries suddenly ceased. Gen. Hamblin rode up to Hubbard, and said, 'Colonel, move directly forward. Conform your movement to the Second Division, on your left.' The front line, consisting of the Second Connecticut and the Sixty-fifth New York, advanced on the rifle-pits as steadily as though on a battalion drill, while the rest of the brigade followed in a second line. There seems to have been a vacant space in their line of rifle-pits, or else the Second Division and the greater part of our brigade must have entirely flanked their pickets on the left. At any rate, the only part of our regiment that went over any rifle-pits was the extreme right,—perhaps one or two companies. When we were within fifty feet of them the rebels jumped over in front, threw down their muskets, threw up their arms, and yelled, 'Don't shoot, don't shoot!' and then passed through to the rear in large numbers as fast as they could move. The right flank was a little demoralized by its success in taking these rifle-pits, and by the fire which came from the pits farther to the right, which the enemy still held; nevertheless, the regiment moved on, across a swampy run, then over ascending ground, among stumps and scrub-oaks, for twenty or thirty rods, and there halted and lay down. This distance was all traversed under a combined artillery and musket fire, the former coming from a battery about half a mile to the right and front, which was very effectively served. It apparently had three guns in use, and the air was blue with the little cast-iron balls from spherical case-shot, which shaved the ground and exploded among the stumps just in rear of the line at intervals of only a few seconds. Probably the musket fire came entirely from the enemy's pickets, who still remained on the right. Twenty of the Second Connecticut were wounded—seven of them mortally—in reaching, occupying, and abandoning this position, which, proving entirely untenable, was held only a few minutes. The line faced about and moved back under the same mixed fire of solid shot, spherical case, and musketry, across the swampy run, and halted not far in front of the spot whence it had first moved forward. Other troops, on the right, now engaged the battery, and captured the rest of the picket-line, and after half an hour the brigade again moved forward to a position still further advanced than the previous one, where a permanent picket-line was established. Thus ended the eventful 25th of March. Its dawn ushered in the surprising attack on Fort Stedman, and its close found miles of the rebel picket-lines in our possession, thousands of prisoners in our hands, and the grip of the Union armies upon Petersburg greatly tightened. At midnight the brigade returned to camp, leaving a strong picket. The picket detail from our own regiment, which had been on duty all day in front of our own camp, had its share in the work and success of the day, occupying the rebel rifle-pits that night, and capturing more than their number in prisoners.

"The Fort Fisher picket was relieved about noon of the next day, and returned to camp. All hands were compelled to come out on inspection and dress parade that afternoon; and immediately afterwards a detail of one hundred and fifty men relieved our regular pickets in front, who had been out since the morning before,—i.e., thirty-six hours. At midnight a working-party was also sent out to move forward our picket abatis to the new line. At three o'clock on the morning of the 27th, mounted Orderly Keith came with orders to have the regiment fall in at four and stand by the breastworks. Lively firing was going on all along, but nothing momentous occurred, and at sunrise the line broke ranks and fell to cooking coffee.

"The experience of the regiment for the next six days cannot be set forth in a more readable manner than as it stands recorded in the spicy diary of Lieut. Homer S. Curtis, who became acting adjutant after the affair at Fort Fisher, although still retained as ordnance officer.

"March 27. Brisk skirmish and a charge just before light on Second Division picket-line. Some movement near the lookout to-day that looked like a charge; but none came off. Picket firing all day. Our picket not relieved. Got four thousand E. B. cartridges from division ordnance officer. Charley Gosley runs the adjutant's department pretty much. Capt. Woodman (A. A. A. G.) ordered detail of five officers and two hundred men for night fatigue. Battalion drill one hour P.M.

"March 28. Spring-like, hazy, fair. Fatigue detail came into camp at three A.M., and the entire force was called up and got under arms at four. Some officers not very punctual. Tuttle, Fenn, etc., got rats from the colonel. We stood till sunrise, and returned to quarters. Very funny, especially for the boys that have not had any sleep in three nights. Plenty of swearing. I went over to brigade guard-mount, and made a bull of it considerable. Johnny a very showy sergeant-major, but just a bit careless or so. Parts of Sheridan's cavalry—Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth Corps—moving by to the left. Good news. Occupation of Goldsboro' by Sherman, and junction of Terry, Schofield, and Sherman. Our loss on the 25th is found to have been five hundred; rebel loss, six thousand.

"March 29. Orderly came from brigade headquarters at one A.M. with orders for detail of five officers and two hundred men for reserve picket, and orders for regiment to be under arms from four o'clock till sunrise. I got up and made the details, and had just lain down when Maj. Fenn came riding up and ordered the regiment out instanter. So we got out and stood in line until broad daylight. Capt. Redway, brigade officer of the day. Very quiet all along the lines through the day. Troops and trains moving to left all day. Gen. Mackenzie with his cavalry corps, two thousand strong, went by. Johnny Wheeler called at brigade headquarters. We were ordered and re-ordered to pack up and be all ready to move, but stayed the day out in camp finally. Tremendous cannonade after taps, evening. We hustled out into line double quick, stood an hour or so, then went in.

"March 30. Got out about five o'clock A.M., and stood in line about an hour, in a right smart rain. Post guard-mount. Swept out huttie, built fire, and took a doze. The adjutant's tent is a leaky old concern, and so cribbed up that one cannot move at all. Col. H. says we are to make a charge at daylight.

"March 31. Rained all last night, and until ten A.M. Orders came at eleven o'clock last night to pack up everything, shelters and all, for a march. This was accomplished in a few minutes, and we stood ready to form line some time, when Capt. Gordon came over to advise us that the movement was temporarily suspended, and that the men might lie down to sleep, but not unpack knapsacks. Got orders soon after for picket detail of four officers and one hundred and forty-seven men. Also to form line at three o'clock A.M. We got out and stood shivering in the rain until daylight, when we went in and put up canvas. Heavy firing on left all A.M. At two P.M. orders came to pack up everything all ready for a move. We go this time, sure, to see what the racket is down on the left. Moved out, as per order, formed line, stacked arms, unslung knapsacks, and went back to quarters to wait orders to move, and to draw rations. Waited patiently until retreat, until tattoo, and then got orders to take in guns and packs, and sleep in clothes, all convenient for getting out quickly. One thousand rumors around,—all lies, of course, except the one about the strengthening of the reb lines in our front. Stories of the Fifth Corps swinging across the S. S. R. road and occupying it, besides also threatening the reb right flank. Bosh! If there were anything in it we should have official despatches a plenty. Good-night.

"April 1. Lovely day. We got out at three o'clock A.M., and got up all the men. Sent one hundred and fifty out as picket reserve; formed line with the remaining three companies, but soon a staff-officer came over and ordered them out to the line. So every man but the guard went out. Col. Hubbard had the camp patrolled for bummers, but got only a lean haul. Companies returned after sunrise. New picket went out at nine A.M.,—one hundred and fifty men under Lucas, Anderson, Hoyt, and Griswold. Smart firing in the morning on the left, but it soon died away, and it remained very quiet all the rest of the day. At two P.M. I rode out to new picket-line, which is one-half mile in advance of the old one. Found everything lovely,—boys gay, rebs civil. Saw Richmond Sentinel of this morning,—exchanged by Fenn of 'G' for Herald,—no news in it. We had a dress parade, and the day altogether has seemed like one of the old fort days, but it cannot last long, and even as I write the quartermaster has orders to pack up all his stores.

"Ten o'clock P.M. Colonel has just had all the commandants of companies up at his quarters, giving them instructions for the morrow. We are to move out by the left flank some time in the night, and form line near Fort Fisher, by brigades, in two lines. Our brigade is on the right of the corps, our regiment on the right of the brigade, in the front line. The whole army is to charge simultaneously at four o'clock in the morning, and colonel says we are to take Petersburg. I am very hopeful.

"The events of the next twenty-four hours justified the hopefulness of Lieut. Curtis.

"On the 1st of April, Sheridan, with cavalry and infantry, won a great victory at Five Forks over the divisions of Pickett and Bushrod Johnson. Mr. Pollard tells us that on that occasion five thousand rebels, 'having got the idea that they were entrapped, threw down their arms and surrendered themselves as prisoners.' Indeed, the rebels all along the line seemed about this time to have 'got the idea' badly; and Gen. Grant determined to strengthen their hold upon it by a shotted salute in honor of Sheridan's victory at Five Forks. It was about eleven o'clock on the evening of the 1st of April, and all quiet, when bang! went a gun from Fort Wadsworth. Heavy firing at a distance of three miles or more will not start soldiers from their bunks. Every shot may destroy a regiment or sink a ship: it will not destroy their repose. But Fort Wadsworth was too near camp,—only fifty paces off,—and the men were constrained to look out and see the cannonading of which that shot was the opening gun. Waterloo's opening roar and Hohenlinden's far flashes were but the work of pop-guns in comparison with the artificial earthquakes that shook Petersburg and its bristling environs, and the lightnings which came in such quick succession that the jaws of darkness were not able to devour them up. Mr. Pollard says of it,—

"'On the night of the 1st April, Grant celebrated the victory of Five Forks, and performed the prelude of what was yet to come by a fierce and continuous bombardment along his lines in front of Petersburg. Every piece of artillery in the thickly-studded forts, batteries, and mortar-beds joined in the prodigious clamor; reports, savagely, terrifically crashing through the narrow streets and lanes of Petersburg, echoed upwards; it appeared as if the fiends of air were engaged in a sulphurous conflict.'

"At about midnight the regiment was called up and ordered to pack up everything. Knapsacks, however, were to be left behind; and, to secure greater silence, canteens were to be worn on the right side. Six companies and a half fell in (the rest being on picket), and proceeded to brigade headquarters, and thence to the neighborhood of Patrick's Station. All mounted officers were ordered to leave their horses inside the earthworks; and the division moved out in front, a little to the left of the lookout. A heavy picket-fire was opened, under cover of which the lines were formed, three or four deep in all except our brigade, which had only two, although on the right of the division, and our regiment (of course) in the front line. The charge was expected to come off at four o'clock, but day began to dawn before the signal-gun was fired. Skinner had command of the right wing of the battalion, Jones of the left wing, Hubbard of the whole. The advance was made en echelon by brigades, with a great rush and yell, although a part of the First Brigade (the Jerseys) broke and ran ingloriously. The advance was over precisely the same ground as on the 25th of March, and the firing came from the same battery and breastworks, although not quite so heavy. Lieut.-Col. Skinner and seven enlisted men were wounded,—none of them mortally.

"A shot, which, judging from the hole it made, was something smaller than a minie-ball, struck Skinner on the side, under the right arm, went through an overcoat, wadded blouse, and vest, pierced the skin and traveled seven inches on the ribs, then came out and sped on, and may have wounded another man, for aught that is known to the contrary. There was but little firing on our side, but with bayonets fixed the boys went in,—not in a very mathematical right line, but strongly and surely,—on, on, until the first line was carried. Then invigorated and greatly encouraged by success, they pressed on,—the opposing fire slackening every moment,—on, on, through the abatis and ditch, up the steep bank, over the parapet, into the rebel camp that had but just been deserted. Then, and there, the long-tried and ever-faithful soldiers of the Republic SAW DAYLIGHT! and such a shout as tore the concave of that morning sky it were worth dying to hear. On the ground where so long the rebels had formed and drilled their battalions our line was now reformed, and then pushed on, over the hills and far away, across a pike and past a telegraph, which was quickly cut, then on, until at length Col. Hubbard found himself and his half battalion alone on the Boydtown plank road. After cutting off and burning a small wagon-train loaded with medical stores, we marched back to the rebel camp, where we found the remainder of our brigade holding the right of the captured line. The rest of the corps was in line two miles farther to the left, where it had some sharp fighting. Our skirmishers took several works and guns, but for want of support had to relinquish them, and the rebels, following up their slight advantage, turned the guns on us, making it very uncomfortable for a few minutes,—our flank being quite uncovered,—when, suddenly, hurrah! a column of reinforcements come over the hill by Fort Fisher. The rebels turn their guns in that direction, but to no purpose; for the Twenty-fourth Corps marches steadily forward, goes into line by regiments, advances a heavy skirmish-line, and then a superb line of battle, whereupon the enemy abandon their works and flee. This advance of the Twenty-fourth Corps was one of the most magnificent sights our soldiers ever saw: it drove the Rebellion before it as the hurricane drives dead leaves. Our men watched the charge until the line was a mile to the right, then moved inside of our own works and rested an hour.

"The corps followed the Second Corps,—all except our brigade, which was detached and ordered to report to Gen. Parke, commanding the Ninth Corps. We marched to the right, by the old camp near Warren's Station, and up the corduroy to the rear of Fort Hell, where a rest of an hour was made, in a fiercely hot sun. Then the brigade advanced through a covered way, past Fort Hell, and out in front to the works that had been captured early that morning by Hartranft's division of the Ninth Corps. There the men lay down in muddy trenches, among the dying and the dead, under a most murderous fire of sharpshooters. There had been charges and countercharges, but our troops held all they had gained. At length the hot day gave place to chilly night, and the extreme change brought much suffering. The men had flung away whatever was flingawayable during the charge of the morning and the subsequent hot march,—as men always will under like circumstances,—and now they found themselves blanketless, stockingless, overcoatless, in cold and damp trenches, and compelled by the steady firing to lie still or adopt a horizontal, crawling mode of locomotion which did not admit of speed enough to quicken the circulation of the blood. Indeed, it was very cold. Some took the clothing from the dead and wrapped themselves in it; others, who were fortunate enough to procure spades, dug gopher holes and burrowed. At daylight, Col. Fiske and the Sixty-fifth New York clambered over the huge earthwork, took possession of Fort Hell, opened a picket fire, and fired one of the guns in the fort, eliciting no reply. Just then a huge fire in the direction of the city, followed by several explosions, convinced our side that Lee's army had indeed left. The regiment was hastily got together, ninety muskets being all that could be produced, and sent out on picket to relieve the Two Hundredth Pennsylvania. The picket-line advanced, and, meeting with no resistance, pushed on into the city. What regiment was the first to enter the city is, and probably ever will be, a disputed question. The Second Connecticut claims to have been in first, but Col. Hubbard had ordered the colors to remain behind when the regiment went out on the skirmish line, and consequently the Stars and Stripes that first floated over captured Petersburg belonged to some other regiment. Col. Hubbard was, however, made provost-marshal of the city, and for a brief while dispensed government and law in that capacity. But city life was not conducive to good order and military discipline, and the brigade shortly moved out and marched gayly down to the old camp, four miles away. After remaining there two hours everything of a portable nature was packed up, a farewell leave taken of the camp near Warren's Station, and the line of march taken up due west. The brigade now furnished a striking illustration of the difference between the marching and fighting strength of an army. It had come down from Petersburg to camp numbering three hundred; now nearly two thousand men, all of the Second Brigade, started in pursuit of the retreating Rebellion.

"And now came the day of the last fight for the Second Connecticut. It was the 6th of April, 1865. Reveille sounded at 4.30, and at 5.30 the lines were formed for an advance upon the enemy, who were in force immediately in front. The affair is thus described by Lieut. Curtis:

"After marching back two miles on the road by which we came on the previous evening, we halted for half an hour, and were then ordered back to the ground from which we had just come. We had just halted there, after a muddy, slippery march, and were mourning that Lee had outwitted and escaped us, when, hark! Firing in advance and to the right. All right. We'll have him yet. We moved on and struck the Danville Railroad at Amelia Court-House, marching alongside of it for two miles, and on it for a mile more, toward Burkesville. Here we met Johnny Wheeler, wounded, and Mackenzie and his cavalry. We struck off west-northwest from the railroad and marched steadily forward, hour after hour, toward a distant cannonade. At four o'clock we began to overtake the cavalry, who reported everything going on well. We passed fifteen hundred prisoners just taken from Messrs. R. E. Lee & Co. The firing grew heavier and nearer, and at five o'clock we reached the cavalry battle-field of the morning. Although tired and 'played out,' there was no halt for us, but we moved forward into position, advancing beyond our batteries, which were playing a lively tune from a hill close by. When formed, the line was advanced—sometimes by brigade front and sometimes by a flank, but always on, until we crossed Sailor's Creek* and came to a halt under a steep bank, from the crest of which the rebels poured down a murderous fire. Two lines were formed, the Second Connecticut Volunteer Artillery and Sixty-fifth New York in the second line. Everything being ready, 'Forward!' sounded along the whole line, and away we went up the hill, under a very hot fire. It was tough work to get over the crest, but at last we got the Johnnies started, and made good time after them. The Second Heavies captured Mahone's headquarters train and many prisoners, besides one battle-flag. We were badly broken, but after running on for some distance were finally halted and reformed. Col. Hubbard and Maj. Jones came up in time to present us to Gens. Sheridan, Wright, Wheaton, and Hamblin, who all rode along to the front. We also advanced soon after, and found things in a promising condition. Gen. Ewell and staff and several thousand other prisoners had been taken, together with wagon-trains, guns, caissons, and small-arms without number. One of the prisoners told us that they had but three guns left. Our loss in the charge was seven wounded, three of them mortally,—viz., Emory W. Castle and Erastus W. Converse, of D, and Charles Griswold, of F. At ten o'clock we moved up a mile further to the front, and bivouacked for the night.

"When the long and firmly treading battalion of the Nineteenth Connecticut moved from Camp Dutton to Litchfield Station, on the 15th of September, 1862, followed by hundreds of relatives and friends, none but God knew what was to be its history. We have now found out. The regiment has fought its last battle, and made up its Roll of Honor."

* A small tributary of the Appomattox.

LEVERTTE WARD WESSELLS.

Leverette Ward Wessells, youngest son of Dr. Ashbel and Grace (Ward) Wessells, was born in the town of Litchfield, Conn., July 28, 1819, where he continued to reside till he was twenty years of age, receiving an academical education. In his twentieth year, in consequence of serious hemorrhages of the lungs, he went to Florida and remained two years with his brother, H. W. Wessells (then lieutenant Second U. S. Infantry), during the progress of the Seminole war.

After his return to Litchfield he entered upon the study of medicine with Dr. John S. Wolcott, but was obliged to abandon it at the end of two years on account of ill health. In 1842 he was appointed deputy sheriff, performing the duties of that office for nine years. Upon the death of Reuben M. Woodruff, in 1849, he was appointed postmaster of Litchfield, Conn., retaining that position during President Fillmore's administration.

In 1854 he was elected high sheriff of Litchfield County, and continued to hold the office by re-election for twelve consecutive years.

In 1862, at the earnest solicitation of Governor Buckingham, he organized the Nineteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, or the Litchfield County Regiment, as it was termed (afterwards known as the Second Heavy Artillery), and was commissioned colonel of the same July 28, 1862. The flower of the county was enrolled in the "Old Nineteenth," and no regiment achieved a more honorable record. In September, 1862, Col. Wessells was ordered to Alexandria, Va., with his regiment, where it performed provost duty until the following winter, when it moved to Fort Worth and became a part of Gen. R. O. Tyler's brigade. In April, 1863, Col. Wessells assumed command of the "Second Brigade, defenses south of the Potomac," occupying Forts Williams, Ellsworth, Lyon, and A, B, C, and D redoubts, in which he continued until the following September, when ill health obliged him to resign. In December of the same year he was sent to Virginia by Governor Buckingham to procure re-enlistments in the First Regiment Heavy Artillery, and on the 9th of February, 1864, was appointed provost-marshal of the Fourth District of Connecticut, with headquarters at Bridgeport, where he remained until the close of the war, since which time he has been engaged in the drug business at Litchfield, Conn.

In 1868, Col. Wessells was nominated for treasurer on the State ticket, with Marshall Jewell as nominee for Governor. He was also tendered the nomination the following year, but declined it.

In politics he is a staunch Republican and as such represented Litchfield in the State Legislature in 1879, though the town was strongly Democratic. In January of the same year he was appointed quartermaster-general by Governor Andrews, and performed the duties of that office during his administration. He married Mary M. Parks, of Litchfield, Conn., November, 1840, and to them have been born two children, viz.: Grace, wife of Dr. Howard E. Gates, of Litchfield (they have one daughter, Annie Howard), and Harry Walton Wessells, a merchant of Litchfield.

ENGAGEMENTS.

The regiment participated in the following battles: North Anna, near Mechanicsville, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Winchester, Fisher's Hill, Cedar Creek, Hatcher's Run, Fort Fisher, Petersburg, and Sailor's Creek.

The following is a list of the colonels who at different times had command of the regiment: Leverette W. Wessells, resigned Sept. 15, 1863; Elisha S. Kellogg, killed at Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864; James Hubbard, declined commission; Ranald S. Mackenzie, promoted brigadier-general Dec. 28, 1864; James Hubbard, brevet brigadier general, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

CASUALTIES.

Killed in action, 134;* died of wounds, 100; died of disease, 152;† missing, 24; died in prison, 21; total, 431.

* The adjutant-general's report places the number at one hundred and forty-three.

† Adjutant-general's report, one hundred and eighty-six.

The regiment was mustered out Aug. 18, 1865, and on the 20th reached New Haven, "and passed up Chapel Street amid welcoming crowds of people, the clangor of bells, and a shower of rockets and red lights that made the field and staff horses prance with the belief that battle had come again. After partaking of a bounteous entertainment prepared in the basement of the State-House, the regiment proceeded to Grapevine Point, where, September 5th, they received their pay and discharge, and the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery passed into history."

THE DEAD OF THE REGIMENT.

Field and Staff.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Col. Elisha S. Kellogg.
At Winchester.—Maj. James Q. Rice.
At Fort Fisher.—Sergt.-Maj. E. Goodwin Osborne.

Company A.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—1st Sergt. Joseph P. Parks, Corp. Albert A. Jones, Corp. Benjamin Meeker, Lyman J. Smith, Jr., Robert Watt, John Iffland, Willard H. Parmelee, Almon D. Bradley, Oliver Hitchcock, William Barton, William Brashing, George Everett, Stephen Fallen, Patrick Ryan, Robert Scull, Homer F. Tilford, James Bradley.

At Winchester.—Joseph Gardner.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Capt. Luman Wadhams, Corp. George Wilson Potter, Corp. Charles Adam, Jr., Corp. Apollos C. Morse, Andrew J. Brooker, Truman Mallory, George Savage, Amos H. Stillson, Ranson E. Wood, John Benedict.

At Winchester.—Horatio P. Bennett, Corp. Franklin M. Bunnell.

At Cedar Creek.—Corp. John L. Wilcox.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—David M. Candee, Benjamin H. Rathbun.

Died of Disease.—Watson Parmelee, William S. Wilson, Henry M. Miner, Nelbert P. Newberry, Corp. Joseph E. Coe, Norman L. Barber, Julius Winship, Edward F. Perkins, Lewis Ludington, Sylvester Lampson, Simeon W. Loud.

Company B.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Corp. Walter C. Sparks, Corp. Monroe Whiteman, Corp. Myron R. Sterry, Robert W. Bragg, Francis Burger, Daniel O. Page, Samuel V. Benedict, James Caul, John Handel, Ezra B. Morris, Adam O'Strander, Franklin D. Stevens, John B. Stehl, George A. Skiff, Elias P. Scott, Charles H. Segur, Henry Voelker, Henry Wiesing.

At Winchester.—Daniel Glaven.

At Fisher's Hill.—Lucien O. Spencer.

At Fort Fisher.—Corp. John Best.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Wilson W. Scoville, John W. Coons, Henry Tanner, Chester A. Johnson, Amos Woodin, Sergt. John McGraw.

At Winchester.—2d Lieut. William H. Cogswell.

At Fisher's Hill.—Corp. Jacob F. Rapp.

At Cedar Creek.—Sergt. Henry S. Wheeler, Robert Ames.

Missing at Cold Harbor.—Corp. William Dunn, David Lacy.

Prisoner at Cold Harbor.—Reuben R. Speed.

Died of Disease.—John H. White, Charles D. Hall, James Ostrander, Jr., Sergt. Moses Cook, Jr., Peter Ostrander, Carlf Volnsen, Thomas Hyer, Almeron Burton, William S. Horton, Henry Winters, Patrick Delaney, Gurdon C. Davidson, Hiram Fanning.

Company C.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Sergt. David J. Thorpe, George W. Pierce, John H. Ure, Ezra B. Bouton, Corp. Orson M. Miner.

At Winchester.—Corp. William H. Beach, Peter Burke, Jeremiah McCarty.

At Cedar Creek.—Corp. George W. Cleveland, Corp. William H. Bray, Cyrus M. Bartholomew.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Christian Bjornsen, Lucius B. Palmer, Corp. Erastus Cleaveland.

At Winchester.—Anson F. Balcom.

At Cedar Creek.—Corp. Henry L. Vaill, Albert M. Scoville.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Alfred Blackman.

Died of Disease.—1st Lieut. William McK. Rice, Sergt. Matthew H. Huxley, Daniel E. Lyman, Arthur G. Kellogg, William S. Robinson, Orlando Evans, John H. Stewart, Corp. Uri Wadhams, William H. Norville, William H. Herald, George W. Brown, Giles A. Cone, William Butler, William H. Hart, Andrew H. Sanford, James M. Hayes, Henry M. Woodruff, Corp. Willard N. Wadhams, Royal G. Andrus, Harlow S. Johnson, Milo Young, James Rogers, John J. Abbott.

COMPANY D.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Pomeroy Beecraft, Philo A. Fenn, Henry W. Miller, John Murphy.

At Petersburg.—George Comstock (real name George Roberts), Walter M. Fox.

At Winchester.—Richard Beebe, Hiram F. Coley, James Slater.

At Fisher's Hill.—Qr.-Mr. Sergt. David B. Wooster.

At Cedar Creek.—Capt. Benjamin F. Hosford, Corp. Edward C. Hopson, Corp. William Wright, John H. Conklin, Daniel Van Allen, Charles R. Warner.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—George L. Beach, Corp. Edgar J. Castle, Thomas Mann, Walter Stone, Hiram Mattoon.

At Petersburg.—Corp. Charles E. Guernsey, Jacob Demuth, John Grieder.

At Winchester.—George H. S. Goodwin, George E. Clark.

At Cedar Creek.—Henry Gilbert, Henry Lynch.

At Sailor's Creek.—Emery W. Castle, Erastus W. Converse.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Benjamin Filley, James Strawn, Charles D. Hanson.

Missing.—Walter Oates, William S. Barnes.

Died of Disease.—Corp. Frederick B. Webster, Corp. William W. Johnson, Burritt H. Tolles, Charles J. Cleveland, George H. Holt, Franklin W. Hubbard, Sergt. Edgar B. Lewis, Josiah J. Wadsworth, William W. Richardson, James H. Pritchard, Sergt. Salmon B. Smith, David Davenport, Horatio G. Perkins.

COMPANY E.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Corp. Frederick W. Daniels, Corp. Alonzo J. Hull, Corp. Willard Hart, Corp. Henry A. Roxford, Frederick D. Painter, Myron Ferris, Lewis Downs, Alfred Commins, John M. Teeter, George A. Tatro, Charles H. Stanley, Ruel H. Perkins, Daniel McDonald, James Mooney, Walter Martin, William Kelly, Patrick Kaine.

At Petersburg.—Jared P. Evarts.

At Cedar Creek.—John McDonough.

Died of Wounds at Cold Harbor.—Sylvester Barrett, Qr.-Mr. Sergt. James A. Green, Elizur Maltbie, Stephen J. Green.

At Petersburg.—Birdseye Gibbs, Capt. Oren H. Knight.

At Winchester.—Corp. George H. Pendleton, Corp. John H. Boughton, Asa Humaston.

At Cedar Creek.—David Backus.

Missing at Cold Harbor.—2d Lieut. Calvin B. Hatch, Corp. James R. Baldwin, James Simpson, John J. Toole, John Scully, Boughton D. Knapp, Henry C. Kent, John Cook, Bernard Carberry, Martin Blake, Sherman Apley.

At Petersburg.—Charles Bohan.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Michael Donahue, Allen B. Young, Matthew Fitzgerald.

Died of Disease.—2d Lieut. Hiram D. Gaylord, George W. Hurlbut, William S. Hurlbut, Darwin E. Starks, Jerome Preston, Julius Woodford, William R. Hubbard, Joseph Robinson, Julius Rogers, Edwin E. Rowe, Charles Long.

Killed by Accident.—Manwaring Green.

COMPANY F.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Sergt. Samuel E. Gibbs, John E. Hall.

At Petersburg.—William H. Colt.

At Winchester.—Sergt. Lorenzo P. Light, Sergt. Alfred C. Alford, Timothy O'Callaghan.

At Cedar Creek.—George Simons.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—George N. Andrus.

At Fisher's Hill.—Cornelius H. Merrell.

At Winchester.—Edmund Dougherty.

At Sailor's Creek.—Charles A. Griswold, Jay J. Cushman.

Died in Rebel Prisons or After Release.—Robert Cahill, Solomon G. Hayward.

Missing.—John Busby.

Died of Disease.—Harlan D. Benedict, Augustus H. Barrett, Albert Beckwith, Richard S. Thompson, Corp. William G. Henderson, Philander Emmons, Peter Riley, Lorenzo K. Lamoine, Harvey Ford, Philander Eggleston, Horatio G. Eggleston, Henry Van Dusen, Charles Tuttle, Jefferson T. Lent.

COMPANY G.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Qr.-Mr. Sergt. Joseph B. Payne.

At Winchester.—Wilson Waterman, Chauncey L. Warner, Henry Peck.

At Cedar Creek.—Corp. Charles J. Reed, Corp. George W. Page, Elisha Soule.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Horace Sickmund.

At Winchester.—Corp. Patrick Troy, James H. Vanburen, Qr.-Mr. Sergt. Charles Ingersoll, George Clinton.

At Cedar Creek.—James M. Palmer, Barney Kinney.

At Fort Fisher.—Corp. Dwight B. Studley, Sylvester Prout.

Missing.—Robert Bard, Corp. James Stanley.

Died of Disease.—Myron H. Hubbell, Philo Cole, Lucien Rouse, Merritt Stone, Charles C. Herman, Harvey Clark, John H. Bradley, Paschal P. North, Herman E. Bonney, Lewis Sawyer, Henry H. Waters, Albert A. Peck, Allen Williams, John M. Hamblin, William White, Sergt. Albert Robinson, John Lapham, William Slover.

COMPANY H.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Henry C. Straight, Charles W. Jackson, Theodore A. Barnes.

At Winchester.—2d Lieut. Horace Hubbard, 1st Lieut. Franklin M. Candee.

At Cedar Creek.—Edward Mead.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Jerome Johnson.

At Petersburg.—Harvey Pease.

At Winchester.—Capt. Frederick M. Berry.

At Cedar Creek.—Daniel Payne.

Missing.—Patrick Lynch.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Herbert H. Reed, Moses L. Wigglesworth.

Died of Disease.—Henry A. Calhoun, William C. Warner, William H. Dains, Lewis St. John, Sheldon Clark, Sergt. Garwood R. Merwin, Ira S. Bradley, Henry Bridge, Sylvester C. Platt, Joseph R. Loveridge, Willis Hartwell.

COMPANY I.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Friend F. Kane, Almon D. Galpin.

At Winchester.—Charles Barney.

At Cedar Creek.—William Fitzgerald, Samuel B. Ferris, Addison Cook.

At Fort Fisher.—David Cramer, Thomas Wheeler.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Curtis Wheeler.

At Winchester.—Sergt. Walter J. Orton, Corp. Charles F. Flushman, George W. Locklin.

At Cedar Creek.—Seymour Lobdell, Sergt. George E. Judson, Charles Bennet, Corp. Patrick Brady.

At Noel's Station.—Ham A. Barnes.

Missing.—Timothy F. Walsh.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Albert Woodruff, Marshall Lines.

Died of Disease.—John S. White, James C. Polley, Harvey H. Fox, Corp. Henry F. Hard, Charles L. Thomas, Corp. Horatio S. Thomas, Banks Lounsbury, Timothy Elwell, James Sidney, Isaac Briggs, Corp. Edward Bell, Joseph Colonel, Corp. Cornelius Goebel, John K. Northrop.

COMPANY K.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—Sergt. George H. McBurney, John Warner, Robert Sothergill, David D. Lake, Andrew Jackson, Edmund Hickey, Peter Gallagher, Henry B. Bristol, Isaac Baldwin, Franklin Andrus.

At Petersburg.—Henry H. Hyatt.

At Winchester.—Lucien Button.

At Cedar Creek.—Alexander D. Kasson, John H. R. Hipwell.

Died of Wounds Received at Cold Harbor.—Jacob Wentworth, Edward B. Griffin, Charles Reed, Asahel N. Perkins, John Munson, William B. Leach, Patrick Kennedy, Owen Cromney.

At Petersburg.—Alfred June.

At Winchester.—1st Lieut. James P. McCabe.

At Cedar Creek.—Albert J. Miner, Charles A. Johnson, Charles Haviland.

Missing.—Charles H. Russell.

Died in Rebel Prisons.—Sergt. Lant Ryan, Amaziah Downs, Noble Andrus.

Died of Disease.—Corp. Wesley T. Glover, Charles B. Ferris, Sergt. William S. Watson, Fifer George A. Hoyt, Leander Ide, George W. Harrington, Eben Norton, John Burch, Anton Barth, Wolcott Cook, Corp. Sidney A. Law, Henry Colby.

COMPANY L.

Killed at Cold Harbor.—John Martin.
At Winchester.—August Berg.
Died of Wounds Received at Winchester.—William Day.
Near Tolopotomy.—John Pollard, Corp. Norman Mansfield.
At Cold Harbor.—Sergt. George Parker, Amos L. Ives.
Died in Rebel Prisons or After Release.—Fred. Hooker, George Grover, Patrick Butler, Corp. William Dixon.
Died of Disease.—Corp. Henry A. Hubbell, Corp. William Morton, Horace B. Wood, Fred. Slade, William Malloy, Thomas B. Foster, Charles Davenport.

COMPANY M.

Killed on Picket at North Anna River.—Patrick Keegan.
At Cold Harbor.—Samuel S. Osborne.
At Winchester.—Abner W. Scott.
Died of Wounds Received at Fort Fisher.—John Fay.
At Winchester.—Thomas Doyle.
At Petersburg.—Thomas Colburn.
Missing.—Aaron Joseph, William Bergen.
Died of Disease.—John Thomas, Lorin L. Morris, James H. Case.

WOUNDED.

FIELD AND STAFF.

Col. (afterwards Brig.-Gen. and Bvt. Maj.-Gen.) Ranald S. Mackenzie.

Maj. William B. Ells, at Cold Harbor. A musket-ball passed through the bone of the right leg, between the knee and ankle, in such a manner as to inflict permanent injury.

Maj. (afterwards Lieut.-Col.) Jeffrey Skinner, was twice wounded; first by a shell at Winchester, and at the capture of Petersburg, April 2, 1865, by a musket-ball in the side. In the first instance he was absent from duty not more than a month, and only six weeks after receiving the latter wound, although it was quite severe.

Capt. (afterwards Maj.) Chester D. Cleveland, then ordnance officer of First Division, Sixth Corps, was slightly wounded in the arm at Cedar Creek, but did not report it.

Sergt.-Maj. (afterwards 2d Lieut.) Frederick A. Lucas, received a wound in the left thigh at Cedar Creek, which disabled him for several months. He returned to the regiment just in time to receive another wound (a slight one) in the affair at Hatcher's Run. He was promoted for gallantry at Winchester and Fisher's Hill, and Col. Mackenzie said, just after those battles, that he never saw a braver man than Sergt.-Maj. Lucas.

1st Lieut. and Adjt. Theodore F. Vaill, at Fort Fisher. Flesh wound, left hip, by cast-iron ball from spherical case-shot.

COMPANY A.

At Cold Harbor.

Q.-M. Sergt. George W. Mason. Head. Very severe, and at first supposed to be mortal, but after many months he recovered, and was mustered as captain and assistant quartermaster in the general service, having been commissioned thereto by President Lincoln before he was wounded.
Watson Cogswell. Left arm.
Samuel Gunn. Shoulder.
Corp. Curtis P. Wedge. Right hand.
Corp. Seth Whiting. Hand.
Edward Hull. Buttocks.
Lyman F. Morehouse. Wrist.
James Ferris. Leg amputated.
Robert W. Coe. Arm amputated. Also wounded in toe.
Charles Belcher. Shoulder.
John Benedict. Breast.
Michael Bray. Hip.
John Bailey. Arm.
Charles Carter. Shoulder.
Robert Crawford. Arm.
Edson S. Dayton. Thigh.
Myron E. Kilbourn. Finger amputated.
John Lawlor. Both thighs.
David McBath. Arm.
Norman B. Perkins. Hand.
Harvey B. Perkins. Side.
James M. Prindle. Fingers.
Jason St. John. Knee. Had previously been wounded in the other knee, when a member of the Eighth Connecticut Volunteers.
Reuben A. Swift. Cheek and thigh.
George F. Waugh. Breast.
David P. Wetmore. Leg.
1st Lieut. Hubbard E. Tuttle. Head.
1st Lieut. Bushrod H. Camp. Leg.

At Winchester.

Frederick T. Jennings. Left hand and head. Wounded while passing over the knoll between the two ravines.
Capt. Alexander B. Shumway. Leg. Wounded where the regiment was first moved into action.
2d Lieut. Daniel E. Marsh. Arm. Wounded in the first ravine.
Watson Cogswell. Arm.
Corp. Henry T. Cable. Abdomen. Severe. Wounded while going from the first to the second ravine.
Edmund P. Aiken. Head.
James Moll. Leg. Real name James Moore. It was entered wrong at first, and, like that of Hiram U. Grant, had to remain wrong.
Edmund Haley. Leg.

At Fisher's Hill.

James L. Osborn. Side.

At Cedar Creek.

Sergt. William S. Smith. Head. Also at Fort Fisher in foot, slightly.
Thomas Morris. Face.
Joseph Moody. Ankle.

At Fort Fisher.

Corp. Horace N. Williams. Mouth. Ball could not be found, and after four months was taken out from the back of his neck. The muscles of one eye were cut or destroyed, so that it cannot be shut.

COMPANY B.

At Skirmish on Tolopotomy, May 31, 1864.

Mortimer M. Lillibridge. Foot.
William H. Surdam.

At Cold Harbor.

George W. Mansfield. Leg. Also wounded at Fisher's Hill in leg, and had thumb shot off at Sailor's Creek. Was scalded to death by collision on Housatonic Railroad on his way home, after being discharged. Had never been home since enlisting.
Daniel O. Page. Paroled prisoner.
Sergt. George L. Johnson. Hip.
Augustus Adams. Leg.
Horace Ball. Breast.
Richard Brown. Head.
Sheldon Carley. Head.
Newton W. Cogswell. Arm.
John Coons. Breast and back.
Ezra Clark. Neck.
William Connell. Arm amputated.
John Decker. Right hand.
Daniel Dunlavey. Left hand.
Henry Dryer. Foot.
John Funk. Neck.
Solomon Hinkley. Hand and head.
Roger Lyddy.
Peter Malath. Thigh.
Godfrey Miller. Ankle.
George McLane. Hand.
John McMahon.
Joel Snyder. Neck.
Henry Tanner. Thigh.
Daniel Taylor. Hand.
Charles O. Whaples. Thigh.
Francis Burger.

At Winchester.

Capt. William H. Lewis, Jr. Wrist.
Sergt. (afterwards Lieut.) William S. Cooper.
Peter Flood. Leg, flesh wound.
Gilbert McMahon. Leg.
Lewis Morey. Left arm.

At Fisher's Hill.

Luther E. Speed. Neck.
John McGovern. Finger amputated.
George W. Mansfield. Leg.

At Cedar Creek.

1st Sergt. James Parks. Left leg. Piece of shell.
Sergt. Curtis Hall. Right shoulder.

John Hughes. Fingers.
Robert Ames. Hip.

At Petersburg, April 2, 1865.

Corp. Daniel T. Clark.

At Sailor's Creek.

George W. Mansfield.

COMPANY C.

At the North Anna.

Charles G. Adams. Hip broken tearing up railroad near Noel's Station. Returned to duty before the close of the war.

At Skirmish on the Tolopotomy.

James A. Bryan. Leg.

At Cold Harbor.

Patrick Harvey. June 3d. Leg. Also wounded in leg at Winchester.
James P. Quinn. Foot.
Erastus Ruscoe. Arm.
Corp. Harrison Whitney. Left elbow.
Peter Bunts. Arm amputated.
George Munning. Heel.
Anson Johnson. Leg.
Henry W. Richards. Arm.
Royal Stone. Neck.
Enos Benedict. June 3d. Leg. Also at Cedar Creek, ankle.
Newton Calkins. June 7th. Hand.

At Petersburg.

Seelye Richmond. June 22d. Arm.

At Winchester.

Patrick Harvey. Leg.
Leonard Hower. Shoulder.
Sergt. Joseph Sherry. Left arm broken; never healed.
Sergt. (afterwards 2d Lieut.) Calvin L. Davis. Color-bearer. Right shoulder and arm.
Thomas B. Stewart. Lost both feet. Shell.
Lucien N. Whiting. Arm. Flesh wound.
1st Lieut. Dwight C. Kilbourn. Both arms. Flesh wound. Shell.
Anson F. Balcom. Foot. Flesh wound.
Walter E. Foster. Hip. Slight.

At Fisher's Hill.

Henry Barnes. Leg.

At Cedar Creek.

John Quinn. Hand. Died in California since the war.
Edmund Thorn. Foot and right hand.
Corp. Frederick A. Hills. Right shoulder-joint. Lost use of arm
Thomas O. Murphy. Neck.
James Moran. Both hips.
Capt. (afterwards Maj.) A. H. Fenn. Right arm amputated. Walked three miles to hospital after being wounded.
1st Lieut. Morris H. Sanford. Arm.
George W. Brown. Arm.
Henry D. Pierce. Arm.

At Hatcher's Run.

Charles G. Wheeler. Breast and arm.
Orange S. Brown. Finger.

At Fort Fisher.

William E. McKee. Brigade commander's orderly. Hip.

COMPANY D.

At the North Anna.

George W. Butler. Finger off.

At Cold Harbor.

Q.-M. Sergt. David B. Wooster. Thigh, slight. Afterwards killed at Fisher's Hill.
Charles Warner. Hand. He was from Watertown, and was not the Charles R. Warner killed at Cedar Creek.
Benjamin Williams. Leg. Flesh wound.
Justin O. Stoughton. Shoulder and back.
Nathan H. Geer. Leg thrice amputated. Died at Hartford in 1866.
Corp. Albert Alfred. Hand. Severe.
Lawrence A. Hunt. Face and mouth.
Everett Griswold. Hand. Finger amputated.
Chauncey Culver. Side and breast. Severe.
William Elliott. Back. Shell. Severe.
Jonathan Hall. Head. Spent ball in forehead.
Wallace E. Beach. Arm.
George T. Cook. Shoulder.
Zelotes F. Grannis. Head.
William H. Harrison. Arm.
Kelsey D. Clark. Head.
James Slater. Leg. (Afterwards killed at Winchester).

At Petersburg.

Matthias Walter. June 20th. Thigh. Severe.

At Winchester.

Corp. Ira H. Stoughton. Hip. Canister.
Corp. John A. Castle. Lung, and from shoulders to groin. Very severe.
Emery B. Taylor. Leg.
William H. Whitelaw. Thigh and head.
David Davenport. Leg. Slight.
Seeley Morse. Thigh.
G. E. Clark. Leg. Slight.
Philip H. Golde. Arm.
Robert Tompkins. Face.
George H. Bates. Side and back. Shell. Severe.
George Hancock. Mouth.
Frederick R. Keith. Wrist.

At Fisher's Hill.

Charles L. Bryan. Hand. Slight.
Swift McG. Hunter. Shoulder.
Thomas Bulluss. Shoulder.
Edward W. Conklin. Leg and buttocks.
Mark B. Stone. Arm.
Sergt. Samuel Brown. Heel.
James Boyce.
Sergt. Charles P. Traver, color-bearer. Arm. Promoted to second lieutenant for gallantry.

At Cedar Creek.

Charles L. Bryan. Leg. Severe. Took part in the final battles, but died since the war (February, 1866), of the effects of chronic diarrhœa. Buried in Watertown.
Corp. Henry N. Bushnell. Neck. Severe.
Corp. David A. Bradley. Neck.
William Lindley. Finger.
Henry Tolles. Head.
Sergt. (afterwards 2d Lieut.) Amzi P. Clark. Foot.
John L. Conklin.
Nehemiah Dutton. Side. Severe.
Robert Lowrie. Breast. Severe.
1st Lieut. (afterwards Capt.) Gad N. Smith. Leg.
Corp. John Curtin.
Corp. Ira Chapman. Arm.
Edward Dwyer. Heel.
Stephen C. Smith. Finger.
Henry Smith. Leg.

At Fort Fisher.

Sergt. David A. Bradley. Thigh. Severe.
George E. Atwood. Ankle.
Harvey Bronson. Shoulder. Severe.
William A. Stoddard. Leg.

COMPANY E.

At Cold Harbor.

Ernest Basney. Arm.
August Hain. Lung.
Peter Jordan. Jaw and hand.
Richard Gingell. Hand.
Patrick Lynch. Arm.
Jacob Leroy. Arm and finger.
Chauncey S. Loomis. Head.
Charles G. Mason. Leg.
Henry G. Mitchell. Arm and leg.
John O'Connell. Arm and leg.
Nathan Perry. Wrist and right shoulder.
Edward L. Riker. Arm.
William H. Seymour. Thigh.
Henry P. Warner. Foot.
Marcus J. Whitehead. Shot himself in hand.
Henry Wenzel. Head, thigh, and knee.
Erastus Woodworth. Leg.

Charles Walsh. Neck and wrist.
Christopher Arnold. Arm.
Edward Beach. Hip.
Samuel U. Brewer. Leg.
Corp. David Miller. Hand.
Corp. William A. Hosford. Shoulder.
Charles B. Howard. Lung.
Philip D. Carroll. Hand.

At Petersburg.

Robert Bulcraft. June 22d. Thigh.
Charles Walsh. June 26th. Foot.

At Winchester.

Edmund B. Sage. Groin.
Sergt. (afterwards Lieut.) William S. Cooper. Thigh.
—— Clark. Foot.
James Maloy. Thigh.
Martin Keaton. Leg.
Elbert B. Rowe. Knee.
Julius Collins. Groin.

At Fisher's Hill.

John Campbell. Leg.

At Cedar Creek.

Corp. Charles M. Burr. Leg amputated.

At Hatcher's Run.

Charles Walsh. Side.
Peter Larive. Finger.

COMPANY F.

At the North Anna.

Charles J. Thompson. Right arm.

At Cold Harbor.

Alexander Waters. Right hand.
James O. Hotchkiss. Left arm.
William Malthouse. Left leg.
John W. Shaw. Right leg.
William Burke. Breast and arm.
Bernard Kelly. Hand.
Thomas Smyth. Hand.
Alexander McCormick. Leg.
Timothy F. Kelly. Hand.

At Petersburg.

Sergt. E. D. Lawrence. Shoulder. Severe. June 22d.
Sergt. James H. Hakes. Hand. Slight. April 2, 1865.

At Winchester.

1st Lieut. Warren Alford. Slight.
Corp. Byron O. Hawley. Leg.
Corp. Ira D. Jones. Arm.
Corp. Thomas Noonan. Abdomen.
Parley B. Gammons. Thigh.
John Johnson. Foot.
Timothy F. Kelley. Right side.
James F. Keith. Back.
Ephraim Tucker. Arm.
Michael McMahon (3d).
Edwin Walden. Thigh.
Horace F. Calkins. Shoulder.
Joseph McManus. Right side. Slight.
George Simons. Hand. (Afterwards killed at Cedar Creek.)

At Fisher's Hill.

Corp. James H. Hakes. Shoulder.
John Rodemyer. Heel.

At Cedar Creek.

Sergt. Jesse Turner. Leg and buttocks.
Otis Billings. Leg.
Elisha L. Bancroft. Leg.
Dwight Case. Several wounds,—arm, side, and thigh.
Wayne B. Castle. Arm and side.
Robert Cahill. Leg. Also taken prisoner.
Morris E. Munger. Toe amputated.
Rufus B Smith. Arm.

At Sailor's Creek.

James Hyde. Arm. Slight.
Corp. Seth Haskins. Shoulder. Severe.

COMPANY G.

At Cold Harbor.

Charles Ingersoll. Shoulder. (Afterwards mortally wounded at Winchester.)
John Harris. Arm.
Andrew J. Bolles. June 5th. Foot.
Horace Sickmund. June 3d. Knee.
John Christie. June 8th. Hand.
1st Sergt. Henry Dean. Leg and thigh. Very severe.
John O'Dougherty. Arm.
Timothy Leonard. Hand.
John R. Thompson. Arm.
Wesley Bunnell. Hand.
John Byrnes. Arm.
Michael Curley. Leg amputated.
George Barton. Head.
John Hawver. Shoulder.

At Petersburg.

Patrick Murphy. Hand. Slight. April 2, 1865.

At Winchester.

Sergt. Julius A. Glover. Shoulders and head.
Corp. Alfred L. Benedict. Ankle.
Michael Gallagher. Arm.
William Frazier. Hip.
Asa Lee. Leg.
George A. Case. Leg.

At Cedar Creek.

Corp. Matthew P. Bell, Jr. Thigh and back. Very severe.
Corp. Edward Hawver. Thigh.
William C. Bowne. Leg.
Peter Gilmet. Foot.
Lewis Hamlin. Arm.
John Curtin. Arm.
Ira Chapman. Arm.

At Fort Fisher.

Sergt. Charles R Swift. Shoulder. Severe.
Corp. William Clinton. Leg. Slight.

COMPANY H.

At Cold Harbor.

Sergt. Lewis W. Mosher. Elbow. Shell.
Corp. Henry A. Burton. Left hand.
Corp. Uriah F. Snediker. Neck. Severe.
Charles H. Butler. Hand. Slight.
George Chamberlain. Leg. Slight.
John Harris. Toe amputated.
Henry M. Marshall. Right forearm.
Henry Paine. Heel.
Frank J. Warner. Arm and hand.
Hugh O'Donnell. Head. Slight.
Daniel T. Somers. Foot. Severe.
Alfred N. Whittlesey. Shoulder. Very severe.
Charles McDermott. June 8th. Hand. Accidental.
States B. Flandreau. Side. Shell. Slight. Had served in a rebel regiment.
Edward Harrington. Mouth.

At Petersburg.

Corp. William E. Disbrow. June 20th. Hit while carrying Harvey Pease to the rear.

At Winchester.

2d Lieut. James M. Snowden. Left wrist.
Charles H Butler. Lost right leg.
Corp. William E. Disbrow. Shoulder.
Charles E Gilbert. Thigh. Severe.
Apelles Jennings. Hand. Slight.
Henry W. Mallett. Hand.
Corp. Henry S. Gridley. Forearm.
Louis Weber. Nose.
Jeremiah Thompson. Thigh. Very severe.
Charles A. Way. Wrist.
Alfred Caldes. Knee. Slight.
Lucius S. Sherman. Foot.
Hiram Caldes. Several places with shell. Shoulder and hand.

At Cedar Creek.

1st Lieut. John M. Gregory. Right arm amputated at shoulder.
Sergt. Robert Erwin. Right shoulder. Slight.
Sergt. Minor A. Strong. Right thigh. Severe.
Sergt. Irwin C. Buckingham. Thigh.
Corp. Horace N. Sanford. Shoulder and leg. Slight.
Joseph S. Knowles. Lower jaw shattered.
Franklin Nichols. Back. Severe.
Alanson Peet. Right arm. Slight.
Edward O'Brien. Abdomen.
Homer S. Sackett. Chest.
William Smith. Foot.
Charles Hurd.

At Sailor's Creek.

Charles A. Way. Arm. Slight.
Frank J. Warner. Slight.

COMPANY I.

At the North Anna.

Charles Smith. Buttocks.

At Cold Harbor.

Charles S. Tyrrell. Back.
Corp. Benjamin Wellman. Left cheek and back.
Abner Bennett. Arm amputated.
Samuel Eastman. June 3d.
Daniel P. Galpin. Ankle.
Sergt. Thomas Shaw. Arm.
William Gregg. Lost right arm.
Levi Hotchkiss. Hand and arm.
John Hutchinson. Left breast.
Israel Lucas. Head.
Seymour Lobdell. Thigh. (Afterwards killed at Cedar Creek.)

At Petersburg.

Corp. William H. Smith. June 22d. Foot.
Ruel Hazen. June 22d. Face.

At Winchester.

2d Lieut. Orsamus R. Fyler. Wounded in the leg very much in the same manner as Maj. Ells at Cold Harbor.
Sergt. Cyrus T. Nicholson. Jaw and neck.
Sergt. Marcus D. Smith. Right forearm.
Corp. George W. Root. Leg.
Charles Botsford. Leg.
David Cramer. Foot. (Afterwards killed at Fort Fisher.)
John Harrigan. Elbow.
Thomas Harper. Leg.
Andrew Knoph. Leg.
Amos A. Lucas. Knee.
Theodore Lockwood. Leg.
William H. Reynolds. Knee.
Sergt. Hubbard Hotchkiss. Hand.
Henry Taylor. Breast.
John Turley. Shin.
Daniel B. Galpin. Leg.
William Webster. Knee.
Corp. Charles S. Terrell. Thigh.
Timothy F. Walsh. Knee. (Afterwards missing at Hatcher's Run.)
Corp. Charles T. Squires. Foot.

At Fisher's Hill.

William O'Brien. Breast.

At Cedar Creek.

Capt. Walter Burnham. Thigh. Spherical case-shot.
Sergt. Thomas Shaw. Arm.
Sergt. David W. Manning. Thigh.
Sergt. Warden Stammer. Leg.
John B. Parker.
William Davis. Hand.
John Hutchinson. Leg amputated.
David Backus.
Frederick R. Hard. Leg.
Edwin Holland. Leg.
John McQueeny. Head.
Jeremiah Newcomb. Leg.
Andrew Tiernay. Arm.
Daniel S. Taylor. Arm.
Theron M. Woodruff. Face.
Albert Woodruff.
Charles Wright. Shoulder.
Corp. Bela Potter. Leg.

At Fort Fisher.

Henry C. Rogers. Hand. Severe.

At Sailor's Creek.

Charles Fox. Arm. Slight.

COMPANY K.

At Cold Harbor.

Edgar J. Stewart. Back. Piece of shell.
Corp. James Tracy. Head and arm.
John A. Ludford. Right arm amputated.
Francis Sothergill. Arm.
Thomas Coleraine. Back. Sent to White House, and never heard from again.
George A. Wood. Hip and arm. Sent to White House, and never heard from.
William H. Stevens. Thigh.
Chauncey Stevens. Leg.
George Brown. Shoulder.
William W. Wheeler. Arm and shoulder.
Corp. Enoch M. Warhurst. Head.
Philo H. Bassett. Arm and breast.
Corp. Patrick Farrell. Head.
Stephen P. Harlow. Leg.
Homer W. Hodge. Arm.
Charles A. Hoyt. Leg.
Bernard C. Keegan. Lost leg.
George E. Taylor. Arm.
Evelyn L. Thorpe. Arm.

At Petersburg.

Truman Favereau. Thigh. June 22d.
Michael Convey. June 22d.
George H. Knapp. Left shoulder. June 22d.
John Ette. Right elbow. June 21st.

At Winchester.

William S. Hines. Head.

At Fisher's Hill.

Allen S. Tuttle. Finger.

At Cedar Creek.

William Hart. Hip.
Erwin Monroe. Left hip. Slight.
John Burns. Both legs.
Daniel Briggs. Thigh.
Anglebert Hermann. Breast.
George D. Beman. Right leg amputated below knee.

COMPANY L.

In Skirmish near the Tolopotomy.

Corp. James Wilson. Neck.
Henry McGinety. Leg.

At Cold Harbor.

Capt. James Deane. Forehead.
Sergt. (afterwards Lieut.) Austin P. Kirkham. Head.
Corp. (afterwards Sergt.-Maj.) John L. Parmelee. Leg.
James Gillen. Hand.
Edward Thomas (1st). Leg.
William Vrooman. Groin.
George Reed. Foot.
Thomas Dailey. Thigh. June 3d.

At Petersburg.

Sergt. George Parker. Side. June 20th.
Corp. George Babcock. Hand. Slight. April 2, 1865.
John Owens. Hand. Slight. April 2, 1865.

At Winchester.

Sergt. Andrew Clark. Leg.
Charles H. Ryan. Arm.
James Hyatt. Thigh.
Peter D. Nelson. Arm.
William Hall. Side.
James McDonald. Arm.
Frank Sabine. Shoulder.

At Cedar Creek.

2d Lieut. James M. Snowden. Arm.
Sergt. William A. Slenker. Leg.

At Hatcher's Run.

Jesse Cady. Thighs.

At Fort Fisher.

Corp. John Holt. Mouth. Slight.
2d Lieut. Admatha Bates. Foot. Slight.

COMPANY M.

At the North Anna.

James Graham. Thigh.

At Cold Harbor.

Sergt. Silas A. Palmer. Finger.
Sergt. William E. Canfield. Hand. Slight. June 3d.
Corp. Amaziah Livingston. Leg and arm.
Myron W. Schultz. Face.
Patrick Kennedy. Leg.
John Burns. Arm. June 3d.

At Petersburg.

Thomas Colburn. Shoulder. June 20th.
James Parker. June, 1864.

At Winchester.

Charles Brant. Back and hand.
Thomas Doyle. Back.
Martin H. Grube. Adbomen.
William Hoffman. Wrist.
Theodore Drune. Leg.

At Fisher's Hill.

Corp. William Munson. Leg.

At Cedar Creek.

Charles Allen. Leg.
Sergt. Henry Maskell.
Charles C. Bosworth. Wrist.
George Dayton. Leg.
James Fitzsimmons. Arm and breast.
Peter Ward. Leg and breast.
Henry Strih. Jaw.
Patrick Feneren. Ear.
Peter Hayden. Head.
Sergt. (afterwards Lieut.) Azarie N. Lamoreux. Shoulder.

At Hatcher's Run.

Starr L. Booth. Leg.
Peter Hayden. Head. Slight.

At Fort Fisher.

Sela Wheeler. Neck. Severe.
James Fay. Thigh. Severe.

CATALOGUE OF THE REGIMENT.

COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Colonels.

Leverette W. Wessels, res. Sept. 15, 1863.
Elisha S. Kellogg, killed in action June 1, 1864.
James Hubbard, declined commission.
Ranald S. Mackenzie, pro. to brigadier-general Dec. 28, 1864.
James Hubbard, bvt. brigadier-general; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Lieutenant-Colonels.

Elisha S. Kellogg, pro. to colonel Oct. 23, 1863.
Nathaniel Smith, res. for disability May 6, 1864.
James Hubbard, pro. to colonel Jan. 7, 1865.
Jeffrey Skinner, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William B. Ells, com. vacated, Lieut.-Colonel Hubbard having declined com. as colonel.

Majors.

Nathaniel Smith, pro. to lieutenant-colonel Nov. 5, 1863.
James Hubbard, pro. to lieutenant-colonel May 13, 1864.
William B. Ells, disch. Dec. 24, 1864.
James Q. Rice, killed in action Sept. 19, 1864.
Jeffrey Skinner, pro. to lieutenant-colonel Jan. 7, 1865.
Edward W. Jones, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chester D. Cleveland, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Augustus H. Fenn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Adjutants.

Charles J. Deming, res. July 30, 1863.
Bushrod H. Camp, disch. for disability Nov. 5, 1864.
Theodore F. Vaill, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Quartermasters.

Bradley D. Lee, pro. to captain Feb. 17, 1864.
Edward C. Huxley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Chaplains.

Jonathan A. Wainwright, res. Jan. 20, 1863.
Winthrop H. Phelps, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Surgeon.

Henry Plumb, disch. Aug. 12, 1865.

First Assistant Surgeons.

John W. Lawton, must. out to enter U. S. A. April 4, 1863.
Robert G. Hazzard, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Second Assistant Surgeons.

John W. Lawton. pro. to first assistant surgeon Oct. 28, 1862.
Robert G. Hazzard, pro. to first assistant surgeon July 21, 1863.
Judson B. Andrews, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Captains.

William Bissell, res. July 21, 1863.
James Hubbard, pro. to major Nov. 5, 1863.
James Q. Rice, pro. to major Feb. 17, 1864.
William B. Ells, pro. to major Feb. 6, 1864.
Jeffrey Skinner, pro. to major May 13, 1864.
Edward W. Jones, pro. to major Oct. 8, 1864.
Edward F. Gold, disch. Feb. 21, 1865.
George S. Williams, res. March 16, 1864.
Eli Sperry, res. March 30, 1864.
Edward O. Peck, res. July 25, 1863.
Luman Wadhams, died of wounds June 3, 1864.
William T. Spencer, must. out July 20, 1865.
William H. Lewis, Jr., disch. Jan. 25, 1865.
Bradley D. Lee, com. revoked March 22, 1864; appointed A. C. S. of volunteers.
Edward W. Marsh, must. out July 20, 1865.
James Deane, must. out July 20, 1865.
Benjamin F. Hosford, killed in action Oct. 19, 1864.
Frederick M. Berry, died of wounds Sept. 28, 1864.
Augustus H. Fenn, pro. to major Jan. 7, 1865.
Walter Burnham, disch. Feb. 24, 1865.
Oren H. Knight, died of wounds July 6, 1864.
Alexander B. Shumway, disch. Feb. 4, 1865.
Robert A. Potter, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Morris H. Sanford, disch. (as first lieutenant) Jan. 13, 1865.
Chester D. Cleveland, pro. to major Jan. 7, 1865.
Gad N. Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Daniel E. Marsh, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Hubbard E. Tuttle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James N. Coe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Theodore F. Vaill, must. out (as first lieutenant) Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael Kelley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry S. McKinney, must. out Aug. 23, 1865.
Orlow J. Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Skinner, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

First Lieutenants.

Luman Wadhams, pro. to captain Aug. 11, 1863.
Frederick A. Cook, res. June 5, 1863.
William T. Spencer, pro. to captain Aug. 11, 1863.
William H. Lewis, Jr., pro. to captain Nov. 20, 1863.
Benjamin F. Hosford, pro. to captain March 15, 1864.
James Deane, pro. to captain Feb. 19, 1864.
Gideon D. Crane, res. Dec. 26, 1862.
Frederick M. Berry, pro. to captain March 26, 1864.
Lyman Teater, res. March 2, 1863.
Augustus H. Fenn, pro. to captain March 31, 1864.
Walter Burnham, pro. to captain April 21, 1864.
Oren H. Knight, pro. to captain June 21, 1864.
Alexander B. Shumway, pro. to captain July 11, 1864.
Robert A. Potter, pro. to captain Aug. 12, 1864.
Morris H. Sanford, pro. to captain Oct. 22, 1864.
Chester D. Cleveland, pro. to captain Oct. 22, 1864.
Wilbur W. Birge, disch. Sept. 7, 1864.
John M. Gregory, disch. Jan. 10, 1865.
James N. Coe, pro. to captain Feb. 4, 1865.

Oliver P. Loomis, disch. Aug. 30, 1864.
William McK. Rice, died of disease Nov. 8, 1864.
Gad N. Smith, pro. to captain Nov. 30, 1864.
Theodore F. Vaill, pro. to captain March 2, 1865.
Philip E. Chapin, disch. Oct. 17, 1864.
Edwin S. Hubbard, disch. Dec. 31, 1864.
Franklin J. Candee, killed in action Sept. 19, 1864.
Warren Alford, disch. for disability April 20, 1865.
James P. McCabe, died of wounds Oct. 3, 1864.
Edward C. Huxley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Orlow J. Smith, pro. to captain March 30, 1865.
Henry Skinner, pro. to captain March 30, 1865.
Daniel E. Marsh, pro. to captain Jan. 7, 1865.
Hubbard E. Tuttle, pro. to captain Jan. 7, 1865.
Michael Kelley, pro. to captain March 2, 1865.
Orsamus R. Fyler, disch. as second lieutenant March 9, 1865.
Joseph E. Fenn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry S. McKinney, pro. to captain March 2, 1865.
William L. Twiss, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John E. Wheeler, disch. May 15, 1865.
James W. Dixon, must. out July 20, 1865.
Dwight C. Kilbourn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Homer S. Curtis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James M. Snowden, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Lewis Munger, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles A. Reynolds, decl'd and com. revoked March 31, 1865.
John E. Sedgwick, must. out as second lieutenant Aug. 18, 1865.
David C. Munson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Orville B. Tiffany, decl'd and com. revoked March 27, 1865.
Salmon A. Granger, decl'd and com. revoked April 27, 1865.
William A. Hosford, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Heman Ellis, decl'd and com. revoked March 27, 1865.
Henry R. Hoyt, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Hower W. Griswold, decl'd and com. revoked March 27, 1865.

Second Lieutenants.

Alexander B. Shumway, pro. to first lieutenant July 8, 1863.
Oren H. Knight, pro. to first lieutenant March 21, 1863.
Morris H. Sanford, pro. to first lieutenant Aug. 11, 1863.
Robert A. Potter, pro. to first lieutenant Aug. 11, 1863.
Chester D. Cleveland, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 20, 1863.
Oliver P. Loomis, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 6, 1864.
John M. Gregory, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 6, 1864.
Walter Burnham, pro. to first lieutenant Dec. 26, 1862.
George E. Betts, res. Nov. 25, 1862.
James N. Coe, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 6, 1864.
Wilbur W. Birge, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 6, 1864.
Edward W. Marsh, pro. to captain Feb. 17, 1864.
Wm. McK. Rice, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 6, 1864.
Hiram D. Gaylord, died Nov. 19, 1863, while first sergeant.
Edwin S. Hubbard, pro. to first lieutenant March 31, 1864.
Dwight C. Kilbourn, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 4, 1865.
William H. Cogswell, died of wounds Oct. 6, 1864.
Michael Kelley, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 18, 1864.
Orsamus R. Fyler, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 18, 1864.
George B. Hempstead, died of wounds June 30, 1864.
James P. McCabe, pro. to first lieutenant March 31, 1864.
Calvin B. Hatch, missing since June 1, 1864.
Hubbard E. Tuttle, pro. to first lieutenant Oct. 8, 1864.
Orlow J. Smith, pro. to first lieutenant July 11, 1864.
Edward C. Huxley, pro. to first lieutenant March 31, 1864.
Horace Hubbard, killed in action Sept. 19, 1864.
George K. Hyde, disch. Oct. 23, 1864.
Franklin J. Candee, pro. to first lieutenant March 31, 1864.
Daniel E. Marsh, pro. to first lieutenant Oct. 8, 1864.
Warren Alford, pro. to first lieutenant March 31, 1864.
John E. Wheeler, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 30, 1864.
Henry S. McKinney, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 30, 1864.
David R. Norman, dismissed Sept. 1, 1864.
James M. Snowden, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 4, 1865.
Lewis Munger, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 4, 1865.
Oscar Platt, disch. Jan. 18, 1865.
Henry Skinner, pro. to first lieutenant Aug. 12, 1864.
Homer S. Curtis, pro. to first lieutenant Feb. 4, 1865.
William L. Twiss, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 30, 1864.
Austin P. Kirkham, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph E. Fenn, pro. to first lieutenant Nov. 30, 1864.
Charles P. Travers, must. out July 20, 1865.
Frederick A. Lucas, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles A. Reynolds, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Salmon A. Granger, must. out July 20, 1865.
John E. Sedgwick, pro. to first lieutenant March 2, 1865.
David C. Munson, pro. to first lieutenant March 2, 1865.
Orville B. Tiffany, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Homer W. Griswold, must. out July 20, 1865.
Amzi P. Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William S. Cooper, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry S. Dean, declined commission.
Charles F. Anderson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry R. Hoyt, pro. to first lieutenant March 2, 1865.
George D. Stone, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Admatha Bates, must. out July 20, 1865.
William A. Hosford, pro. to first lieutenant March 2, 1865.
Heman Ellis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph Pettit, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
David E. Soule, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Seneca Edgett, must. out July 20, 1865.
Frederick M. Cook, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
A. N. Lamoreux, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Calvin L. Davis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

NON-COMMISSIONED STAFF.

Sergeant-Majors.

Wilbur W. Birge, commissioned.
Bushrod H. Camp, commissioned.
Theodore F. Vaill, commissioned.
Lewis Munger, commissioned.
Frederick A. Lucas, commissioned.
E. Goodwin Osborne, killed.
John S. Parmelee, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Quartermaster-Sergeants.

Edward W. Marsh, commissioned.
Edward C. Huxley, commissioned.
Edward F. Carrington, must. out July 7, 1865.
Robert Erwin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Commissary-Sergeants.

Franklin M. Candee, commissioned.
Prosper W. Smith, must. out Sept. 11, 1865.

Hospital Stewards.

James J. Averill, must. out July 7, 1865.
Orson Buell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Senior Principal Musicians.

Hicks Seaman, must. out July 7, 1865.
Wilson B. White, must. out July 7, 1865.
Frank J. Thomas, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Junior Principal Musicians.

Wilson B. White.
Albert R. Nettleton, must. out July 7, 1865.

COMPANY A.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.
Captain.—William Bissell.
First Lieutenant.—Luman Wadhams.
Second Lieutenant.—Alexander B. Shumway.

Sergeants.

Dwight C. Kilbourn, commissioned.
George B. Hempstead, commissioned.
Calvin B. Hatch, commissioned.
Joseph P. Parks, first sergeant; killed.
Henry Williams, first sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.

Corporals.

William H. Hull, disch. for disability Feb. 17, 1865.
Hiram S. Spencer, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
Joseph E. Coe, died.
Ferris Pond, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
Henry F. Cable, disch. for disability.
Charles W. Hinsdale, must. out July 7, 1865; quartermaster-sergeant.

George W. Mason, quartermaster-sergeant; com. as captain and A. C. S.
Beebe S. Hall, disch. for disability Feb. 12, 1863.

Musicians.

Albert R. Nettleton, trans. to field and staff.
Frederick S. Fenton, must. out July 7, 1865.

Wagoner.

Edward S. Hempstead, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Charles Adams, Jr., died of wounds; corporal.
Norman B. Barber, died.
Charles S. Barber, must. out July 7, 1865.
Nelson Barker, must. out July 7, 1865.
Howard W. Baldwin, disch. for disability April 11, 1863.
Nelson H. Barnes, disch. for disability Feb. 9, 1863.
Charles Belcher, disch. for disability.
Hiram Bradley, disch. for disability April 11, 1863.
George Bradley, must. out June 14, 1865.
Leonard O. Bradley, disch. for disability April 29, 1863.
Joseph D. Bradley, must. out July 7, 1865.
Andrew J. Brooker, died of wounds.
Thomas W. Beach, must. out June 19, 1865.
Lewis Bissell, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
Leonard C. Bissell, disch. for disability May 8, 1863.
John S. Bishop, must. out July 7, 1863.
Apollos W. Buell, disch. for disability Feb. 9, 1863.
Franklin M. Bunnell, died of wounds; corporal.
Lyman S. Catlin, com. in colored troops.
Henry H. Catlin, disch. for disability June 3, 1863.
Edward Coe, com. in colored troops.
Robert W. Coe, disch. for disability April 26, 1865.
Watson Cogswell, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Russell Curtis, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
John Flesar, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
Henry G. Gibbs, disch. for disability April 11, 1863; corporal.
Silas M. Griswold, must. out June 15, 1865.
Samuel Gunn, must. out July 11, 1865.
William J. Hall, disch. for disability Dec. 26, 1863.
George N. Hannans, must. out July 7, 1865.
Anson W. Healey, must. out June 22, 1865.
Henry W. Hotchkiss, must. out June 14, 1865.
Edward Hull, must. out July 7, 1865.
Joseph S. Hubbard, must. out May 14, 1865.
John Iffland, killed.
Frederick T. Jennings, must. out June 28, 1865.
Albert A. Jones, killed; corporal.
Myron E. Kilbourn, must. out July 7, 1865.
James B. Lyons, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles Merriman, must. out July 3, 1865.
Henry W. Miner, died.
Lyman F. Morehouse, disch. for disability June 21, 1865.
Apollos C. Morse, died of wounds; corporal.
Nelbert P. Newberry, died.
Eben L. Oakes, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
E. Goodwin Osborne, killed; sergeant-major.
Luther Pratt, disch. for disability March 27, 1865.
Watson Parmelee, died.
Willard H. Parmelee, killed.
Edwin F. Perkins, died.
Norman B. Perkins, disch. for disability.
William H. Plumb, must. out July 12, 1865.
Seth C. Pond, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
Gideon D. Pond, disch. for disability Dec. 18, 1862.
Edwin W. Pond, must. out July 8, 1865.
George W. Potter, died of wounds; corporal.
Isaac L. Sanford, must. out July 7, 1865.
Garwood T. Sanford, must. out July 7, 1865.
Harry Scoville, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
Whiting P. Smith, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
William S. Smith, must. out May 31, 1865; sergeant.
Lyman J. Smith, Jr., killed.
George D. Stone, sergeant; commissioned.
Jackson Tompkins, disch. for disability April 20, 1862.
Theodore F. Vaill, sergeant-major; commissioned.
Willard J. Watrous, must. out July 7, 1865.
David P. Wetmore, must. out June 10, 1865.
Seth Whiting, disch. for disability in 1865; sergeant.
William S. Wilson, died.
John L. Wilcox, died of wounds; corporal.
Julius Winship, died.
Curtis P. Wedge, must. out June 19, 1865; corporal.
Robert Watt, killed.

The Recruits of Company A.

Atwood A. Aiken, must. out August, 1865.
Newton T. Abbott, disch. for disability June 16, 1865.
Minott M. Atwood, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Josiah Atwood, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Ames, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edmund P. Aiken, must. out June 22, 1865.
William Barton, killed.
John Bailey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward A. Banks, must. out June 20, 1865.
Edwin A. Banks, must. out Aug. 18, 1865:
Horatio N. Bennett, killed.
William H. Brewer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Benedict, must. out July 14, 1865.
John A. Belden, must. out June 2, 1865.
Frederick W. Brashing, killed.
Charles F. Blackman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Almon D. Bradley, killed.
Frederick G. Buell, must. out Aug. 15, 1865.
James Bradley, killed.
Charles Carter, must. out Sept. 9, 1865.
Thomas Cashman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles T. Conger, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Crawford, must. out Aug. 18, 1865; corporal.
Robert Cogswell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
David M. Candee, died at Andersonville.
Joseph Cusher, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edson S. Drayton, disch. for disability Feb. 27, 1865.
Robert Ehll, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Stephen Fallen, killed.
James A. Ferris, disch. for disability Aug. 4, 1865.
Charles F. Goslee, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Gibbons, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John L. Gibbons, trans. to the navy.
Joseph Gardner, killed.
Albro W. Hopkins, disch. for disability April, 1865.
Oliver Hitchcock, killed.
Abram Hunter, must. out May 20, 1865.
Edward Haley, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
David J. Jennings, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Sheldon B. Jones, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Johnson, must. out Aug. 28, 1865.
Marcellus J. Judd, disch. for disability June 10, 1865.
Jacob June, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Sylvester Lampson, died.
Herman S. Lathrop, must. out June 23, 1865.
Lewis S. Ludington, died.
Simeon W. Leal, died.
John Lawler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Daniel M. Leighton, must. out June 21, 1865.
Thomas Lyons, must. out June 17, 1865.
Matthew McEntee, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph Mosely, must. out May 14, 1865.
John L. Mintech, must. out June 17, 1865.
Benjamin Meeker, killed; corporal.
James Moore, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Truman Mallory, died of wounds.
David M. Bath, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Morris, must. out Aug. 18, 1865; corporal.
James Oswald, must. out.
James L. Osborn, must. out May 26, 1865.
Henry Osborn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James M. Prindle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Pierce, must. out June 14, 1865.
Patrick Ryan, killed.
Benjamin H. Rathbun, died at Andersonville.
Nehemiah Reynolds, must. out June 3, 1865.
Thomas Ryan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Willis T. Richardson, disch. for disability Feb. 4, 1865.

Jason St. John, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
Amos H. Stilson, died of wounds.
Clarence Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Scull, killed.
Michael Shearer, must. out May 20, 1865.
George Savage, died of wounds.
Reuben A. Swift, disch. for disability Nov. 1, 1864.
Homer F. Tilford, killed.
Ransom E. Wood, died of wounds.
Horace N. Williams, disch. for disability Aug. 8, 1865; corporal.
Luther L. Weeks, must. out June 20, 1865.
George F. Waugh, must. out June 10, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Henry L. Bly, John J. Cogswell, Jeremiah Greany, James Harris, Charles P. Lamb, Thomas Ledger.

COMPANY B.

Captain.—James Hubbard.
First Lieutenant.—Frederick A. Cook.
Second Lieutenant.—Oren H. Knight.

Sergeants.

William H. Cogswell, commissioned.
Admatha Bates, commissioned.
Ambrose N. Negus, must. out July 7, 1865.
Moses Cook, Jr., died.
James Parks, disch. for disability June 23, 1865; first sergeant.

Corporals.

Charles B. Benedict, must. out May 18, 1865.
George L. Johnson, must. out June 6, 1865; sergeant; quartermaster-sergeant.
Ambrose Hufcut, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
James S. Thayer, disch. for disability Jan. 24, 1863.
John McGovern, must. out July, 1865.
Francis J. Young, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
George W. Mansfield, disch. for disability August, 1865.

Musicians.

John H. Ward, must. out July 7, 1865.
Bradford B. Brown.

Wagoner.

Nathaniel Roraback, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Augustus Adams, must. out July 7, 1865.
Lewis Burton, must. out July 7, 1865.
Joseph D. Bierce, disch. Aug. 14, 1863.
Elisha A. Briggs, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
Henry Burgess, must. out July 7, 1865.
John H. Bruce, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
Frank Benedict, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
John H. Brazee, disch. Sept. 10, 1863.
James Burns, must. out June 15, 1865.
Martin A. Besler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Sheldon Carley, must. out July 7, 1865.
James Caul, killed.
Michael Casey, disch. for disability May, 1865.
Thomas Casey, disch. for disability Nov. 6, 1862.
Daniel T. Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865; corporal.
Joseph E. Dwy, must. out July 12, 1865.
Gurdon C. Davidson, died.
Austin Frink, disch. Feb. 12, 1863.
Frank Friar, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
John Funk, disch. May 29, 1865, by order of War Department.
Franklin S. Graves, must. out July, 1865; corporal.
Wesley Gibbs, must. out July 7, 1865; sergeant.
James Gibbons, trans. to the navy.
Daniel Glaveen, killed.
Solomon Hinckley, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Handel, killed.
Luther Hall, must. out July 7, 1865.
Curtis Hall, sergeant; trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Benjamin E. Halleck, must. out July 7, 1865.
Dwight Halleck, must. out July 7, 1865; corporal.
Charles D. Hall, died.
William H. Ingraham, disch. for disability Jan. 12, 1862.
Chester A. Johnson, died of wounds.
Lewis Morey, disch. for disability June 9, 1866.
Henry M. Marshall, disch. for disability Feb. 12, 1863.
George Methven, disch. for disability Jan. 3, 1865.
John McGraugh, sergeant; killed.
Peter Ostrander, died.
Adam Ostrander, killed.
William O'Rourke, must. out July 7, 1865.
James Ostrander, Jr., died.
Watson W. Peck, must. out June 1, 1865.
Daniel O. Page, killed.
Charles Powell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jacob F. Rapp, died of wounds.
Henry Sterry, disch. for disability April 3, 1863.
Myron R. Sterry, corporal; killed.
George L. Sterry, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles H. Segur, killed.
Luther E. Speed, must. out July 7, 1865.
Warren Silvernail, disch. for disability Nov. 3, 1862.
Joel Snyder, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
James Surdam, must. out July 7, 1865.
John W. Turner.
Henry Voelker, corporal; killed.
Carlf Volusen, died.
John H. White, died.
Henry S. Wheeler, sergeant; died of wounds.
Monroe Whiteman, corporal; killed.
William Waters, Jr., must. out July 7, 1865.
Amos Wooden, died of wounds.
Henry Wiesing, killed.

Not Mustered out with Company.

Corp. Franklin Miller, Joseph Brennan, William Beecraft, George A. Caul, Sheldon Daskam, Patrick Ellwood, William H. Hotchkiss, Thomas Lee.

The Recruits of Company B.

Henry L. Ayers, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert W. Ames, died of wounds.
Charles H. Ball, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Best, killed.
Francis Burger, killed.
Samuel V. Benedict, killed.
Ambrose Brazie, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Richard A. Brown, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Baldwin, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Silas Burton, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert W. Bragg, killed.
Almeron Burton, died.
William Bradley, trans. to the navy.
Newton W. Cogswell, disch. by order War Department May 27, 1865.
John W. Coons, died of wounds.
Ezra Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Cooper, must. out June 10, 1865.
Patrick Canfield, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Connell, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
Joseph Compton, must. out March 10, 1865.
John Crothers, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Collins, trans. to the navy.
Thomas Carroll, trans. to the navy.
Thomas Carral, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John A. Decker, disch. for disability June 9, 1865.
William Dunn, missing.
Daniel Dunlavey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Delaney, died.
Philip Davis, trans. to the navy.
Hiram Fanning, disch. for disability Feb. 26, 1865.
John C. Foote, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Flood, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Fox, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Finn, trans. to the navy.
Paul Gaetel, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Hyer, died.
Walter D. Hoag, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Huskinson, must. out June 17, 1865.
William S. Horton, died.
Charles S. Higgins, must. out June 10, 1865.

William Howard, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Louis Kraeger, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Mortimer M. Lillibridge, disch. for disability June 13, 1865.
Thomas G. Lombard, must. out June 1, 1865.
David Lacy, missing.
George Lowe (1st), must. out May 18, 1865.
George Lowe (2d), must. out May 18, 1865.
Peter Malath, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ezra B. Morris, killed.
Gilbert McMahon, must. out June 4, 1865.
Godfrey Miller, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John McMahon, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Moore, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Murphy, trans. to the navy.
John Manross, disch. for disability Feb. 3, 1865.
Correl F. North, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John O'Brien, must. out May 23, 1865.
William F. Ohman, disch. for disability May 22, 1865.
Daniel T. Phillips, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Powel, must. out Oct. 18, 1865.
John Quirk, must. out July 28, 1865.
Allen Rogers, must. out June 10, 1865.
Reuben R. Speed, died after release from Andersonville.
William H. Surdam, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Stevens, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Franklin B. Stevens, killed.
Walter C. Sparks, corporal; killed.
Wilson W. Scoville, died of wounds.
George F. Sherwood.
James Sheridan, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Lucius O. Spencer, killed.
George A. Skiff, killed.
Elias P. Scott, killed.
John B. Stohl, killed.
Henry Tanner, died of wounds.
Horace N. Thorpe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chester A. Weller, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles O. Whaples, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Winters, died.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Horace Ball, Isaac Beardsley, Benjamin Case, William R. Curtis, Henry Dryer, William W. Foster, James Graham, John Hughes, Roger Lilly, George W. McLean, William Moore, Henry Ostrander, John Ross, Daniel E. Taylor, Corp. Charles Turner.

COMPANY C.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.

Captain.—James Q. Rice.
First Lieutenant.—William T. Spencer.
Second Lieutenant.—Morris H. Sanford.

Sergeants.

William McK. Rice, commissioned.
George K. Hyde, first sergeant; commissioned.
James P. McCabe, commissioned.
Matthew H. Huxley, died.
Orsamus R. Fyler, commissioned.

Corporals.

Homer W. Griswold, first sergeant; commissioned.
Uri Wadhams, died.
David C. Munson, sergeant; commissioned.
George W. Newcomb, first sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Frederick A. Lucas, sergeant; sergeant-major; commissioned.
David J. Thorp, killed.
Martin L. Judd, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William W. Hyde, disch. for disability Aug. 8, 1863.

Musicians.

Hicks Seaman, junior primary musician; must. out July 7, 1865.
Andrew E. Workman, must. out July 7, 1865.

Wagoner.

George D. Bentley, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Charles G. Adams, corporal; must. out July 20, 1865.
William L. Adams, must. out July 7, 1865.
Avery M. Allyn, must. out June 20, 1865.
Milo F. Barber, disch. for disability April 18, 1864.
Frederick Barber, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward M. Balcom, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Cyr. M. Bartholomew, killed.
William H. Beach, corporal; killed.
Zophar Beach, must. out June 20, 1865.
Darius C. Beach, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
James M. Benton, must. out May 18, 1865.
John R. Blakeslee, must. out July 7, 1865.
George P. Blakeslee, must. out July 7, 1865.
Virgil R. Bissell, must. out July 7, 1865.
Philo Cleveland, must. out July 7, 1865.
Albert B. Cleveland, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
George W. Cleveland, color corporal; killed.
Erastus Cleveland, died of wounds.
Orrin H. Cooke, must. out June 22, 1865.
George W. Curtiss, must. out July 7, 1865.
Daniel B. Curtiss, must. out July 7, 1865.
Calvin L. Davis, sergeant; commissioned.
Edward M. Dunbar, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Joseph Durocher, must. out July 7, 1865.
Orlando D. Evans, died.
Seymour H. Eldridge, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John Friend, must. out July 7, 1865.
Hobart Griswold, corporal; must. out 1865.
William Herald, died.
Samuel Hunter, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward C. Huxley, regimental quartermaster-sergeant; commissioned.
Cornelius A. Hammond, disch. for disability Nov. 9, 1862.
Frederick O. Hills, corporal; disch. for disability Aug. 19, 1865.
Henry H. Ives, must. out July 7, 1865.
James Jukes, must. out July 7, 1865.
Arthur G. Kellogg, died.
Daniel E. Lyman, died.
Orson M. Miner, corporal; killed.
Avery F. Miner, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Dennis Murphy, must. out June 22, 1865.
McKenzie Millard, must. out July 7, 1865.
James Moran, must. out May 18, 1865.
Charles E. Morse, must. out July 7, 1865.
William E. McKee, disch. for disability June 24, 1865.
Correl F. North, trans. to Co. B as quartermaster-sergeant.
Carlton N. Nichols, disch. for disability April 29, 1865.
Thosd. A. Pendleton, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry D. Pierce, must. out July 8, 1865.
Joseph P. Reed, must. out June 1, 1865.
Owen Reddy, must. out May 29, 1865.
William T. Robinson, died.
Seeley Richmond, must. out May 18, 1865.
Joseph Sherry, sergeant, disch. for disability Aug. 1, 1865.
Charles J. Soudant, must. out May 18, 1865.
Henry A. Stoddard, disch. for disability Dec. 26, 1862.
George C. Stewart, must. out July 7, 1865.
John H. Stewart, died.
Royal Stone, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Alonzo Smith, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
George C. Thompson, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry L. Vaill, corporal; died of wounds.
Wright Waterhouse, corporal, must. out July 12, 1865.
William C. Wadhams, must. out July 7, 1865.
Willard N. Wadhams, corporal, died.
Henry M. Woodruff, died.
Lucien N. Whiting, disch. for disability Jan. 31, 1865.
Harrison Whitney, corporal; disch. for disability June 2, 1865.
Charles G. Wheeler, corporal; must. out June 2, 1865.
Milo Young, died.

The Recruits of Company C.

William E. Albin, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles H. Albin, corporal, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John J. Abbott, died of accidental wounds.
Royal G. Andrews, died.
Eugene G. Austin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Bidwell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Alfred Blackman, died at Andersonville.
Peter Burke, killed.

James A. Bryan, must. out May 21, 1865.
Richard Butler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Barnes, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Butler, died.
Peter Bunts, must. out July 20, 1865.
Ezra B. Bouton, killed.
Chauncey E. Brown, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
George W. Brown, died.
Enos S. Benedict, disch. for disability June 22, 1865.
Orange S. Brown, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Bray, killed.
Christian Bjornsern, died of wounds.
Newton A. Calkins, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
George C. Curtis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Adelbert M. Calkins, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Marshall A. Calkins, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Alfred Calkins, must. out June 14, 1865.
Joseph H. Canfield, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Giles A. Cone, died.
Charles Clark, disch. for disability June 30, 1865.
William Dover, must. out June 22, 1865.
John Delowry, disch. for disability June 12, 1865.
Watson E. Foster, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Patrick Harvey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Franklin Hoxie, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Hart, died.
Leonard Hower, must. out Aug. 21, 1865.
Seth M. Hersey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Eugene Hyatt, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James M. Hayes, died.
Anson W. Johnson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward B. Janes, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Harlow Johnson, died.
Hezekiah Johnson, disch. for disability June 23, 1865.
William Kelley, killed.
James Karney, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Lynn, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Abraham W. Losey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Wolcott Little, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Frederick G. Lampson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas O. Murphy, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jeremiah McCarty, killed.
Thomas Milnes, must. out May 18, 1865.
Timothy Mahar, corporal; must. out July 18, 1865.
John McDonald, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Manning, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Norville, died.
Andrew H. Nichols, must. out June 1, 1865.
Patrick O'Connor, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George O'Brien, must. out May 18, 1865.
Henry W. Ostrum, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Prindle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Pierce, killed.
Lucius B. Palmer, died of wounds.
James P. Quinn, first sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Quinn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James W. Roswell, must. out June 13, 1865.
Hawley Reed, must. out June 13, 1865.
Erastus Ruscoe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Ruscoe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Rogers, died.
Jarvis M. Richards, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John W. Steele, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas B. Stewart, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Albert M. Scoville, died of wounds.
Andrew H. Sanford, died.
John Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edwin Thorn, disch. for disability June 5, 1865.
George Taylor, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Freeman M. Thurston, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John H. Ure, killed.
Edward White, must. out June 20, 1865.
George E. Warren, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Albert F. Williams, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William S. Wilson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter O. Wilson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Henry Benson, Jerome Chapman, William Curtland, James Dayton, John Devirnne, Charles Flannigan, John H. Hayes, Andrew Harris, James Hill, John Jones, Philip Manly, Edward Northrop, Henry W. Richards, Henry Sminer, Robert Scott.

COMPANY D.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.

Captain.—William B. Ells.
First Lieutenant.—William H. Lewis, Jr.
Second Lieutenant.—Robert A. Potter.

Sergeants.

Thomas D. Bradstreet, disch. for disability March 9, 1863.
Theodore C. Glazier, disch. for disability Dec. 26, 1862; afterwards com. in U. S. C. T.
Horace Hubbard, commissioned.
Andrew J. Tuite, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edgar B. Lewis, died.

Corporals.

Salmon B. Smith, sergeant; died.
Samuel Brown, sergeant; must. out June 1, 1865.
Lewis Munger, sergeant; sergeant-major; commissioned.
James McCormick, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William W. Johnson, died.
David B. Wooster, quartermaster-sergeant; killed.
Emery B. Taylor, sergeant; must. out May 18, 1865.
Frederick B. Webster, died.

Musicians.

Belden S. Brown, must. out July 7, 1865.
John S. Atwood, disch. for disability June 3, 1865.

Wagoner.

Henry Pond, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Albert F. Alfred, disch. for disability May 31, 1865.
William C. Atwood, com. in U. S. C. T.
Norman W. Barnes, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry C. Barnum, disch. for disability July 11, 1864.
George H. Bates, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
George L. Beach, died of wounds.
James A. Beach, must. out June 3, 1865.
Wallace E. Beach, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John D. Benjamin, must. out July 7, 1865.
Harvey Bronson, must. out June 25, 1865.
Charles L. Bryan, must. out July 13, 1865.
David A. Bradley, sergeant; disch. for disability July 18, 1865.
Henry N. Bushnell, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John D. Castle, disch. for disability June 9, 1865.
Emory W. Castle, died of wounds.
Edgar J. Castle, died of wounds.
James H. Cable, must. out July 7, 1865.
Martin H. Camp, must. out July 7, 1865.
John C. Chase, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles G. Cleveland, died.
Amzi P. Clark, commissioned.
Hiram T. Coley, died of wounds.
George T. Cook, must. out July 7, 1865.
David Davenport, killed.
Philo A. Fenn, killed.
Joseph B. Fenn, first sergeant; commissioned.
Benjamin Filley, died a prisoner.
Joseph Gooley, must. out July 7, 1865.
George H. S. Goodwin, died of wounds.
John Grieder, died of wounds.
Zelotes F. Grannis, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles E. Guernsey, corporal; died of wounds.
Albert J. Hotchkiss, must. out July 7, 1865.
George H. Holt, died.
Edward C. Hopson, corporal; killed.
Charles I. Hough, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Franklin W. Hubbard, died.
Swift McG. Hunter, must. out May 30, 1865.
William Lindley, disch. for disability April 11, 1863.
Timothy Malone, must. out July 7, 1865.

Thomas Mann, died of wounds.
Hiram Mattoon, died of wounds.
Jerome Munger, must. out July 7, 1865.
Ralph W. Munson, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John Murphy, killed.
Simon J. O'Donnell, must. out July 7, 1865.
George L. Penfield, must. out July 12, 1865.
Horatio G. Perkins, died.
James H. Pritchard, died.
Daniel O. Purcell, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Walter Stone, died of wounds.
Mark B. Stone, must. out July 7, 1865.
Ira H. Stoughton, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Justin O. Stoughton, must. out July 7, 1865.
James Straun, died at Andersonville.
Charles W. Talcott, must. out July 7, 1865.
Samuel R. Terrell, must. out July 7, 1865.
Rurritt H. Tolles, died.
Henry Tolles, must. out July 7, 1865.
Josiah J. Wadsworth, died.
Matthias Walter, must. out June 13, 1865.
Charles R. Warner, killed.
Charles Warner, must. out June 13, 1865.
William H. Whitelaw, disch. for disability May 18, 1865.
William Wright, corporal; killed.
William Weston, must. out July 7, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Abraham Dobson.

The Recruits of Company D.

George E. Atwood, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Dwight S. Atwood, missing.
Henry Ashburn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Butler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Richard Beebe, killed.
Charles Barley, must. out May 18, 1865.
Joseph Boyce, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Pomeroy Becraft, killed.
William P. Burr, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William J. P. Buck, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles F. Brown, must. out June 15, 1865.
Thomas Bullnss, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William L. Barnes, died a prisoner.
John H. Conklin, killed.
Erastus W. Converse, died of wounds.
Edgar W. Conklin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Comstock, killed.
John L. Conklin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George G. Conklin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Carr, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George E. Clark, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Carlos Curtis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chauncey Culver, must. out June 20, 1865.
Joseph Cleveland, trans. to the navy.
Hiram E. Castle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Kelsey D. Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William N. Cockefair, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Johnson S. Dow, must. out July 6, 1865.
Nehemiah H. Dutton, must. out Aug. 15, 1865.
Edward Dwyer, corporal; must. out Aug. 15, 1865.
Jacob Demuth, died of wounds.
William Elliot, Jr., must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Walter M. Fox, killed.
Nathan H. Geer, disch. for disability May 31, 1865.
Philip H. Golde, must. out June 4, 1865.
Everett Griswold, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Charles B. Guttman, returned to a Pennsylvania regiment.
William H. Harrison, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Henry Jones, trans. to the navy.
Elmore Hotchkiss, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Lawrence A. Hunt, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles D. Hanson, died a prisoner.
Jonathan Hall, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Francis Howard, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Olet F. Hanson, trans. to the navy.
William Hilliker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Samuel Hine, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Holland, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Francis Hawley, disch. for disability Oct. 3, 1864.
Morris B. Hanford, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Frederick R. Keith, first sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Kapser, must. out June 10, 1865.
Edwin Lyon, trans. to the navy.
George A. Lyon, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George L. Lyon, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Lynch, died of wounds.
Robert Lowrie, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Lindley, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Seeley S. Morse, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry W. Miller, killed.
John Moore, trans. to the navy.
John M. Moseley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Munger, must. out June 13, 1865.
Samuel Nelson, trans. to the navy.
Walter Oates, must. out July 3, 1865.
Frederick Olroyd, must. out July 7, 1865.
Frederick Patchen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Peterson, trans. to the navy.
Tompkins J. Patterson, trans. to the navy.
William W. Richardson, died.
William Russell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chauncey F. Reed, must. out June 19, 1865.
Charles H. Sherwood, disch. for disability Sept. 21, 1865.
William Smith, disch. for disability June 19, 1865.
Peter Schultz, trans. to the navy.
Stephen C. Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Austin Shelley, disch. for disability July 8, 1865.
James Slater, killed.
Henry Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Tompkins, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Frank J. Thomas, sergeant; leader of band; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Daniel Van Allen, killed.
Alexander Vogel, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Truman D. Wooster, disch. for disability Jan. 12, 1865.
Benjamin Williams, must. out May 18, 1865.
John L. Wheeler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Wirt, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Irwin C. Beach, Daniel Boyce, Charles F. Cain, Henry J. Hubbard, Mortimer Holcomb, Francis McLaughlin, Charles H. Webb.

COMPANY E.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.
Captain.—Jeffrey Skinner.
First Lieutenant.—Benjamin F. Hosford.
Second Lieutenant.—Chester D. Cleveland.

Sergeants.

Hiram D. Gaylord, commissioned.
Orlow J. Smith, first sergeant; commissioned.
Salmon A. Granger, first sergeant; commissioned.
George White, disch. per order March 9, 1865.
Henry Skinner, commissioned.

Corporals.

David Miller, must. out June 30, 1865.
Sherman H. Cowles, disch. for disability May 31, 1863.
William S. Cooper, sergeant; commissioned.
Stephen W. Sage, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Mason Adkins, must. out July 7, 1865.
Frederick W. Daniels, killed.
Charles A. Reynolds, sergeant; commissioned.
Ruel H. Perkins, killed.

Musicians.

Wilson B. White, junior principal musician; must. out July 7, 1865.
Myron Ferris, killed.

Wagoner.

Alfred G. Bliss, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Sherman A. Apley, missing.
James R. Baldwin, corporal; missing.
Edward Beach, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edwin S. Beecher, disch. March 25, 1863.

Patrick T. Birmingham, must. out July 7, 1865.
Almeron Bunnell, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles M. Burr, corporal; disch. for disability May 23, 1865.
Edwin R. Canfield, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John Christina, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward F. Carrington, regimental quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Philip D. Carroll, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Frederick M. Cook, sergeant; commissioned.
Alfred Comins, killed.
Robert A. Cutler, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry A. Dayton, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Adam J. N. Dilly, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edwin Downs, disch. for disability May 1, 1863.
Lewis Downs, killed.
Bernard W. Doyle, must. out July 20, 1865.
Adam Feathers, must. out July 7, 1865.
Oliver C. Fitch, disch. Nov. 20, 1862.
Birdsey Gibbs, killed.
George N. Gibbs, disch. for disability March 31, 1864.
Richard C. Gingell, disch. for disability.
James A. Green, disch. for disability July 5, 1864.
Manwaring Green, accidentally killed.
Anthony B. Guernsey, disch. Nov. 2, 1862.
William Hall, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles H. Hart, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Luther W. Hart, disch. Nov. 25, 1863.
Timothy A. Hart, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Willard Hart, killed.
George W. Hurlbut, died.
William S. Hurlbut, died.
William R. Hubbard, died.
Asa Humiston, died of wounds.
Alonzo J. Hull, corporal; killed.
Jule Jackson, must. out July 7, 1865.
Matthew Jackman, must. out Sept. 10, 1865.
Henry C. Kent, missing.
Isaac R. Knapp, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Elizur Malthie, died of wounds.
Walter Martin, killed.
Charles G. Mason, must. out July 7, 1865.
Herman P. Moore, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry Overton, trans. to the navy.
George H. Pendleton, corporal; died of wounds.
Joseph Pettit, sergeant; commissioned.
Charles Henry Pine, must. out June 20, 1865.
Jerome Preston, died.
Henry A. Rexford, killed.
Theodore Robbins, corporal; must. out June 1, 1865.
Edmund B. Sage, must. out July 7, 1865.
William Seymour, disch. for disability March 25, 1865.
Lucius S. Skinner, must. out July 11, 1865.
John Smith, must. out July 7, 1865.
Prosper W. Smith, regimental commissary-sergeant; must. out Sept. 11, 1865.
Philip Stabell, musician; must. out July 7, 1865.
Darwin S. Starks, died.
George A. Tatro, killed.
John M. Teeter, killed.
Benjamin B. Thayer, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William H. Turner, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Hubbard E. Tuttle, sergeant; commissioned.
Wells Tuttle, must. out July 12, 1865.
Hubert A. Warner, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Marcus J. Whitehead, disch. for disability June 2, 1865.
Warren M. Wood, disch. June 13, 1865, by order of War Department.
Julius Woodford, died.
Wallace W. Woodruff, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

William Gager.

The Recruits of Company E.

Jackson Ayres, must. out June 20, 1865.
Jacob P. Arnold, must. out July 7, 1865.
Christopher Arnold, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John H. Boughton, corporal; died of wounds.
Henry Bush, 1st sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ernst A. Basney, disch. for disability Oct. 14, 1864.
Joseph E. Baton, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert J. Bulcroft, must. out June 19, 1865.
Samuel U. Brewer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Sylvester Barrett, died of wounds.
Martin Blake, missing.
Thomas H. Birge, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James E. Billings, disch. for disability April 20, 1865.
Henry Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Welles Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Benjamin G. Carman, must. out May 12, 1865.
Bernard Carbury, missing.
John J. Cummins, trans. to the navy.
Julius Collins, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Campbell, disch. for disability June 15, 1865.
William Downer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles N. Decker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael Donahue, died a prisoner at Salisbury.
David Durand, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jared P. Evarts, killed.
John D. Ellis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Heman Ellis, commissioned.
Matthew Fitzgerald, died a prisoner.
Stephen J. Green, died of wounds.
Francis Gallagher, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas H. Gilbert, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Griffin, must. out June 13, 1865.
Augustus Hain, disch. for disability Oct. 1, 1864.
William A. Hosford, trans. to Co. D and commissioned.
Erle Hamilton, band; must. out Sept. 9, 1865.
Charles B. Howard, disch. for disability June 27, 1865.
Peter Jordan, disch. for disability Jan. 10, 1865.
Louis Jaeger, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Boughton D. Knapp, missing.
John Koons, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Keegan, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Patrick Kaine, killed.
Jacob Leroy, must. out June 1, 1865.
John Lemley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Lynch, disch. for disability May 23, 1865.
Chauncey S. Loomis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Leonard, must. out July 3, 1865.
Henry G. Mitchell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John McDonough, killed.
James Mooney, killed.
John McPherson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward Moggon, must. out June 21, 1865.
James Maloy, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Martin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John McDonald, must. out June 9, 1865.
John O'Connell, disch. for disability May 22, 1865.
Frederick D. Painter, killed.
Nathan Perry, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph Robinson, died.
Edward Reicker, disch. for disability April 29, 1865.
Jacob Riley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles H. Rowe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Rowe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Julius Rogers, died.
Edward Rugg, must. out Aug. 18, 1864.
Elbert B. Rowe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Rankin, disch. for disability June 9, 1865.
Philip Shelley.
John Sculley, missing.
John Scott.
James Simpson, missing.
Charles H. Stanley, killed.
Levi B. Stone, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Tracy.
Edward H. Turner, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Ebenezer C. Terrell, discharged.
John J. Toole, missing.
Talmer Tatro, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Van Dusen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Warner, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Erastus Woodworth, killed.
Prelott Wilbur, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Michael Welch, must. out July 10, 1865.
Henry P. Warner, must out May 22, 1865.
Henry Wenzel, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Welch, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles H. Walsh, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Allen B. Young, died a prisoner at Salisbury Nov. 10, 1864.
Charles H. Ziegelmeyer, must. out June 28, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

George W. Boger, William Brown, Charles Collins, William Drew, John Dunigan, Pierre Gigin, John Jackson, John Keon, George Kenna, Michael Klein, Robert Livingston, Lorenzo Moseley, Augustus V. Mercken, John Miller, Philip Nagle, John Neickel, Henry Saggan, Charles Warren, William J. Wood, George Williams.

COMPANY F.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.

Captain.—Edward W. Jones.
First Lieutenant.—James Deane.
Second Lieutenant.—Oliver P. Loomis.

Sergeants.

Warren Alford, commissioned.
Samuel E. Gibbs, killed.
Alfred C. Alford, killed.
Carlton Seymour, com. in colored troops.
William L. Twiss, commissioned.

Corporals.

John E. Wheeler, sergeant; commissioned.
Edward S. Roberts, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Roswell G. Benham, regimental quartermaster-sergeant; disch. June 15, 1865.
Norman M. Rust, com. in colored troops.
Edward D. Lawrence, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Thomas B. Spencer, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Ruel S. Rice, disch. for disability April 11, 1863.
John Rodemyer, must. out July 7, 1865.

Musicians.

Watson H. Deming, disch. Nov. 26, 1862.
John L. Merrill, must. out June 23, 1865.

Wagoner.

Henry H. Griffin, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

George N. Andrus, died of wounds.
Abernethy Baker, must. out July 7, 1865.
Elisha L. Bancroft, must. out May 18, 1865.
Augustus E. Barret, died.
Albert Beckwith, died.
Hopkins J. Benham, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles Burr, disch. for disability July 30, 1863.
Harlan D. Benedict, died.
Albert F. Bradley, disch. for disability June 21, 1865.
Albert P. Briggs, disch. for disability May 5, 1863.
Henry C. Butler, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William Burke, must. out June 3, 1865.
Horace F. Calkins, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Wayne B. Castle, disch. for disability June 3, 1865.
William H. Colt, killed.
John Carroll, must. out June 1, 1865.
Abram Coons, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry G. Dailey, disch. for disability March 9, 1865.
Miles H. Day, disch. for disability Feb. 13, 1863.
Edward E. Dayton, disch. for disability May 15, 1864.
Eugene Decker, must. out July 7, 1865.
Watson W. Deane, must. out June 22, 1865.
Alfred M. Dowd, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Horatio N. Eggleston, died.
Philander Emmons, died.
George L. Fairchild, must. out July 7, 1865.
William G. Gardner, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
William Gorman, must. out July 7, 1865.
James H. Hakes, sergeant; disch. for disability June 15, 1865.
Seth Huskins, color corporal; disch. by order War Department May 4, 1865.
Solomon G. Hayward, died a prisoner.
Alg'n G. Henderson, must. out July 7, 1865.
William G. Henderson, died.
Bennett Hines, must. out June 15, 1865.
Ira D. Jones, sergeant; must. out June 11, 1865.
Lorenzo Light, sergeant; killed.
Joseph M. Marsh, disch. for disability Feb. 18, 1863.
Patrick McGrath, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward McGrath, must. out July 7, 1865.
Andrew McGrath, trans. to Co. L.
Joseph McManus, must. out June 15, 1865.
Cornelius H. Merrell, died of wounds.
Henry C. Merrell, must. out June 22, 1865.
Charles H. Mitchell, disch. for disability Dec. 20, 1864.
Edwin R. Mitchell, corporal; must. out July 19, 1865.
Pierre Mundry, disch. for disability April 8, 1863.
Morris E. Munger, must. out July 7, 1865.
George Munson, must. out July 7, 1865.
Thomas Noonan, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Joseph Nul, must. out July 7, 1865.
Roswell Root, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward H. Roys, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles N. Rust, must. out July 7, 1865.
Daniel Ryan, must. out July 7, 1865.
Patrick Ryan, must. out July 7, 1865.
John W. Shaw, disch. for disability Aug. 1, 1865.
George Simons, killed.
Edward P. Smith, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Homer D. St. John, must. out July 7, 1865.
Allen B. St. John, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Richard S. Thompson, died.
William H. Tiffany, must. out July 7, 1865.
Orville B. Tiffany, first sergeant; commissioned.
Ephraim Tucker, must. out March 28, 1865.
Harvey Tucker, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Jesse Turner, sergeant; must. out June 17, 1865.
Jefferson M. Tyler, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
George W. Warren, must. out May 18, 1865.
John C. Weeks, disch. by order of War Department May 29, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

John H. Batterman.

The Recruits of Company F.

George D. Allen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Allen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Myron C. Benson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Stanton S. Belden, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ammi Bailey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph Busby, missing.
Otis Billings, must. out June 10, 1865.
John Brown, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Olaph Benson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chester Barnes, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Alexander Bierce, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jay J. Cushman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Crimss, must. out Aug. 8, 1865.
Dwight Case, disch. for disability June 3, 1865.
John R. M. Cleaveland, disch. for disability Feb. 8, 1864.
Timothy B. Cannon, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Calnen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Cahill, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Decker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edmund Doherty, died.
Philander Eggleston, died.
Harvey Ford, died.
Charles W. Griswold, died of wounds.
Parley B. Gammons, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John E. Hall, killed.
Byron O. Hawley, corporal; disch. for disability June 20, 1865.
James Hyde, must. out July 14, 1865.
James O. Hotchkiss, must. out June 20, 1865.
Charles Herville, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Howard, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Johnson, disch. for disability June 4, 1865.
Timothy E. Kelly, disch. for disability June 25, 1865.
John Kelley, must. out June 20, 1865.

John Korn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Guilford M. Kirkham, band; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Keith, disch. for disability May 14, 1865.
Lorenzo K. Lemoine, died.
Michael Lloyd, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Lomax, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Louis Langelile, trans. to the navy.
Jefferson T. Lent, killed by accident.
Oscar M. Mitchell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry J. McLean, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Benjamin A. Murphy, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George F. McNary, 1st sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas McMahon, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael McMahon (1st), must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael McMahon (2d), must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael McMahon (3d), must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Sherman Messenger, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Alexander McCormick, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Malthouse, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William C. Morris, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Timothy O'Callaghan, killed.
Robert H. Rust, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Riley, died.
John Riley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Scoville, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Scoville, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry O. Sweet, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Spreyer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Rufus B. Smith, must. out July 7, 1865.
Thomas Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Thompson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Van Deusen, died.
Robert J. Van Deusen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Martin Wilcox, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Elisha Wells, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edwin Walden, must out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward Wadsworth, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Williams, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Alexander Waters, quartermaster-sergeant; disch. for disability May 18, 1865.
John Williamson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Patrick Burke, Henry H. Heofman, Thomas Kelly, Lack Murray, James Mahoney, General H. Morgan, John O'Brien, Charles Van Roden.

COMPANY G.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.
Captain.—Edward F. Gold.
First Lieutenant.—Lyman Teator.
Second Lieutenant.—J. Milton Gregory.

Sergeants.

Michael Kelley, commissioned.
Gad N. Smith, commissioned.
Henry S. Dean, 1st sergeant; declined commission; disch. for disability.
Silas A. Palmer, trans. to Co. M.
Ira Chapman, disch. by order of the War Department June 10, 1865.

Corporals.

Julius A. Glover, sergeant; disch. for disability July 5, 1865.
Charles P. Traver, sergeant; commissioned.
Henry P. Milford, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Albert Robinson, disch. for disability Dec. 21, 1864.
Joseph B. Payne, quartermaster-sergeant; killed.
Gilbert E. Lake, disch. for disability April 11, 1863.
William S. Shepard, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.

Musicians.

Myron Hubbell, died.
James H. Van Buren, died of wounds.

Wagoner.

Rufus S. Frink, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

George M. Bennett, disch. for disability Dec. 31, 1862.
William H. Bowen, must. out June 1, 1865.
Alfred L. Benedict, must. out July 7, 1865.
Mathew P. Bell, Jr., sergeant; disch. for disability June 22, 1865.
Frederick F. Butler, must. out July 7, 1865.
Franklin B. Bierce, must. out May 30, 1865.
Henry W. Baker, disch. for disability Sept. 11, 1863.
Daniel Buxton, disch. for disability Jan. 21, 1863.
Russell T. Barnum, disch. for disability Jan. 5, 1865.
George W. Brague, must. out July 7, 1865.
Jerome Chipman, disch. for disability Feb. 22, 1865.
George V. Capron, must. out June 12, 1865.
Nelson Clark, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Chase, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Curtin, disch. for disability March 15, 1865.
William Clinton, must. out July 7, 1865.
Michael Curley, disch. for disability March 15, 1865.
Philo L. Cole, died.
James B. Capron, must. out July 7, 1865.
Harvey Clark, died.
Josiah B. Corban, must. out May 18, 1865.
John O. Doherty, must. out July 7, 1865.
Miles E. Dean, must. out July 7, 1865.
Patrick Delaney, must. out July 7, 1865.
William Frazear, disch. for disability June 8, 1865.
John Grady, must. out July 7, 1865.
Frederick D. Holmes, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles C. Hinman, died.
Edmund E. Hoffman, must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward Hover, must. out July 7, 1865.
Wesley L. Holmes, must. out June 22, 1865.
William H. Ingraham, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles Ingersoll, sergeant; died of wounds.
Nelson T. Jennings, must. out June 6, 1865.
George L. Janes, must. out June 1, 1865.
Nathan H. Jewitt, disch. for disability Dec. 22, 1862.
Barney Kinney, died of wounds.
David Kimball, must. out July 7, 1865.
David Killmer, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles King, must. out July 7, 1865.
Walstein Lounsbury, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Sidney Lapham, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Lapham, died.
Elijah C. Mallory, disch. for disability Jan. 21, 1863.
Ralph J. Miner, disch. for disability March 8, 1863.
Rollin R. Northrop, must. out July 7, 1865.
George D. Palmer, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry Peck, killed.
George W. Page, killed.
John F. Peck, must. out July 7, 1865.
Albert A. Peck, died.
Charles J. Reed, killed.
Lucien G. Rouse, died.
Charles R. Swift, sergeant; must. out June 9, 1865.
Frederick Skepard, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Lewis J. Sawyer, died.
Thomas Sherman, must. out July 7, 1865.
Dwight B. Studley, died of wounds.
Charles H. Smith, discharged for disability June 5, 1865.
Merritte H. Stone, died.
George W. Studley, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Elisha Soule, killed.
Henry Shadt, must. out July 7, 1865.
Patrick Troy, corporal; died of wounds.
Elmore E. Waldron, disch. for disability Nov. 1, 1864.
Allen Williams, died.
Horace Williams, must. out July 7, 1865.
William Young, disch. for disability May 10, 1863.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Robert A. Bard, Edward H. Cross, Dayton S. Reed, Isaac L. Reed.

The Recruits of Company G.

Edward F. Brague, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Herman E. Bonney, died.
George Burton, disch. by order of War Department April 14, 1865.
Niram Buttolph, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles H. Bentley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Byrnes, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Wesley Bunnell, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.

Andrew J. Bolles, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John H. Bradley, died.
George W. Baldwin, must. out June 9, 1865.
Albert H. Bailey, must. out June 12, 1865.
George Clinton, died of wounds.
John Christie, disch. for disability May 17, 1865.
Frank L. Cadwell, band; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George A. Case, disch. for disability June 15, 1865.
Henry E. Fenn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles I. Fenn, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Linus S. Goodrich, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Eli Grover, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Gilmet, disch. for disability May 31, 1865.
Michael Gallagher, disch. for disability Feb. 28, 1865.
Thomas H. Graham, must. out May 19, 1865.
Frederick Hyer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Hosmer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Hawver, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John W. Hamblin, died.
Lewis Hamblin, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Michael Henry, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Hicks, must. out May 30, 1865.
Hubert D. Hoxley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Zina D. Hotchkiss, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Dwight A. Hotchkiss, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Joray, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Keech, disch. for disability Jan. 13, 1865.
Timothy Leonard, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Asa Lee, disch. for disability Jan. 8, 1865.
Stephen McMasters, disch. for disability Sept. 8, 1864.
John M. McLaughlin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Murphy, must. out Aug. 7, 1865.
Paschal P. North, died.
Sylvester Prout, died of wounds.
Nathan Payne, disch. for disability Feb. 13, 1864.
William S. Palmer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James M. Palmer, died of wounds.
Frederick J. Pierce, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry W. Parker, trans. to navy.
Gilbert G. Rose, must. out June 1, 1865.
Erastus Rusco, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Roberts, trans. to the navy.
John Reynolds.
James Stanley, must. out May 30, 1865.
Orville Slover, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Swift B. Smith, first sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Horace C. Sickmund, died of wounds.
William A. Slover, died.
Michael Shannon, must out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Sizer, must. out Aug 18, 1865.
Albert N. Smith, must. out June 1, 1865.
George C. Short, trans. to the navy.
John R. Thompson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Tully, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Thompson, trans. to the navy.
Quincy Thayer, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
George E. Wansor.
Lockwood Waldron, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William White, died.
Charles A. Wheeler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Chauncey L. Warner, killed.
Wilson G. Waterman, killed.
Henry H. Watrous, died.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Lorenzo Buttolph, John Byford, John Burns, William Burgess, Lawrence Canfield, James Lynch, Joseph Muller, Thomas McCauley, John McCool, Mark Shay, Dwight Smith, John H. Taylor, Benjamin Wilson, John W. Williams, Charles Way.

Company H.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.

Captain.—George S. Williams.
First Lieutenant.—Frederick M Berry.
Second Lieutenant.—Walter Burnham.

Sergeants.

Daniel E. Marsh, commissioned.
Charles W. Robertson, disch. for disability Feb. 6, 1863.
Garwood R. Merwin, died.
Charles F. Anderson, first sergeant; commissioned.
Romulus C. Loveridge, com. in colored troops.

Corporals.

David E. Soule, sergeant; commissioned.
Henry C. Noble, sergeant; disch. for disability Feb. 4, 1864.
Minor A. Strong, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Lewis W. Mosher, sergeant; disch. for disability May 24, 1864.
Homer S. Curtis, sergeant; commissioned.
Irwin C. Buckingham, sergeant; disch. for disability May 24, 1864.
Edward F. Lyon, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Horace E. Jones, must. out July 7, 1865.

Musicians.

Andrew E. Bailey, must. out May 18, 1865.
Orlo H. Buckingham, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.

Wagoner.

Harmon T. Edwards, must. out July 7, 1865.

Privates.

Charles Brinell, disch. for disability May 29, 1865.
Henry A. Burton, corporal; disch. for disability June 7, 1865.
Gustavus H. Black, must. out June 16, 1865.
Ira S. Bradley, died.
Edgar W. Calhoun, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry A. Calhoun, died.
Russell B. Camp, must. out June 1, 1865.
Alfred Cable, disch. for disability June 1, 1865.
Sheldon Clark, died.
Hiram Cable, disch. for disability May 18, 1865.
George Chamberlain, disch. for disability June 3, 1865.
William E. Canfield, trans. to Co. M as sergeant.
Benjamin F. Dunham, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William E. Disbrow, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
William H. Dains, died.
George S. Erwin, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Oliver B. Evitts, must. out July 7, 1865.
Sheldon Fox, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry Fry, must. out July 7, 1865.
Francis L. French, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry S Gridley, corporal, disch. for disability April 3, 1864.
Horatio S. Hoyt, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry R Hoyt, trans to Co M, 1st sergeant; commissioned.
Austin R. Humphrey, sergeant, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Harrington, must out July 7, 1865.
Cyrus Howland, must. out June 1, 1865.
Herman Hoffman, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles W. Jackson, killed.
Elroy S. Jennings, must. out July 7, 1865.
Jerome Johnson, died.
Andrew S Kinney, must. out Feb. 6, 1863.
Joseph S. Knowles, disch. for disability April 6, 1865.
Frederick J. Logan, disch for disability April 12, 1863.
Daniel G. Marshall, must. out July 7, 1865.
John N Meramble, color corporal, must out July 7, 1865.
Jairus W. Monroe, disch for disability March 9, 1863.
Henry S Morehouse, must. out July 7, 1865.
Anson B. Nichols, must out July 7, 1865.
Franklin Nichols, corporal, disch for disability May 28, 1865.
George D. Potter, must out July 7, 1865.
George H. Potter, corporal; must out June 12, 1865.
Alanson Peet, must out July 7, 1865.
Loren Peet, must. out July 7, 1865.
Herbert A Reed, died a prisoner
Nathan H Root, trans to Co. M as 1st sergeant, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry C. Straight, killed.
Reuben H. Sherwood, must out July 7, 1865.
Lucius S Sherman, must out July 7, 1865.
Homer S. Sackett, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Stephen V. Smedliker, must out May 24, 1865.
Uriah F. Smedliker, corporal, disch for disability June 6, 1865.
Orville A. Sawyer, must. out July 7, 1865.
Lewis St. John, died.

Horace N. Sanford, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Daniel T. Somers, must. out June 22, 1865.
Jerome Titus, must. out July 7, 1865.
Seth N. Taylor, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William H. Thompson, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward E. Thompson, must. out June 22, 1865.
William C. Warner, died.
Frank J Warner, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles A. Way, must. out June 20, 1865.
John F. Williams, must. out July 7, 1865.
Alfred N. Whittlesey, disch. for disability June 3, 1865.
Burr Williams, disch. for disability March 27, 1865.
David V. Wright, disch. for disability Jan. 23, 1863.
Lewis S. Young, must. out July 7, 1865.

The Recruits of Company H.

Newell W. Andrews, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Doctor Bronson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Orson Buel, regimental hospital steward; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles E. Beeman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Rufus Beeman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John A. Beeman, disch. for disability May 31, 1864.
Henry Bridge, died.
Henry D. Burr, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Theodore A. Barnes, killed.
Charles H. Butler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Frank A. Beardsley, must. out May 18, 1865.
Jesse A. Barden, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Bone, must. out June 30, 1865.
Daniel Cahill, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
David B. Disbrow, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Erwin, trans. to field and staff as quartermaster-sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
States B. Flandreau, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles V. Flandreau, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Adam H. Graham, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles E. Gilbert, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John B. Gavitt, must. out June 19, 1865.
Charles A. Hurd, must. out July 15, 1865.
Edwin Harrington.
John Harris, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John Haley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Hickey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John J. Harrower, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Willis Hartwell, died.
Charles Iselton, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ira Jones, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Apollos Jennings, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Keeler, disch. for disability Jan. 23, 1864.
Michael Kelly, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Joseph R. Loveridge, died.
Patrick Lynch, missing.
Charles E. Lampson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William F. Lane, must. out July 3, 1865.
Henry Mallett, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Murphy, disch. for disability April 18, 1865.
Hiram Murphy, must. out June 20, 1865.
Charles McDermott, must. out June 30, 1865.
Henry M. Marshall, must. out Aug. 18, 1863.
Edward Mead, killed.
Ernest Michaelis, must. out June 1, 1865.
Albert N. Marsh, must. out July 21, 1865.
Harvey J. Nicholson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Northrop, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Hugh O'Donnell, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John O'Brien, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James M. Parsons, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Harry Payne, must. out June 10, 1865.
Sylvester C. Platt, died.
Daniel Payne, died of wounds.
Marcellus R. Pishon, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John R. Phelps, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Harvey Pease, died of wounds.
John Rogers.
George Squire, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Homer Sterling, disch. for disability April 18, 1864.
Adam Sebastian, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jonathan T. Salmons, must. out June 12, 1865.
William L. Stoddard, must. out June 19, 1865.
William Smith, must. out June 12, 1865.
James K. Taylor, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry J. Thompson, must. out June 21, 1865.
Jeremiah A. Thompson, must. out June 17, 1865.
Henry Thecklenberg, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Wedge, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Botsford Whitehead, disch. for disability Feb. 4, 1864.
Edward H. Willard, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Theodore F. Warner, must. out May 14, 1865.
Moses L. Wigglesworth, died a prisoner.
John Williams, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Louis Weber, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Benjamin Bierce, Andrew A. Bronson, John Blaney, James Brown, Ferdinand Cole, Barney Casey, Henry W. Davis, William W. Fox, George Hancock, William S. Kohler, Henry Miller, William H. Rice, Samuel Turner, George Wood, George Wilson.

COMPANY I.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.
Captain.—Eli Sperry.
First Lieutenant.—Gideon D. Crane.
Second Lieutenant.—George E. Betts.

Sergeants.

James M. Bradley, com. in colored troops.
Walter J. Orton, quartermaster-sergeant; died of wounds.
Henry S. McKinney, commissioned.
Marcus D. Smith, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.

Corporals.

Cyrus T. Nicholson, 1st sergeant; disch. for disability June 23, 1865.
George C. Bradley, sergeant; must. out July 12, 1865.
Herbert V. Peck, disch. for disability Dec. 5, 1862.
Charles M. Rowley, must. out May 18, 1865.
Henry F. Hard, died.
John S. White, died.
Dexter C. Northrop, must. out July 7, 1865.

Musicians.

Frederick M. Minor, disch. for disability June 5, 1865.
James C. Polley, died.

Wagoner.

Charles P. De Forest, disch. for disability April 8, 1865.

Privates.

Charles N. Baldwin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Isaac Briggs, died.
William Barry, disch. for disability Jan. 31, 1865.
Edward Botsford, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Patrick Brady, corporal; died of wounds.
Charles Botsford, must. out May 18, 1865.
Herman Bachman, disch. for disability March 9, 1863.
George D. Bennett, must. out June 23, 1865.
Charles Barney, killed.
Henry Dunham, Jr., disch. for disability Feb. 12, 1863.
Charles F. Flushman, corporal; died of wounds.
Charles H. Fogg, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Harvey H. Fox, died.
James W. Green, disch. for disability Feb. 27, 1865.
Almon D. Galpin, killed.
John F. Harrigan, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
John Hutchinson, must. out July 7, 1865.
Ruel Hazen, disch. for disability June 9, 1865.
John S. Hall, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
John T. Hall, disch. for disability Nov. 20, 1863.
Frederick R. Hard, disch. for disability May 27, 1865.
Hubbard Hotchkiss, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Levi H. Hotchkiss, disch. for disability April 26, 1865.
Samuel D. Hayes, must. out May 22, 1865.
George E. Judson, sergeant; died of wounds.
Friend F. Kane, killed.
Daniel E. Leach, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Amos A. Lucas, disch. for disability June 22, 1865.
Israel Lucas, disch. for disability Dec. 18, 1865.

John McLaughlin, must. out June 22, 1865.
Willis J. Mallory, must. out July 8, 1865.
Oscar H. Manchester, disch. for disability Feb. 7, 1865.
Joseph Miller, must. out July 7, 1865.
Samuel M. Mallory, disch. for disability May 8, 1863.
Arthur B. Newy.
Harson B. Northrop, must. out July 7, 1865.
William O'Brien, must. out July 7, 1865.
Erastus F. Peck, must. out July 7, 1865.
Bela Potter, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
William H. Reynolds, must. out July 7, 1865.
John J. Rogers, must. out July 7, 1865.
Henry C. Rogers, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
George W. Root, corporal; must. out May 28, 1865.
Thomas Shaw, sergeant; disch. for disability June 1, 1864.
Frederick C. Slade, must. out July 7, 1865.
Chauncey Seeley, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles T. Squires, corporal; trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Andrew Tiernay, disch. for disability June 7, 1865.
Charles T. Tyrrell, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Ira Thomas, disch. for disability March 4, 1864.
Horatio S. Thomas, died.
Charles L. Thomas, died.
Daniel S. Taylor, must. out June 1, 1865.
Timothy F. Walsh, sergeant; missing.
Curtis Wheeler, died of wounds.
Jareb B. Winton, must. out July 7, 1865.
Ambrose H. Wilsey, disch. by order of War Department Aug. 17, 1865.
Benjamin Wellman, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Elliott Dibble, sergeant; Charles H. Lum, corporal; James Burton, George A. De Forest, Thomas Soothill.

The Recruits of Company I.

Edward Bell, corporal; died.
Ham A. Barnes, died of wounds.
Asahel D. Brockett, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Bennett, died of wounds.
Abner Bennett, disch. for disability Nov. 16, 1864.
David Backus.
George I. Babcock, Jr., trans. to Co. L as sergeant.
Harman Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Comber, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Levi Callender, must. out June 1, 1865.
Addison Cook, killed.
David Cramer, killed.
Stephen Carney, must. out May 30, 1865.
Joseph Curnal, died.
Lewis Clark, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Francis Dugan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Davis, must. out July 8, 1865.
Timothy Elwell, died.
Samuel Eastman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Samuel B. Ferris, killed.
Charles Fox, disch. for disability June 17, 1865.
William Fitzgerald, killed.
William Gregg, disch. for disability Aug. 23, 1864.
Felix Gillick, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Cornelius Goebel, corporal; died.
Thomas Harper, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Holt, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edwin Holland, disch. for disability June 22, 1865.
James Healy, must. out June 19, 1865.
Myron M. Jennings, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Andrew Knoff, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Keeler.
Jason T. Lampson, must. out May 18, 1865.
Marshall Lines, died a prisoner.
Charles A. Locklin, must. out July 8, 1865.
Davis A. Locklin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Isaac W. Locklin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Locklin, died of wounds.
Theodore Lockwood, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Seymour Lobdell, died of wounds.
Banks Lounsbury, died.
John McQueeny, disch. for disability June 19, 1865.
Hanford Meeker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles S. Meeker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John McDavitt, must. out June 1, 1865.
David W. Manning, corporal; disch. for disability July 15, 1865.
Olin Nash, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John K. Northrop, died.
Jeremiah Newcomb, must. out June 8, 1865.
Stephen Olmstead, must. out June 22, 1865.
Henry Payne, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John B. Parker, must. out June 27, 1865.
George Parsons, trans. to the navy.
James Ragan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James T. Roche, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Smith, must. out June 3, 1865.
Charles W. Speer, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Sidney, died.
William Smith, trans. to the navy.
William H. Smith, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Warden Stammer, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Smith, trans. to navy.
James Sweeney, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward Sturges, disch. for disability May 23, 1865.
Leandar Snider, must. out Nov. 23, 1865.
John Simmons, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Stephenson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William B. Shaw, must. out June 18, 1865.
Henry Taylor, disch. for disability April 29, 1865.
John Turley, disch. for disability June 20, 1865.
Theron M. Woodruff, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Nelson B. Williams, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John Wright, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Wright, disch. for disability July 30, 1865.
Albert Woodruff, died a prisoner.
Daniel P. Wakeman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Wells, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William P. Walker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George R. Walker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Webster, must. out June 13, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

George Alford, Dominick Burns, Allen Brundage, Thomas S. Carter, John Clayton, John Farley, William Headdens, James Hill, Joseph Miller, James K. Taylor, James W. Weaver, Melvin R. Warner, Irvin E. Warner.

COMPANY K.

The original infantry company, mustered in at Litchfield, Sept. 11, 1862.
Captain—Edward O. Peck.
First Lieutenant.—Augustus H. Fenn.
Second Lieutenant.—James N. Coe.

Sergeants.

Bushrod H. Camp, sergeant-major; commissioned.
John E. Sedgwick, Jr., first-sergeant; commissioned.
Oscar Platt, commissioned.
William S. Watson, died.
Edwin D. Beeman, first-sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.

Corporals.

James R. Johnson, disch. for disability Jan. 12, 1864.
Wolcott Cook, died.
Hiram Du Bois, disch. for disability Nov. 17, 1862.
Alanson A. Negus, must. out July 7, 1865.
David D. Lake, killed.
Truman O. Sanford, must. out July 7, 1865.
Lant Ryan, died a prisoner.

Musicians.

James Martin, must. out July 7, 1865.
George A. Hoyt, Jr., died.

Wagoner.

Minor C. Wedge, disch. for disability Aug. 13, 1863.

Privates.

Franklin Andrus, killed.
Noble Andrus, missing.
Isaac Baldwin, killed.
Chester L. Bancroft, must. out July 7, 1865.

Hiram L. Bronson, must. out July 7, 1865.
John H. Burns, must. out June 24, 1865.
Charles A. Campbell, must. out July 7, 1865.
Submit B. Castle, disch. for disability Nov. 20, 1863.
Cyrene M. Clark, disch. for disability Feb. 6, 1863.
John H. Cooper, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
George R. Colby, must. out May 18, 1865.
Henry Colby, died.
Daniel Conley, disch. for disability May 15, 1864.
Frederick A. Dauchy, disch. for disability Nov. 24, 1864.
Frederick Ette, must. out July 7, 1865.
John Ette, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles D. Ferris, died.
Patrick Farrell, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Edward Griffin, killed.
Wesley F. Glover, died.
Charles Gregory, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
Elizur A. Hodge, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
William Hart, must. out May 18, 1865.
John Hatton, disch. for disability Aug. 12, 1863.
Stephen P. Harlow, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Thomas Herbert, must. out July 7, 1865.
Anglebert Herman, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles Hungerford, must. out July 7, 1865.
Levi N. Jacus, disch. for disability Jan. 24, 1863.
Alfred June, died of wounds.
Bernard C. Keegan, disch. for disability Aug. 11, 1865.
Alexander D. Kasson, killed.
Sidney A. Law, died.
Arthur Lockwood, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
John A. Ludford, disch. for disability Feb. 25, 1865.
George H. McBurney, killed.
Erwin Munroe, must. out July 14, 1865
John Munson, died of wounds.
Henry Murphy, disch. for disability Nov. 3, 1862.
Eben Norton, died.
John O'Connor, disch. for disability May 18, 1863.
Frank Parker, must. out July 7, 1865.
William R. Parmelee, disch. for disability Dec. 5, 1862.
Abner B. Palmer, must. out July 7, 1865.
Asahel N. Perkins, died of wounds.
Asa Pettis, must. out July 7, 1865.
Charles Reed, killed.
John Shores, must. out July 7, 1865.
Allen Sawyer, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Alonzo Stewart, disch. for disability June 29, 1863.
Edgar J. Stewart, corporal; must. out June 9, 1865.
George E. Taylor, must. out July 7, 1865.
Thomas P. Tompkins, corporal; must. out May 13, 1865.
James Tracy, disch. for disability June 8, 1865.
Enoch G. Warhurst, corporal; must. out July 7, 1865.
John Warner, killed.
Francis Wedge, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
Lebbeus J. Welch, must. out July 7, 1865.
Jacob Wentworth, died of wounds.
Thomas Wheeler, must. out July 7, 1865.
Alfred White, must. out July 7, 1865.
George A. Wood, must. out July 7, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

William H. Knickerbocker, Jason W. Johnson, Ira Warner, Jacob Warner, Noah B. Welch.

The Recruits of Company K.

Charles N. Beeman, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Orson Buell, sergeant; trans. to field and staff.
Lucien Button, killed.
George Brown, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles A. Bristol, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Philo K. Bassett, disch. for disability Dec. 20, 1865.
Daniel Buckley, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Birch, died.
Anton Barth, died.
Henry B. Bristol, killed.
Hubert E. Banker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Daniel Briggs, must. out June 13, 1865.
Charles A. Bigelow.
John Branan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Lucius Brown, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George D. Beeman, disch. for disability July 25, 1865.
Andrew Carney, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John H. Call, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Coleraine.
Joseph E. Camp, missing.
Owen Cromney, died of wounds.
Robert Clark, must. out June 10, 1865.
Michael Convey, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Lyman F. Cole, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
George H. Curtis, must out Aug. 18, 1865.
Amaziah Downs, died a prisoner.
John Fitzpatrick, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Truman P. Favereau, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
John Foley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Finnigan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Gorham, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Gallagher, killed.
William S. Hines, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John H. R. Hipwell, killed.
William Harrington, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Harrington, died.
Homer W. Hodge, disch. for disability Jan. 10, 1865.
Edward D. Hall, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edmund D. Hickey, killed.
Charles Haviland, killed.
Dennis Haley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry H. Hyatt, killed.
George Hoxley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Benjamin W. Higby, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Leander Ide, died.
Charles A. Johnson, died of wounds.
Andrew Jackson, killed.
Patrick Kennedy, killed.
George H. Knapp, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Roswell Kelly, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William B. Leach, died.
Joseph Lewis, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward Monroe, disch. for disability Jan. 24, 1864.
Francis McAdam.
Henry Miller.
Charles May, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ransom L. Maloney, must. out June 28, 1865.
George W. Murphy, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles F. Morris, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Albert J. Miner, died of wounds.
Robert Morris, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry H. Mason, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Martin, killed.
Dennis Moore, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Oliver P. Platt, must. out Aug. 21, 1865.
George Platt, disch. for disability March 8, 1865.
Austin V. Rogers, must. out July 10, 1865.
Charles H. Russell, missing.
Isaac Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Smith, must. out July 3, 1865.
Robert Sothergill, killed.
Chauncey Stevens, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
Edgar Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William H. Stephens, disch. for disability June 6, 1865.
James Slatery, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert S. Short, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Francis Sothergill, must. out Sept. 5, 1865.
Charles Simoson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Evelyn L. Thorpe, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Abram A. Tolles, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Allen S. Tuttle, disch. for disability June 23, 1865.
William W. Wheeler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Nathan B. Westbrook, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

John Bray, Henry S. Cummings, John Clarke, John Campbell, Orrin Ferguson, James Finnegan, Solomon Gorham, Charles A. Hoyt, William Howe, James Jones, William Kendrick, Daniel Lavell, Oakley Middlebrook, John Murphy, Frank Morton, James Monrow, Michael

Riley, Charles H. Trigler, Samuel Williams, Benjamin Wells, William Wenslor.

COMPANY L.*

Captain.—James Deane.
First Lieutenants.—Philip E. Chapin, Edward C. Huxley.
Second Lieutenants.—James M. Snowden, Oscar Platt.
William H. Allen, first sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Alfreds, trans. to the navy.
George I. Babcock, Jr., sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Timothy Brown, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Calvin A. Bowers, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Butler, died a prisoner.
James Busse, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
August Berg, killed.
Thomas Burns, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William J. Burke, must. out Aug. 8, 1865.
James Bishop, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Blackman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Barry, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Boyce, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Jesse Cady, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Dugald Campbell, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out June 10, 1865.
John Calnon, must. out June 1, 1865.
John Clow, disch. for disability Jan. 15, 1865.
William J. Dixon, corporal; died.
Ezra Daggett, discharged April 18, 1865.
Charles Davenport, died.
William Dostman, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Marshall Davenport, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Dostman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Anthony Dougherty, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Oliver Dugette, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1855.
William Day, died of wounds.
Peter Dolan, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Seneca Edgett, sergeant; commissioned.
Thomas B. Foster, died.
Thomas Farrell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Clark Fox, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Farrell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George R. Grover, died a prisoner.
Sylvester Graves, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles A. Goulict, must. out June 1, 1865.
Charles E. Groat, corporal; must. out June 10, 1865.
James Gillin, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles W. Hale, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Robert Harrington, disch. for disability Nov. 1, 1864.
Noah Hart, disch. for disability Nov. 15, 1865.
Frederick Hooker, died.
Henry A. Hubbell, corporal; died.
William Hall, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Hughes, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Heidenrich, must. out May 31, 1865.
James Hyatt, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Amos L. Ives, died of wounds.
Henry Jones, trans. to the navy.
Van Leeson Jenks, must. out June 12, 1865.
Richard M. Kelley, trans. to the navy.
Austin P. Kirkham, sergeant; commissioned.
George McCoy, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
William Molloy, died.
Norman Mansfield, corporal; died of wounds.
Thomas McDonald, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Andrew McGrath, sergeant; must. out July 7, 1865.
William Morton, corporal; died.
John Martin, killed.
John Mullen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry McGinety, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas May, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward H. Northrop, corporal, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter D. Nelson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Norman, must. out June 23, 1865.
John Owen, must. out June 0, 1865.
Dominick O'Brien, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Elisha Peck, must. out June 17, 1865.
John S. Parmelee, sergeant-major; trans. to field and staff.

* Composed entirely of recruits.

Walter William Payn, disch. for disability Jan. 18, 1865.
George Phelps, must. out June 19, 1865.
William Parry, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Parker, sergeant; disch. for disability Sept. 24, 1864.
John Pollard, died.
George M. Perkins, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles H. Ryan, corporal; must. out June 9, 1865.
William Rodman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Isaac Reimert, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Reed, disch. for disability June 5, 1865.
William Ragan, must. out June 10, 1865.
Samuel N. Scranton, corporal; must. out June 1, 1865.
William A. Slenker, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Watson W. Stone, disch. April 2, 1864; furnished substitute.
John S. Strickland, 1st sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Scott, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward A. Snow, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Frederick Slade, died.
Frank Sabine, disch. for disability April 29, 1865.
George Stringer.
Biard Tuttle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Edward Thomas (2d), must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Travers, trans. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Thomas Taylor, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Vrooman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Nelson Vrooman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Adelbert D. Webster, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Woods, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Williams, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James Wilson, corporal; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Wellfrot, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Horace B. Wood, died.
Christopher C. Wells, must. out June 15, 1865.
Morris W. White, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Wallace.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

George Alexander, William Brown, John Brown, Ernest Bauer, Thomas Butterfield, James W. Blake, Robert Burk, David Brown, Adam Bartholomew, Byron Booth, Andrew Clark, Richard Crawford, John Clark, Richard Darling, Elliott L. Dorman, Oscar Davidson, John Davidson, Edward M. Dunham, Thomas Daley, James Edmonds, John Emerson, Andrew Edwards, Joseph Furniss, George Ferguson, George Fiss, John Finnegan, George Fairbanks, Albert Fisher, Thomas A. Goodman, John M. Grant, Joseph Gettner, George Green, John Gilmore, John Greenwood, Richard G. Hawkins, Albert Howe, James Haywood, Peter Hanson, John Hilton, James Hart, William Hall, Charles Hart, Benjamin Hawkins, George Jackson, William Jones, Edward King, John Kreeler, Patrick Kelly, James Kenar, George King, John Lewis, Henry Lewis, Wendell Lehman, William Lee, John McQuanne, Thomas McCarty, Alexander McCarty, David Miller, Thomas Maxwell, James M. Donald, Michael Mooll, Frank McKay, Patrick Murray, William Myer, John M. Intyre, Patrick McCormick, John O Brien, Edward O Brien, Henry Peters, David Purdy, William Provost, Joseph Palmer, John Roberts, Patrick Riley, Charles Russell, James Smith, Charles Smith, Edward L. Sangston, Martin Sullivan, James Shaw, George Thompson, Charles Thompson, Edward Thomas 1st, William Thompson, John Tracy substitute for Watson W. Stone, James Van Slyke, Allen G. Wormegar, Thomas Weldon, John White, James Watts, John Wright, Andrew Wilson.

COMPANY M.†

Captain – Edward W. Marsh.
First Lieutenant – James P. McCabe.
Second Lieutenant – Henry Skinner.
Henry B. Hoyt, first sergeant; commissioned.
Silas A. Palmer, quartermaster-sergeant; must. out May 12, 1865.
Charles Allen, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Bergen, missing.
George Bunnell, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William T. Blake, must. out June 22, 1865.
Charles Brant, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Burns, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles C. Bosworth, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Cosgrove, disch. for disability Nov. 22, 1864.
Edward Corcoran, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.

† Composed entirely of recruits.

Samuel Cummings, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Colburn, died of wounds.
James H. Case, died.
Edward Crosby, must. out June 13, 1865.
George H. Couch, must. out June 22, 1865.
James Doyle, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Thomas Doyle, died.
Theodore Drune, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George W. Dayton, must. out June 1, 1865.
Alexander Ellcock, must. out June 1, 1865.
William Erwin, must. out May 30, 1865.
Cornelius L. Everett, must. out June 8, 1865.
James Fitzsimmons, must. out June 9, 1865.
John Feeney, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Feneren, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Fitzgerald, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
William Fisher, trans. to the navy.
Martin H. Grube, disch. for disability May 20, 1865.
James Gallagher, must. out Aug. 12, 1865.
Charles E. Gilbert, must. out June 1, 1865.
William Hodman, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Hayden, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
John Jay, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Patrick Keegan, killed.
Azarie N. Lamoreux, sergeant; commissioned.
Patrick Little, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
James H. Lee, disch. for disability Oct. 8, 1865.
Amaziah Livingstone, disch. for disability June 30, 1865.
William Manson, disch. for disability Aug. 8, 1865.
John McFarden, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Maskell, sergeant; must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Samuel S. Osborne, killed.
James M. Price, disch. for disability March 21, 1865.
James Parker, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George M. Price, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Bernard Riley, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Michael Roach, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Ellsworth M. Russell, must. out June 28, 1865.
Edwin Rawson, disch. for disability Feb. 17, 1865.
Myron W. Schultz, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Samuel Simpson, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Merritt W. Sweet, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Charles Smith, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Schmidt, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Henry Strih, disch. for disability June 13, 1865.
Abner W. Scott, killed.
John Thomas, died.
Edward S. Tubbs, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
George Taylor, trans. to the navy.
Selah T. Wheeler, must. out Aug. 18, 1865.
Peter Ward, must. out June 10, 1865.

Not Mustered Out with Company.

Charles Anderson, James Anderson, John Anderson, Thomas Adams, William Asken, Thomas Crown, James Brannon, Andrew Burns, James Brown, James A. Brown, Joseph Barber, John Blaney, Nicholas Burk, John Bruce, David Bartly, Patrick Birmingham, Vinson Clark, Thomas Crane, Robert Colman, Joseph Carr, Joseph M. Cooper, George Cashier, John Cole, William Culver, John Dow, Alfred Dickenson, John Davis, Thomas Donahue, John Dukin, James Devine, James M. Eagan, John Flannigan, Ransom J. Fargo, Thomas Foley, Michael Farrell, James Flinn, Andrew Flannigan, James Graham, John Hargent, Frank Henry, Patrick Hyland, Patrick Hagen, George Holland, William E. Joy, James Jones, John Jones (1st), John Jones (2d), George Joues, John Kennedy, John King, Arthur Kemp, Patrick Kennedy, John Larkins, Robert Mullen, John McLaughlin, Thomas Mack, Charles Milton, Charles Marsh, John McShaahy, Terence O'Neil, George Pennington, William Potter, John Perston, Edson Patrick, William Ryan, Henry Roth, John Rork, John Robinson, William Rouke, James Roberts, James Robinson, Henry Smith, John Smith, James Smith (1st), James Smith (2d), John Shaahan, James Spellman, John Sweeny, Jacob Smith, William A. Taylor, John Turner, Charles Thomas, George Thompson, John G. Terrell, Horace A. Thompson, Peter Welch, Robert Willis, George M. Washington, James Wilson (1st), James Wilson (2d), Joseph Welch, John Williams, George White, John Wilson, Charles E. Wold, James Winslow, James C. Williams, Julius Zimber.

CHAPTER VI.

MILITARY HISTORY (Continued).

The Twenty-third Regiment—The Twenty-eighth Regiment—First Regiment Heavy Artillery.

THE TWENTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

THE Twenty-third Regiment was recruited mainly from Bridgeport, Danbury, Waterbury, Newtown, Fairfield, Georgetown, Bethel, Naugatuck, Ansonia, and Trumbull, in Fairfield County, and Watertown, in this county, during the months of August, September, and October, 1862. It was designed as a nine months' regiment, though every man served a year, and some two years, before being mustered out of service.

The companies rendezvoused at Camp Terry, Oyster Point, New Haven, early in September, where they commenced the drill, and did guard duty until the 16th of November, when they embarked on the Sound steamer "Elm City" for "Camp Buckingham," at Centreville Race Course, near Jamaica, L. I.

This regiment was under the command of Col. Charles E. L. Holmes, of Waterbury, with Charles W. Wordin, of Bridgeport, for lieutenant-colonel, and David H. Miller, of Georgetown, as major.

Camp Buckingham was a mud-hole of the worst possible description, and the Twenty-third pitched tents in a rain-storm that lasted a week.

November 30th the regiment marched twelve miles to the foot of Atlantic Street, Brooklyn, thence on board the "Che Kiang," a river steamer totally unfit for "outside" weather; and because of being overloaded, after three days, Companies H and I of the Twenty-third, with one company of the Twenty-eighth and another of the Twenty-fifth Connecticut Volunteers, were transferred to the barracks at Pier 1, New York. All but these companies left New York City for the Gulf of Mexico, on the "Che Kiang," Dec. 3, 1862. The steamer was nearly swamped in a terrific storm on the night of December 5th, and the suffering on board for several days was very great. They arrived at Ship Island on the 11th.

The portion of the regiment left in barracks at New York received orders, December 12th, to go on board the ship "Windermere," while the balance were dispatched on the ship "Planter," an old hulk that was wrecked off Florida Keys. A few stragglers reached Louisiana on the ship "Alice Counce."

These divisions arrived at New Orleans at long intervals apart, and when once there were assigned to guard duty along the eighty miles of the New Orleans, Opelousas and Great Western Railroad, and kept at such duty almost continuously till their term of service had expired, though they repeatedly asked that they might be relieved and sent to the front. The Twenty-third was never brigaded, but left to itself, shunned by paymasters for many months, kept a year instead of nine months in service, and its officers, most of them, confined nearly fourteen months in rebel prison-pens.

June 20, 1863, the rebels under Gen. Dick Taylor captured Terre Bonne, and on the 21st drove in the pickets of the Twenty-third at Lafourche Crossing. The same night the rebels made several attempts to capture Lafourche, but were repulsed with three hundred and seventy killed and wounded. Federal loss, thirty wounded and nine killed.

The rebels shelled Brashear City on the 23d, which, being defended almost solely by convalescents, was at last forced to surrender. The officers captured by Taylor were all marched to Tyler, Smith Co., Texas (Camp Ford), and held nearly fourteen months, while the men were paroled, and Aug. 9, 1863 (Sunday), at one o'clock P.M., left New Orleans on a Mississippi River steamboat "homeward bound." They arrived at New Haven, Conn., at six A.M. August 24th, and were welcomed with military and civic honors.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

This regiment was organized Oct. 11, 1862, at New Haven, and was mustered into the United States service November 15th, with the following officers: Colonel, Samuel P. Ferris; lieutenant-colonel, Whelock T. Batcheller; major, William B. Wescome; adjutant, Charles H. Brown; quartermaster, Milton Bradley, Jr.; chaplain, Richard Wheatly; sergeant-major, William A. Bailey; quartermaster-sergeant, Wilfred H. Mattson; commissary-sergeant, N. B. Bennett; hospital steward, William E. Bissell; surgeon, Ransom P. Lyon; first assistant surgeon, Levi S. Pease; second assistant surgeon, Henry Rockwell.

LINE-OFFICERS.

Company A.—Captain, Francis R. Leeds; first lieutenant, Philip Lever; second lieutenant, F. R. Warner.

Company B.—Captain, Cyrus D. Jones; first lieutenant, Charles Durand; second lieutenant, Henry L. Wilmot.

Company C.—Captain, L. R. McDonough; first lieutenant, William M. Whitney; second lieutenant, J. C. Taylor.

Company D.—Captain, David D. Hoag; first lieutenant, Charles M. Booth; second lieutenant, Levi Hungerford.

Company E.—Captain, Charles B. Landon; first lieutenant, Joseph Bostwick; second lieutenant, Warren C. Dailey.

Company F.—Captain, L. B. Wheelock; first lieutenant, C. P. Newman; second lieutenant, Jabez Alford.

Company G.—Captain, T. L. Beckwith; first lieutenant, William Mitchell; second lieutenant, Henry Ayres.

Company H.—Captain, George W. Middleton; first lieutenant, James Kiley; second lieutenant, Thomas G. Bennett.

Three companies,—D, E, and F,—with the exception of one man, were enlisted from Salisbury.

The regiment left New Haven November 18th, and proceeded to Camp Buckingham, L. I. Here it remained until the 28th, when, having been assigned to the Department of the South, it embarked on the "Che Kiang" for a Southern clime. The Twenty-third Connecticut also embarked in the same steamer, thus crowding fourteen hundred men in quarters which would comfortably accommodate about eight hundred.

The steamer weighed anchor at ten A.M., December 3d, with sealed orders, which finally assigned the regiments to Ship Island, La. During the voyage a storm arose, and for twelve hours the heavily-laden steamer battled with the angry waves which lashed in fury about it, seeming every moment to swallow it up in the awful abyss. During the night, while the storm was on, an officer sent the intelligence, "We shall never see another sunrise; the vessel cannot stand it much longer." The vessel, however, rode safely on, and the voyage was completed in safety.

December 12th the regiment disembarked on Ship Island. On the 17th it re-embarked for New Orleans, and after stopping a few hours in the city started for Camp Parapet, some seven miles up the river, where it landed and pitched tents, but was immediately ordered to re-embark for Pensacola, Fla. By eleven that night it was on board again and ready for starting. It reached Pensacola Monday morning, and stacked its arms on the Grand Plaza. On the 20th it was ordered to evacuate Pensacola and go to the Barrancas Navy-Yard, where it remained until May 20th, when it was ordered to take the steamer "Crescent" and proceed to Brashear City, La. On the 25th it was ordered to Port Hudson, and at noon reached Springfield Landing, having now come within hearing distance of the strife of arms. Marching twelve miles towards the scene of conflict, it found itself now, by some oversight of the movement, right between the two contending armies. It fairly ran the gauntlet, escaping unharmed, and the next day, after a march of about thirty miles, when four might have sufficed, it reached Grover's division, to which it had been assigned. Until June 3d it here suffered for want of rest and food, when it was ordered to the front. At this time Col. Ferris was acting brigadier, with Maj. Wescome in charge of the regiment.

The regiment was now called upon to test the music of whistling balls, and there was for the present to be no more rest for it. June 4th it was ordered to be ready to go into the rifle-pits. In spite of blundering movements, Company A in advance, it at length reached the pits, where it spent the night. The next day, until eight in the evening, the men did their best, "firing fast and well," to harm the enemy, when they were ordered back to camp. This move was executed without loss, and the regiment next did good service in the trenches.

The regiment participated in the second assault on Port Hudson, when it lost fifty-nine killed, wounded, and missing. Among the killed were Capt. Hoag, of New Milford, and Lieut. Durand, of Stamford. This was one of the most desperate charges made during the Rebellion, but in that holocaust of fire not a man in that noble legion shrank from his duty.

After the surrender of the place the Twenty-eighth did garrison duty until the expiration of its term of service. The regiment lost,—killed, 9; died of wounds, 9; died of disease, 65. It was mustered out at New Haven, Aug. 28, 1863.

FIRST REGIMENT HEAVY ARTILLERY.

There was one company—I—in this regiment from Litchfield County. Its officers were as follows: Captain, Sanford H. Perkins; first lieutenant, Albert F. Brooker; second lieutenant, Edward H. Mix, all from Torrington. The regiment was organized as the Fourth Regiment of Infantry, and remained as such until June 2, 1862, when it was changed to heavy artillery. It was a gallant regiment, and participated in the following engagements: Siege of Yorktown, Hanover Court-house, Gaines' Mills, Chickahominy, Golden Hill, Malvern Hill, siege of Fredericksburg, before Fredericksburg, Kelly's Ford, Orange Court-house, siege of Petersburg and Richmond, Fort Fisher.

CHAPTER VII.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

The Housatonic Railroad—The Naugatuck Railroad—The Connecticut Western—The Shepaug—The New Haven and Northampton.

THE HOUSATONIC RAILROAD COMPANY was incorporated in 1836, with authority to build a road from Sheffield, Mass., to Brookfield, Conn., and from thence to tide-water at Bridgeport, or such other point as might be deemed expedient.

In order to aid the undertaking, the city of Bridgeport, at a meeting held March 2, 1837, voted to subscribe for stock of the new company to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars, and individuals residing in other towns upon the route subscribed for two hundred thousand dollars more.

Ex-Governor Gideon Tomlinson acted for a time as president of the company, but at the first regular election, April 5, 1837, the following persons were chosen officers of the road: William P. Burrall, President; William H. Noble, Secretary; Jesse Sterling, Treasurer; William P. Burrall, Edwin Porter, Samuel Simons, Stephen Lounsbury, Charles De Forest, of Bridgeport, Anan Hine, Asa Pickett, of New Milford, Alpheus Fuller, of Kent, and Peter Bierce, of Cornwall, Directors.

Mr. Horace Nichols subsequently became treasurer of the road, and held the position until his resignation, in 1848. A contract was made by the board of directors with Messrs. Bishop and Sykes to build the entire road for the sum of $936,000,—viz., cash, $636,000, and stock of the company at par, $300,000. Work was commenced in July, 1837, about three hundred men being employed by the contractors.

Owing to the panic of 1837, which caused nearly all the banks and moneyed institutions of the country to suspend specie payments, subscriptions for stock were not received as rapidly as had been anticipated, and the progress of the road was delayed.

In February, 1840, the southern division of the road—viz., from Bridgeport to New Milford—was completed and opened for travel. The cost up to that time had been, for the road proper, $476,000; for cars, engines, depots, tanks, etc., $99,000; total, $575,000.

The remaining portion of the road was opened Dec. 1, 1842. Much annoyance was caused by the original track, which consisted of an iron strap fastened upon wooden sills by spikes, which often became loose, when the weight of passing trains caused it to curl up into "snake-heads." In 1846 it was replaced by iron rails of the present pattern.

March 25, 1838, the city of Bridgeport voted to confirm the previous subscription of one hundred thousand dollars, and authorized an additional one of fifty thousand dollars, and Messrs. Henry Dutton, F. C. Bassett, and Lockwood De Forest were appointed agents for the city to raise the necessary funds by issuing coupon bonds. These bonds were paid to the railroad company in lieu of cash, and by the company were disposed of to other parties.

At the May session in 1838 the Legislature by a special act validated the action of the city of Bridgeport, referred to above, in subscribing for the stock of the Housatonic Railroad Company, and in issuing bonds in payment for the stock. This act of the General Assembly was approved at a city meeting held for the purpose, but no provision was made for the payment of the bonds or of the coupons as they fell due.

The action of the majority was viewed with alarm by many of the leading tax-payers, who in January, 1839, appointed a "Council of Safety," to advise as to what measures should be taken in regard to these bonds. This council was composed of thirteen members, Philo Hurd being chairman and Isaac Sherman secretary. Eminent counsel were also retained by the city, and an effort was made to secure the services of Daniel Webster, but Mr. Webster was obliged to decline the case on account of other engagements. No active effort seems to have been made by any one to repudiate the debt, but a very general desire was manifested that some competent tribunal should decide to what extent the private property of citizens in the minority could be taken to satisfy a debt created by the vote of a majority, many of whom were not tax-payers.

In June, 1843, the railroad company obtained judgment against the city in the Superior Court, and, an appeal to the Supreme Court of Errors having been decided in favor of the plaintiff, an execution on this judgment was issued and placed in the hands of Deputy Sheriff Smith, of Norwalk, to be by him levied and collected. This officer then first demanded payment of the amount from the mayor, clerk, and treasurer of the city in turn, and then, payment not having been made, called upon them to exhibit goods, chattels, or lands belonging to the debtors,—viz., the mayor, Common Council, and freemen of the city,—which they were either unable or unwilling to do. The deputy sheriff then, acting under legal advice, broke open the dry-goods store of Bronson B. Beardsley and the wholesale grocery of Niles, Thorp & Co., and, seizing a quantity of goods from the former, sold them at the post. Mr. Beardsley brought an action against the deputy sheriff for taking his property unlawfully, but in June, 1844, the case was decided against him. It was then carried to the Supreme Court of the State, where the decision in favor of the defendant was affirmed, Judge Church, in giving the opinion, using the following language:

"The city of Bridgeport, with great deliberation and unanimity, and under sanction of the General Assembly, has contracted a debt. The securities issued by the city have been purchased by bona-fide holders, with its assent, and upon the faith of the city and the laws. No funds, either by taxation or otherwise, have been provided for payment. A right without a remedy is not an admitted principle. We know of no other practical remedy but the one to which this plaintiff has resorted."

This was a very important decision, as the question at issue—viz., the liability of private property for the debts of a municipality—had never before been adjudicated. Once definitely settled, however, immediate steps were taken for the payment of overdue interest and legal expenses, and a tax of seven and a half per cent. upon the entire property of the city was laid and collected.

In 1856 a sinking fund of fifty thousand dollars—this being the sum derived from the sale of the stock owned by the city—was established by Mayor Calhoun, which, by careful management, has increased from year to year, until the greater part of the railroad debt of the city has already been paid off, and for the balance, due in 1886, full provision is already made.

In 1844 the road, which had largely been built with borrowed capital, was much crippled. It passed into the hands of a committee of twenty citizens, and for some time was operated under the name of E. Gregory & Co. Preferred stock to a large amount was finally issued, and a reorganization of the company effected.

Judging from the last report of the railroad commissioners, however, this road is now in a prosperous state. At the beginning of the year 1880 it had 74 miles of track, extending from Bridgeport to Sheffield, Mass., besides several branches and leased lines. Its capital stock is $2,000,000,—viz., $820,000 old stock, and $1,180,000 preferred. Its bonded debt is $550,000, and its floating indebtedness $228,038.73; total, $778,-038.73. It has 20 locomotives, 32 passenger- and baggage-cars, and 440 freight-cars, 420 employees, and 20 stations. It carried last year 252,740 passengers and 225,037 tons of freight, and its revenue from all sources was $599,660.09.

The railroad commissioners, in concluding their report, say of this road,—

"Steel rails have been laid as far north as Merwinsville, and it is proposed to continue the steel track during the present year to the State line. The bridges, track, and rolling stock of this road are all in good condition. The usual dividend of eight per cent. has been paid to the preferred stockholders."

The following are the officers of the company: William H. Barnum, President; David S. Draper, Vice-President; Charles K. Averill, Secretary and Treasurer; Henry C. Cogswell, General Freight Agent; Hobart W. Watson, Chief Clerk; L. B. Stillson, Superintendent; William H. Barnum, of Lime Rock, Conn.; Samuel Willets, of New York; Horace Nichols, William D. Bishop, of Bridgeport; George W. Peet, of Falls Village; Edward Leavitt, John B. Peck, of New York; D. S. Draper, of Great Barrington; A. B. Mygatt, of New Milford, Directors.

NAUGATUCK RAILROAD.

The Naugatuck Railroad, from Derby to Plymouth, was chartered in 1845. In 1847 the company was allowed an extension of one year for commencing its road and expending thereon the sum of fifty thousand dollars, and were authorized to extend its line to Winsted. Prior to the awarding of the contracts and extending the line to Winsted, it had been transferred to Alfred Bishop, of Bridgeport, and his associates, who, in consideration of a bonus of thirty thousand dollars and payment of the land damages along its line to Waterbury, by the citizens interested in its completion, contracted to build the road and open it to that point in 1849. Soon after the extension to Winsted was authorized, Mr. Bishop proposed to so extend it, on being secured another cash bonus of thirty thousand dollars and a right of way from Waterbury northward. The proposition was unlooked for, but was promptly responded to. A meeting of citizens interested along the line was immediately called, and a division of responsibility was agreed upon, by which the citizens of Winsted assumed half the bonus and the securing the whole right of way and depot grounds within the town of Winchester; and the citizens of Wolcottville and Plymouth agreed to assume the other half of the bonus and the whole expense of the remaining land title.

A spirit of liberality, before unprecedented, prevailed. Men gave their thousands who had never before given a hundred for any public object. The subscription was speedily filled up, when the chronic sectional disease of our community broke out on the question of locating the terminus,—whether it should be on East village green, on the Flat, or in the West village. There was a backing down of a portion of subscriptions, which rendered a new subscription necessary on the basis of locating the terminus on the Flat, where the depot now stands. A reassessment of the adhering subscribers was proposed and speedily adopted. About five thousand dollars was assumed by adhering subscribers to make good the withdrawn subscriptions, and the contract with Mr. Bishop was thereupon perfected.

The iron horse paid his first visit to the Winsted depot Sept. 21, 1849. The first passenger-train came up on Saturday the 22d, and returned on the following Monday.

Mr. Bishop, the projector and builder of the road, died before its completion. He was a man of far-seeing and comprehensive views, of quiet energy and liberal spirit.

The present officers and directors are as follows: President, E. F. Bishop, Bridgeport, Conn.; Secretary and Treasurer, Horace Nichols, Bridgeport, Conn.; Superintendent, George W. Beach, Waterbury, Conn.; Chief Clerk, James Potter, Bridgeport, Conn.; General Ticket Agent, William Tomlin, Bridgeport, Conn.; Freight Agent, B. Soules, Bridgeport, Conn.; Board of Directors, E. F. Bishop, William D. Bishop, R. Tomlinson, Bridgeport, Conn.; J. G. Wetmore, Winsted, Conn.; F. J. Kingsbury, Waterbury, Conn.; A. L. Dennis, Newark, N. J.; H. Bronson, J. B. Robertson, New Haven, Conn.; R. M. Bassett, Birmingham, Conn.

CONNECTICUT WESTERN RAILROAD.

After the opening of the Naugatuck Railroad, in 1850, the necessity of a railroad communication eastward to the Connecticut River, and westward to the Hudson, became more and more apparent, but until recently seemed impracticable, by reason of the high grades and circuitous lines required in running roads easterly and westerly over the mountain ranges between the Hudson and Connecticut Rivers.

The steady growth of Collinsville, New Hartford, and Winsted, and the great enlargement of the iron interests of Salisbury and Canaan, stimulated the desire to overcome difficulties in the way of the enterprise which had seemed to the communities interested to be insuperable.

Public attention was first called to the practicability of the enterprise by E. T. Butler, Esq., of Norfolk, in 1865, and, mainly through his instrumentality, experimental surveys were made during that year; and in 1866 a charter was granted to the "Connecticut Western Railroad Company," with power to construct a road from Collinsville, Conn., to the Massachusetts State line, on the border of North Canaan. Strenuous efforts were made by Mr. Butler and others to interest capitalists in the scheme. The Boston and Erie Railroad Company were vainly solicited to make the route a part of their line. Hartford and Springfield capitalists were appealed to in vain. The Canal Railroad Company would have nothing to do with it. The Harlem, Housatonic, and Naugatuck Companies, with which it was to form connections, gave it a cold shoulder.

At this nearly hopeless stage of the enterprise the Dutchess and Columbia Railroad Company, under the auspices of George H. Brown, Esq., of Washington Valley, N. Y., had completed their road from Fishkill-on-the-Hudson, opposite Newburg, to near Pine Plains, in Dutchess Co., N. Y., and were seeking an eastern connection. The existence of the Connecticut Western charter was made known to Mr. Brown, who, with characteristic energy, at once embarked with Mr. Butler and others in the enterprise. A new charter was obtained from the Legislature of 1868, granting power to extend the road from the city of Hartford to Collinsville; thence to follow the line of the charter of 1866, through New Hartford, Winsted, and Norfolk; and thence to diverge westerly through North Canaan and Salisbury, in the direction of Millerton, on the Harlem Railroad, so as to connect with the Dutchess and Columbia Railroad at the State line. The charter authorized towns along the line of the road, in their corporate capacity, to subscribe and pay for stock in the road to an amount not exceeding five per cent. of their grand lists last made up, on being empowered so to do by a two-thirds vote of the inhabitants of such towns at meetings duly called and notified for that purpose.

The town of Winchester, on the 22d of August, 1868, by a ballot of three hundred and sixty-six to sixty-six, voted a subscription of five per cent. on its lists, amounting to one hundred and sixteen thousand dollars, to the stock of the company, and individual citizens of the town made further subscriptions to the amount of seventy-four thousand nine hundred dollars. Winchester was the first town on the line to vote on this test question, the result of which was to determine whether the road should be carried through. Subscriptions of other towns along the line were soon afterwards voted as follows:

	By Town.	By Citizens.
Salisbury	$50,000	$103,090
Canaan	34,000	16,000
Norfolk	41,500	10,800
Canton	40,000
Simsbury	50,000	20,100
Bloomfield	42,300	25,900
Hartford	750,000	64,000
Winchester	116,000	74,900

The surveys, estimates, and location of the road were completed in 1870, and the whole line was put under contract immediately afterwards. The first passenger-train passed over the road from Hartford to Millerton, N. Y., on the 21st of December, 1871, and returned the same day, and since then the communication has been uninterrupted. Its connections with other roads along its line, and at its termini, will make it a trunk-line of equal importance with the other east-and-west roads of New England. Its connections with roads already completed are with three roads at Hartford, with the Canal Road at Simsbury, its branch at Collinsville, the Naugatuck at Winsted, the Housatonic at Canaan, the Poughkeepsie and Eastern, the Dutchess and Columbia at State line, and the Harlem at Millerton. Other connections are shortly to be completed with the Connecticut River and Boston and Albany roads at Springfield, the Collinsville and New Britain branch at Collinsville, the Farmington River road from Lee to New Hartford, or Winsted, and the road from Rhinebeck-on-the-Hudson to the State line, the three latter now in process of construction.

The present officers are as follows: President, C. J. Camp, West Winsted, Conn.; Vice-President, C. T. Hillyer, Hartford, Conn.; Secretary, E. R. Beardsley, West Winsted, Conn.; Treasurer, William L. Gilbert, West Winsted, Conn.; Superintendent, John F. Jones, Hartford, Conn.; General Ticket Agent, Walter Pearce, Hartford, Conn.; General Freight Agent, John F. Jones, Hartford, Conn.; Board of Directors, C. T. Hillyer, T. M. Allyn, H. S. Barbour, L. B. Merriam, N. B. Stevens, Hartford, Conn.; Joseph Toy, Simsbury, Conn.; C. J. Camp, William L. Gilbert, George Dudley (deceased), West Winsted, Conn.; E. T. Butler, Norfolk, Conn.; D. J. Warner, Salisbury, Conn.; A. H. Holley, Lakeville, Conn.; L. W. Cutler, Watertown, Conn.

SHEPAUG RAILROAD.

The first meeting of the corporators of the Shepaug Valley Railroad Company was held at Litchfield, April 25, 1869, when it was voted that books be opened for subscription to the capital stock. At the second meeting of the corporators, held at Litchfield, Nov. 13, 1869, it was voted that the first meeting of stockholders be called at Litchfield, Nov. 27, 1869, for the purpose of choosing directors. At the meeting, which was held pursuant to call, the following were chosen: David C. Whittlesey, Chairman; Edward W. Seymour, Clerk; Directors, J. Deming Perkins, Henry W. Buel, George A. Hickox, Henry R. Coit, Edward W. Seymour, George M. Woodruff, William Deming, Simon H. Mitchell, Seth S. Logan, George C. Hitchcock, Albert L. Hodge, Glover Sanford. J. Deming Perkins was elected President; Simeon H. Mitchell, Vice-President; Henry R. Coit, Treasurer; and George M. Woodruff, Secretary. Sept. 9, 1870, the directors met and voted to invite Maj. Edwin McNeill to meet with the board, he having taken a deep interest in the enterprise and made the preliminary survey at his own expense. On the 24th of the same month it was voted to adopt as the location of road the line as laid in the valley of Shepaug River, through Roxbury, more than four hundred thousand dollars having been subscribed to the capital stock.

Maj. Edwin McNeill was elected director Oct. 1, 1870, in place of Glover Sanford, resigned. The construction of the road commenced October, 1870, and it was opened for business Jan. 1, 1872. In 1873 the second mortgage bondholders foreclosed, a new charter was obtained, and a new company was organized in June, 1873, as "The Shepaug Railroad Company," the second mortgage bondholders of the Shepaug Valley Railroad Company becoming stockholders in the new corporation.

The first board of directors were Edwin McNeill, Origen S. Seymour, Henry W. Buel, George M. Woodruff, Henry R. Coit, F. Ratchford Starr, J. Deming Perkins, and William Deming. J. Deming Perkins was elected President; Henry R. Coit, Treasurer; George M. Woodruff, Secretary.

Maj. Edwin McNeill died in September, 1875, and his son, Edwin McNeill, was chosen director in his place.

The present board of directors are Henry W. Buel, Henry R. Coit, William Deming, Origen S. Seymour, Dorsey Neville, Asahel H. Morse, Holmes O. Morse, Leverett W. Wessells, and Edwin McNeill. The officers are Henry W. Buel, President; Henry R. Coit, Vice-President; William Deming, Secretary; Henry R. Coit, Treasurer; Edwin McNeill, Superintendent.

The road extends from the borough of Litchfield thirty-two and one-half miles to Hawleyville, in Fairfield County, where it connects with the Housatonic, Danbury and Norwalk and New York and New England Railroads. Arrangements have been made for the erection of a union freight and passenger station building and platforms for the accommodation of the business of the four roads meeting at that point. The cost of the Shepaug road has been about one million dollars, a local enterprise, the entire cost furnished by the section of country traversed by the road, about three-quarters of the amount named having been raised in the town of Litchfield. The road traverses a good section of country heretofore comparatively isolated, and much credit is due to its enterprising progenitors and those through whose influence and energy it has been sustained.

A branch of the New Haven and Northampton Railroad extends from Farmington to New Hartford, the New York and New England road passes through Woodbury, and a branch of the Naugatuck extends from Waterbury to Watertown.

CHAPTER VIII.

POPULATION AND SCHOOL STATISTICS.

POPULATION OF LITCHFIELD COUNTY.

	1756	1774	1782	1790	1800	1810	1820	1830	1840	1850	1860	1870	1880
Litchfield	1,366	2,554	3,077	.....	4,285	4,639	4,610	4,456	4,038	3,953	3,116	3,113	3,410
Barkhamsted	18	250	503	.....	1,437	1,506	1,592	1,715	1,571	1,524	1,264	1,439	1,298
Bethlehem	.....	.....	.....	1,056	1,138	1,118	932	906	776	815	812	750	655
Bridgewater	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,041	877	708
Canaan	1,100	1,665	2,061	.....	2,137	2,203	2,332	2,301	2,166	2,627	2,770	1,257	1,157
Colebrook	.....	150	273	.....	1,119	1,243	1,274	1,332	1,232	1,317	1,339	1,141	1,148
Cornwall	500	974	1,158	1,470	1,614	1,602	1,662	1,714	1,703	2,041	1,915	1,772	1,583
Goshen	610	1,111	1,450	.....	1,493	1,641	1,586	1,734	1,529	1,457	1,356	1,223	1,093
Hartland	.....	500	961	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Harwinton	12	1,018	1,215	1,367	1,481	1,718	1,500	1,516	1,201	1,175	1,038	1,044	1,016
Kent	250	1,996	1,883	1,318	1,607	1,794	1,956	2,001	1,759	1,848	1,810	1,744	1,622
Morris	1,000	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	763	701	627
New Hartford	260	1,001	1,296	.....	1,753	1,507	1,685	1,766	1,703	2,643	2,701	3,078	3,302
New Milford	1,137	2,776	3,015	3,167	3,221	3,537	3,830	3,979	3,974	4,058	3,400	3,586	3,907
North Canaan	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,695	1,537
Norfolk	84	969	1,246	.....	1,649	1,441	1,422	1,485	1,393	1,643	1,731	1,641	1,418
Plymouth	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,791	1,882	1,758	2,064	2,205	2,568	3,241	4,149	2,350
Roxbury	.....	.....	.....	.....	1,121	1,217	1,124	1,122	971	1,114	986	919	950
Salisbury	1,100	1,980	2,225	.....	2,266	2,321	2,695	2,580	2,562	3,103	2,994	3,303	3,715
Sharon	1,205	2,012	2,230	.....	2,340	2,606	2,573	2,615	2,407	2,567	2,421	2,441	2,580
Torrington	250	815	1,077	.....	1,417	1,586	1,449	1,651	1,707	1,916	2,206	2,893	3,327
Warren	.....	.....	.....	790	1,083	1,096	875	986	872	830	702	673	639
Washington	.....	.....	1,503	1,675	1,568	1,575	1,487	1,621	1,622	1,802	1,656	1,563	1,589
Watertown	.....	.....	2,732	3,170	1,622	1,714	1,439	1,500	1,442	1,533	1,562	1,698	1,897
Winchester	24	339	688	.....	1,371	1,466	1,601	1,766	1,667	2,179	3,439	4,096	5,142
Westmoreland	.....	1,922	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Woodbury	2,911	5,313	5,063	2,662	1,944	1,963	1,885	2,045	1,948	2,150	1,944	1,931	2,148
Southbury	.....	.....	.....	1,738	1,757	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Thomaston	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	3,225
	11,827	27,345	33,656	*38,755	41,214	41,375	41,267	42,855	40,448	45,253	47,318	48,727	52,043

SCHOOL STATISTICS.

Towns.	Grand List, 1878.	No. of Districts.	No. of Schools.	Departments.	Average Length.	Scholars. Enum. Jas. '79.	Registered. W.	S.	Over 16.	Diff'nt Schol. Reg.	Private School.	In no School.	Av. Attend. W.	S.	Teachers. Male. W.	S.	Female. W.	S.	Wages, Month. Male.	Female.
Litchfield	$1,880,337	20	20	20	151.48	691	509	456	44	644	76	62	342	311	11	1	9	19	$31.58	$25.82
Barkhamsted	442,591	11	11	12	134.50	274	257	205	19	286	7	17	179	144	2	...	10	11	24.73	24.38
Bethlehem	485,794	8	8	8	149.00	123	128	82	11	141	7	.....	89	60	4	1	4	5	25.72	22.67
Bridgewater	431,708	5	5	6	175.32	185	181	132	16	206	1	5	129	91	4	1	2	5	37.06	24.00
Canaan	600,001	10	10	10	137.00	245	164	155	15	215	21	27	113	97	1	...	9	10	20.00	22.74
Colebrook	440,577	10	10	11	150.00	289	250	252	13	310	6	14	174	115	4	2	7	9	22.00	21.69
Cornwall	655,790	16	15	15	169.73	416	329	281	16	394	21	22	256	212	6	2	9	13	28.25	24.67
Goshen	774,108	12	11	11	164 00	255	228	172	28	268	3	14	164	125	4	1	7	10	26.64	22.65
Harwinton	484,307	12	12	12	145.08	228	192	176	10	239	2	10	151	132	2	...	10	12	30.50	23.37
Kent	493,619	13	13	13	183.08	361	317	252	27	379	17	14	204	159	10	...	3	13	23.90	17.92
Morris	370,852	6	6	6	167.00	139	133	111	14	164	.....	1	99	82	6	1	0	5	27.18	22.00
New Hartford	1,088,983	9	9	13	174.62	757	487	447	19	573	.....	201	360	299	8	5	6	9	38.51	24.67
New Milford	1,963,846	18	18	21	179.96	833	697	627	48	798	34	56	454	358	14	2	7	19	38.19	22.17
Norfolk	763,935	13	11	12	137.50	356	296	247	17	356	.....	20	196	188	5	3	7	9	28.00	22.31
North Canaan	703,361	5	5	8	180.00	414	302	270	13	355	29	56	212	200	3	2	5	6	37.38	28.12
Plymouth	1,030,042	9	9	13	175.38	548	443	410	18	537	3	43	332	301	4	3	9	10	57.14	34.83
Roxbury	474,910	7	7	7	164.26	174	175	164	27	212	.....	1	113	90	3	...	4	7	24.00	19.32
Salisbury	1,948,471	13	13	18	198.61	889	586	558	18	792	39	74	404	369	4	3	14	15	28.00	27.97
Sharon	1,270,829	18	18	18	200.00	641	474	450	24	612	34	19	289	258	7	7	11	11	24.28	23.14
Thomaston	1,317,345	1	4	10	180.00	617	455	450	23	587	.....	53	336	324	1	1	9	9	110.00	36.50
Torrington	1,510,281	10	10	15	176.67	814	612	558	32	771	51	33	444	420	4	1	12	14	66.80	33.89
Warren	264,113	7	6	6	160 83	171	134	109	6	158	.....	10	83	77	2	...	4	6	24.00	22.40
Washington	939,358	12	12	12	177.92	296	234	238	14	318	10	3	175	165	6	1	6	11	28.14	22.94
Watertown	1,643,347	9	9	11	168.18	372	327	253	29	371	14	23	226	180	3	1	8	9	41.60	29.37
Winchester	2,804,248	8	8	16	187.50	979	612	588	66	761	199	85	409	449	5	4	12	13	62.67	39.85
Woodbury	1,138,185	14	14	14	172.00	428	344	310	21	427	6	15	236	208	6	1	9	13	33.71	25.35
	$25,920,938	276	274	318	169.48	11,495	8,866	7,953	588	10,874	580	878	6,169	5,464	129	43	193	273	$35.11	$26.19

* Total for county; no returns for other towns.

SCHOOL STATISTICS (Continued.)

Towns.	Receipts.						Expenses.
	School Fund, etc.	Town Deposit.	Local Funds.	Town Tax.	District Tax.	Total.	Teachers' Wages.	Fuel, etc.	Repairs.	Other Objects.	Total.
Litchfield	$1,658.40	$522.90	$96.00	$2,543.52	$500.00	$5,370.74	$4,318.15	$344.25	$13.45	$230.50	$4,922.92
Barkhamsted	657.60	264.28	.....	920.80	348.86	2,241.25	1,733.85	96.23	349.42	61.75	2,241.25
Bethlehem	295.20	139.00	.....	980 15	100 00	1,514.35	1,245.05	123.30	100.00	46.00	1,514.35
Bridgewater	444.00	148.88	9.72	963.97	.....	1,573.32	1,471.64	65.68	.....	36.00	1,573.32
Canaan	588.00	180.00	.....	1,037.99	.....	1,805.99	1,544.90	157.09	.....	104.00	1,805.99
Colebrook	693.60	92.69	.....	1.172.70	70.00	2,093.99	1,701.40	134.00	28.73	65.06	1,950.79
Cornwall	998.40	243.50	60.19	1,531.98	26.81	3,372.72	2,965.05	245 44	26.81	91.39	3,372.72
Goshen	612.00	241.81	.....	1,594.22	300.00	2,903.53	2,088.82	206.47	52.42	105.00	2,752.71
Harwinton	547.20	242.00	.....	1,373.84	73.87	2,236.91	1,978.35	112.69	73.87	72.00	2,236.91
Kent	866.40	308.35	.....	1,359,94	296.78	2,976.45	2,433.26	203.17	215.80	124.22	2,976.45
Morris	333.60	131.02	.....	725.00	.....	1,247,32	1,081.97	84.38	7.19	36.00	1,244,54
New Hartford	1,816.80	195.64	.....	2,259.96	1,657.59	5,979.49	3,908.18	442.49	935.34	420.98	5,726.84
New Milford	1,999.20	465.30	160.00	4,201.36	163.00	7,375.30	6,202.87	592.63	61.98	428.45	7,375.00
Norfolk	854.40	222.50	70.65	1,387.43	.....	2,582.62	2,280.00	214.61	8.40	79.41	2,582.42
North Canaan	993.60	174.57	.....	1,392.83	.....	2,591.50	2,172.50	310.50	7.00	71.00	2,581.50
Plymouth	1,315.20	159.03	.....	3,398.08	1,330.70	6,252.86	4,502.24	282.07	57 54	1,041.14	5,922.99
Roxbury	417.60	172.80	.....	605.76	.....	1,247.57	1,139.93	78.64	.....	29.00	1,247 57
Salisbury	2,133.60	204.87	47.32	3,263.42	1,900.00	7,569.21	5,020.00	477.77	1,918 52	152.92	7,569.21
Sharon	1,538.40	453.00	.....	2,958.74	.....	4,955.14	4,395.11	443.78	1.00	115.25	4,955.14
Thomaston	1,480.80	159.03	.....	3,545.74	.....	5,185.57	4,088.70	454.78	261.76	380.33	5,185.57
Torrington	1,953.60	285.18	.....	4,123.77	.....	6,428.55	5,440.88	575.17	177.50	168.50	6,427.45
Warren	410.40	152.04	.....	680.48	234.36	1,515.78	1,098.21	89.89	137.14	60.40	1,406.14
Washington	710.40	249.80	.....	1,629.17	166.27	2,889 89	2,433.95	193.67	166.27	96.00	2,889.89
Watertown	892.80	269.15	.....	2,153,29	1,093.57	4,420.81	2,951.84	242.15	9.84	216.98	4,420.81
Winchester	2,349.60	301.54	.....	6,098.02	.....	8,850.48	7,658 14	801.72	1,504.85	1,181.43	11,239.85
Woodbury	1,027.20	345.13	6.00	2,076.81	.....	3,465.14	3,145.19	219.95	.....	100.00	3,465.14
	$27,588.00	$6,324.01	$449.88	$53,674.97	$8,261.81	$98,646.18	$79,000.18	$7,192.52	$6,114.83	$5,513.71	$99,587.47

CHAPTER IX.

LITCHFIELD.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indian Purchase—The Explorations of the Township—List of Proprietors—The Town Divided into Sixty Shares—Court of Probate, 1719—Original Cost of the Town—One Penny Three Farthings per Acre—The Patent of Litchfield—The First Settlements—Names of Pioneers—"House Lots"—The Pioneer Homes—The Forts—Indian Depredations—Incident—Litchfield in the French War, 1755–63—Names of Soldiers.

THE town of Litchfield* lies near the centre of Litchfield County and is bounded as follows: On the north by Goshen and Torrington; on the east by Harwinton and Thomaston; on the south by Thomaston, Morris, and Washington; and on the west by Morris, Washington, and Warren. The surface of the town is rolling and hilly, and the soil is generally strong and fertile. The town is watered by the Naugatuck, Bantam, and Shepaug Rivers and their tributaries. Bantam Lake, located partly in this town and partly in Morris, is the largest sheet of water in the State.

THE INDIAN PURCHASE.

By grants from the Indian occupants and the Colonial Legislature the title to this territory became vested in the towns of Hartford and Windsor. The initiatory steps towards the opening and settlement of the "Western Lands," as the tract in this section of the State was called, was the extinction of Indian titles. This was effected, by a committee appointed for the purpose, by the following deed given at Woodbury, March 2, 1715:

* Named from Lichfield, Staffordshire, England.

THE INDIAN DEED.

"To all People to whom these Presents shall come, GREETING:

"KNOW YE that we, Chusquenoag, Corkscrew, Quiump, Maguash, Kehow, Sepunkum, Poni, Wonposet, Suckqunnokqueen, Toweecume, Mansumpansh, and Norkgnotonckquy, Indian Natives belonging to the Plantation of Potatuck within the Colony of Connecticut, for and in consideration of the sum of fifteen pounds money in hand received to our full satisfaction and contentment, have given granted bargained and sold and by these presents do fully freely and absolutely give grant bargain sell and confirm, unto Col° William Whiting, Mr. John Marsh, and Mr. Thomas Seymour, a Committee for the town of Hartford,—Mr. John Eliot, Mr. Daniel Griswold, and Mr. Samuel Rockwell, a Committee for the Town of Windsor, for themselves, and in the behalf of the rest of the Inhabitants of the Towns of Hartford and Windsor,—a certain tract of Land, situate and lying, north of Waterbury bounds, abutting southerly, partly on Waterbury and partly on Woodbury,—from Waterbury River westward cross a part of Waterbury bounds, and cross at the north end of Woodbury bounds to Shepaug River, and so northerly, in the middle of Shepaug River, to the springs of Shepaug River below Mount Tom, then running up the east branch of Shepaug River, to the place where the said River runs out of Shepaug Pond, from thence to the north end of said Pond, then east to Waterbury River, then southerly as the River runs, to the north end of Waterbury bounds upon the said River; which said tract of land thus described, To HAVE and to HOLD, to the said Col. William Whiting, Mr. John Marsh, and Mr. Thomas Seymour, Mr. John Eliot, and Mr. Daniel Griswold, and Mr. Samuel Rockwell, Committees for the Towns of Hartford and Windsor, as aforesaid, in behalf of themselves and the rest of the Inhabitants of said Towns, to them, their heirs and assigns, to use occupy and improve, as their own proper right of Inheritance, for their comfort forever; together with all the privileges, appurtenances and conditions to the same belonging, or in any wise appurtaining. And further, we the said Chusquenoag, Corkscrew, Quiump, Maguash, Kehow, Sepunkum, Poni, Wonposet, Suckqunnokqueen, Toweecume, Mansumpansh, and Norkgnotonckquy, owners and proprietors of the above granted Land, do for ourselves and our heirs, to and with the above said William Whiting, John Marsh, Thomas Seymour, John Eliot, Daniel Griswold, and Samuel Rockwell, committee as aforesaid, them, their heirs and assigns, covenant and engage, that we have good right and lawful authority, to sell the above granted land. And Further, at the desire and request of the aforesaid Committees, and at their own proper cost and charge, will give a more ample deed.

"And for a more full confirmation hereof, we have set our hands and seals, this second day of March, in the second year of His Majestie's Reign, A.D. 1715.

"Memorandum.—Before the executing of this instrument, it is to be understood, that the grantors above named have reserved to themselves a piece of ground sufficient for their hunting houses, near a mountain called Mount Tom.

"CHUSQUNNOAG his mark. [L. S.]

"CORKSCREW his mark. [L. S.]

"QUIUMP his mark. [L. S.]

"MAGNASH his mark. [L. S.]

"KEHOW his mark. [L. S.]

"SEPUNKUM his mark. [L. S.]

"PONI his mark. [L. S.]

"WONPOSET his mark. [L. S.]

"SUCKQUNNOCKQUEEN his mark. [L. S.]

"TAWEECUME his mark. [L. S.]

"MANSUMPANSH his mark. [L. S.]

"Signed sealed and delivered in our presence."

"WEROAMAUG his mark.

"WOGNACUG his mark.

"TONHOCKS his mark.

"JOHN MITCHELL.
"JOSEPH MINOR.

"The Indians that subscribed and sealed the above said deed, appeared personally in Woodbury, the day of the date thereof, and acknowledged the said deed to be their free and voluntary act and deed. Before me

"JOHN MINOR, Justice."

The committees named in this deed conveyed all their interest in said lands to the towns of Hartford and Windsor by deed dated Aug. 29, 1716.

The conflicting claims in this township, between the towns of Hartford and Windsor on the one part, and "certain considerable persons in the town of Farmington" on the other, arising out of the preceding conveyances, were subsequently amicably adjusted by the parties. The Farmington company, by their attorney, John Stanley, on the 11th of June, 1718, conveyed their interest to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, and, in consideration thereof, those individuals were invested by those towns with one-sixth part of this township.

The title to the lands having been acquired from the aborigines, the town took immediate measures to explore and survey the township of Litchfield.

Mr. John Marsh, of Hartford, one of the settlers of this town, and the ancestor of the Marshes of Litchfield, was one of the committee appointed for that purpose by the town of Hartford. He was an energetic and courageous man, and in May, 1715, undertook what was then a perilous journey into the pathless wilderness. His bill, as appears from the ancient records, was as follows:

"The Town of Hartford, Dr.
To John Marsh.

May, 1815, For 5 days man and horse, with expenses in viewing the Land at the New Plantation	£2

"The Town of Hartford, Dr.

	£	s.	d.
Jan. 22, 1715-16, To 6 days journey to Woodbury, to treat with the Indians about the Western Lands, by Thomas Seymour	1	4	0
To expenses in the journey	1	14	9
	2	18	9

"The Town of Hartford, Dr.
To Thomas Seymour, Committy.

	£	s.	d.
May, 1716, By 2 quarts of Rum		2	6
Expenses at Farmington		4	9
" at Waterbury		1	7
Paid Thomas Miner towards the Indian purchase	7	10	0
Expenses at Woodbury	2	11	0
" for a Pilot and protection	1	10	0
Fastening horse-shoes at Waterbury		2	0
Expenses at Waterbury		1	8
" to Col. Whiting for writing 40 deeds	1	10	0
" to Capt. Cooke for acknowledging 18 deeds		18	0
" to Ensign Seymour	1	0	0
" at Arnold's	1	7	0
" by sending to Windsor		4	0
Aug. 4, 1718.—Sold 11 lots for	49	10	0
Expenses for writing 20 deeds, to Mr. Fitch		10	0
" to Capt. Cooke for acknowledging deeds		7	0
" for making out a way	2	0	0
" at Arnold's		11	0
" to Tho's Seymour for perambulating north line	1	6	4
" at Arnold's	1	0	4
Feb. 10, 1818.—At a meeting of the Committees, then sold 16 lots reserved by Marsh for Hartford's part	37	17	9
At same meeting, paid by John Marsh for expenses		12	0
At same meeting, loss of money by mistake in acc't		3	0
April 14, 1719.—A meeting of the Committees, expenses		6	0
April 27.—At a meeting of the Committees, expenses		7	0"

LIST OF PROPRIETORS.

In 1818 a company was formed for the settlement of the town, and the individuals composing it were known as the "proprietors" of the town. The following is the list: John Marsh (two rights), Samuel Sedgwick, Jr., Nathaniel Goodwin, Timothy Seymour, Paul Peck, Jr., Joseph Mason, Nathaniel Messenger, Benjamim Webster, Joshua Garrett, from Hartford; Samuel Forward, Thomas Griswold, Jr., Jacob Gibbs, Joseph Birge, Benjamin Hosford, from Windsor; John Hart, Timothy Stanley, John Bird, Joseph Bird, Samuel Lewis, Ebenezer Woodruff, Samuel Root, Nathaniel Winchell, Hezekiah Winchell, from Farmington; Joseph Gillett, from Colchester; Jonathan Buck, from New Milford; William Goodrich, Jr., John Stoddard, Ezekiel Buck, from Wethersfield; Jacob Griswold, John Buel (two rights), Edward Culver, Hezekiah Culver, Thomas Lee, Eleazer Strong, Supply Strong, Caleb Chapel (two rights), Thomas Treadway, John Caulkins, from Lebanon; Ezekiel Sanford (two rights), Nathan Mitchell, Thomas Pier, John Mann, Joseph Peet, Samuel Somers, from Stratford; Nathaniel Smith (two rights), John Collins, Ephraim French, from Taunton, Mass.; Josiah Walker, Samuel Orton, Joseph Waller, Isaac Judson, from Woodbury.

Of the above, the following became residents of the town: John Marsh, Paul Peck, Jr., Joseph Mason, Benjamin Webster, Joshua Garrett, Jacob Gibbs, Joseph Birge, Benjamin Hosford, John Bird, Joseph Bird, Joseph Gillett, William Goodrich, Jr., John Stoddard, Ezekiel Buck, Jacob Griswold, John Buel, Hezekiah Culver, Thomas Lee, Eleazer Strong, Supply Strong, Thomas Treadway, Nathan Mitchell, Thomas Pier, Nathaniel Smith, Josiah Walker, Samuel Orton, and Joseph Waller.

"The town was divided into sixty shares, three of which were reserved for pious uses—one to the first minister and his heirs forever, one for the use of the first minister and his successors, and one for the support of the school. The title was conveyed to the adventurers, and in May, 1719, was confirmed by the Legislature, which granted leave to settle a town at Bantam, to be called Litchfield.

"At the October session of the Assembly of the same year, a Court of Probate for the town was ordered to be held at Woodbury, and at the October session, 1722, the town was annexed to Hartford County.

"The town was in length, east and west, eight miles, three-quarters, and twenty-three rods, and in breadth seven miles and a half. The cost to the proprietors did not exceed one penny three farthings per acre.

THE PATENT OF LITCHFIELD.

"In 1724, a formal patent of the town, signed by Governor Saltonstall, was granted by the Governor and company of the colony, to John Marsh and John Buell and their partners."* It read as follows:

"The Governor and Company of the English Colony of Connecticut in New England, to all to whom these Presents shall come, GREETING:

"KNOW YE, That the said Governor and Company, by virtue of the power granted unto them by our late sovereign, King Charles the Second, of blessed memory, in and by His Majesty's Patent, under the great seal of England, dated the twenty-third day of April, in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, and in pursuance thereof and in General Court assembled, according to charter, did, by their act, made May fourteenth, Anno Domini, 1719, upon the humble petition of Lieut. John Marsh, of Hartford, within the said Colony, and Dea. John Buell, of Lebanon, grant unto the said John Marsh and John Buell, and partners, settlers, being in the whole fifty-seven in number, liberty to settle a town westward of Farmington, in the county of Hartford, at a place called Bantam, which town was to be in length east and west eight miles, three quarters, and twenty-eight rods, and in breadth, seven miles and an half—to be bounded east on Mattatuck river; west, part on Shepaug river and part on the wilderness; north, by the wilderness, and south by Waterbury bounds and a west line from Waterbury corner to the said Shepaug river. And Ordered, that the said town should be called by the name of LITCHFIELD, as more fully appears by the said act. The said Governor and Company, by virtue of the aforesaid power, and by their special act bearing even date with these presents, for divers good causes and considerations them hereunto moving, have given, granted, and by these presents, for themselves, their heirs, and successors, do fully, clearly, and absolutely give, grant, ratify, and confirm unto the said John Marsh and John Buell, and the rest of the said partners, settlers of said tract of land [in their actual, full, and peaceable possession and seizin being], and to their heirs and assigns, and such as shall legally succeed and represent them, forever [in such proportions as they, the said partners and settlers, or any of them, respectively, have right in and are lawfully possessed of the same], all the said tract of land now called and known by the name of Litchfield, in the county of Hartford aforesaid, be the same more or less, butted and bounded as followeth, viz.: Beginning at the north east corner, at a tree with stones about it, standing in the crotch of Mattatuck river aforesaid, and running southerly by the side of said river until it meets with Waterbury bounds, where is a well known white oak tree standing about fifteen rods west of said Mattatuck river, anciently marked with IS: IN: From thence running west twenty-three degrees thirty minutes south, to two white oak trees growing out of one root, with stones about them, and west one mile and a half to Waterbury north west corner bound mark; and from thence west five degrees thirty minutes north to Shepaug river, where is a tree and stones about it butting upon Waterbury township; then beginning at the first mentioned tree by Mattatuck river and running westward into the wilderness, to an oak tree marked and stones laid around it; then south to a crotch in the Shepaug river; and thence by the westermost branch of Shepaug river to Woodbury bounds. And also all and singular, the lands, trees, woods, underwoods, wood-grounds, uplands, arable lands, meadows, moors, marshes, pastures, ponds, waters, rivers, brooks, fishings, fowlings, huntings, mines, minerals, quarries, and precious stones, upon and within the said land. And all other rights, members, hereditaments, easements, and commodities whatsoever, to the same belonging or in any wise appertaining, so butted and bounded as is herein before particularly expressed or mentioned, and the reversion or the reversions, remainder or remainders, rights, royalties, privileges, powers, or jurisdictions whatsoever, of and in all and singular the said tract of land and premises hereby granted, and of and in any and every part and parcel thereof. And the rents, services, and profits to the same incident, belonging, or appertaining—To Have and to Hold all the said tract of land, and all and singular other the premises hereby given or granted, or mentioned, or intended to be granted, with all the privileges and appurtenances thereof, unto the said John Marsh and John Buell, and the rest of the partners, settlers of the same, their heirs and assigns, to their only proper use, benefit, and behoof, forever; and to and for no other use, intent, or purpose whatsoever. And the said Governor and Company, for themselves and their successors, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant, unto the said John Marsh and John Buell, and the rest of the partners, settlers of the tract of land herein before granted, their heirs and assigns, the said tract of land so butted and bounded as aforesaid, shall from time to time and at all times forever hereafter, be deemed, reputed, denominated, and be an entire town of itself, and shall be called and known by the name of LITCHFIELD, in the county of Hartford, and that the aforesaid partners, settlers, and inhabitants thereof, shall and lawfully may from time to time and at all times, forever hereafter have, use, exercise, and enjoy all such rights, powers, privileges, immunities, and franchises, in and among themselves, as are given, granted, allowed, used, exercised, and enjoyed, to, by, and amongst the proper inhabitants of other towns in this Colony, according to common approved custom and observance, and that the said tract of land and premises hereby granted as aforesaid, and appurtenances, shall remain, continue, and be unto the said John Marsh and John Buell, and the rest of the partners, settlers, their heirs and assigns, in proportion aforesaid forever, a good, peaceable, pure, perfect, absolute, and indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple, to be holden of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, as of His Majesty's Manor of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent, in the Kingdom of England, in free and common socage, and not in capite, nor by Knight's service.—Yielding therefor and paying unto our Sovereign Lord King George, his heirs and successors forever, one fifth part of all ore of Gold and Silver, which from time to time, and at all times forever hereafter, shall be there gotten, had, or obtained, in lieu of all services, duties, and demands whatsoever.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, The said Governor and Company have caused the Seal of the said Colony to be hereunto affixed.

"Dated in Hartford, May the 19th day, Anno regni regis Decimo Georgii, Magnæ Britt'a, Franc'æ, Hyberni'æ, Annoque Domini, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twenty Four, 1724

"G. SALTONSTALL, Gov'r.

"By order of the Gov'r and Company in General Court assembled.

"HEZ. WYLLIS, Secretary."

*"The families of John Marsh and John Buell intermarried. Their descendants had a family picnic in the grove of Mr. E. A. Marsh, on the shore of Bantam Lake, Sept. 3, 1846, at which at least six hundred of the family were present, and the names of five hundred and eighty-one were registered. Mrs. John Buell died in 1768, having had thirteen children, one hundred and one grandchildren, two hundred and seventy-four great-grandchildren, and twenty-two great-great-grandchildren. Total, four hundred and ten, of whom three hundred and thirty-six survived her." —Hon. George C. Woodruff, in 1876.

THE FIRST SETTLEMENTS.

The first settlement was made in the summer of 1720, by Capt. Jacob Griswold, from Windsor, Ezekiel Buck, from Wethersfield, and John Peck, from Hartford. The little settlement rapidly increased, and within three years from the pioneer location the following were residents of the town: Nehemiah Allen, from Coventry; Joseph Birge, from Windsor; John Bird, Joseph Bird, from Farmington; Ezekiel Buck, from Wethersfield; Samuel Beebe, from Fairfield County; John Buell, from Lebanon; John Baldwin, from Stratford; Daniel Culver, Samuel Culver, Hezekiah Culver, from Lebanon; Timothy Collins, from Guilford; John Catlin, James Church, from Hartford; Joseph Gillett, from Colchester; Abraham Goodwin, Joshua Garrett, from Hartford; Benjamin Gibbs, Jacob Gibbs, from Windsor; William Goodrich, Jr., Jacob Griswold, from Wethersfield; John Gay, from Dedham, Mass.; Benjamin Hosford, from Windsor; Joseph Harris, from Middletown; Joseph Kilborn, from Wethersfield; Thomas Lee, from Lebanon; Joseph Mason, John Marsh, from Hartford; Nathan Mitchell, from Stratford; Samuel Orton, from Woodbury; Edward Phelps, from Windsor; Thomas Pier, from Stratford; Paul Peck, Jr., John Peck, from Hartford; John Stoddard, from Wethersfield; Eleazer Strong, Supply Strong, from Lebanon; Joseph Sanford, Lemuel Sanford, from Stratford; Nathaniel Smith, John Smith, from Taunton, Mass.; Samuel Smedley, from Woodbury; Thomas Treadway, from Lebanon; Benjamin Webster, from Hartford; Josiah Walker, Joseph Waller, from Woodbury; Nathaniel Woodruff, from Farmington.

"The township was divided among the proprietors, giving to each a home-lot of fifteen acres, as nearly as could conveniently be done. The choice of home-lots was decided by lot. The lot first selected was about half a mile south of the court-house, and next to Middle Street or Gallows Lane; the second was half a mile further south, and on the corner opposite the residence of Mr. Arthur D. Catlin; the third three-fourths of a mile west of the court-house, known as the Strong place.

"The eleventh choice was the lot thirty rods next west of the county-house corner, which subsequently the town voted was not fit for building a house upon. The mansion-house corner was the twentieth choice; the corner now owned by Mrs. Bostwick the twenty-fifth choice; and the county-house corner the thirty-third choice. Ten lots were selected on Chestnut Hill, southerly from the school-house, and the last choice (the 57th) was the lot on which is the dwelling-house of Mrs. A. C. Smith.

"The home-lot of the first minister was the corner lately owned by Mrs. Weller, deceased, and the twenty-acre division appurtenant thereto was laid adjoining on the north, and extended to the north line of the land of Mr. Charles Jones.

"The highway from Bantam River, running westerly through the village, was laid twenty rods wide, and called Meeting-House Street; that now called North Street twelve rods wide, and was called Town Street; that now called South Street eight rods wide, and was called Town Hill Street, the east line of which terminated six rods east of the front of Mrs. Bostwick's dwelling. Gallows Lane, then Middle Street, was twenty-eight rods wide. The highway running southerly from Mr. David De Forest's house was named South Griswold Street, and that running northerly North Griswold Street. Prospect Street, then called North Street, was seventeen rods wide.

"The first church, court-house, and school-house, stood nearly in the centre of Meeting-House Street; the court-house about opposite the centre of Town Street, and the church east and school-house west of the court-house.

"The first white child born in Litchfield was Eunice, the daughter of Jacob Griswold, afterwards the wife of Capt. Solomon Buell. She was born March 23, 1721. The first white male child born in Litchfield was Gershom Gibbs, on the 28th of July, 1724. He was taken prisoner at Fort Washington in 1776, and died on board a British prison-ship on the 29th of December of that year.

"Mrs. Mary Adams was born in Stratford in 1698, and died here in 1803, aged one hundred and five. Mr. Reuben Dickinson was born in 1716, and died here in 1818, aged one hundred and two. Capt. Salmon Buell was born here in 1767, and died here in 1868.

"'The first founders built log houses. The settlement proceeded as fast as could reasonably be expected. During the frequent wars between England and France the Canadians and Indians often harassed our borders, and Litchfield, being a frontier town, was exposed to their ravages.'

"It is not strange that the natives, accustomed to rove over these beautiful hills, through these pleasant valleys, and about our delightful lakes (gems in emerald), should have viewed with jealousy the approach of the white man.

"But of course our predecessors, the owners of the soil by fair purchase, stood on their defense.

"'Between the years 1720 and 1730, five houses were surrounded by pallisadoes. One of these stood on the ground near the present court-house, another half a mile south, one east and one west of the centre, and one in South Farms. Soldiers were then stationed here to guard the inhabitants, both while they were at work in the field and while they were attending public worship on the Sabbath.

"'In May, 1722, Capt. Jacob Griswold being at work alone in a field about one mile west of the present court-house, two Indians suddenly rushed upon him from the woods, took him, pinioned his arms, and carried him off.

"'They traveled in a northerly direction, and the same day arrived in some part of the township called Canaan, then a wilderness. The Indians kindled a fire, and after binding their prisoner hand and foot lay down to sleep. Griswold, fortunately disengaging his hands and feet, while his arms were yet pinioned, seized their guns, and made his escape into the woods. After traveling a small distance he sat down and waited the dawn of day, and although his arms were still pinioned he carried both their guns. The savages awoke in the morning, and finding their prisoner gone immediately pursued him; they soon overtook him and kept in sight of him the greater part of the day, while he was making his way homeward. When they came near he turned and pointed one of his pieces at them; they then fell back. In this manner he traveled till near sunset, when he reached an eminence in an open field, about one mile northwest of the court-house. He then discharged one of his guns, which immediately summoned the people to his assistance. The Indians fled, and Griswold safely returned to his family.

"'The capture of Griswold made the inhabitants more cautious for a while, but their fears soon subsided. Afterwards, in 1723, Mr. Joseph Harris, a respectable inhabitant, was at work in the woods not far from the place where Griswold was taken, and, being attacked by a party of Indians, attempted to make his escape. The Indians pursued him, and, finding that they could not overtake him, they shot him dead and scalped him. As Harris did not return the inhabitants were alarmed, and some search was made for him, but the darkness of the night checked their exertions. The next morning they found his body and gave it a decent burial. Harris was killed near the north end of the plain, where the road turns to Milton, a little east of a school-house, and for a long time after this plain was called Harris' Plain.'*

"The place of his interment remained unmarked for more than a century, but rested in the memory of the older inhabitants. He was buried in the west burial-ground, near the village of Litchfield. In 1830 a suitable monument, with an appropriate inscription, was erected at his grave by voluntary contribution.

"The summer of 1724 was a period of excitement and alarm. The war between the English and the French was then prevailing, and the latter used great efforts to incite the Northern Indians to attack the frontier settlements of the whites.

"The conduct of the Indians at the North and West during this year, and especially their hostile movements in the vicinity of Litchfield, induced the government to take such precautionary measures as the occasion demanded in order to furnish protection to the weak and exposed settlements. A line of scouts was established extending from Litchfield to Turkey Hills, curving around the most northerly and westerly settlements in Simsbury. On the 4th of June, 1724, Capt. Richard Case, of Simsbury, was directed to employ ten men on this scouting-party to rendezvous at Litchfield. They continued in service until early in October.

"During these difficulties some of the more timid of the inhabitants deserted their posts, and the interposition of the Legislature was deemed necessary, and therefore the following enactment was made,—viz.:

"'A General Court holden at New Haven, Oct. 11, 1724, upon the memorial of the inhabitants of the town of Litchfield, be it enacted and ordained, by the Governor, assistants, and deputies in General Court assembled, and by the authority of the same, that whosoever hath or ought to have been an inhabitant, and is a proprietor of any lands within the town of Litchfield, or have deserted and left said town since difficulties have arisen there on account of an enemy, and shall neglect for the space of one month after the rising of this Assembly to return to the said town and there abide, or send some man in their room or stead to perform and do the necessary duties of watching and warding and the like during the continuance of the difficulties of the war, shall lose and forfeit all their right and estate in and upon any and all of the lands aforesaid, and their estate, right, and interest therein, unto the corporation of Connecticut. And further, it is provided, that if any other man being now a proprietor and inhabitant, or a proprietor and ought to have been an inhabitant in the said town, shall hereafter during the continuance of fear and danger of the enemy, desert and leave the said town, or neglect to repair thither, and there personally abide, without constantly providing some other sufficient person in his room and stead, there to perform all duties as before mentioned in the case of them who have already deserted, shall likewise forfeit their estate in and on all the lands in the town aforesaid unto this corporation.

"'And further, it is provided, that upon complaint made to the Committee of War at Hartford, of or against any such deserter, upon their satisfaction of the truth thereof, the said committee shall declare the forfeiture, and the said committee are enabled to admit any other person who shall go and abide there in the room of the deserter, and perform the necessary duties as aforesaid, and that he shall hereafter receive a grant from this court of the estate escheated as aforesaid for his further confirmation therein. And it is further ordered, that five shillings per week shall be allowed for billeting soldiers in Litchfield for the summer past.'

"In 1726, upon news of the Indian enemy coming down towards our frontiers, the Assembly resolved that thirty-five effective men be raised to march to Litchfield for its defense, to be under the command of Capt. John Marsh.

"Dr. Dwight, the former president of Yale College, wrote:

"'Not many years after the county of Litchfield began to be settled by the English, a strange Indian came one day into an inn in the town of Litchfield, in the dusk of the evening, and requested the hostess to furnish him with some drink and supper. At the same time he observed he could pay for neither, as he had had no success in hunting, but promised payment as soon as he should meet with better fortune. The hostess refused him both the drink and the supper, called him a lazy good-for-nothing fellow, and told him she did not work so hard herself to throw away her earnings upon such creatures as he was.

"'A man sat by and observed that the Indian, then turning about to leave so inhospitable a place, showed by his countenance that he was suffering very severely from want and weariness, and directed the hostess to supply him with what he wished, and engaged to pay the bill himself. She did so. When the Indian had finished his supper he turned to his benefactor, thanked him, and assured him that he should remember his kindness, and whenever he was able would faithfully recompense it . . .

"'Some years after the man who had befriended him had occasion to go some distance into the wilderness between Litchfield, then a frontier settlement, and Albany, when he was taken prisoner by an Indian scout and carried to Canada. When he arrived at the principal settlement of the tribe, on the southern border of the St. Lawrence, it was proposed by some of the captors that he should be put to death. During the consultation an old Indian woman demanded that he should be given up to her, that she might adopt him in the place of a son whom she had lost in the war. He was accordingly given to her, and lived through the ensuing winter in her family, experiencing the customary effects of savage hospitality.

"'The following summer, as he was at work in the forest alone, an unknown Indian came up to him and asked him to meet him at a place which he pointed out on a given day. The prisoner agreed to the proposal, but not without some apprehensions that mischief was intended him. During the interval these apprehensions increased to such a degree as to dissuade him effectually from fulfilling his engagement.

"'Soon after the same Indian found him at his work again, and very gravely reproved him for not performing his promise. The man apologized awkwardly enough, but in the best manner in his power. The Indian told him he should be satisfied if he would meet him at the same place on a future day which he named. The man promised to meet him, and fulfilled his promise.

"'When he arrived at the spot he found the Indian provided with two muskets, ammunition for them, and knapsacks. The Indian ordered him to take one of each and follow him. The direction of their march was to the south. The man followed without the least knowledge of what he was to do or whither he was going, but concluded that if the Indian intended him harm he would have dispatched him at the beginning, and at the worst he was as safe where he was as he could be in any other place.

"'Within a short time, therefore, his fears subsided, although the Indian observed a profound and mysterious silence concerning the object of the expedition. In the day-time they shot such game as came in their way, and at night kindled a fire, by which they slept. After a tedious journey of many days they came one morning to the top of an eminence presenting a prospect of a cultivated country, in which was a number of houses. The Indian asked his companion whether he knew the place. He replied eagerly that it was Litchfield. His guide then, after reminding him that he had so many years before relieved the wants of a famishing Indian at an inn in that town, subjoined, "I that Indian. Now I pay you, go home." Having said this he bade him adieu, and the man joyfully returned to his own house.'"

* Morris' statistical account of Litchfield.

LITCHFIELD IN THE FRENCH WAR, 1755-63.

In this struggle Litchfield furnished her full quota of men and contributed largely in means. There is but a single list of the soldiers who went from this town preserved. This list appears as "A Pay-Roll for Capt. Archibald McNeile's Company in the Second Regiment of Connecticut Forces for the year 1762," which is on file in the Secretary of State's office in Hartford:

Archibald McNeile, captain; Isaac Moss, first lieutenant; Increase Moseley, second lieutenant; Elisha Blinn, ensign; Thomas Catlin, Nathaniel Taylor, Bezaleel Beebe, Hezekiah Lee, Archibald McNeile, Jr., sergeants; Roger Catlin, Wm. Drinkwater, Nathan Stoddard, James Lassly, corporals; Daniel Barns, Jacob Bartholomew, drummers; Charles Richards, Samuel Warner, Samuel Gibson, Joseph Jones, John Barrett, John Barrett, Jr., William Forster, Francis Mazuzan, Thomas Wedge, Reuben Smith, Jeremiah Osborn, Benjamin Landon, Isaac Osborn, Benjamin Bissell, David Nichols, Ichabod Spnire, Comfort Jackson, Elisha Walker, Amos Brougton, Nathaniel Lewis, Levi Bonny, Thomas Barker, Samuel Drinkwater, Asahel Gray, Eliakim Gibbs, Samuel Peet, Ephraim Smedley, Edmund Hawes, Silas Tucker, Robert Bell, Thomas Sherwood, Ephraim Knapp, Titus Tyler, Robert Coe, Adam Mott, Asahel Hinman, Roswell Fuller, Daniel Grant, William Emons, Moses Stoddard, Gideon Smith, Jonathan Smith, Hezekiah Leach, Adam Hurlbut, Jeremiah Harris, Eli Emons, Alexander Waugh, Orange Stoddard, Ezekiel Shepard, Ozias Hurlbut, Daniel Harris, John Collins, Solomon Palmer, Jonathan Phelps, John Cogswell, Mark Kenney, Aaron Thrall, Timothy Brown, Roswell Dart, William Bulford, James Manville, Thomas Williams, Justus Seelye, James Francier, George Peet, Nathaniel Barnum, Adonijah Roice, Elisha Ingraham, Daniel Hurlbut, Ebenezer Blackman, Domini Douglas, Amos Tolls, Thomas Ranny, Daniel Hamilton, Asahel Hodge, Daniel Warner, Titus Tolls, John Ripner, Caleb Nichols, John Fryer, Ebenezer Pickett.

"It is not to be inferred," says Mr. Kilbourn, "that all the members of Capt. McNeile's company belonged in Litchfield. Some in the list are recognized as residents of neighboring towns. Lieut. Moseley, for instance, was a Woodbury man. He became an eminent lawyer, legislator, and judge in his native county, and afterwards removed to Vermont, and was there elevated to the bench of the Supreme Court.

"The name of the late Col. Beebe, of his town, will be noticed among the sergeants of this company. At a still earlier date he had been a member of Maj. Rogers celebrated corps of Rangers, and was engaged in one of the forest fights, when the soldiers were dispersed by order of their commander and each man was directed to fight, in true Indian style, from behind a tree. Beebe chanced to be stationed near Lieut. Gaylord, who was also from Litchfield County. He had just spoken to Gaylord, and at the moment was looking him in the face for a reply, when he observed a sudden break of the skin in the forehead, and the lieutenant instantly fell dead,—a ball from the enemy having passed through his head.

"The names of some of the Litchfield officers who received commissions between the years 1755–63 are here given, as it is known that a part of them were in the war,—viz.:

Solomon Buel, captain, 1756; Ebenezer Marsh, colonel, 1757; Isaac Baldwin, captain, 1757; Joshua Smith, lieutenant, 1757; Abner Baldwin, ensigns; Archibald McNeile, captain, 1758; Zebulon Gibbs, ensign, 1758; Stephen Smith, lieutenant, 1760; Eli Catlin, lieutenant, 1760; Isaac Moss, lieutenant, 1761; Josiah Smith, lieutenant, 1761; Asa Hopkins, lieutenant, 1761; Gideon Harris, ensign, 1761; David Landon, ensign, 1761; Lynde Lord, ensign, 1762.

"Zebulon Gibbs was in the northern army from 1756 to 1762. In March, 1758, he was commissioned as ensign in Capt. Hurlbut's company, which was raised as a part of the force designed for the capture of Crown Point."

CHAPTER X.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

First Indication of Revolutionary Spirit in Litchfield—Letter of Aaron Burr—The First Company of Soldiers—Capt. Bezaleel Beebe—The Bowling Green Statue of George III. Demolished—Carried to Litchfield—Converted into Cartridges—Continental Stores—Army Workshops—Prisoners of War—Arrest of David Matthews, Mayor of New York—Conveyed to Litchfield—Governor Franklin a Prisoner here—Visit of Count Rochambeau and Gen. Lafayette—Gen. Washington Visits the Village—Various Votes of the Town—Rev. Judah Champion's Prayer—Resident British Soldiers—Incidents, etc., etc.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION.*

THE first indication of the rising spirit of revolution in this town is contained in the following document, which emanated from a town-meeting held Aug. 17, 1774, of which Oliver Wolcott was moderator:

"The Inhabitants of Litchfield in legal Town Meeting assembled on the 17th day of August, A.D. 1774, taking into consideration the distress to which the Poor of the Town of Boston may likely be reduced by the operation of an Act of the British Parliament for Blocking up their Port and deeply commiserating the unhappiness of a brave and loyal People, who are thus eminently suffering in a General Cause for vindicating what every virtuous American considers an essential Right of this Country, think it is their indispensable Duty to afford their unhappy distressed brethren of said Town of Boston all reasonable Aid and Support. And this they are the more readily induced to do, not only as the Inhabitants of said Town are thus severely condemned for their reluctance to submit to an arbitrary, an unconsented to, and consequently unconstitutional Taxation, but the whole of the great and loyal Province of the Massachusetts Bay have been condemned unheard, in the loss of their Charter Privileges, by the heretofore unknown and unheard of exertions of Parliamentary Power, which they conceive is a power claimed and exercised in such a manner as cannot fail of striking every unprejudiced mind with Horror and Amazement as being subversive of all those inherent essential and constitutional Rights and Privileges which the good people of this Colony have ever held sacred and even dearer than Life itself, nor ever can wish to survive; not only every idea of Property, but every emolument of civil life being thereby rendered precarious and uncertain.

"In full confidence, therefore, that no Degree of Evil thus inflicted on said Town and Province will ever induce them to give up or betray their own and the American Constitutional Rights and Privileges, especially as they cannot but entertain the most pleasing Expectations that the Committees of the several North American Provinces, who are soon to meet at Philadelphia, will in their wisdom be able to point out a Method of Conduct effectual for obtaining Redress of their grievances,—a Method to which (when once agreed upon by said Committee) this Town will look upon it their duty strictly to attend. And in the mean time earnestly recommend that subscriptions be forthwith opened in this Town, under the care of Reuben Smith, Esq., Capt. Lynde Lord, and Mr. William Stanton, who are hereby appointed a Committee to receive and forward to the Selectmen of Boston, for the use of the Poor in that place, all such Donations as shall be thereupon made for that purpose, and also to correspond with the Committee of Correspondence there or elsewhere, as there may be occasion.

* This chapter is compiled mainly from the late Payne Kenyon Kilbourne's "History of Litchfield," and Hon. Geo. C. Woodruff's "Historical Address," delivered in 1876.

"We also take this opportunity publicly to return our thanks to the members of the Honorable House of Representatives of this Colony, for their patriotic and loyal Resolutions passed and published in the last Assembly on the occasion, and order them to be entered at large on the Public Records of this Town, that succeeding ages may be faithfully furnished with authentic Credentials of our inflexible attachment to those inestimable Privileges which we and every honest American glory in esteeming our unalienable Birthright and Inheritance."

At the annual town-meeting held December 6, 1774, it was voted, "That the Honorable Oliver Wolcott, Esq., and Messrs. Jedediah Strong, Jacob Woodruff, John Marsh, John Osborn, Jehiel Parmelee, Abraham Bradley, Seth Bird, Archibald McNeile, Abraham Kilbourn, Nathan Garnsey, James Morris, and Ebenezer Benton be a Committee for the Purposes mentioned in the Eleventh Article of the Association Agreement of the Grand Continental Congress in Philadelphia, 5th of September last, and approved, adopted, and recommended by the General Assembly of this Colony at their session in October last."

"The 'Eleventh Article of the Association Agreement' here referred to provides for the appointment of 'Committees of Inspection' in each city and town, 'whose business it shall be attentively to observe the conduct of all persons touching this Association; and when it shall be made to appear that any person has violated its articles, they are to cause their names to be published in the Gazette, to the end that all such foes to the Rights of British America may be publicly known and universally contemned as the enemies of American Liberty, and thenceforth we break off all dealings with him or her.' Committees of Inspection were also appointed at the annual town-meeting in 1775 and 1776. In addition to the above, the following persons were appointed, viz.: Messrs. Reuben Smith, Lynde Lord, Andrew Adams, Archibald McNeile, Jr., Moses Sanford, Tapping Reeve, Jonathan Mason, Caleb Gibbs, Nathaniel Woodruff, William Stanton, and Nathaniel Goodwin.

"The celebrated Aaron Burr (afterwards Vice-President of the United States) became intimately associated with Litchfield during this period. He graduated at Princeton College in October, 1772, and in the following June his only sister, Sarah Burr, became the wife of Tapping Reeve, Esq., of this town.

"In May, 1774," says his biographer,* "he left the Rev. Mr Bellamy's, and went to the house of his brother-in-law, Tapping Reeve, where his time was occupied in reading, principally history, but especially those portions of it which related to wars, battles, and sieges, which tended to inflame his natural military ardor. The absorbing topics of taxation and the rights of the people were agitating the then British Colonies from one extreme to the other. These subjects, therefore, could not pass unnoticed by a youth of the inquiring mind and ardent feelings of Burr. Constitutional law, and the relative rights of the crown and the colonists, were examined with all the acumen which he possessed, and he became a Whig from reflection and conviction, as well as from feeling."

"Burr remained in Litchfield on this occasion something over a year. The letters written by him while here contain frequent allusions to local matters and to individuals (especially the young ladies) residing in the place. In a communication to Matthias Ogden (dated at Litchfield, Aug. 17, 1774) he says,—

"Before I proceed further, let me tell you that a few days ago a mob of several hundred persons gathered at Barrington, and tore down the house of a man who was suspected of being unfriendly to the liberties of the people; broke up the court then sitting at that place, etc. As many of the rioters belonged to this colony, and the Supreme Court was then sitting at this place, the sheriff was immediately despatched to apprehend the ringleaders. He returned yesterday with eight prisoners, who were taken without resistance. But this minute there are entering the town on horseback, with great regularity, about fifty men, armed each with a white club; and I observe others continually dropping in. I shall here leave a blank to give you (perhaps in heroics) a few sketches of my unexampled valor should they proceed to hostilities; and should they not, I can tell you what I would have done."

After the "blank," the young hero adds

"The above-mentioned sneaks all gave bonds for their appearance to stand a trial at the next court for committing a riot."

"While Burr remained at the house of Judge Reeve he was startled by the news of the battle of Lexington, which took place on the 19th of April, 1775. Immediately thereafter he addressed a letter to his friend Ogden, urging him to come to Litchfield and make arrangements with him for joining the standard of their country. The battle of Bunker Hill soon followed (June 16th). As Ogden could not come at once to Litchfield, Burr started for Elizabethtown, N. J., to assist his friend in arranging for a speedy trip to Cambridge, where the American army was then encamped. In July they reached Cambridge, and in September Burr enlisted as a private soldier in Arnold's expedition through the wilderness to Quebec. It may be added that Litchfield was Col. Burr's recognized home for some half-dozen years.†

"On the morning of the 10th of May, 1775, Col. Ethan Allen, a native of Litchfield, at the head of his brave Green Mountain Boys, surprised and captured the fortress of Ticonderoga. Several of this little band of heroes were born and bred in this vi-

* Davis, I. 46.

†On the 27th of January, 1776, Judge Reeve wrote to Burr thus: "Amid the lamentations for the loss of a brave, enterprising general [Montgomery], your escape from such imminent danger to which you have been exposed has afforded us the greatest satisfaction. The news of the unfortunate attack upon Quebec arrived among us on the 13th of this month. I concealed it from your sister until the 18th, when she found it out; but in less than half an hour I received letters from Albany acquainting me that you were in safety, and had gained great honor by your intrepid conduct. . . It was happy for us that we did not know you were an aid-de-camp until we heard of your welfare, for we heard that Montgomery and his aids were killed, without knowing who his aids were. Your sister enjoys a middling state of health. She has many anxious hours on your account, but she tells me that, as she believes you may serve the country in the business in which you are now employed, she is contented that you should remain in the army. It must be an exalted public spirit that could produce such an effect upon a sister as affectionate as yours."

For several months in 1781, Mrs Theodosia Provost (the dashing young widow of Colonel Provost, of the British Army) was a resident of Litchfield; and a few of her letters written from this place are preserved in Davis' life of Burr, vol. I. pp. 224-227. She became the wife of Burr, July 2, 1782.

Aaron Burr became aid-de-camp to General Washington, Attorney-General of the State of New York, United States Senator, and in 1801 was a candidate with Jefferson for the Presidency of the United States, the two receiving an equal number of electoral votes. After an exciting contest of several days in the United States House of Representatives, Jefferson was chosen President, and Burr Vice-President.

cinity. Lieut. Crampton, who entered the fort by the side of Allen, was also a native of this town, and had resided here during a large part of his life. On this occasion was captured the first British flag that fell into the hands of the Americans in the Revolutionary contest! The magnitude and importance of this exploit will be better understood, when considered in connection with the vast amount of time, and treasure and blood, which the fortress had cost the British government. The day following the capture of Ticonderoga the garrison at Crown Point, with all its military stores, was surrendered to Col. Warner, a native of Roxbury, in this county.

"In January, 1776, Capt. Bezaleel Beebe, of Litchfield, received orders to enlist a company for the defense of New York. The tidings spread rapidly throughout the town, and awakened anew the enthusiasm of the Whigs. A veteran who died within the last few years stated that when the intelligence reached him he started on a run for the captain's headquarters, fearing the roll would be full before he could reach there. Capt. Beebe's orders reached him on a Sunday, and by the following Saturday the company had been raised, armed, and equipped, and were on their march towards Fairfield. The following paper, with the names attached, is inserted here for preservation:

"We, the Subscribers, being convinced of the Necessity of a body of Forces to defeat certain Wicked Purposes formed by the Instruments of Ministerial Tyranny, do solemnly engage ourselves and enlist as Private Soldiers, in a Regiment to be Commanded by Colonel Andrew Ward, Jr., under the command of Major-General Lee, for the Term of Eight Weeks at the utmost from the Day we March from Fairfield, which is the place of Rendezvous; the Honorable Major-General Lee having given his Word and Honor that we shall not be Detained a single Day after said Term. Dated at Litchfield, 21st day of January, 1776.

"Lieut. Jonathan Mason,
Briant Stoddard,
James Woodruff,
Oliver Woodruff,
Phineas Goodwin,
Zebulon Bissell,
Benjamin Taylor,
Moses Taylor,
Frederick Stanley,
James Crampton,
Caleb Munson,
Abraham Wadhams,
Martin Nash,
Oliver Griswold,
Zadock Gibbs, Jr.,
Josiah Bartholomew,
Jesse Stanley,
Elisha Mayo,
Nathaniel Newell,
Luman Bishop,
Asaph Benham,
Joseph Finney,
Zebedee Sturtevant,
Martin Curtiss,
Levi Swan,
Joel Barnes,
Peleg Holmes,
Alexander Sackett,

"Sergt. Benjamin Bissell,
Elihu Harrison,
Roger N. Whittlesey,
Charles Woodruff, Jr.,
Joseph Sanford,
Stephen Brown,
William Patterson,
John Lyman,
Obed Stoddard,
T. Weed,
George Dear,
Jacob Gaylord,
Elihu Grant,
Abram Beach,
Ichabod Tuttle,
Chauncey Beach,
George Dear, Jr.,
Adino Hale,
Allen Lucas,
William Starr,
Heber Gilbert, Jr.,
Zebulon Palmer,
Joseph Peters,
Truman Gilbert,
Heman Brown,
Luther Comstock,
Daniel Swan."

"Those who have a knowledge of the leading men of Litchfield County from forty to seventy years ago will recognize in the above list the names of many of her most prominent and influential citizens,—men of wealth and enterprise, who, though surrounded by the endearments of domestic life, voluntarily enlisted as private soldiers in that dangerous expedition. The roll as here given is not complete. About two-thirds of the persons named in the list belonged to this town; the remainder were from Goshen, Torrington, and Warren. They were all enlisted from the 21st to the 25th of January, 1776. The names of a few additional members of this company may be gleaned from the following appraisal:

"Litchfield, 26th January, 1776.

"We, being requested to apprise the Arms belonging to Capt. Bezaleel Beebe's Company, in Col. Andrew Ward's Regiment, going on an expedition to New York under the command of Gen. Charles Lee—we accordingly apprized the same, being first duly sworn, viz.:

Elihu Harrison's Gun, Bayonet and Cartridge Box, in his own hands.
[Figures omitted.]
Roger N. Whittlesey's Gun in the hands of Briant Stoddard.
Joseph Sanford's Gun, Bayonet and Belt in his own hands.
Nathaniel Allen's Gun, Bayonet and Belt in his own hands.
Obed Stoddard's Gun, Bayonet, Cartridge box and belt.
Joshua Smith's Gun in his own hands.
Zebulon Bissell's Gun in his own hands.
James Woodruff's Gun carried by Stephen Brown.
Phineas Goodwin's Gun, bayonet and belt.
Whiting Stanley's Gun carried by James Crampton.
Oliver Woodruff's Gun carried by himself.
Hezekiah Agard's Gun carried by John Lyman.
Jedediah Strong's Gun, bayonet and belt carried by William Patterson.
Lieut. Jonathan Mason's Cartridge box.
Samuel Canfield's Gun carried by himself.
Noah Garnsey's Gun carried by T. Weed.
Sergt. Benjamin Bissell's Gun and Bayonet carried by himself.
Asa Osborn's Gun and Cartridge box carried by himself.
Jedediah Strong's Gun carried by Benjamin Taylor.
Jedediah Strong's Gun carried by Frederick Stanley.
Reuben Smith, Esq's, Gun, Bayonet, Case and Belt carried by Capt. Beebe.
Capt. John Osborn's Gun carried by Moses Taylor.

"Abraham Bradley,
"Thomas Catlin,
"Obed Stodder,
} Appraisers on Oath."

"In May, 1776, a regiment was ordered to be raised for the defense of the State, 'to be subject to join the Continental army, if so ordered by the Governor.' Captain Beebe was appointed to the command of one of the companies of this regiment, with Jesse Cook for first lieutenant, and James Watson for second lieutenant. Lieut. Watson was soon transferred to another corps, and John Smith, of Litchfield, was commissioned in his place. The following is a complete list of the officers and soldiers of this company:

Bezaleel Beebe, captain; Jesse Cook, John Smith, lieutenants; Wait Beach, ensign; Levi Peck, Cotton Mather, Heber Stone, Solomon Goodwin, sergeants; Samuel Cole, Ezekiel Bissell, Elijah Loomis, David Hall, corporals; Joel Taylor, drummer; Epaphras Wadsworth, fifer; Nathaniel Allen, Cyrenius Austin, Enos Austin, Joseph Austin, Andrew Austin, Elihu Beach, Barnias Beach, Zebulon Bissell, James Beach, Asa Brooks, Daniel Benedict, Samuel Baldwin, Elisha Brownson, Benjamin Bissell, Daniel Barns, Ebenezer Bacon, Noah Beach, Elisha Bissell, Frederick Bigelow, Hezekiah Bissell, James Davis, Friend Dickinson, Jesse Dickinson, Solomon Dickinson, Ebenezer Dimon, Gershom Fay, Remembrance Filley, Joel Frost, John German, Phineas Goodwin, Beriah Birge, James Birge, Noadiah Bancroft, Ithamar Gibbs, Moore Gibbs, Samuel Gleason, Isaac Hosford, Abraham Haskins, Amos Johnson, Charles Kilbourn, Henry McIntire, Thomas Mason, Oliver Marshall, Timothy Marsh, Alexander McNiel, Ebenezer Landon, Remembrance Loomis, James Little, John Lyman, Noah North, David Olmsted, Ethan Osborn, John Parmeley, Solomon Parmeley, Joseph Goodwin, Benjamin Gibbs, Gershom Gibbs, Henry Plumb, Eliphaz Parsons, Joseph Sanford, Frederick Stanley, Timothy Stanley, Jared Stewart, Joseph Spencer, Daniel Smith, Aaron Stoddard, Ira Stone, John Strong, Peleg Sweet, Stephen Taylor, Joseph Taylor, Samuel Vaill, Jeremiah Weed, John Weed, Gideon Wilcoxson, John Whiting, Oliver Woodruff.

"These names are copied from the account-book and billet-roll preserved among the papers of Col. Beebe. From various accounts and memoranda found in these papers, we are able to gather certain facts in the history of some of these soldiers. Thus:

"August 9, To cash paid for coffin for Ira Stone;" Sept. 7, "Lieut. John Smith was discharged from the army in New York;" "John German was dismissed from my company by order of a General Court Martial, July 9, 1776;" "Aug. 9, James Beach died about 8 o'clock in the morning;" "Sept. the 5th, 10 o'clock at night, Samuel Gleason died;" in the account with Joel Taylor—"Paid one dollar to Zebulon Taylor to deliver to the mother of the above Joel Taylor, deceased, it being cash that was with him when he died;" "Sept. 27, 1777, Received of Capt. Beebe 22 shillings for mileage from Philadelphia to Litchfield. (Signed) Abraham Haskins."

"From the account of Gershom Gibbs:

"Received of Capt. Beebe three dollars that belonged to my husband and son, which was part of the money sent to them whilst prisoners in New York. (Signed) Tabitha Gibbs."

"From the account of Nathaniel Allen:

"Sept. 27, 1777, To cash left with Joseph Agard to be paid to Mrs. Allen, that was left with me when Mr. Allen died."

"From the account with Phineas Goodwin:

"To back rations 16 days at Fort Washington," &c.

The fate of some of these individuals, together with that of many others belonging to this company, will be more fully explained in the narrative which follows:

"About the 1st of November, 1776, thirty-six picked men (all of whose names are given in the preceding roll) were placed under the command of Capt. Beebe and sent to Fort Washington to aid in its defense. This fort was captured by the enemy, and Capt. Beebe's company, with the rest of the garrison, were crowded, with hundred of others, into the sugar-house and on board the prison-ships; without air or water, and for the first two days without food, contagion and death were the natural consequences. The dysentery, smallpox, and other terrible diseases broke out among them, and very few of the whole number survived the terrible ordeal.

"On the 27th of December, 1776, an exchange of prisoners took place. Only eleven of Capt. Beebe's company were able to sail for Connecticut,—viz., Marsh, Woodruff, R. Loomis, B. Beach, N. Beach, Marshall, Brownson, Bissell, Little, Benedict, and Mason. Six of these died on their way home,—viz., Bissell, Brownson, B. Beach, Marsh, Marshall, and Loomis. The remainder of those who were living at that date, being too ill to be removed, were left behind, where all (except Sergt. Mather) died within a few days, most of them with the smallpox. Here follow the names of these 'picked men.' The notes prefixed appear to have been added by Capt. Beebe at the different periods corresponding with the dates:

"AN ACCOUNT OF THE PRISONER'S NAMES AND PLACES OF CONFINEMENT.

Sergt. Cotton Mather—returned home.
Sergt. David Hall—died of the smallpox on board the 'Grosvenor,' Dec. 11, 1776.
Elijah Loomis—died.
Gershom Gibbs—died on board the ship, Dec. 29, 1776.
Timothy Stanley—died on board the ship, Dec. 26, 1776.
Amos Johnson—died Dec. 26, 1776.
Timothy Marsh—died on his way home.
Barnias Beach—died on his way home.
Samuel Vaill—died on board the 'Grosvenor,' Dec. 27, 1776.
Nathaniel Allen—died of smallpox, Jan. 1, 1777.
Enos Austin—died of the smallpox, Dec. 4, 1776, in the evening.
Gideon Wilcoxson—died.
Thomas Mason—reached home.
Alexander McNiel—died.
Daniel Smith—died in New York, of smallpox, Jan. 1, 1777.
Noah Beach—reached home.
Daniel Benedict—reached home.
Isaac Gibbs—died Jan. 15, 1777.
Oliver Marshall—died on his way home.
Solomon, Parmeley—went on board the ship, and I fear he is drowned, as I cannot find him.
David Olmsted—died Jan. 4, 1777.
Jared Stuart—died Jan. 26, 1777, in the morning.
John Lyman—died Jan. 26, 1777.
Elisha Brownson—died on his way home.
[The above Prisoners are at Lexington's Sugar-House.]
Zebulon Bissell—died in Woodbury, on his way home.
Aaron Stoddard—died Jan. 12, 1777.
John Parmeley—died Jan. 15, 1777.
Joel Taylor—died Jan. 9, 1777.
James Little—reached home.
Phineas Goodwin—died Jan. 5, 1777.
[The above at the Church called the North Church.]
Oliver Woodruff—reached home.
Remembrance Loomis—died on his way home.
[The above at Bucktail.]

"The above prisoners belong to Capt. Beebe's company, Col. Bradley's regiment.

Corp. Samuel Cole,
Jeremiah Weed,
Joseph Spencer,
John Whiting,

Were either killed or made their escape from Fort Washington, on the 16th of November, 1776."

"Probably no similar instance of mortality occurred during the entire war. Only six survivors out of a company of thirty-six hale and hearty young men is a percentage of loss rarely reached even in the most fatal engagements. But few, if any, of these men were slain in battle. They died miserable deaths from cold, hunger, thirst, suffocation, disease, and the vilest cruelty from those to whom they had surrendered their arms on a solemn promise of fair and honorable treatment. Well might Ethan Allen (a professed infidel), with clinched teeth, exclaim to Capt. Beebe, as he did on one occasion, 'I confess my faith in my own creed is shaken; there ought to be a hell for such infernal scoundrels as that Lowrie!' referring to the officer in charge of the prisoners.

"Capt. Beebe, in consideration of his office, was allowed the limits of the city on his parole of honor, but was compelled to provide himself with food, lodging, and shelter. He was accustomed to visit his men daily, so long as any remained, and did whatever he was allowed to do to alleviate their wretched condition. He was not exchanged with the other prisoners, but was detained within the 'limits' for nearly a year at his own expense. During much of this time Col. Allen was held in New York as a prisoner of war, and, before the remnant of the Litchfield soldiers were exchanged, these two gallant officers often met for consultation.

"In June, 1776, the general assembly ordered six battalions to be raised in this State and marched directly to New York, there to join the Continental army. A company was raised in Litchfield for this service, of which Abraham Bradley was captain; Tilley Blakesley, first lieutenant; Thomas Catlin, second lieutenant; and James Morris, Jr., ensign.

"Before the Revolution," says Mr. Gibbs, in his 'History of the Administrations of Washington and Adams,' "a leaden equestrian statue of George III. stood in the Bowling Green, in the city of New York. At the breaking out of the war this was overthrown, and lead being highly valuable, was sent to Gen. Wolcott's, at Litchfield, for safe keeping, where, in process of time, it was cut up and run into bullets by his daughters and their friends."

In a paper read before the New York Historical Society, by the author above quoted, in October, 1844, he gives a curious and interesting history of this statue, from which the following extracts are made:

"ACCOUNT OF THE STATUE OF GEORGE III, FORMERLY STANDING ON THE BOWLING GREEN, NEW YORK.

"Most of the members are probably aware that an equestrian statue of King George III. stood upon the Bowling Green, in this city, prior to the Revolution, and was overthrown soon after its commencement. I believe, however, that its subsequent fate has never been recorded, and having in my possession a paper giving authentic information on the subject, I have supposed that the royal effigy might be worth a brief obituary.

"Hoit's (New York) Gazette, as quoted by Mr. Dunlap, gives the following notice of its erection:

"'August 21st, 1770, being the birth-day of Prince Frederick, the father of George III., an elegant Equestrian Statue of his present Majesty, George III., was erected in the Bowling Green, near Fort George. On this occasion the members of his Majesty's Council, the City Corporation, the Corporation of the Chamber of Commerce, the Corporation of the Marine Society, and most of the gentlemen of the City and Army, waited on his Honor, the Lieutenant-Governor Colden, in the Fort, at his request; when his Majesty's and other loyal healths were drunk under a discharge of thirty-two pieces of cannon from the Battery, accompanied with a band of music. This beautiful Statue is made of metal [Dunlap says, by way of parenthesis, 'the writer did not like to say what metal represented his royal majesty, the best of kings—it was lead'], being the first equestrian one of his present Majesty, and is the workmanship of that celebrated statuary, Mr. Wilton, of London.'

"Symptoms of disloyalty, betokening revolution, I suppose, soon manifested themselves in the rude treatment of the effigy, for on the 6th of February, 1773, an act was passed 'to prevent the defacing of statues which are erected in the city of New York.'

"Upon the above account Mr. Dunlap observes, 'This statue stood till some time in 1776. I saw it in 1775. In 1776 it was thrown down, and tradition says converted into bullets to resist his gracious majesty's soldiers when sent to enforce the doctrine of 'the sovereignty of the British Parliament over the colonies in all cases whatsoever'—the doctrine of Mr. Pitt, Lord Chatham, which he died in an effort to enforce The pedestal stood until long after the Revolution. No fragment of the horse or his rider was ever seen after its overthrow, and so completely had the memory of the event been lost, that I have never found a person who could tell me on what occasion it was ordered, or when placed in the Bowling Green.

"Some cotemporary notices of the destruction of this effigy have been pointed out to me, which I will cite. The first is from a book of general orders issued by Washington, the original of which is in the possession of this society. It is as follows:

"'July 10.—Though the General doubts not the persons who pulled down and mutilated the statue in Broadway last night acted in the public cause, yet it has so much the appearance of riot and want of order in the army that he disapproves of the manner, and directs that in future these things shall be avoided by the soldiery and left to be executed by proper authority.'

"The next is in a letter from Ebenezer Hazard to Gen. Gates, dated July 12, 1776, which will be found among the Gates papers, and in the society's collection, and is as follows:

"'The King of England's arms have been burned in Philadelphia, and his statue here has been pulled down to make musket balls of, so that his troops will probably have melted majesty fired at them.'

"Another is in a letter from New York, of July 11, 1776, published in the New Hampshire Gazette of the 27th:

"'Last Monday evening the Equestrian Statue of George III., with tory pride and folly raised in the year 1770, was, by the Sons of Freedom, laid prostrate in the dust—the just desert of an ungrateful tyrant. The lead wherewith this monument is made is to be run into bullets, to assimilate with the brains of our infatuated adversaries, who, to gain a peppercorn, have lost an empire. A gentleman who was present at the ominous fall of his leaden majesty, looking back to the original's hopeful beginning, pertinently exclaimed in the language of the angel to Lucifer, 'If thou be'est he, but ah how fallen! how changed!'

"Mr. Stephens* (Incidents of Travel in Russia, etc., vol. ii. p. 23) mentions having met with a curious memorial of its destruction, and at an out-of-the-way place. This was a gaudy and flaring engraving in a black wooden frame, representing the scene of its destruction, which he found in a tavern at Chioff, in Russia. 'The grouping of picture,' he says, 'was rude and grotesque, the ringleader being a long negro stripped to his trowsers, and straining with all his might upon a rope, one end of which was fastened to the head of the statue and the other tied around his own waist, his white teeth and the whites of his eyes being particularly conspicuous on a heavy ground of black.' How this picture found its way to Russia it would be difficult to imagine; it would certainly be not less a curiosity here than there.

"The document I have mentioned gives an account of its remaining history in a shape which history seldom assumes, that of an account current. It is preserved among the papers of Gen. (afterwards Governor) Wolcott of Connecticut. It is a statement of the number of cartridges made from the materials of the statue by the young ladies of Litchfield, and is in these words:

	Cartridges.
"'Mrs. Marvin	3456
" " on former account	2602
		6,058
Ruth Marvin, on former account	6204
Not sent to court-house, 449 packs	5388
		11,592
Laura, on former account	4250
Not sent to court-house, 344 packs	4128
		8,378
Mary Ann, on former account	5762
Not sent to the court-house, 119 packs, out of which I let Col. Perley Howe have 3 packs	5028
		10,790
Frederick, on former account	708
Not sent to court-house, 19 packs	228
		936
		37,754
Mrs. Beach's two accounts		2,002
Made by sundry persons		2,182
Gave Litchfield militia, on alarm		50
Let the regiment of Col. Wigglesworth have		300
Cartridges, No.		42,288
Overcharged in Mrs. Beach's account		200
		42,088'

"The original document is in Gen. Wolcott's handwriting, and is indorsed 'number of cartridges made.' There is no date to it, nor is there mention made by him of the fact of their being made from the statue; but a memorandum added by his son, the last Governor Wolcott, explains it as follows:

"'N. B.—An equestrian statue of George the Third of Great Britain was erected in the city of New York, on the Bowling Green, at the lower end of Broadway. Most of the materials were lead, but richly gilded to resemble gold. At the beginning of the Revolution this statue was overthrown. Lead then being scarce and dear, the statue was broken in pieces, and the metal transported to Litchfield as a place of safety. The ladies of the village converted the lead into cartridges, of which the preceding is an account. O. W.'

* John L. Stephens, the celebrated traveler, was a graduate of the Litchfield Law School.

"The Mrs. and Miss Marvin and Mrs. Beach, mentioned in the paper, belonged to families who yet reside in Litchfield; the other persons named were the two daughters and youngest son of Gen. Wolcott."

"A few miscellaneous facts relating to Litchfield men are here introduced nearly in chronological order.

"It should have been mentioned previously that Capt. David Welch, of Litchfield, commanded a company that was called into active service early in 1775, and in April of that year he was commissioned as major in Col. Hinman's regiment. He served throughout the war, and was an efficient and popular officer. During this year, also, Jedediah Strong was appointed a commissary to purchase horses for the army, and Oliver Wolcott was chosen a member of the Continental Congress. Fisher Gay, of Farmington (a native of this town), was one of the lieutenant-colonels appointed and commissioned at the special session of the Legislature held in March.

"In May, 1776, Amos Parmeley was allowed by the Assembly £14 11*s.* 1*d.* lawful money 'for nursing his sick son, John, who was a soldier in Maj. Welch's company, Gen. Wooster's regiment, in the Northern army, in 1775.' This is the John Parmeley who died in captivity in New York, in January, 1777. Jedediah Strong was appointed commissary for the purchase of clothing, and on a committee to exchange bills of credit for specie.

"On the 4th of July, Oliver Wolcott appended his name to the Declaration of Independence. In October he was reappointed a member of the Continental Congress.

"Drs. Reuben Smith and Seth Bird were appointed by the Legislature, in October, on a committee 'to examine all persons in this State that should be offered as surgeons or surgeons' mates in the Continental army, and, if found qualified, to give them certificates.'

"Andrew Adams was appointed, with others, to cause the arrest of all suspected persons, and those dangerous to the liberties of America.

"In December the Legislature appointed Tapping Reeve and Lynde Lord on a committee to 'rouse and animate the people,' and endeavor to procure the enlistment of volunteers for Washington's army. A company was forthwith raised in Litchfield, and the following officers were commissioned: Nathaniel Goodwin, captain; Alexander Waugh, lieutenant; and Ozias Goodwin, ensign. At the same session Col. Wolcott was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general, and given the command of the Fourth Brigade.

"The last Governor Wolcott (then a student at Yale College) was in Litchfield at the time of the Danbury alarm. Awakened at midnight by the summons to repair to the rendezvous of the militia, he armed himself; his mother, furnishing his knapsack with provisions and a blanket, hastened his departure, and dismissed him with the charge 'to conduct like a good soldier.' He, with the other volunteers from this town, participated in the skirmish at Wilton, as well as in the subsequent attacks during the retreat of the British from the burning of Danbury.

"Early in 1777 orders were issued for raising eight battalions in Connecticut for the Continental service, 'to serve for three years or during the war.' Ninety-two of the soldiers for these battalions were ordered to be raised in Litchfield. In April, of this year, the town voted to pay out of the treasury to each soldier that should enlist for the full term specified, the sum of £12 per annum, in addition to the pay they might receive from the State or general governments. The selectmen were at the same time directed to lay a tax for the purpose designated, and Messrs. Miles Bach, Leman Stone, Moses Barns, and Stephen Bidwell were appointed collectors.

"A letter written by Dr. Reuben Smith, of Litchfield, dated May 12, 1777, relating to the Danbury alarm, states that "'Sunday morning, 27th April, about one o'clock, we were alarmed; our people turned out spiritedly; came up with the enemy next day a little below Wilton meeting house, and pursued them aboard their ships. Paul Peck was killed in the last attack on the enemy.'

"It is stated that on this occasion fourteen men, the last in Litchfield capable of bearing arms, were started at midnight to aid in repulsing the enemy.

"Of Paul Peck, alluded to in the letter of Dr. Smith, it is recorded

"'That he was the most expert hunter of the time in which he lived. At the Danbury alarm he put his long gun in order and followed the enemy to Compo on their retreat, and took a station behind a stone wall. Every shot told until he was rushed upon by the enemy, who took his gun from him and dashed his brains out with it.'

"He was killed April 28, 1777, aged seventy-five years.

"During the war Litchfield was a place of deposit for provisions and other Continental stores. Workshops for the army were established here. Prisoners of war were here confined.

"On the 21st of June, 1776, David Matthews, the English mayor of New York, was arrested by order of Gen. Washington, in pursuance of authority from the New York committee, for dangerous designs and treasonable conspiracies. He was sent to Litchfield for safe custody, and while here he wrote to Mrs. Matthews, at Flatbush, a letter, dated Litchfield, Aug. 12, 1776, in which he says,—

"'Ever since my arrival here I have been at the house of Capt. Moses Seymour, who, together with his wife, have behaved in the most genteel, kind manner, and have done everything in their power to make my time as agreeable as possible. He is a fine, merry fellow, and she is a warm Protestant, and if it was not the thoughts of home were continually in my mind, I might be happy with my good landlord and his family.'

"He adds, by way of postscript:

"'The Congress were much afraid I should run away if I had my liberty, but this good man with whom I lodge, and who never heard of me before, has such an opinion of me that he has wrote to them that he will be answerable for me whenever they shall call for me.'

"On the 19th of August, 1776, he was taken to Hartford, and on the next day wrote to the secretary of the Convention of New York a letter, dated Hartford, Aug. 20, 1776, in which he says,—

"'It is verily believed throughout this colony that I was concerned in a plot to assassinate Gen. Washington and to blow up the magazine in New York. . . . Solely owing to this report I have been obliged to decamp from Litchfield where I was stationed, and where the committee thought my life was in imminent danger. I arrived here yesterday, and am shunned as much as Lucifer would be. . . . Surely, if my life was to be made a sacrifice there was a more gentlemanly way of doing it than of being sent into a country to be fired at from behind a barn or stone fence.'

"On the 22d of the same month he was reconveyed to Litchfield. The original order of Governor Trumbull directs Capt. Moses Seymour to carry Mr. Matthews to Litchfield and hold him in custody, permitting him to walk abroad for the benefit of the air and to attend divine worship. To his letter of the 20th, Mr. Matthews adds a postscript, dated the 22d, saying,—

"'I am now on my march back to Litchfield again. . . . What horrid treatment is this? Our convention say I must be confined. It is too much for mortal man to bear. I am now to stand fire at Litchfield. May God spare my life to meet my enemies face to face.'

"The British royalty evidently did not relish the atmosphere of freedom prevailing at Hartford and Litchfield. Under date Litchfield, Sept. 26, 1776, he writes,—

"'The committee have been compelled to request my removal in order to pacify some people. They insist I can blow up this town. Oh that I could! I would soon leave them to themselves. The sheriff has given orders that I shall not approach the gaol, lest the doors should fly open and the prisoners escape. I should not have returned to this cold wilderness had not the sheriff of Hartford declared he must lock me up in gaol.'

"The first pleasure-carriage brought into this town was by him presented to Mrs. Major Seymour, and was in use as late as A.D. 1812. The mayor's traveling-trunk is still here in the possession of the Hon. Origen S. Seymour, one of Maj. Seymour's descendants.

"It is stated in a letter received in London from a British officer in New York, dated Dec. 2, 1776, that "'Honest David Matthews, the mayor, has made his escape, and arrived here this day.'

"The tradition is that the public authorities did not well know how to deal with his case, and that one day when he 'walked abroad for the benefit of the air' he neglected to return, very much to the satisfaction of all concerned in his detention.

"Dr. Smith, at the close of his letter of May 12, 1777, says,—

"'Governor Franklin is confined in our gaol, and constant guard is kept. We trust he will find it difficult to escape should he attempt it.'

"This gentleman was the Royal Governor of New Jersey, and was the only son of the distinguished Dr. Benjamin Franklin. He was accused of being a virulent enemy of the United Colonies, and in June, 1776, Congress directed that he should be sent to Connecticut under a guard. In July, 1776, he was sent by Governor Trumbull to Wallingford to reside on his parole, and was soon permitted to reside at Middletown. But on the 30th of April, 1777, an order from Congress was received to confine Governor Franklin without pen, ink, or paper, and directed him to be conveyed under guard by the sheriff of Hartford County forthwith to Litchfield jail. On the 19th of September, 1777, an order on the pay-table was drawn in favor of Lynde Lord, Esq., for £100 towards the expense of the guard placed over Governor Franklin. On the 15th of January, 1778, another similar order was drawn in favor of Mr. Lord, who was the sheriff of Litchfield County.

"The following account of him was published in 1856, viz.:

"'DR. FRANKLIN'S ONLY SON.—While the name of Franklin has been so prominently before the public of late in connection with the celebration at Boston, it may not be uninteresting to give some account of his only son, William, about whom we think little is known by the community at large. Unlike his father, whose chief claim to veneration is for the invaluable services he rendered his country in her greatest need, the son was from first to last a devoted loyalist. Before the Revolutionary war he held many civil and military offices of importance. At the commencement of the war he held the office of Governor of New Jersey, which appointment he received in 1763. When the difficulties between the mother country and the colonies were coming to a crisis he threw his whole influence in favor of loyalty, and endeavored to prevent the Legislative Assembly of New Jersey from sanctioning the proceedings of the General Congress of Philadelphia. These efforts, however, did but little to stay the tide of public sentiment in favor of resistance to tyranny, and soon involved him in difficulty. He was deposed from office by the Whigs to give place to William Livingston, and sent a prisoner to Connecticut, where he remained about two years. . . . In 1778 he was exchanged, and soon after went to England. There he spent the remainder of his life, receiving a pension from the British government for the losses he had sustained by his fidelity.

"'As might be expected, his opposition to the cause of liberty, so dear to the heart of his father, produced an estrangement between them. For years they had no intercourse. When, in 1784, the son wrote to his father, in his reply Dr. Franklin says, 'Nothing has ever hurt me so much, and affected me with such keen sensations, as to find myself deserted in my old age by my only son; and not only deserted, but to find him taking up arms against me in a cause wherein my good fame, fortune, and life were all at stake.' In his will, also, he alludes to the part his son had acted. After making him some bequests, he adds, 'The part he acted against me in the late war, which is of public notoriety, will account for my leaving him no more of an estate he endeavored to deprive me of.' The patriotism of the father stands forth all the brighter, when contrasted with the desertion of the son.'

"Up to this period 'Fair Wyoming on Susquehanna's side,' called Westmoreland, was claimed as ours. Its jurors and justices were officers of this county, and its civil processes were directed to the sheriff of Litchfield County, were returned to and decided by the courts held in this village, and are now among our records. Settled from Connecticut, it may be imagined what grief and consternation pervaded us when the inhabitants of that infant settlement were massacred by the 'Monster Brandt' and his Indian allies.

"During the Revolutionary war Litchfield was visited by Count Rochambeau, in May, 1777, and by Gen. La Fayette, as the guest of Judge Reeve. And, according to Mr. George Gibbs, on the evening of Saturday, Aug. 23, 1780, Gen. Washington arrived here on his way from Hartford to West Point, and was entertained at the hospitable mansion of Gen. Wolcott, in South Street (now Mrs. Harney's). He spent the night in the village, and on the following morning proceeded westward, arriving at West Point about 11 o'clock on Monday morning. It was at this time that he discovered the treason of Benedict Arnold, who commanded at that post. The next year he was here, as appears from the following extract from his diary: 'May 18, 1781, set out this day for an interview at Wethersfield with Count de Rochambeau and Admiral Barras. 19th, breakfasted at Litchfield.' Again he was here with Count Rochambeau.

"From 1776 to 1780, Litchfield was a depot for military stores and provisions, which were guarded by a considerable military force. The depot for provisions stood on the premises now occupied in part by Dr. Buel's 'Spring Hill,' on North Street, where a building was erected for that purpose sixty feet long and two stories high. On the site of the present court-house was erected a building of similar dimensions as a depot for other military stores. A workshop for the army (which was also sixty feet in length and two stories high) stood on the north side of East Street, just west of the burying-ground. The prisoners of war were generally kept in the old jail, which stood in East Street. At each of the places here designated a military guard was stationed night and day, the roll being called, the soldiers drilled, and the guard set, at stated intervals, with as much precision as would have been observed by an army encamped in the vicinity of the enemy. The stores and provisions deposited here were for much of the time under the general superintendence of Commissary William Richards, of Elizabethtown, N. J. Ashbel Baldwin, a native of this town, graduated at Yale College in 1776, and soon received the appointment of quartermaster and was stationed here. He remained at this post between two and three years, when he received an honorable discharge, and was succeeded in office by Oliver Wolcott, Jr., who graduated in 1778.

"On the 30th of June, 1777, Governor Trumbull wrote to Gen. Wolcott, informing him that a team would be sent to Litchfield loaded with powder, lead, and flints, and requesting him to send a team to Salisbury for a load of cannon-shot to be forwarded to Hartford by the returning teams. By a subsequent record of the Council of Safety, it appears that on this occasion there were sent to Litchfield seventeen hundred pounds of gunpowder, two thousand pounds of lead, one thousand flints, and three hundred pounds of cannon-powder.

"On the 23d of July following, an order was drawn on David Trumbull for £25 5*s.* 10*d.*, in favor of John and Daniel Dewey, 'for carting powder and lead from Lebanon to Litchfield.' Late in the autumn of this year a large proportion of the military stores taken at the capture of Burgoyne were deposited here.

"In August, Gen. Wolcott wrote to the Governor and Council, stating that he had ordered all the effective men of Sheldon's Horse and Humphreys' regiment (who had not been called to do duty under the recent act and were liable to be called out of the State) to march immediately to Peekskill, well provided with arms, and with forty days' provisions. The general's course was approved, and an order was directed to be drawn on the State treasurer, in his favor, for the sum of £1000. About the same time Sheriff Lord was directed to procure from the merchants of Litchfield County, for the use of the army, four hogsheads of rum, six hogsheads of sugar, and two thousand pounds of coffee, at a stipulated price. If the merchants refused to furnish the goods at the price named, the sheriff was ordered to take the articles wherever he could find them, at the appraisal of two or three judicious freeholders, and to make return of his doings to the Council.

"In September, Litchfield was established by the Council as the place of rendezvous for the Sixth Brigade, and Maj. Beebe was stationed here as the recruiting officer of the brigade.

"On the 7th of October, a special town-meeting was held, of which Jacob Woodruff, Esq., was moderator. At this meeting it was voted that Messrs. Lynde Lord, Thomas Catlin, Caleb Gibbs, David Welch, and Alexander Catlin, be a committee to purchase and provide shirts, frocks, overalls, stockings, and shoes for the non-commissioned officers and soldiers in the Continental army belonging to this town, agreeable to a resolve of His Excellency the Governor and Council of Safety passed Sept. 12, 1777.'

"The Committee of Safety, at a session held December 4th, appointed one person in each county to see that the clothing for the army demanded of the several towns was forthwith provided by the selectmen; and to furnish pack-horses or other means of transportation to convey the same to the commissary at Middletown. Alexander Catlin, of this town, was appointed the member of this committee for the county of Litchfield.

"On the 10th of December the following votes were passed in town-meeting, viz.:

"'1. Voted, That Messrs. David Welch, Nathaniel Woodruff, Archibald McNiel, Jr., Ebenezer Benton, and Thomas Waugh are hereby appointed a Committee to provide for the families of soldiers according to law and to the votes of the town.

"'2. To pay the Committee a reasonable compensation for their time and trouble.

"'3. That the Selectmen, together with Messrs. Tapping Reeve, Seth Bird, Andrew Adams, Samuel Lyman, and Lynde Lord, be a committee to prepare, state, and present for recovery sundry matters and accounts for money supposed to be due the town.

"'4. That the Selectmen be empowered and desired to distribute to the non-commissioned officers and soldiers in the Continental army belonging to this town, and to the poor of the town, and to the families of such as have died in the service, whether Continental or militia, or in captivity, and to such other families in this town as are not in circumstances to supply themselves, forty-two bushels of SALT lately brought from Boston —in such proportion as they shall judge most suitable and right—at the rate of ten shillings per bushel; and the residue to such as are able to purchase the same at prime cost.'

"'At a meeting of the inhabitants of Litchfield, legally warned and convened on the 6th day of January, A.D. 1778, to take into consideration the Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States of New Hampshire, Massachusetts Bay, Rhode Island, and Providence Plantations, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, exhibited by the selectmen pursuant to a requisition from His Excellency, the Governor, the said articles being distinctly and repeatedly read and considered:

"'Voted unanimously, That the said Articles of Confederation be approved, and that the Representatives of this town be instructed to use their influence and votes in the General Assembly to invest the delegates of this State with competent powers, in the name and behalf of this State, in Continental Congress, to subscribe and confirm the said Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States.'

"Andrew Adams, Esq., was moderator of the preceding meeting.

"At different dates during the continuance of the war the following persons (in addition to those already named) were appointed to furnish clothing, etc., for the soldiers in the public service from this town, and to provide for their families,—viz.: Capt. Joseph Vaill, Arthur Emons, Phineas Baldwin (2d), Capt. Solomon Marsh, Lieut. David Stoddard, Judson Guiteau, Jonathan Wright, Timothy Skinner, Gad Farnham, Benjamin Webster, John Smith, Ebenezer Plumb, and John Marsh.

"In March, 1780, the following inhabitants of this town were appointed Inspectors of Provisions for the Army,—to wit: Mr. Asahel Strong, Capt. Miles Beach, Capt. Reuben Stone, Lieut. Thomas Catlin, Capt. Archibald McNiel, Jr., Ensign Jonathan Wright, Mr. Abel Camp, Jr., Lieut. Lemuel Harrison, Capt. Zebulon Taylor, Capt. Alexander Waugh, Mr. Edward Linsley, and Mr. Levi Stone.

"In the spring of 1780, in consequence of the distressed situation of the army that had wintered at Morristown, Washington appealed to Governor Trumbull for assistance, and he never appealed to him in vain. The following was related by the late George Washington Parke Custis to Charles Hosmer, Esq., of Hartford. A special messenger was dispatched from Washington's headquarters to Governor Trumbull, to ascertain whether he could rely on any supplies from Connecticut. The messenger was detained but a short time, when Governor Trumbull placed a sealed letter in his hand directed to Gen. Washington. The contents of the letter were unknown to the bearer, but he arrived safely in camp and delivered it to Washington. After the commander-in-chief had looked it over in the presence of Mr. Custis, he remarked, in the words of the unbelieving Lord of Samaris, 'If the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be.' He then read the letter aloud in the presence of Mr. Custis. Its purport was, that on a certain day, and at a certain hour of the day, he would receive at Newburgh, by a wagon-train from Hartford, two hundred barrels of flour, one hundred barrels of beef, and one hundred barrels of pork. It also contained a request that a guard might be sent to a place specified, for the protection of the train. Notwithstanding Washington's unbelief, he sent a horse-guard, as requested. At the hour appointed, they saw the wagon-boys of Connecticut approaching with their train of provisions. This train passed through Litchfield on their way, where they obtained some additional supplies. When Washington received these provisions, he remarked to Mr. Custis, 'No other man than Governor Trumbull could have procured them, and no other State than Connecticut would have furnished them.' Accompanying the train, Col. Henry Champion had a drove of cattle, which were tolled across the Hudson by the side of small boats. Col. Champion (who held the office of commissary-general) was the father of the Rev. Judah Champion and Mrs. Julius Deming, and the grandfather of Mrs. Asa Bacon, all of this town.

"Early in the spring of 1780 a train of sleds, loaded with provisions for the army, passed through Hartford and Litchfield on their way to Newburgh. Their progress was slow, and the teamsters (among whom were Eleazer Pinney and Ebenezer Nash, of Ellington) suffered incredible hardships on account of the unprecedented depth of snow and the unbroken state of the roads over which they passed. On arriving at the Hudson they attempted to cross on the ice, when their teams broke through. The horse at the head of Mr. Nash's team was detached from the oxen and floated under the ice. In due time, but not till after a desperate struggle, the oxen were all rescued from their perilous situation. The principal part of the stores were then drawn across the river on light sleds, with but a single horse attached to each. These supplies were so much needed by the army that no risk was considered too great in conveying them speedily to Washington's camp.*

"'At a legal Town-Meeting, holden at Litchfield on Saturday, the 8th day of July, A.D. 1780, the Hon. Oliver Wolcott, Moderator, it was voted, That to every able and effective man belonging to this town, to the number of fourteen, who shall voluntarily enlist himself into the Connecticut Battalions of Infantry of the Continental Army, for three years or during the war, this town will pay every such recruit such a sum in money, including the wages he shall receive from the State or the United States, as shall be sufficient to procure ten bushels of good merchantable Wheat for every month he shall so serve, the price of which Wheat shall be computed and the money paid to such recruit, or his assigns, in Litchfield, in every year, on the 1st day of January, during the time such recruit shall serve as aforesaid; and that this town will also pay as a Bounty to every such recruit, or his assigns, in Litchfield, on the 1st day of January of every year for so long a time as such recruit shall serve as aforesaid, at the rate of thirty bushels of good merchantable Wheat for one year's service, or the full value thereof in money, for the payment of which monies or wheat as aforesaid to such recruit or his assigns, in case he shall enlist himself into said Battalions by the 15th day of July instant, this town hereby becomes bound as aforesaid.'

"At the same meeting it was "'Voted, That whereas the Militia of this town are required by an order of Colonel Andrew Adams, grounded on an act or order of the Governor and Council of Safety made the 30th day of June, 1780, to furnish fourteen able and effective men to serve in the Connecticut Line of the Continental Army until the 31st day of December next, this town, being anxious to give every necessary encouragement to the public service, hereby plight themselves to pay to every such recruit, or his assigns, as shall voluntarily enlist himself into said Battalions by the 10th day of July instant, to serve in said Battalions until the last day of December next, such sum in money as shall be sufficient, including the wages he shall receive from this State or the United States, to procure as much good merchantable Wheat as might be obtained by the monthly wages of forty shillings in the year 1774. Provided, nevertheless, that the Militia of this town not being called upon by virtue of said order to furnish more than fourteen able recruits to serve in said Battalions. This town will not consider themselves bound by the votes of this day to pay Bounties or Wages to more than fourteen such recruits; and, in case a greater number shall enlist, the preference shall be given to such as shall enlist for three years or during the war, and of them, to such as shall first enlist. And the Colonel or Commanding Officer of this Regiment is desired to discharge any supernumerary recruits, agreeable to these votes.

* See No. XV., "South Windsor Sketches," in Hartford Times.

"'Voted, That a Rate or Tax of sixpence on the pound, on the list of 1779, be and the same is hereby laid, and made payable in Gold or Silver Coin or Bills of Credit of this State of the emissions of the present year, by the 1st day of September next.'

"Judson Gitteau, Timothy Skinner, Jonathan Wright, and Ozias Lewis, were appointed to collect the said tax.

"At a legal Town-Meeting holden at the Meeting-House in the first society in Litchfield, on the 15th day of November, Anno Dom. 1780, Major David Welch, Moderator, it was "'Voted, That a Tax of one shilling upon the pound be laid upon the Polls and Rateable Estate contained in the Grand List of this town, given in the year 1779, to be collected and paid to the Town Treasurer by the 1st day of December next, in the Bills of Credit emitted by this State since the 1st day of January last, new Continental Money issued under the authority of this State, Gold and Silver, or old Continental Money after the rate of forty shillings in old Continental Money for one shilling Lawful Money, for purchasing Provisions and requisite Supplies for the Army, and to defray other necessary expenses of the town.'

"'Voted, That Messrs. Timothy Skinner, Seth Farnham, Theodore Catlin, and Harris Hopkins be Collectors of the said Tax accordingly.'

"'Provided, Nevertheless, that any person may pay any part of said Tax in Provisions required, and at the respective prices fixed in the Act of Assembly made at their session in October last, entitled "An Act for Collecting and Storing a Quantity of Provisions for the use of the Continental Army and the Forces raised for the Defense of this State."'

"'Voted, That Messrs. Timothy Skinner, Seth Farnham, Theodore Catlin, and Harris Hopkins be a Committee to purchase Provisions agreeable to said act of Assembly.'

"'Voted, That Messrs. Miles Beach and Leman Stone be appointed to receive the Salt, procure Casks to contain said Provisions, to receive and inspect the same, see that it is good and merchantable and well put up, and mark and store the casks, and report to the Governor, agreeable to said Act of Assembly.'

"'Voted, That said Beach and Stone be also employed to purchase any of such Provisions as occasion may offer or opportunity present.'

"'Voted, That said Timothy Skinner, Seth Farnham, Theodore Catlin, Harris Hopkins, Miles Beach, and Leman Stone be also appointed to purchase the Clothing required for the Army, agreeable to directions to be given to them from time to time by the Selectmen.'

"Dec. 26, 1780, Reuben Smith, Esq., Moderator, 'Voted, That Timothy Skinner, Heber Stone, James Stoddard, Reuben Stone, David Welch, and Zebulon Taylor be a Committee to hire, at the cost of the town, the requisite number of recruits to complete the quota of this town in the Connecticut Line of the Army of the United States for three years or during the war.'

"January 9, 1781, Colonel Andrew Adams, Moderator, 'Voted, That whereas it is necessary that this town raise a number of soldiers to fill up their quota in the Army of the United States, the town does promise and engage to each soldier that shall enlist into said service in either of the Connecticut Battallons before the 1st day of February next, that they will make good to him his forty shillings per month by such addition to the pay he shall receive from the State or the United States as shall make said pay sufficient to purchase as much Provisions as forty shillings would have done in 1774.'

"A tax of three pence on a pound was laid on the list of 1779, one-half to be paid in wheat flour, rye flour, and Indian corn. Capt. Abraham Bradley and Leman Stone were appointed receivers of the flour and corn.

"Jan. 18, 1781.—It was voted to divide the town in classes for the purpose of procuring the requisite number of recruits; and the selectmen, together with Capt. Abraham Bradley, Capt. John Osborn, Ensign Edward Phelps, and Dr. Seth Bird, were appointed a committee for that purpose.

"March 26, 1781.—Nine foot-soldiers and two horsemen are required of this town, in addition to those already in the field; and the necessary steps were taken to raise them.

"July 9, 1781.—'Voted, That the men belonging to this town, lately detached for a term of three months by special order of the Captain-General, agreeable to a resolve of His Excellency the Governor and Council of Safety of the 19th of June, founded on an earnest Requisition of His Excellency General Washington for eight hundred men, etc., have and receive out of the Town Treasury, by the 1st of January next, each the sum of twenty shillings in silver, or other equivalent, for each month he shall be in actual service agreeable to such detachment.'

"Sept. 18, 1781.—'Captain Miles Beach was chosen Receiver of Clothing and Provisions on the 2*s.* 6*s.* tax payable in December next; and Leman Stone was chosen Receiver of such part of said tax as shall be delivered to him.'

"Jan. 3, 1782.—'Voted, That the Town Treasurer be desired to procure the order or orders drawn by the Committee of Pay Table in favor of this town, for Bounties on raising recruits in the year 1781, now in his hands and office, to be exchanged for small orders to the same amount; and to deliver out thirty pounds thereof to each of the respective classes, taking proper receipts therefor.'

"Feb. 25, 1782.—'Voted, to raise ten men for State Service or the Regiment of Guards for Horseneck, as required by Act of Assembly, by dividing the town into classes on the List of 1781.'

"Capt. Abraham Bradley, Col. Bezaleel Beebe, and Capt. Lynde Lord, were appointed a committee for that purpose.

"'Voted, That ten men be added to the above Committee, whose business it shall be to notify the respective classes to meet at the time and place by them appointed, to proceed in raising recruits as aforementioned, viz.:

For the	1st class,	Ensign	Edward Phelps.
"	2d	"	Ozias Lewis.
"	3d	"	Benjamin Peck, Jr.
"	4th	"	Elihu Harrison.
"	5th	"	Ephraim Smedley, Jr.
"	6th	"	Leaming Bradley.
"	7th	"	Ensign Jonathan Wright.
"	8th	"	Lieutenant David Stoddard.
"	9th	"	Captain Alexander Catlin.
"	10th	"	Lieutenant Timothy Skinner.

"'Voted, That each non-commissioned officer and soldier that is or shall be detached out of this town into actual service the current year shall receive twenty shillings per month for the time he shall thus continue in actual service on such draft, or procure a man to serve for him; and that the Selectmen draw orders on the Treasurer accordingly.'

"March 25, 1782. 'Stephen Stone, Elijah Griswold, and Benjamin Kilbourn having lately been assessed on examination by the Civil Authority and Selectmen, agreeable to law, for each a son gone to the enemy, and having requested a hearing in Town Meeting, and being heard accordingly, the question was proposed relative to said Stone in particular; and the town by vote did not discharge said Assessment. Whereupon, it being late, and other business requiring attention, adjourned till Thursday, the 28th, at 10 o'clock P M.'

"At an adjourned meeting, the vote in the case of Stephen Stone was reconsidered, and he was released from his assessment. In the other cases mentioned the assessment was confirmed.

April 2, 1782.—"Messrs. Timothy Skinner, Moses Seymour, and Abraham Bradley were appointed a committee to make inquiry whether any of the deserters from the army belonging to this town, and not accounted as part of the quota of the town in the late returns of the army, have joined or are likely to join the army in consequence of the general's proclamation, and whether this town is not overrated by a mistake in the report of the committee for ascertaining deficiencies," etc.

"In town meeting, 16th October, 1783, Capt. Moses Seymour, moderator, it was voted that the present selectmen adjust the claims of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who lately served in the eight battalions of this State as part of the quota of this town, and claim a grant of twenty shillings per month agreeable to a vote of this town passed April 15, 1777; and having by agreement with said claimants or otherwise ascertained the sum to them respectively due, to divide each man's sum into three equal parts, and give certificates thereof in behalf of the town, payable at three different periods,—viz., on the 1st days of January, 1784, 1785, and 1786, the last to be on interest; which certificates shall be paid by the treasurer according to the tenor of them, the one-half of each in money, and the other half in provisions at the market price; and that the selectmen for the time being make three town-rates for that purpose,—viz., in the years 1783, 1784, and 1785, to be collected by the collectors of town-rates for those years respectively, in December annually, and paid into the town treasury and kept distinct from all other town-rates or moneys, orders, and accounts, whatsoever."

"Through the entire war Litchfield was represented, in the persons of one or more of her sons, on the Committee of Safety, in the Council of State, and in the Continental Congress. At the regular session of the Legislature in May, 1780, the representatives from this town were Andrew Adams and Jedediah Strong; the former was chosen speaker and the latter clerk of the House. Maj. Moses Seymour commanded a Litchfield company of cavalry at the capture of Burgoyne. Col. Beebe was, during the latter part of the war, chief in command of the troops raised for the defense of our sea-coast. Gen. Wolcott, Gen. David Smith, and Col. Tallmadge were active and energetic officers from the commencement to the close of hostilities. Col. Sheldon, commander of the celebrated corps of cavalry known in history as 'Sheldon's Regiment of Horse,' had been for some twenty years a resident of Litchfield, and his troops were raised almost exclusively in this vicinity. Capts. Seymour, Stanton, and Wadsworth, of this town, commanded companies in this corps; Capt. Stanton being at the same time paymaster of the regiment. Col. Tallmadge was one of Sheldon's most efficient majors. This regiment was Washington's favorite corps, and continued to act under his immediate direction till the treaty of peace was signed, constituting at once his messengers, his bodyguard, and his agents for the accomplishment of any enterprise, however, desperate. Capt. Morris, also of this town, commanded one of the companies of the 'forlorn hope' at the siege of Yorktown. Indeed, the citizens of Litchfield were found at the head of their battalions or in the ranks in nearly all the great battles of the Revolution, including those of Germantown, Trenton, Princeton, Long Island, and Stony Point.

"Mr. Hollister, in his 'History of Connecticut, says,—

"When the whole country was in a state of alarm at the intelligence that Lord Cornwallis, with a large fleet and armament, was approaching the American coast, Col. Tallmadge happened to pass through Litchfield with a regiment of cavalry. While there he attended public worship with his troops on Sunday at the old meeting-house that stood upon the village green. The occasion was deeply interesting and exciting. The Rev. Judah Champion, then the settled minister of the place,—a man of great eloquence and of a high order of intellectual endowment,—in view of the alarming crisis, thus invoked the sanction of Heaven:

"Oh Lord! we view with terror the approach of the enemies of thy holy religion. Wilt thou send storm and tempest to toss them upon the sea and to overwhelm them upon the mighty deep, or to scatter them to the uttermost parts of the earth. But, peradventure, should any escape thy vengeance, collect them together again, O Lord! as in the hollow of thy hand, and let thy lightning play upon them! We beseech thee, moreover, that thou do gird up the loins of these thy servants who are going forth to fight thy battles. Make them strong men, that 'one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight.' Hold before them the shield with which thou wast wont in the old time to protect thy chosen people. Give them swift feet that they may pursue their enemies, and swords terrible as that of thy Destroying Angel, that they may cleave them down when they have overtaken them. Preserve these servants of thine, Almighty God! and bring them once more to their homes and friends, if thou canst do it consistently with thine high purposes. If, on the other hand, thou hast decreed that they shall die in battle, let thy Spirit be present with them and breathe upon them, that they may go up as a sweet sacrifice into the courts of thy temple, where are habitations prepared for them from the foundations of the world."

Several British soldiers became citizens of the town, among whom were Richard Morris, John I. Gatta, John Glass, William Burrell, Henry Poulson, James Glass, and Adam Tilford.

Mr. Kilbourn, in his history, says that at the period of which we are writing, "Litchfield was the home of a remarkable number of educated thinking men, some of whom were already distinguished and others who were destined to act an important part in their country's history. Indeed, no town in the State could boast of a community more refined and patriotic. Within the present borough limits resided Oliver Wolcott, Andrew Adams, Reynold Marvin, Tapping Reeve, Isaac Baldwin, Samuel Lyman, Isaac Baldwin, Jr., Elisha Sheldon, John Pierce, Jr., Dr. Thomas Little, Lynde Lord, Rev. Timothy Collins, Rev. Judah Champion, Dr. Lemuel Hopkins, Dr. Reuben Smith, Moses Seymour, Timothy Skinner, Abraham Bradley, William Stanton, Ambrose Collins, Elijah Wadsworth, and Ephraim Kirby.

To this goodly company were soon added Oliver Wolcott, Jr., Ashbel Baldwin, Ezekiel Woodruff, Julius Deming, Uriah Tracy, and Dr. Daniel Sheldon.

Sixteen of the gentlemen named were graduated at Yale College, and one (Judge Reeve) at the College of New Jersey; three were members of the national Congress, or became such; seven were captains in the Revolutionary war, and four rose to the rank of general officers; two became chief justices, and two governors of the State.

CHAPTER XI.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

Ethan Allen—Elisha Sheldon—Oliver Wolcott—Andrew Adams—Bezaleel Beebe—Jedediah Strong—Benjamin Talmadge—Tapping Reeve—Moses Seymour—Elisha Mason.

MEN OF THE REVOLUTION.*

"THE historic names of the Revolutionary period most intimately associated with Litchfield are those of Ethan Allen, Oliver Wolcott, Elisha Sheldon, Andrew Adams, Bezaleel Beebe, Moses Seymour, Jedediah Strong, and Tapping Reeve. This chapter will be mainly devoted to brief biographical sketches of these eminent and useful men.

* From Kilbourne's "History of Litchfield."

"GEN. ETHAN ALLEN,* the hero of Ticonderoga, was born in Litchfield, Jan. 10, 1737–38. He was the eldest child of his parents—Joseph and Mary (Baker) Allen—who, when Ethan was about two years old, removed to the adjoining town of Cornwall. The subject of this sketch spent his youth and early manhood in Cornwall and Salisbury; and about the year 1765 emigrated to the 'New Hampshire Grants,' as they were then called, a wild, mountainous region lying between Lake Champlain on the west and the Connecticut River on the east, and extending from the Massachusetts line northward to the Canadas. This territory was claimed alike by the governments of New Hampshire and New York, a fact which led to a fierce and long-continued struggle between the settlers and Governor Tryon of the latter province. The hardy and resolute pioneers banded themselves together under the name of the "Green Mountain Boys," chose Allen as their commander, and waged a war of extermination against all intruders from New York. This contest continued until the attention of both parties was diverted by the more important events which immediately preceded the Revolution. By this time Allen was famous throughout the North. When, therefore, the seizure of the British fortresses on Lake Champlain was secretly resolved upon by the Whigs of Massachusetts and Connecticut, Col. Allen was, by common consent, selected as the leader of the hazardous enterprise. In another part of this volume I have referred to this subject, and can here only give it a passing notice. In the twilight of a peaceful May morning, in 1775, the hero, followed by a little band of trusty soldiers, entered the fortress of Ticonderoga and thundered at the door of the commander, demanding the instant surrender of the garrison. "By what authority do you demand it?" asked Capt. Delaplace, as he stood trembling before the giant apparition. "IN THE NAME OF THE GREAT JEHOVAH AND THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS!" responded Allen, at the same time threatening the captain with instant death if his demand was not forthwith complied with. There was no alternative. With a countenance and manner not to be mistaken, Allen stood with his drawn sword ready to execute his threat. The garrison were at once surrendered as prisoners of war, and all the arms, ammunition, provisions, etc., contained in the fort fell into the hands of Allen. The capture of Crown Point by Col. Warner, on the following day, gave the Whigs complete possession of Lake Champlain. Col. Allen now visited the Provincial Congress of New York and the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, and was received with marked consideration by both of those illustrious bodies. He was admitted to the floor of each, and permitted to detail his plan for the conquest of Canada. His plan was approved, and he was commissioned as a colonel in the Continental army. In September following he made an unsuccessful attack upon Montreal, was taken prisoner, carried to England, and confined in Pendennis Castle. As Ticonderoga had long been a famous place in that country, the renown of his exploit had preceded him thither. On his arrival at Falmouth, so great was the curiosity to see him that crowds of people thronged the highways, housetops, and rising grounds in the vicinity, the officers being compelled to force their way through the throng for a mile with drawn swords. He was dressed in a fawn-skin jacket, an underdress and breeches of sagatha, worsted stockings, coarse shoes, and a red worsted cap. On shipboard he was treated with great severity, being a part of the time handcuffed and imprisoned in a dirty cell. When angry his rage was terrible. Once, on being insulted by a petty officer, he twisted off with his teeth a tenpenny nail with which his shackles were fastened! During the spring of 1776 he was brought back to America, but was detained in New York as a prisoner of war until May 6, 1778, when he was exchanged for Col. Campbell. After repairing to headquarters and offering his services to Gen. Washington, Allen visited the Grants (or Vermont), where his arrival was announced by the discharge of cannon, and other demonstrations of joy. The newly-organized State of Vermont appointed him to the office of major-general and commander-in-chief of the State militia, and sent him as a special delegate to the national Congress. He was also elected a representative to the Legislature, a post to which he was repeatedly re-elected.

"Aside from several pamphlets, which had their origin in the controversy with New York, Allen published a narrative of his captivity in a volume of two hundred pages, and a theological work entitled 'The Oracles of Reason,' in which he attempts to subvert the doctrines of Christianity. His writings are bold, artful, and egotistical, and, though sometimes crude and unpolished, evince talents of a high order.

"The following anecdote (indicating that Allen in reality had very little faith in his own system of divinity) is contained in a note to page 409, vol. ii., of President Dwight's 'Travels in New England and New York':

"Dr. Elliot, who removed from Guilford, in Connecticut, to Vermont, was well acquainted with Col. Allen, and had made him a visit at a time when his daughter was very sick and near death. He was introduced to the library, where the colonel read to him some of his writings with much self-complacency, and asked, 'Is not that well done?' While they were thus employed a messenger entered and informed Col. Allen that his daughter was dying and desired to see him. He immediately went to her chamber accompanied by Dr. Elliot, who was desirous of witnessing the interview. The wife of Allen was a pious woman, and had instructed her daughter in the principles of Christianity. As soon as her father appeared at her bedside she said to him, 'I am about to die; shall I believe in the principles you have taught me, or shall I believe in what my mother has taught me?' He became extremely agitated, his chin quivered, his whole frame shook, and, after waiting a few moments, he replied, 'Believe what your mother has taught you.'

* Several towns claim his birthplace. See history of Woodbury, elsewhere in this work.

"While Allen was on parole in New York, a British officer of honorable rank sent for him to call at his lodgings. On his arrival the officer told him that his fidelity, though in a wrong cause, had won the good opinion of Lord Howe, who was disposed to show him favor. He at the same time held out to him brilliant prospects of promotion and money, and large tracts of land either in Connecticut or Vermont at the close of the war. Allen replied, that if by faithfulness he had recommended himself to Gen. Howe, he should be loth by unfaithfulness to forfeit the general's good opinion; and as to the lands, he regarded the offer not unlike that made by Satan to Christ, who promised him 'all the kingdoms of the world,' when in fact 'the old devil didn't own an acre'! The officer thereupon sent him away as incorrigible.

"Jared Sparks, LL.D. (late president of Harvard College), in his biography of the subject of this sketch, says,—

"There is much to admire in the character of Ethan Allen. He was brave, generous, and frank; true to his country, consistent and unyielding in his purposes, seeking at all times to promote the best good of mankind, a lover of social harmony, and a determined foe to the artifices of injustice and the encroachments of power. Few have suffered more in the cause of freedom, few have borne their sufferings with a firmer constancy or a loftier spirit. His courage, even when approaching to rashness, was calm and deliberate. No man probably ever possessed this attribute in a more remarkable degree. He was eccentric and ambitious, but these weaknesses, if such they were, never betrayed him into acts dishonorable, unworthy, or selfish. So rigid was he in his patriotism, that, when it was discovered that one of his brothers had avowed tory principles and had been guilty of a correspondence with the enemy, he entered a public complaint against him in his own name, and petitioned the court to confiscate his property in obedience to the law. His enemies never had cause to question his magnanimity, or his friends to regret confidence misplaced or expectations disappointed. He was kind, benevolent, humane, and placable. In short, whatever may have been his peculiarities, and however these may have diminished the weight of his influence and the value of his public services, it must be allowed that he was a man of very considerable importance in the sphere of his activity, and that to no individual among her patriot founders is the State of Vermont more indebted for the basis of her free institutions and the achievement of her independence than to ETHAN ALLEN."

This is certainly a high compliment, coming from the source it does. The theological writings of Allen, however, were not calculated to render him popular with the good people of New England. Preachers, poets, and critics joined in a furious crusade against him, to all of which he affected the utmost contempt. Soon after the publication of his "Oracles," alluding to the anticipated attacks of the clergy (in a letter to a friend), he says, "I defy the whole artillery of hell-fire." The following piece of satire from the pen of Dr. Lemuel Hopkins (himself for some years a resident of Litchfield), is preserved in Dr. Elihu Hubbard Smith's "Collection of American Poetry," which was printed at Litchfield, by Collier & Adam, in 1792:

"Lo, Allen, 'scaped from British jails,
His tushes broke by biting nails,
Appears in hyperborean skies,
To tell the world the Bible lies.
See him on Green Hills north afar,
Glow like a self-enkindled star,
Prepared (with mob-collecting club,
Black from the forge of Beelzebub,
And grim with metaphysic scowl,
With quill just plucked from wing of owl),
As rage or reason rise or sink,
To shed his blood, or shed his ink.
Behold, inspired from Vermont dens,
The seer from anti-Christ descends,
To feed new mobs with hell-born manna
In Gentile lands of Susquehanna;
And teach the Pennsylvania Quaker
High blasphemies against his Maker.
Behold him move, ye staunch divines!
His tall head bustling through the pines;
All front he seems, like wall of brass,
And brays tremendous as an ass.
One hand is clenched to batter noses,
While t'other scrawls 'gainst Paul and Moses!"

On the 23d of June, 1762, Allen married Mary Bronson, of Woodbury, who died in 1784. Their children were Joseph, Loraina, Lucy, Mary Ann, and Pamela. Loraina died young, and was the subject of the anecdote just given.

Gen. Allen died of apoplexy, on his estate at Colchester, Vt., Feb. 12, 1789, aged fifty-one years.

ELISHA SHELDON, a native of Lyme, and a graduate of Yale College in the class of 1730, became a resident of this village in 1753, and here spent the remainder of his life. He was an associate judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Litchfield County from 1754 to 1761; at which latter date he was elected a member of the Council, or Upper House, in which distinguished body he sat until his decease, a period of eighteen years. He was also chosen a representative by the freemen of this town at ten semi-annual elections. Mr. Sheldon was equally conspicuous in the civil and ecclesiastical affairs of the town, and was often called upon to preside at our town-meetings. He also, for a period of eighteen years, held the office of county treasurer. An active patriot in the Revolution, he was not unfrequently appointed by the Legislature and by his fellow-citizens on important committees, having for their object the advancement of the common cause. He died in the midst of the great contest. His remains rest in the West burying-ground, beneath a marble tablet, on which is inscribed the following epitaph:

"This Monument is erected to the Memory of the Hon. ELISHA SHELDON, Esq., who departed this life September the first, Anno Domini 1779, in the 79th year of his age. A Gentleman of extensive genius and Liberal Education, called in early life to various public employments, both Civil and Military, all of which he executed with punctuality and fidelity; much respected for his Generosity and Benevolence, and greatly lamented by his extensive Acquaintance. In early life he made a profession of the Christian Religion, and till his Death adorned it by a very Exemplary Conversation. 'Blessed are the Dead who die in the Lord.'"

The wife of Mr. Sheldon was Elizabeth Ely, by whom he had five children,—viz., Lois (married Lynde Lord, Esq., sheriff), Mary, Thomas, Samuel, and Col. Elisha (commander of the Second Regiment of Light Dragoons in the Continental army).

OLIVER WOLCOTT, LL.D. (son of his His Excellency the Hon. Roger Wolcott, Governor and chief justice of Connecticut), was born in Windsor, Dec. 20, 1726, and was graduated at Yale College in 1745. In early manhood he commanded a company of volunteers in the Northern army in the war against the French. Having pursued the usual course of medical studies, he established himself as a physician in Goshen, and was residing there at the date of the organization of the county of Litchfield, October, 1751. The Legislature appointed him the first high sheriff of the new county, and he immediately took up his abode in this village and continued to reside here until his decease, a period of forty-six years. He was thus but twenty-five years of age when he became a resident of Litchfield, and hence his fame, subsequently achieved, as really belongs to us as if he had been born in the town. In 1752 he erected the "Wolcott House" in South Street, which is still one of the most desirable residences in the place. With a commanding personal appearance, dignified manners, a clear and cultivated intellect, and a character for integrity far above the reach of suspicion, it is not to be wondered at that he became a favorite of the people with whom his lot was cast. Besides holding the office of sheriff for over twenty years, he was chosen a representative to the Legislature five times between the years 1764 and 1770, inclusive; a member of the Council or Upper House from 1771 to 1786; judge of the Court of Probate for the district of Litchfield from 1772 to 1779; judge of the Court of Common Pleas from 1773 to 1786; and member of the Continental Congress from 1775 to 1784 (except two years). He was one of that memorable band of patriots and sages who, on the 4th of July, 1776, affixed their names to the Declaration of Independence.

In the early part of the war of the Revolution, Judge Wolcott was commissioned as a brigadier-general, and Congress appointed him a Commissioner on Indian Affairs for the Northern Department, with Gen. Schuyler and others. In May, 1779, he was elected by the Legislature and commissioned by Governor Trumbull as major-general of the militia of Connecticut to succeed Gen. James Wadsworth, resigned. In these important and responsible stations he rendered the country essential service. On the field, in the camp, at the rendezvous, in the departments of the commissary of supplies, in fact, wherever he could render himself useful—he was found, ever prompt in planning and efficient in executing. At the same time he was an active member of the committee of safety, and when at home was equally zealous and conspicuous in the local affairs of the town, officiating as moderator, selectman, committeeman, etc. Indeed, no man in the State at this period discharged so many and varied public duties. A considerable share of the reputation which Connecticut acquired for promptness in furnishing men and means for the army is due to Gen. Wolcott. Certainly, to no other individual in the western counties could Governor Trumbull or Gen. Washington appeal for aid, with the certainity of success, as to him.

In 1786 he was elected to the office of Lieutenant-Governor of the State, and was annually re-elected for a period of ten years. In May, 1796, he was chosen Governor, the highest executive office in the gift of the people of his native State. To this distinguished position he was again elevated at the annual election in 1797. He was now seventy years of age. His naturally robust constitution began to feel the weight of care and responsibility which had been so long pressing upon it. He departed this life at his residence at Litchfield, Dec. 1, 1797, aged seventy-one years. A sermon was preached at his funeral by the Rev. Azel Backus, D.D., which was published. Governor Wolcott had long been a professed disciple of Christ, and his faith in the efficacy of the great atonement sustained him in the decisive hour. "With all the splendor of his station and his well-earned fame," says Dr. Backus, "he was not ashamed to pray in the expressive language of the publican, 'God be merciful to me a sinner,' and to make the most feeling declarations of his own personal unworthiness. For several days before his death the shattered remains of a once noble mind and vigorous body were devoted continually to God. His very breath appeared to be prayer, until, after many painful struggles, he fell asleep. O, death! in what a mortifying light doth thy power put the little glory of this diminutive world! To what insignificance do earthly honors dwindle before the grandeur of eternity! Nevertheless, the death of such a character is a grievous loss, especially under the present threatening aspects of Divine Providence and the perilous situation of the country. Such tried characters are the 'salt of the earth' and the pillars of our national existence. The presence, firmness, counsels, prayers, and example of such fathers should be esteemed the 'chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof.' But God governs the world, and his will is done. Let it be the solemn care of each one of us to make a profitable improvement of the frown of Heaven in this removal."

Joel Barlow, in his great national poem, The Columbiad, thus refers to his zeal and efforts in the cause of Independence:

> "Bold Wolcott urged the all-important cause,
> With steady hand the solemn scene he draws;
> Undaunted firmness with his wisdom joined,
> Nor kings nor worlds could warp his steadfast mind."

"No resident of the town ever achieved a more honorable and wide-spread fame than Oliver Wolcott, and no name in the historic annals of the town and State in which his life was passed is more earnestly and affectionately cherished than his. His family have been and are distinguished—some for high political stations, others for enterprise and wealth, some as professional or literary men, and all for their liberality, sterling moral qualities, and exalted social position. His mortal remains rest in the East burying-ground, surrounded by those of many of his descendants and kindred.

"Governor Wolcott married Lorana Collins, of Guilford, in 1755; she died April 19, 1794. Their children were Oliver (who died in infancy), Oliver (2d), Lorana (married Hon. William Moseley, M. C., of Hartford), Mary Ann (married Lieutenant-Governor Goodrich, of Hartford), Frederick (see biographical notes). Ursula Wolcott (a sister of Governor Wolcott, next older than himself) married Governor Matthew Griswold, and was the mother of Governor Roger Griswold. Thus, her father, brother, husband, son, and nephew were all Governors of Connecticut, a fact which cannot, probably, be said of any other lady who ever lived in the State or United States.

"Andrew Adams, LL.D. (a native of Stratford, and a graduate of Yale College in the class of 1760), commenced the practice of law in Litchfield in 1774, and continued to reside here until his death, which took place in November, 1797. He rose rapidly in public esteem, and was chosen a representative in October, 1776, a post to which he was nine times re-elected. A friend of the Revolution, he took a prominent part in its favor in our town-meetings, and by his influence and efforts did much to promote the cause of the patriots in this vicinity. He rose to the rank of colonel, and was for a short time in actual service in the war. In 1779, and again in 1780, he was speaker of the House of Representatives, the other member from Litchfield (the Hon. Jedediah Strong) being at the same time clerk of the House. Col. Adams was a member of the Council of Safety two years, a member of the State Council nine years, a member of the Continental Congress three years, a Commissioner of the Northern Congresses at Hartford and Providence in 1780; an associate judge of the Superior Court four years, and chief justice from 1793 until his decease. He was also for a few years a deacon of the First Church in this town.

"The body of the subject of this sketch rests beneath a marble tablet in the West burying-ground. His epitaph is as follows:

"In Memory of the Hon. Andrew Adams, Esq, Chief Judge of the Superior Court, who died November 27, 1797, in the 63d year of his age. Having filled many distinguished offices with great Ability and Dignity, he was promoted to the highest Judicial Office in the State, which he held for several years, in which his eminent Talents shone with uncommon Lustre, and were exerted to the great Advantage of the Public and the honor of the High Court in which he presided. He made an early Profession of Religion, and zealously sought to promote its true Interests. He lived the Life and died the Death of a Christian. His filial Piety and paternal tenderness are held in sweet Remembrance."

"Mrs. Eunice Adams, his wife, died June 4, 1797, aged fifty-three years.

"The Litchfield Monitor mentions it as a sad and singular coincidence that Governor Wolcott and Chief Justice Adams (the two highest official dignitaries of the State), both residing in the same village and on the same street, should be lying apparently at the point of death at the same time. Governor Wolcott survived his distinguished neighbor about three days only.*

"Col. Bezaleel Beebe was born in Litchfield, April 28, 1741, and spent his life in his native town, except when absent in the service of his country. At the age of seventeen he enlisted as a soldier in the French war, and marched with Capt. Evarts' company to Fort George, where he was for some time stationed. He was afterwards a member of Maj. Rogers' celebrated corps of Rangers, an account of whose exploits was published in London by their heroic commander; and, with Rogers, he participated in the engagement which resulted in the capture of Maj. Israel Putnam. During much of the succeeding year he was stationed at Fort Miller under Capt. Whiting. In 1760 he enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. McNeile, of Litchfield, and continued in the service for three years, having in the mean time been chosen one of the sergeants of the company. On the 11th of July, 1764, he was married to Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. John Marsh, of this town, and settled on the paternal homestead, north of Bantam Lake, which is still owned and occupied by his descendants. On the breaking out of the Revolutionary contest he was once more summoned to the field, having been commissioned as a lieutenant in the first recruits raised for that service, April, 1775. He forthwith marched with his company to Boston, and thence, after a short detention, to Crown Point, where he was transferred to the quartermaster's department. From this time onward he was in actual service (except while detained as a prisoner of war) until the spring of 1781, at which time he applied for and received an honorable discharge, and once more returned home. As his distinguished public services have been frequently referred to in the preceding pages, it will not be expected that I should repeat them here. Suffice it to say, that he rose to the rank of colonel in the Continental army, and enjoyed in an eminent degree the confidence and respect of his superiors in office as well as of the soldiers under him. While chief commander of the coast-guard of this State he performed the duties and received the pay of a brigadier-general. A commanding figure, and a peculiar dignity of character and manner, united to an innate kindness of heart and a courage equal to any emergency, contributed to render him an efficient and popular officer.

"He was chosen a member of the House of Representatives for the first time in the autumn of 1781, as a colleague of the Hon. Jedediah Strong, and was re-

* I have said that Judge Adams commenced the practice of law in Litchfield in 1774. The indications are that he became a resident here some eight or ten years earlier than that date. An Andrew Adams of this town was a commissioner on two estates as early as 1766, and was chosen a lister in 1772 and 1773.—Kilbourne.

elected during the two succeeding years. In 1788 the Constitution of the United States was ratified, and the general government reorganized. In 1792, '93, and '95, Col. Beebe was returned to the Legislature. He also served his fellow-citizens as a selectman both before and after the war; and through life was much employed by the Court of Probate in settling estates of persons deceased. He departed this life May 24, 1824, aged eighty-three, his widow surviving him about a year. Several of his Revolutionary letters to Governor Trumbull, Gen. Silliman, etc., are preserved among the 'Trumbull Papers' in the library of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Boston.

"JEDEDIAH STRONG was born in Litchfield, Nov. 7, 1738, and here spent his entire life. He graduated at Yale College in 1761, and, with a single exception, he was the first native of the town who ever received a collegiate degree. He first studied divinity, but, being early elected to office, he abandoned the sacred profession for the more congenial pursuits of pettifogger and politician. He acquired and long maintained a political ascendency second only to that of Wolcott and Adams. He was a representative at about thirty regular sessions of the Legislature, at fourteen of which he was clerk of the House. In May, 1773, he was appointed (with Roger Sherman, Eliphalet Dyer, Matthew Griswold, and William Samuel Johnson) a commissioner to wait on Governor Penn at Philadelphia, to negotiate relative to the lands west of the Delaware. In May, 1779, he was appointed a delegate to the Continental Congress in place of the Hon. Stephen Titus Hosmer, resigned; and was reappointed in the October following. He was also an associate judge of the County Court for eleven years, a member of the Council of Safety, a member of the State Council, and a delegate to and secretary of the convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States. He was a lister six years, a selectman thirteen years, and town clerk sixteen years. The first wife of Judge Strong was Ruth Patterson, who died leaving an only daughter, Ida Strong. In 1788 he married Susannah, daughter of the Hon. George Wyllys, Secretary of State, Hartford.

"COL. BENJAMIN TALLMADGE was born at Brookhaven, L. I., Feb. 25, 1754. His father, who bore the same name, was the pastor of the church in that place, and his mother was a daughter of the Rev. John Smith, pastor of the church at White Plains. The subject of this sketch graduated at Yale College in 1773. While superintendent of the high school at Wethersfield, in this State, he received a lieutenant's commission, with the appointment of adjutant of the regiment, both commission and warrant bearing date June 20, 1776. In these capacities he joined the army, and continued in actual service until the close of the war. On the 15th of December of the year last named he received a captain's commission in Sheldon's Second Regiment of Light Dragoons. As this commission came from Gen. Washington himself, the honor was conspicuous and highly appreciated. He was promoted to the rank of major, April 7, 1777, and took his station as a field-officer of the regiment. A separate detachment for special services was committed to him several times in the course of the war, on which occasions he received his orders directly from the commander-in-chief. On the opening of the spring campaign, 1777, Gen. Washington, foreseeing that Gen. Howe meditated some decisive blow, directed that all recruits should be sent forward to headquarters as fast as they were collected. He also sent a particular order to Col. Sheldon (who was at his winter quarters in Wethersfield) to send on all the effective men of his regiment. Having about men and horses enough for four companies, they were placed in the best possible order, and the command given to Maj. Tallmadge. His own company were all mounted on dapple-gray horses, which, with black straps and black bear-skin holster-covers, looked superbly. On his route to Washington's encampment, at Middlebrook, N. J., he passed with his troops through Farmington, Litchfield, Kent, Peekskill (where he crossed the Hudson), Haverstraw, Pompton, and Morristown, reaching the headquarters of the commander-in-chief on the 23d of June. Maj. Tallmadge participated in the battles of Short Hills and the Brandywine, though before the latter engagement the remainder of the regiment, commanded by Col. Sheldon in person, had arrived. In the battle of Germantown the position of Maj. Tallmadge's squadron was at the head of Gen. Sullivan's division on the left of the centre. In the early part of this sanguinary engagement the Americans seemed almost certain of success, but the heavy fog which soon enveloped both armies prevented them in some cases from distinguishing their friends from their enemies. They were thus thrown into confusion, a panic ensued, and our men fled in every direction. By order of Gen. Washington, Maj. Tallmadge repeatedly threw his dragoons across the principal thoroughfare to check the retreat of the infantry, but the effort was ineffectual.

"While our army were encamped at Valley Forge, in the gloomy winter of 1777–78, the major was stationed with a detachment of dragoons, as an advanced corps of observation between our army and that of the enemy. In the performance of his duty he scoured the country between the Schuylkill and Delaware Rivers, a distance of five or six miles, for the double purpose of watching the movements of the enemy, and preventing the disaffected from carrying provisions to the enemy at Philadelphia. While on this service he was attacked, about two o'clock one morning, by a large body of British light horse commanded by Lord Rawdon, and, after defending himself resolutely for a while, effected his escape with the loss of but three or four men killed and as many more wounded. While temporarily halting soon after at the 'Rising Sun' inn, within sight of the British outposts at Philadelphia, a country girl arrived from the city, whither she had been sent with eggs, with instructions to obtain some information respecting the enemy. While she was communicating with the major on the subject the British light horse were seen advancing. In an instant he mounted his horse, when he found the poor girl at his side, begging him to protect her. Without a moment for reflection, he told her to mount behind him, which she did, and in this way they rode at full speed to Germantown, about three miles.

"After taking part in the battle of Monmouth, and in the defense of Norwalk (Conn.), Maj. Tallmadge planned and executed an expedition against the enemy at Lloyd's Neck, on Long Island. Here was a strongly fortified post, manned by about five hundred troops, in the rear of which post a large band of marauders were encamped. For the purpose of breaking up this band of freebooters, he embarked at Shipan Point, near Stamford, Sept. 5, 1779, at eight o'clock in the evening, taking with him about one hundred and twenty men. The attack was so unexpected, that nearly the whole party were captured. Having destroyed the boats and huts of the enemy, the party re-embarked with their prisoners, and before daylight landed on the Connecticut shore without the loss of a man.

"In the autumn of 1780, Maj. Tallmadge was stationed on the lines in Westchester County. Returning from below to the regiment, then near Northcastle, on the evening of September 23d, he was informed that a prisoner had that day been brought in by the name of John Anderson. On inquiry, he learned the particulars of his capture by three militiamen,—Paulding, Van Wert, and Williams. He further ascertained that Lieut.-Col. Jameson (who, in the absence of Col. Sheldon, then had command of the dragoons) had sent the prisoner to Gen. Arnold's headquarters, accompanied by a letter of information respecting his capture. At the respectful but earnest solicitations of Maj. Tallmadge, Anderson was brought back to Northcastle, but Jameson persisted in sending the letter forward to Gen. Arnold. The observation of the major soon led him to the conclusion that the prisoner had been bred to arms, and communicated his suspicions to Lieut.-Col. Jameson, requesting him to notice his gait, especially as he turned on his heel to retrace his course across the room. The major remained with him almost constantly, and became deeply interested in his new acquaintance. After dinner on the 24th he requested the use of pen, ink, and paper, which were readily granted him. He immediately wrote the celebrated letter to Gen. Washington, in which he acknowledged himself to be 'Maj. John Andre, Adjutant-General to the British Army.' This letter he handed unopened to Maj. Tallmadge, who read it with deep emotion. The sad and important sequel of the story is familiar to every reader. A court-martial of fourteen general officers (Gen. Greene presiding) adjudged him to be a spy from the enemy, and that, 'agreeable to the law and usage of nations, he ought to suffer death.' At five o'clock in the afternoon of October 2d, Maj. John Andre died on a gibbet, in the presence of an immense concourse of sympathizing people. His military suit having arrived from New York, he was executed in full uniform. Maj. Tallmadge walked with him from his place of confinement to the foot of the scaffold, where he bade him an affectionate farewell. Years subsequently, he wrote, 'I became so deeply attached to Maj. Andre, that I can remember no instance where my affections were so fully absorbed in any man. When I saw him swinging under the gibbet, it seemed for a time as if I could not support it. All the spectators seemed to be overwhelmed by the affecting spectacle, and the eyes of many were suffused in tears.'

"In the autumn of 1780, Maj. Tallmadge requested permission of the commander-in-chief to attempt the destruction of the enemy's works at Smith's Manor, L. I., but the general regarded the expedition as too hazardous to be undertaken. Maj. Tallmadge did not, however, abandon the project, but secretly visited Long Island for the purpose of making observations and gaining information. On his return he made another application, and obtained the consent of Gen. Washington. On the 21st of November, with one hundred dismounted dragoons, he embarked at Fairfield, crossed the sound, and marched toward Fort George, on south side of Long Island. The garrison was surprised and captured, the works were demolished, and the houses, shipping, and an immense quantity of stores were burnt. Some valuable articles of dry goods were made up in bundles and bound upon the shoulders of the prisoners, who were pinioned two and two. The victors then recrossed the island to their boats with their prisoners and booty. While the main body were thus on the march, the major selected eight or ten men, mounted them on horses which he had taken at the fort, and made a digression for the purpose of destroying the king's magazine at Coram, which he accomplished, and in the course of an hour and a half joined his associates at a place where he had ordered them to halt. The whole company arrived in Fairfield, only one person engaged in the expedition having been seriously wounded. Among the prisoners taken were one lieutenant-colonel, one lieutenant, one surgeon, about fifty rank and file, and a host of others in the garrison. For this daring and successful exploit Maj. Tallmadge received the public thanks of the commander-in-chief and of the Congress of the United States.

"He continued in actual service until the close of the war, and was engaged in several other desperate enterprises. Our article, however, is already too long, and we must close the narrative of his Revolutionary services with the relation of a single additional fact. From 1778 to 1783 an important and confidential correspondence was carried on between Gen. Washington and Maj. Tallmadge, a large part of which is still in possession of the Tallmadge family.

"In November, 1782, he purchased of Mr. Thomas Sheldon (for the sum of £800) the premises in North Street, in this village, still known as The Tallmadge Place. In the purchase-deed of this property he is styled 'late of Long Island, now of the Continental army.' He continued in the public service about a year longer, when the army was disbanded and the subject of this sketch retired to private life with the rank of colonel. Before separating the officers of the army formed themselves into a national association, called The Society of the Cincinnati, of which Washington was chosen the first president. At the same time a similar society was formed for each State. Col. Tallmadge was chosen the first treasurer, and subsequent president of the Connecticut society.

"On the 16th of March, 1784, Col. Tallmadge was united in marriage to Mary Floyd (daughter of Gen. William Floyd, of Mastic, L. I., a signer of the Declaration of Independence), and at once took up his residence in this village. Here he engaged extensively and successfully in merchandising until 1801, when he was elected a member of the Congress of the United States. For a period of sixteen years (by re-election every two years) he held his seat in that distinguished body. Once more retiring from public life, he devoted himself with even more than his usual zeal to the advancement of every good cause. For many years he was an officer and liberal benefactor of various charitable institutions and societies, while his contributions to the needy in his own town were much more frequent and extensive than were known to the public.

"On the 3d of June, 1805, Mrs. Mary Tallmadge died in Litchfield, leaving five sons and two daughters, viz.: William S., Henry F., Maria, Frederick A., Benjamin, Harriet W., and George W. May 3, 1808, Col. Tallmadge married Maria, daughter of Joseph Hallett, Esq., of New York. He died at his residence in this village, March 13, 1835, in the eighty-second year of his age.

"Col. Tallmadge possessed a tall and portly figure, and a courtesy and dignity of manner which seemed to have belonged peculiarly to the era in which he lived. At the same time he was as accessible to the humblest as he was to the highest in the land. All loved and reverenced him. The old soldiers of the Revolution were wont to seek his assistance and advice, and they were ever received with cordiality and their wishes attended to. Officers, also, of every grade frequently visited him, and never failed to meet with a hospitable welcome.

"The beautiful homestead where Col. Tallmadge spent more than fifty years of his life adjoins that where his comrade in arms, Col. Sheldon, spent his childhood, youth, and early manhood.

"Tapping Reeve, LL.D., became a resident of Litchfield in 1772, and spent more than fifty years of his life in this town. A son of the Rev. Abner Reeve, of Southold, L. I., he was born in that place in October, 1744. He graduated at the college of New Jersey in 1763, and spent four years as a tutor in that institution. On the 24th of June, 1773, he married Sally Burr, a daughter of President Burr, of New Jersey College, and a granddaughter of the renowned President Edwards. So long as she lived she was an invalid, and for many years her husband spent a large portion of his time in ministering to her wants.

"Though his domestic afflictions withheld him from the active scenes of the Revolution," says Dr. Beecher, in his funeral discourse, "none entered more deeply into his country's cause than he. He shared with his generation all the vicissitudes, hopes, fears, self-denials, and losses of that arduous day. He possessed, though early in life, the confidence, and participated in the counsels, of the wise and great and good men of that era; and at the moment of greatest dismay, when Washington fled with his handful of troops through the Jerseys, and orders came for New England to turn out en masse and make a diversion to save him, the judge was among the most ardent to excite the universal movement, and actually went in the capacity of an officer to the vicinity of New York, where the news met them of the victories at Trenton and Princeton, and once more Washington and the country were delivered."

"At one time he had the honor of entertaining at his house in this village Gen. Lafayette and some of his brother officers, who were passing through this region on important public business. In 1784 he opened his celebrated law-school, of which he was the principal for nearly forty years. Though fitted to shine in public life, and though official honors were always within his reach, he seems rather to have shunned than sought promotion. He was once elected a representative, and once only a member of the council. He was an enthusiast in his profession, and had, indeed, but little taste for anything else of a secular nature. In 1798 he was appointed a judge of the Superior Court and of the Supreme Court of Errors. Here his peculiar talents found ample scope for their full development. Until the adoption of the constitution of 1818, all our judges were elected annually by the Legislature. Judge Reeve gave such universal satisfaction that he continued to be reappointed from year to year until 1814, when he was promoted to the office of chief justice. On reaching the age of seventy years he retired to private life, still, however, devoting much of his time to his favorite law-school. He died here, Dec. 13, 1823, in the eightieth year of his age. He was eminently distinguished for his piety and learning. In seasons of revival, and indeed at all times, no layman in the parish was so efficient as a colaborer with the pastor as Judge Reeve."

Mrs. Sallie Reeve died soon after the war, leaving an only son, Aaron Burr Reeve. The latter died in Troy, N. Y., in 1809, leaving an only son, Tapping Burr Reeve, who received his first degree at Yale College in 1829, and died the same year. With him the family of Judge Reeve became extinct. April 30, 1798, the Judge married a second wife,—Betsey Thompson,—who survived him a few years.

Maj. Moses Seymour was born in Hartford, July

23, 1742, and became a resident of Litchfield in early manhood. Early in the war of the Revolution, he was commissioned as captain of the troop of horse attached to the Seventeenth Regiment of Connecticut militia. In June, 1776, Elisha Sheldon, Esq., of Salisbury, was appointed major-commandant of the Fifth Regiment of Cavalry; and the subject of this sketch received the appointment of captain of one of the companies of this regiment. Though Maj. Sheldon was subsequently transferred to the command of the Second Regiment of Dragoons in the Continental army, Capt. Seymour retained his connection with the Fifth until the close of the war.

In April, 1777, on the occasion of the Danbury alarm, Capt. Seymour mustered his troops and proceeded forthwith to assist in repelling the invasion of Governor Tryon. He participated in the skirmishing which followed the retreat of the enemy towards the Sound. At the capture of Burgoyne, in October of the same year, he was once more at the head of his favorite corps, and did good service in that most important and decisive engagement. A day or two after the terms of capitulation were signed, the American officers invited Burgoyne and his associate officers to dine with them. At this interesting festival Capt. Seymour was present. His account of the conversation that took place on the occasion between the conquerors and the conquered, and particularly his minute recital of the toasts given on both sides, are still remembered with interest by his neighbors. The utmost courtesy and good feeling prevailed on the part of the principal officers, and the responses to the sentiments given were hearty and enthusiastic. At length, Gen. Burgoyne was called upon for a toast. Every voice was for the moment hushed into the deepest attention, as he arose and gave—"America and Great Britain against the world!" The response which followed may be imagined.

During the night which succeeded the final battle between Generals Gage and Burgoyne, Capt. Seymour watched with a British officer who had been wounded and carried off the field in the midst of the engagement. Soon after he had entered the room the officer, who had not before learned the fate of the day, inquired eagerly of Capt. Seymour as to the result. On hearing that the British had been defeated, he remarked, "Then the contest is no longer doubtful; America will be independent. I have fought earnestly for my king and country, but the contest is ended!" The kindness of Capt. Seymour to him, an enemy, deeply affected him. He thanked him again and again; and finally offered him his watch and other rewards, which were of course refused. The gallant American did all in his power to relieve the distresses and soothe the mind of his charge, but his wounds proved fatal.

During the greater part of the war Capt. Seymour was stationed at Litchfield as a commissary of supplies for the army. In this department of the public service his zeal and efficiency were conspicuous, and duly appreciated by Governor Trumbull, Gen. Wolcott, and others. Few men in this section of the State labored as untiringly or accomplished more. I have elsewhere stated that Litchfield was a depot for military stores and provisions. Capt. Seymour was employed not only in the purchase of these articles, but assisted in storing and guarding them while here, and in superintending their transportation wherever they might be ordered by the competent authorities. In September, 1781, we find him with his dragoons, by order of Gen. Wolcott, guarding a train of wagons, loaded with supplies for the French army, from Litchfield to Fishkill.*

With the peace of 1783, the subject of this sketch retired to private life with the rank of major. In 1789 he was elected by his fellow-citizens to the office of town clerk, a post to which he was annually re-elected during the remainder of his life, a period of thirty-seven years! This uninterrupted bestowment of an office upon one individual for so long a time is unprecedented in the history of the town. He was also a member of the House of Representatives at sixteen regular sessions, commencing with the October session, 1795. In the early part of the present century Maj. Seymour was occasionally a candidate of the political party with which he was connected for the council of State. In 1805 he received 7426 votes, and at the election of the succeeding year he received 7671 votes, for that office.

Maj. Seymour was a gentleman of the old school, retaining to the last the manners and costume of that now obsolete class.

On the 7th of November, 1771, he married Molly, daughter of Col. Ebenezer Marsh. Their children were Mrs. Carissa Marsh, wife of the Rev. Truman Marsh; Moses Seymour, Jr., for many years sheriff of Litchfield County; Ozias Seymour, also for many years sheriff of the county; Horatio Seymour, of Vermont, who for twelve years was United States Senator; Henry Seymour, one of the first canal commissioners of New York, and father of ex-Governor Seymour; and Epaphro Seymour, Brattleboro', Vermont.

Maj. Seymour died at his residence in this village, Sept. 17, 1826, in the eighty-fourth year of his age.

"There is yet another name which should be mentioned with respect in this connection, that of Elisha Mason, the last of the Revolutionary soldiers in Litchfield. With a patriotism as unquestioned and a zeal

* The French commissary, Jujardy N. Granville (who appears to have possessed a very imperfect knowledge of our language), left the following curious acknowledgment of the service, which is on file in the comptroller's office:

"We, Commissary of War, employed in the Army of Rochambeau, Certified that the Detachment composed of 24 Dragons or Light Horses, commanded by Mr. Moses Seymour, capitaine, came on with our teams and stores from Litchfield. We certified beside that the said Capitain Moses has taken a great care for the security of our convoy and baggage while he stay with us till this place.

"Jujardy N. Granville.

"Fishkill, Sep. 22, 1781."

Moses Seymour

as ardent as can be claimed for the most renowned of our heroes, he performed the humbler duties of his sphere as faithfully as they, though all uncheered by the hope of fame or pecuniary reward. He died in this village, June 1, 1858, in the one hundredth year of his age. I frequently had occasion to consult him on matters of local interest, and found his mind clear and his memory retentive almost to the last. He seemed like one who had come down to us from a distant generation. In the last interview I had with him (Jan. 18, 1858), he assured me that he well remembered the first meeting-house ever built in this town, and which was demolished when he was about three and a half years old. He also recollected the old fort, which occupied the site of the present court-house, as well at that which stood on Chestnut Hill, both of which were erected as a defense against the Indians. In the great struggle for independence he had periled his life in the cause of his country. And what was his reward? On one occasion, at the expiration of a term of service, he was discharged on the Hudson, and paid off in Continental currency. Starting homeward, on foot, he reached Danbury, where he spent the night. In the morning, on attempting to settle his bill, his Continental money was refused. He offered larger and still larger sums, and finally tendered bills to the amount of forty dollars for his lodging and meals; but the landlord refused to take the currency on any terms. Mr. Mason was finally compelled to pawn his rifle to cancel his indebtedness. As his wages were but eight dollars per month, he thus offered the avails of five months' services for his keeping for twelve hours! But, though so poorly requited by the country for which he had fought, the soldier lived to enjoy the blessings of a free government, and in bequeathing them as a rich legacy to his posterity, he felt himself abundantly repaid for all his toils and privations."—KILBOURNE.

CHAPTER XII.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

Congregational Church, Litchfield—Congregational Church, Milton—Congregational Church, Northfield—St. Michael's Church, Litchfield—Methodist Church, Litchfield—St. Paul's Church, Bantam Falls—Trinity Church, Milton—Baptist Church, Bantam Falls—Roman Catholic Church, Litchfield.

THE pioneers of this town brought with them from Lebanon the Rev. Timothy Collins, and at the first town-meeting of which any record is extant, Nov. 6, 1821, he was "called to a settlement in the place in the work of the ministry." He was ordained as pastor July 19, 1723.

"There is no evidence, either recorded or traditionary, which would lead us to suspect that aught but the most perfect harmony existed between pastor and people during the early part of his ministry. The first inference to the contrary may be drawn from the doings of a town-meeting held Dec. 25, 1728, when a memorial from Mr. Collins was read, and the consideration thereof 'postponed till the next meeting,' which, however, was not called until nearly three months afterward. It appears from the records of the meeting in March that the memorial had reference to 'the discount of money since the agreement was made' between the parties. It was finally resolved to pay him ten pounds per year, in addition to the eighty pounds originally agreed upon as his salary, 'until the town shall see cause to order otherwise.'

"On the 14th of April, 1731, the first vote was passed for 'seating the meeting-house.' In the doings of the same meeting occurs the following entry:

"'Voted, after dark, that Mr. Collins have the choice of the pews for himself and family.'

"The peculiar significance of the wording of this vote will be understood when taken in connection with a previous vote, which provided that 'no act of the town should stand in force that was passed after daylight failed to record it.'

"The controversy, which began in a dispute concerning the salary of Mr. Collins, was continued through a long series of years, and increased in importance and acrimony. Though a decided majority of the church and society took sides against their pastor, there was still a respectable minority who sustained him. In 1744 the town voted 'not to make any rate for Mr. Collins under present difficulties.' At the same time a committee was appointed to treat with the pastor respecting his salary 'and absence from the work of the ministry.' In December, 1745, a committee was appointed 'to eject Mr. Collins from the parsonage right.' In December, 1750, Mr. Collins was desired to 'resign his ministerial office.' During the succeeding month a committee was appointed to carry a charge against Mr. Collins to the Consociation, 'for unfaithfulness in the ministerial office.' To this last vote Sergt. Joseph Mason, Lieut. Moses Stoddard, and Messrs. George Marsh, Archibald McNeile, John Marsh, William Peck, Sylvanus Stone, Asa Hopkins, and Alexander McNeile 'did protest.' Two years later a similar vote to the last was offered in town-meeting, and negatived by a decided majority,—yeas, 13; nays, 41.

"After a ministry in this town of about thirty years, Mr. Collins vacated the pulpit in 1752. Though his pecuniary contest with the town continued for a few years later, he seems to have been not unpopular either as a citizen or civilian. Like many of the clergy of that day, he had received a medical education, and he continued here as a practicing physician during the remainder of his life. He was elected by the voters of this town to the offices of lister and selectman, and was appointed by the Legislature a justice of the peace for Litchfield County. In 1755 he was appointed a surgeon of one of the Connecticut regiments in the expedition against Crown Point. He is represented to have been a gentleman of good talents and stately demeanor, but with manners by no means conciliatory or popular. It is worthy of mention, as indicating that he may have been 'sinned against' in his controversy with the town, that he was successful in the only lawsuit growing out of it. He died in Litchfield in 1776.

"In February, 1753, the town voted a call to the Rev. Judah Champion, of East Haddam, who had graduated at Yale College in 1751. Two thousand pounds, old tenor currency, was voted as his settlement, and eight hundred pounds, old tenor, was voted as his yearly salary. Mr. Benjamin Webster was appointed to visit Mr. Champion and deliver to him these votes of the town. Mr. Champion accepted the call, and was ordained as pastor of the First Church, July 4, 1753.

"On the 30th of December, 1760, the town voted to build a new meeting-house on the green, and Mr. Joseph Vaill, Mr. Alexander McNeile, Deacon Peter Buel, Jacob Woodruff, Esq., and Capt. Solomon Buel were appointed a building committee. At the same time Reynold Marvin, Esq., was designated as the town's agent to apply to the County Court for a committee to fix the place for said meeting-house, and Col. Ebenezer Marsh, Timothy Collins, Esq., and Capt. Elisha Sheldon were appointed to wait on the committee of the court. The edifice was erected near the site of the old one, and was sixty-three feet long by forty-two feet wide, with a steeple and bell. It was completed during the autumn of 1762. The old meeting-house was sold at auction in November of that year, Mr. Asa Hopkins vendue-master.

"Mr. Champion proved to be an able and popular minister, and continued here in the pastoral office until 1798. He died in this town, Oct. 5, 1810, in his eighty-second year.

"From the organization of the town to the year 1768 all business relating to schools and ecclesiastical affairs was transacted in town-meeting. The society of South Farms (or the Second Society of Litchfield) having been incorporated, the First Society met for the first time, May 9, 1768. Elisha Sheldon, Esq., was chosen moderator; Isaac Baldwin, Esq., clerk; Mr. Joshua Garrett, treasurer; and Mr. Edward Phelps, Jr., Capt. Oliver Wolcott, and Capt. William Marsh, society's committee. There was little done at these society's meetings, from year to year, except to appoint officers, committees, and choristers. Now and then we find an entry in the records of a different character. Thus, December, 1772, measures were taken for 'coloring the meeting-house, and putting up electrical rods.' At the same meeting the society's committee were directed 'not to let the town's stock of powder and ball to be stored in said house.' Two years later it was voted that 'the new method of singing at present taught by Mr. Lyman' should be introduced into the public worship of the congregation; and the singers taught by Mr. Lyman were granted 'the use and privilege of the front seats in the gallery.' The subject of the minister's salary still gave the society much trouble. Mr. Champion complained of the depreciated and fluctuating currency, as Mr. Collins had done before him. To obviate this difficulty the society, in 1779, voted to give him as his salary for the then current year the sum of seventy-five pounds sixteen shillings, money, 'to be paid in the following articles at the usual prices affixed, viz., wheat, at four shillings per bushel; rye, at three shillings do.; Indian corn, at three shillings do.; flax, at sixpence per pound; pork, at twenty-five shillings per hundredweight; beef, at twenty shillings do.; tried tallow, at sixpence per pound; lard, at fivepence do.; oats, at one shilling per bushel.'

"Mr. Champion's successor was the Rev. Dan Huntington, who at the time he received the call to settle here was a tutor in Yale College. He was ordained in October, 1798. As he was a gentleman of learning and eloquence, the church and society were delighted with their new pastor, and he appears to have been no less pleased at being settled in such a place and over such a people. He thus wrote concerning them,—

"'A delightful village, on a fruitful hill, richly endowed with its schools, both professional and scientific and their accomplished teachers. With its venerable Governors and judges, with its learned lawyers and senators and representatives, both in the National and State departments, and with a population enlightened and respectable, Litchfield was now in its glory.'

"During Mr. Huntington's ministry in this place a remarkable religious awakening overspread this and the adjacent parishes, resulting in the hopeful conversion of about three hundred persons among the different denominations of Litchfield.

"'This town,' says Mr. Huntington, 'was originally among the number of those decidedly opposed to the movements of former revivalists, and went so far, in a regular church-meeting called expressly for the purpose under the ministry of the venerable Mr. Collins, as to let them know, by a unanimous vote, that they did not wish to see them. The effect was they did not come. The report circulated that Litchfield had 'voted Christ out of their borders.' It was noticed by some of the older people that the death of the last person then a member of the church was a short time before the commencement of our revival.'

"Previous to the settlement of Mr. Huntington, the society voted him a 'settlement' of one thousand dollars and an annual salary of four hundred dollars, also agreeing to continue to Mr. Champion, during life, a salary of one hundred pounds. In December, 1805, a subscription was made of funds to be placed at interest, for the purpose of adding two hundred dollars to the salary of the pastor. It would seem, however, that, notwithstanding these efforts to increase his income, Mr. Huntington had resolved upon leaving. The church and society, in February, 1807, voted not to concur in his request that a separation should take place between them. A council, however, was called, and the connection amicably dissolved. In March, 1810, the society voted a unanimous call to the Rev. Lyman Beecher, which was accepted, and he was installed on the 30th of the succeeding May, President Dwight, of Yale College, preaching the installation sermon. After a successful ministry in this town of about sixteen years, he accepted a call from the Hanover Street Church, Boston, and was dismissed Feb. 21, 1826. His successor in the ministry here was the Rev. Daniel Linn Carroll, who was ordained Oct. 3, 1827, and was dismissed, at his own request, March 4, 1829.

"In 1827 the society voted to erect a new church edifice, and Messrs. Frederick Wolcott, Stephen Deming, Salmon Buel, William Buel, and Leonard Goodwin were appointed a building committee. This church was located upon the site of the present church, and was dedicated July 15, 1829.

"The Rev. Laurens P. Hickok, of Kent, was the next pastor, having been installed July 15, 1829. During his ministry here of about seven years two hundred and fourteen persons united with the church. Ninety-five of these were added at two communion seasons in the autumn of 1831, being a part of the fruits of the great revival of that year. In September, 1836, Dr. Hickok, having been elected professor of theology in the Western Reserve College, Ohio, requested a dismission from his pastoral charge, which was reluctantly granted, and he was dismissed Nov. 15, 1836.

"June 12, 1838, the Rev. Jonathan Brace, of Hartford, was ordained as pastor of the church, and was dismissed, at his own request, Feb. 28, 1844. During his pastorate of about six years not far from one hundred and fifty persons united with the church.

"The Rev. Benjamin L. Swan was installed as the eighth pastor Oct. 22, 1846, and closed his labors here on the 10th of May, 1856, having supplied the pulpit with much ability and acceptance for nearly ten years.

"Rev. Leonard Woolsey Bacon was ordained Nov. 16, 1856, on which occasion the ordination sermon was preached by his father, the Rev. Leonard Bacon, D.D., of New Haven; resigned in 1860. Rev. George Richards, acting pastor, January, 1861, to December, 1865; Rev. William B. Clarke, pastor, Dec. 27, 1866, to November, 1869; Rev. Henry B. Elliott, acting pastor, April 1, 1870, to April 1, 1874; Rev. Allan McLean, acting pastor, Nov. 21, 1875, still here.

"Deacons of the First Church from 1723 to 1859, John Buel, Nathaniel Baldwin, Benjamin Hosford, Benjamin Kellogg, Benjamin Webster, Thomas Harrison, Peter Buel, Moses Stoddard, Andrew Adams, William Collins, Ozias Lewis, Thomas Trowbridge, Andrew Benedict, Frederick Buel, Truman Kilbourn, Charles Adams, Cyrus Catlin, Henry W. Buel, Henry B. Bissell, Frederick D. McNeil, George M. Woodruff."

The present officers of the church are Charles Adams, Clerk; Frederick D. McNeil, Treasurer; Henry R. Coit, Auditor; Henry B. Bissell, Henry W. Buel, Frederick D. McNeil, George M. Woodruff, Deacons. Present number of members, two hundred and seventy-four.

Sunday-School.—George M. Woodruff, Superintendent and Treasurer; Charles B. Bishop, George H. Trowbridge, Librarians.

Jan. 4, 1867, Frederick D. McNiel and George M. Woodruff were chosen deacons in place of Charles Adams, resigned, and Frederick Buel, deceased.

The present church edifice was completed and occupied in 1873.

MILTON CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.*

The first record now in existence connected with the history of this church is dated in the year 1779, but the date of month and day are so dim as to be undecipherable, and is a record of an adjourned meeting of the Third Society of Litchfield. David Welsh, Esq., was chosen moderator and Jesse Judd clerk. It was "Voted, That we will hire Mr. Stephen Heaton to preach with us seventeen days, for which we agree to give him thirty-five bushels of wheat, or equivalent in money, to be paid by the 20th of November, 1780."

Another society meeting was held on the 8th of April following, when it was voted to hire Mr. Heaton yet longer, as the language is, "to complete our winter privileges." There are several records of this sort:

"Voted, That we will improve our church privileges this winter."

This seems to mean that public worship was maintained within the bounds of the society during the winter, while the inhabitants went to Litchfield during the summer.

The society took the name of Milton on the second Monday of June, 1795, under an act of the General Assembly of 1795, May session, incorporating it as an ecclesiastical society. The society is composed of the northwest part of Litchfield and adjoining territory in the towns of Goshen, Cornwall, and Warren. There are persons from all four of these towns in the communion of the church.

The church was organized Aug. 19, 1798, with eleven male and thirteen female members. For the first few years it was served by supplies. April 26, 1802, Rev. Benjamin Judd was invited to settle, and was installed as pastor on the 19th of May. Within a year, or a year and a half, the church was greatly weakened by the withdrawal of several influential members, so that Mr. Judd was led to propose the dissolution of the pastoral relations. This took place in June, 1804.

Rev. Abraham Fowler was installed Sept. 16, 1807, and was dismissed June, 1813, in consequence of the financial weakness of the society. From this time forward there was no settled ministry or steady worship until 1841, more than twenty-seven years. During this period, however, there were two very powerful revivals of religion, adding many members and preserving the church from destruction. The first of these occurred very soon after the dismission of Mr. Fowler, and in connection with the labors of the celebrated Dr. Nettleton. An interesting account of this revival is given in the "Life of Nettleton." As a fruit of this work twenty-seven persons united with the church. One of these, Daniel Page, still survives, after an interval of nearly sixty-seven years.

* Contributed by Rev. George J. Harrison.

There was another powerful revival in the winter of 1825–26, in connection with the labors of Rev. Lewis Smith, an evangelist. As a fruit of this work twenty-seven persons united with the church on the 16th of April, 1826, and fourteen on the 28th of May. Of these, one only is still living and in the communion of this church.

In the year 1841 some of the members of the church and society were led to feel that they could not live longer without regular public worship. Proper steps were taken, and Rev. Ralph Smith was employed as minister. He began his labors in October, 1841, and remained till April, 1844.

Rev. John F. Norton was ordained pastor in October, 1844, and at his own request, under a feeling of discouragement, was dismissed in April, 1849.

Rev. Heman L. Vaill began to supply the pulpit June 3, 1849, and closed his labors Dec. 1, 1851. The society was then in debt, and felt unable to continue worship. A meeting was called to arrange for the payment of the debt, and then to cease further effort. At that time Mr. A. P. Smith, a citizen of Milton, who hitherto had taken no active interest in the affairs of the church, encouraged them to go forward. The debt was paid, the seats rented at a higher rate, and Mr. Francis Williams employed as preacher. Mr. Williams commenced on the second Sabbath of December, 1851, and closed his labors on the last Sabbath of April, 1853. He was followed by Rev. James Noyes, who remained about eleven months.

Rev. George J. Harrison began his ministry here Sept. 14, 1854, and is still in charge (March, 1881), having now served the church nearly twenty-seven years.

Jan. 1, 1881, there were fifty-five members of the church,—nineteen males and thirty-six females.

This church, during its entire existence, has encountered great trial and difficulty. It has been weak in numbers and resources, and has been maintained under much discouragement, and at the cost of much personal sacrifice and self-denial. Its members trust that God, who has thus far watched over and kept them, will continue to keep and bless them.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH OF NORTHFIELD.*

Northfield was first known as Southeast Farms, and was composed of territory lying part in the town of Northbury and part in the town of Litchfield, from which the settlement obtained the name of Northfield. It is not known at what date an ecclesiastical society was formed, but the first society meeting of which there is a record was held Oct. 15, 1789, when it was voted to hire a minister for six months.

In 1792 a committee was appointed to build a meeting-house, and on April 21, 1794, it was voted to petition the general assembly to be set off as a distinct society. On the 10th of the following November it was voted to give Rev. Joseph E. Camp a call to become pastor of the church. November 24th it was voted to give Mr. Camp a settlement of one hundred pounds, and more if it could be raised, with a salary of seventy pounds a year for four years, seventy-five pounds the fifth, eighty pounds the sixth, and eighty-five pounds thereafter.

The struggle to obtain the first meeting-house was a long one, for not until eleven years after the committee was appointed to build a meeting-house was it completed. The expense of the building was three thousand one hundred and sixteen dollars. The land upon which the house was built was the gift of a Mr. McCall.

The Congregational Church was formed Jan. 1, 1795, consisting of fourteen members, as follows: Samuel Peck, Steven Sanford, Titus Turner, John Warner, Abigail Sanford, Anna Warner, Tabitha Merriman, from the Northbury Church; Abel Atwater and Bethiah Peck, from the church in Litchfield; Ebenezer Todd and Ebenezer Todd, Jr., from the church in North Haven; Israel and Hannah Williams, from the church in Westbury; and Zerviah Curtiss, from the church in Cheshire. The sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Waterman, of Northbury, admonishing the new church to let its light shine.

Rev. Joseph E. Camp became the first pastor of this church, and served it for a term of forty-two years, being dismissed in 1837, living only a year after the relation between himself and the church was severed. During his ministry one hundred and seventy-five members were added to the church.

This church was connected with the Litchfield South Consociation until June 20, 1859, when it severed its connection with that body. Since the dismission of Mr. Camp the church has had but two settled pastorates, both of them being quite brief. The present membership of the church is one hundred and one.

This church has received occasional bequests during the more recent years of its existence, the largest being a munificent gift, by Mr. Asa Hopkins, of about ten thousand dollars, the interest of which is used annually for the "support of the gospel" in Northfield.

ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH.†

Among the first settlers of the town of Litchfield none were Episcopalians. Mr. John Davies, who came from England in the year 1735, was in all probability the first Episcopalian who settled here, and for some years the only one. But in the year 1745, on the 5th

* Contributed by Rev. H. A. Otman.

† Contributed by Rev. Storrs O. Seymour.

day of November, a number of persons, thirteen in all, who were anxious to have the services of the Church of England, met at the house of Mr. Jacob Griswold, who lived about a mile west of the village. The result of this meeting was that the services of Mr. Cole were secured to act as lay reader. These services were kept up for two years, when Mr. Davies, in 1747, executed a deed conveying, by a lease for nine hundred and ninety-eight years, fifty-two acres of land to Mr. Cole, for the use of the "Society for Propagating the Gospel,"—a missionary society of the Church of England which is still in existence. For this Mr. Cole and his heirs were to pay annually on the trust of St. Michael one peppercorn, if lawfully demanded. In addition to this land, fifty acres more were procured and deeded to the same society. Both lots were to be for the benefit of the Episcopal minister in Litchfield. This land was situated in the southwest part of the town, a little northeast of "Little Mount Tom," and is now owned by Harvey Waugh and Lucius L. Griswold, and is still called the "Glebe."

The first service held by a clergyman episcopally ordained was by the Rev. Dr. Johnson, of Stratford, but there is no record of the date.

There have been three church edifices in the history of St. Michael's parish. The first one was built on the hill west of Kilborn's Brook, just south of the barn which stands on the land now owned by Mr. Joseph Merriman. This building was raised on the 23d of April, 1749. It has generally been supposed that Mr. Davies gave the land for this building; but this is a mistake. An examination of the town records shows that Mr. Davies never owned this land. The Rev. Mr. Mansfield, of Woodbury, officiated when the church was opened for divine service.

The records of the parish do not show when the second church building was erected. The land on which it stood, on the east side of South Street, was given to the parish by Samuel Marsh, Esq., of Norfolk, Va., the brother of the Rev. Truman Marsh, who was rector at that time. The building must have been so far advanced that services could be held in it by 1812, for a vote was passed in that year to dispense with the use of the old church in part, and to use the new one at such times as the clergyman and society's committee deemed expedient.

At a special meeting held Dec. 12, 1814, a committee was appointed to dispose of the old church as they thought best.

This second building was consecrated by the Right Rev. Bishop Brownell, D.D., June 8, 1824. It remained in use till 1851, when it was torn down to make room for the present edifice. Of this the corner-stone was laid July 15, 1851. It was finished December 10th, and consecrated by Bishop Brownell on December 16th of the same year. No change was made in it until the winter of 1881, when the galleries were removed and some other slight changes made.

Since the time when the services of the Church of England were first used here—viz., in 1745—down to the present time the parish of St. Michael's Church has been served by a long line of able, learned, and godly men. The first missionary who served here was the Rev. Solomon Palmer, at one time the Congregational minister in Cornwall. He went to England, and, after being ordained to the deaconate and the priesthood, was sent by the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel as missionary for Litchfield, Cornwall, and Great Barrington, Mass. He remained in this position for nine years, and was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Davies, a grandson of Mr. John Davies, to whom the church in Litchfield owes so much. In one of his reports to the society in England, Mr. Davies says that there were sixty-one families in his charge here. Mr. Davies died at New Milford in the spring of 1766. The Rev. Mr. Palmer then returned here, and acted as missionary until his death, in 1771.

In 1772 the Rev. Mr. Moseley came here as missionary. He was not much liked, and, some difficulty arising between him and the people, he was withdrawn. He was the last clergyman whose stipend was paid by the English society, for, although the Rev. James Nichols came here in 1775, under an appointment from the society, the outbreak of the Revolutionary war led, of course, to a suspension of relation between the church in this country and in England. During this war Mr. Nichols either did not remain in Litchfield or, if he did, did not officiate, for Mrs. Anna Dickinson, in her account of the parish, says that during this time Mr. Daniel London was in the habit of reading service and a sermon, and that he was not deterred from it even by the stones which the soldiers threw through the windows while he was reading. After peace was declared, Mr. Nichols officiated here until 1784, when he resigned and removed to Vermont.

When the independence of the colonies had been acknowledged by Great Britain, and State government had been set up, the churchmen of Litchfield organized as a society under the laws of the State. This was done on Oct. 26, 1784, and the parish assumed the legal title "The First Episcopal Society of Litchfield." The society comprised then, as now, three parochial organizations,—St. Michael's Church, Litchfield; St. Paul's, Berntown; and Trinity, Milton. Mr. Ashbel Baldwin was their first rector. He officiated here as lay reader, being then a candidate for holy orders, for about a year. On Aug. 3, 1785, he was ordained deacon by the Right Rev. Samuel Seabury, D.D., the first American bishop. This ordination, which was held at Middletown, was the first in this country.

The following is a list of the clergymen who have been connected with St. Michael's Church: Revs. Solomon Palmer, 1754–63; Thomas Davies, 1763–66; Solomon Palmer, 1766, to Nov. 2, 1771; Richard Moseley, 1772–73; James Nichols, April 20, 1775, to May, 1784; Ashbel Baldwin, Sept. 9, 1785, to Oct. 28, 1793; David Butler, D.D., Nov. 28, 1794, to February, 1799; Truman Marsh, Nov. 5, 1799, to Nov. 1, 1829; Isaac Jones (associate rector), Sept. 7, 1812, to April 1, 1826; John S. Stone, D.D. (associate rector), Dec. 26, 1826, to January, 1829; William Lucas (associate rector), 1829–32; Samuel Fuller, D.D., October, 1832, to July, 1837; William Payne, D.D., April, 1838, to May, 1845; Samuel Fuller, D.D., July 27, 1845, to Oct. 1, 1849; Benjamin W. Stone, D.D., Oct. 8, 1849, to May, 1851; John J. Brundage, D.D., Aug. 1, 1851, to Feb. 1, 1854; James M. Willey, April 8, 1855, to April, 1858; Henry N. Hudson, June 27, 1858, to Nov. 1, 1860; William S. Southgate, Nov. 1, 1860, to Jan. 1, 1864; Rt. Rev. Wm. Stevens Perry, D.D., Nov. 27, 1864, to May 6, 1869; C. S. Henry, D.D., 1870, to Nov. 30, 1873; G. M. Wilkins, Feb. 20, 1874, to Jan. 9, 1879; S. O. Seymour, April 27, 1879, present rector.

In addition to the gifts of land spoken of above, the parish has received many interesting and valuable gifts during its existence. Early in its history it received from the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel a number of volumes of ecclesiastical history and doctrinal theology. Most of them have been scattered. A few, however, are still in the parish library. In 1803 the Hon. Ephraim Kirby presented to the parish a folio copy of the Book of Common Prayer and a Bible. These were in use for many years, and are still preserved. After the second church was erected, and about 1822, Mr. Solomon Marsh purchased a fine-toned organ and placed it in the church. In May, 1852, he gave it to the parish, where it was used till the present one was bought, about fifteen years ago. In 1857, Mrs. Marsh, widow of the Rev. Truman Marsh, gave the present rectory and the lot on which it stands. This was for the use of St. Michael's parish, and not for the benefit of the whole society.

In 1856, Mr. Hosea Webster, of Brooklyn, who has always manifested a deep interest in the parish, gave a thousand dollars, the interest of which is to be used for the benefit of the Sunday-school. In 1863 the parish lost a warm friend in the death of the Hon. S. P. Beers. For half a century he had been connected with the parish, and no one has ever devoted more time and thought to its interests than he did. The bulk of his property was left by will to the "First Episcopal Society." The income from this source is divided equally among the three parishes.

Besides these, the parish has received from many individuals gifts of less value, but highly esteemed for the sake of the donors. During the last year a collection has been made of portraits of former rectors. By great pains likenesses have been found of all who have ever been connected with the parish excepting the Rev. Messrs. Palmer, Moseley, and Nichols. These have been hung in the vestry-room of the church, where, as a sort of "cloud of witnesses," they may seem to their successors as a reminder that "the night cometh when no man can work."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

"In June, 1790, the Rev. Freeborn Garretson, one of the ablest and most earnest apostles of Methodism in America, visited Litchfield on his way from the Hudson River to Boston. He was at that time superintendent of the Northern District, and in his itinerant journeyings was almost invariably attended by his colored servant Harry, who was himself a licensed preacher of no mean distinction. They traveled together on horseback, apparently vying with each other in their zeal for the promotion of the cause of their common Master. On Wednesday, June 23d (as we learn from Dr. Stevens' 'Memorials of Methodism'), Mr. Garretson 'rode seven miles to Litchfield, and was surprised to find the doors of the Episcopal church open and a large congregation waiting for him. He discoursed from the words "Enoch walked with God," and believed good was done. He left Harry to preach another sermon, and went on to the centre of the town; the bell rang, and he preached to a few in the Presbyterian meeting-house, and lodged with a kind churchman.' On the same day Mr. Garretson wrote in his diary:

"'I preached in the skirts of the town, where I was opposed by ——, who made a great disturbance. I told him the enemy had sent him to pick up the good seed, turned my back on him, and went my way, accompanied by Brothers W. and H. I found another waiting company in another part of the town, to whom I declared, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish." In this town we have given the devil and the wicked much trouble; we have a few good friends.'

"On his return from Boston, Mr. Garretson again preached in Litchfield, Friday, July 13, 1790. So far as I have learned, these were the first Methodist sermons ever preached in this town.

"The Litchfield circuit was organized during the spring of 1790, and embraced, according to Mr. Stevens, 'the northwestern section of Connecticut.' In May, 1791, the Rev. Messrs. Matthias Swain and James Covel were appointed by the Conference to labor in this circuit. Their immediate successors, previous to the commencement of the present century, were Rev. Messrs. Lemuel Smith, Samuel Ostrander, Philip Wagner, James Coleman, Enoch Mudge, F. Aldridge, Jesse Stoneman, Joseph Mitchell, Daniel Dennis, Wesley Budd, Ezekiel Canfield, William Thatcher, Ebenezer Stevens, Freeman Bishop, and Augustus Jocelyn.

"On the 21st of July, 1791, the famous Bishop Asbury preached in the Episcopal church in this town. In reference to his visit here he wrote,—

"'I think Morse's account of his countrymen is near the truth; never have I seen any people who could talk so long, so correctly, and so seriously about trifles.'

"There are no records whatever indicating the progress of this denomination in Litchfield for many years subsequent to the last of the dates here given.

The names of the following persons in the grand list for 1805 are put down as 'members of the Methodist Society,'—viz., Noah Agard, Isaac Baldwin, Ebenezer Clark, Thomas F. Gross, Elisha Horton, Samuel Green, Jonathan Hitchcock, Roswell McNeil, Jonathan Rogers, Daniel Noyes, John Stone, and Arthur Swan."

This church was organized Aug. 23, 1836, and a church edifice erected on Meadow Street. The first board of trustees were William R. Buell, Benjamin Moore, William Scoville, Abiel Barber, and George Bolles.

The pastors have been as follows: Charles C. Keyes, first pastor; among his successors were Wm. Dixon, Wm. B. Hoyt, N. C. Lewis, H. N. Weed, D. Lounsbury, David L. Marks, Wm. Howard, Joseph Vinton, Wm. Lawrence, Joseph Munson, —— Chapman, Sylvester Smith, J. Taylor, Wm. H. McAllister, Wm. L. Douglass, F. Cromlish, and Thomas J. Watt, present pastor.

The present trustees are Leonard Stone, George W. Thompson, Jacob Morse, David E. Buell, P. H. Cummings, and A. B. Shumway. The church edifice was erected in 1837, and a chapel has since been added. Extensive repairs were made in 1866, and others since; the chapel was repaired and furnished in 1879.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, BANTAM FALLS.*

This church is an offshoot from St. Michael's, Litchfield Centre, and, though a separate ecclesiastical organization, is included in the First Episcopal Society of Litchfield. A number of members in the western part of the town determined on withdrawing from the society, and accordingly petitioned to be released from paying taxes, with permission to organize a separate parish. The petition was granted, and on Nov. 14, 1797, an organization was duly effected under the name of the Second Episcopal Society of Litchfield, when officers were appointed consisting of society's committee, clerk, and treasurer. A church edifice was soon afterwards erected, fifty by thirty-six feet, surmounted with tower and steeple, the interior being furnished with deep galleries, a high pulpit, a capacious sounding-board, and other ancient appendages. This building was situated on the height directly opposite the burial-ground, and was known as the West Church. Mr. Nathaniel Bosworth contributed one hundred pounds for purchasing a bell, which amount was increased by other contributions. The bell thus purchased bears the inscription, "Fenton & Cochran, New Haven, 1802."†

In June, 1799, the parish applied to reunite with St. Michael's, Litchfield, which application was granted, and articles of union were agreed to on the 10th of the following September. It was agreed that two-fifths of the clergyman's services should be given to St. Michael's, two-fifths to the West Church, and one-fifth to Milton.

The first edifice had become much out of repair, and at a meeting of the parish on July 21, 1843, it was voted to take it down and erect a new one, forty-six by thirty-two feet, in its stead. Work immediately began, and the new church was opened for service on Sunday, Dec. 24, 1843. Soon after, at a parish meeting, it was voted to call the church St. Paul's, by which name it was consecrated, Nov. 1, 1844, by the Right Rev. T. C. Brownell, D.D., bishop of the diocese. The first edifice seems never to have been consecrated.

In 1826 occurred the first practical separation of the three parishes, when a society's committee was appointed for this parish. In 1832 wardens and vestrymen were first appointed by the First Episcopal Society, which manner of appointment has been continued annually on Easter Monday for the three parishes. July 20, 1879, Mrs. Mary Ann Wilmot, widow of the late Lucius Wilmot, died, leaving by will her new, commodious, and convenient house as a rectory for St. Paul's Church. This parish shares with St. Michael's, Litchfield, and Trinity, Milton, the proceeds of a fund given by Mr. John Davies about the middle of the last century, as also a later fund donated by Hon. Seth P. Beers. A small income likewise accrues to the parish from a fund left many years since by Mr. Nathan Landon.

The present church edifice has been enlarged by the addition of a chancel, while receiving several improvements in its interior arrangements.

The churches of Bantam and Milton still continue component parts of the First Episcopal Society of Litchfield, yet, as independent parishes, they conduct their affairs in their own way.

The following is a list of rectors or officiating ministers: Revs. Truman Marsh, 1799–1810; Isaac Jones, 1811–26; John S. Stone, 1826–31; David G. Tomlinson, 1831–35; Amos Beach, 1836–37; Willard Bryant, 1837–40; Emery E. Porter, 1842–43; G. C. V. Eastman, 1843–45; J. D. Berry, D.D., 1846–48; F. D. Harriman, 1848–50; G. W. Nichols, 1850–51; Asa Griswold, Jan. 5, to Nov. 8, 1852; Daniel E. Brown, Jan. 5, 1853–57; John R. Williams, Jan. 5, 1858–60; J. A. Wainright, Jan. 5, 1860–61; J. D. Berry, D.D., Jan. 5, 1862–63; J. D. Berry, D.D., April 24, 1864–66; William L. Peck, April 24, 1866–71; F. A. Henry; Hiram Stone, Nov. 1, 1873, to Sept. 15, 1874; G. M. Wilkins, Sept. 15, 1874, to July 1, 1875; Hiram Stone, July 1, 1875, present rector.

TRINITY CHURCH, MILTON.‡

During the early settlement of Litchfield there were but few churchmen in this part of the town, but eventually a number of families joined the Episcopal Church. In 1798 an application was made to the First Episcopal Society, which voted that a chapel

* Contributed by Rev. Hiram Stone.

† An erroneous impression has somewhat extensively prevailed that this bell was of very ancient date and cast in a foreign country. The above inscription serves to correct the misapprehension.

‡ Contributed by Rev. Hiram Stone.

might be built in the village of Milton. A church edifice was accordingly raised June 25, 1802, but, owing to a lack of means, it was only put in condition for use by way of being covered in and furnished with benches, in which incomplete condition it remained until finally completed in 1826. Aug. 18, 1837, it was consecrated by the Right Rev. T. C. Brownell, D.D., bishop of the diocese. The original structure is still standing. The architecture is of the old style, with galleries and large windows rounded at the top. It has been enlarged by the addition of a chancel, and improved by way of new seats, a stained chancel-window, and other internal arrangements. In 1843, Messrs. Garritt P. Welch and Hugh P. Welch presented the bell which now hangs in the tower.

In 1799 the Rev. Truman Marsh commenced his rectorship with St. Michael's Church, Litchfield, when he promised to preach in Milton one-fifth of the time, in accordance with an arrangement made on the occasion of reunion of the West Church with the First Episcopal Society. In 1803 the society voted to divide its services equally between the parishes of Litchfield, Bantam Falls, and Milton. In 1826 a society's committee was for the first time appointed for this parish, and in 1832 the first appointment of wardens and vestrymen was made. At present, as also during a large part of their existence, the parishes of Bantam Falls and Milton are under the charge of one minister, who officiates in each on alternate Sundays, thus dividing the services between them, each parish contributing an equal amount to his support.

The following is a list of rectors or officiating ministers: Revs. Truman Marsh, 1799–1810; Isaac Jones, 1811–26; Ezra B. Kellogg, 1827–28; Harry Finch, 1829–31; David G. Tomlinson, 1831–35; Amos B. Beach, 1836–37; Hillard Bryant, 1837–40; Emery E. Porter, 1842–43; Samuel J. Carpenter, 1844–45; Isaac Jones, 1845–47; F. D. Harriman, 1848–50; George W. Nichols, 1850–51; Asa Griswold, Jan. 5, 1852, to Nov. 8, 1852; Daniel E. Brown, Jan. 5, 1853–57; John R. Williams, Jan. 5, 1858–60; J. A. Wainwright, Jan. 5, 1861–62; W. F. B. Jackson, April, 1863, to September, 1863; J. D. Berry, D.D., April, 1864–66; William L. Peck, 1866–71; F. A. Henry; Hiram Stone, Nov. 1, 1873, to Sept. 15, 1874; G. M. Wilkins, Sept. 15, 1874, to July 1, 1875; Hiram Stone, July 1, 1875, present rector.

BAPTIST CHURCH, BANTAM FALLS.*

Several years ago an eminent Sunday-school laborer in Connecticut, to facilitate his work, prepared an enlarged map of the State, on which he located every Sunday-school and church in the State, indicating the various denominations by different colored inks, such as red, blue, green, etc. He had exhibited this at a large public meeting, and explained the needs and peculiarities of the different localities, when he said, "Gentlemen, I bid you notice these green spots, they indicate the Baptists. And you will notice," said he, "that they are thickest along the shore of the Sound and along the principal water-courses, such as the Thames and the Connecticut. Like the grass, by whose color they are represented, you perceive they flourish best in wet places." This may account for the paucity of churches of this denomination in the county. Although it abounds in hills, it also rejoices in the most extensive sheet of water in the State,—Bantam Lake,—and close around this, in the old town of Litchfield, there have been, at different times, three Baptist churches, all of them small, but large enough to illustrate the truth of the Sunday-school speaker's remark,—that they flourish best in wet places. Something less than a century ago there was a church in Northfield, and about the time that went down another was started in Footville, South Farms, now Morris. This was never a flourishing church; but, if it did no other work than to prepare the way for two grandsons of Deacon Pickett to become most successful Baptist ministers, it fulfilled its mission.

From this issued the Bantam Falls Baptist Church, which was constituted Oct. 31, 1850, with the following members: George Harvey, Mrs. George Harvey, Ephraim K. Bunnell, Cornelia Bunnell, Samuel Bronson, Polly Bronson, Christopher C. Palmer, Rebecca Palmer, Eurana Canfield, and Eunice Stone. The first entry upon the records is this:

"Resolved, To adopt the New Testament for our articles, and to be governed by its directions, precepts, and examples."

The covenant is substantially the same as that of the Cornwall Hollow covenant, here given. In 1852 the present house of worship was erected, and the same year the church was recognized as a regular Baptist church by a convention of sister churches. Its pastors have been Revs. Jackson G. Gakun, 1857–62; C. N. Potter, April, 1863–67; J. Fairman, 1867–71; D. F. Chapman, July, 1871–75; E. D. Bowers, February, 1876, to May, 1878; H. G. Smith, June, 1878, to the present time (1881).

Its present membership is forty-two, being the largest number of active members it has ever enjoyed.

Its pastors have always combined with this pastorate the care of the church in East Cornwall, preaching in each place on alternate Sundays until the present year, which was opened by the pastor's preaching in this place in the morning, in East Cornwall in the afternoon, and in Cornwall Hollow in the evening of each Sabbath.

At its organization C. C. Palmer was elected deacon, and, with the exception of a brief absence in the West, when Enoch Fennell was chosen to the office, he has occupied that station faithfully to the present. The history of this has ever been identified with that of the College Street Baptist Church at East Cornwall.

The Roman Catholics also have a church in Litchfield, but have no resident pastor.

* Contributed by Rev. H. G. Smith.

CHAPTER XIII.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

BOROUGH OF LITCHFIELD.

The Village of Litchfield—Incorporation—First Officers—Presidents and Clerks from 1818 to 1882—Borough Organization—The Press—The Weekly Monitor and American Advertiser—The Witness—The Editors Convicted of Libel—Imprisoned—Political Excitement throughout Immediate and Distant States—Grand Oration to the Imprisoned Editor—Excitement in the Town—The Litchfield Gazette—The Litchfield Journal—The Litchfield Republican—The Miscellany—The American Eagle—The Litchfield County Post—The Litchfield Enquirer—The Litchfield Democrat—The Litchfield Sun—The Mercury—The Democratic Watchman—The Litchfield Republican—The Litchfield Sentinel—The Litchfield Law-School—The Post-Office—Banks—Savings Society—Insurance Company—"Spring Hill"—St. Paul's Lodge, No. 11, F. and A. M.—Minerals—Temperance in 1789—Slavery in Litchfield—Bantam Falls—Northfield—Milton—Biographical Notes—College Graduates—Physicians—Lawyers.

At the May session of the Legislature of this State, 1818, the inhabitants of this village presented their memorial praying for a borough charter. In their petition they state that "the houses are as contiguous as they are in many of our cities; that the public schools, which for many years have been established in this village, make a great addition to its ordinary population; that, on account of their local situation and compact settlement, they are, as they conceive, in an unusual degree exposed to injury from fire," etc. The application was successful, and the petitioners and their associates, residing within the limits prescribed, "were constituted and declared to be forever thereafter a body corporate in fact and in name, by the name of the 'Corporation of the Village* of Litchfield.'" The powers vested in the corporation were similar to those of the ordinary borough charters of this State,—viz., to levy taxes for the purchase of fire-engines, fire-hooks, ladders, and such other improvements as should be deemed necessary to protect the village against fires; to order and direct in all matters relating to side-walks, shade-trees, and the sinking of public wells and pumps; to restrain cattle, sheep, and geese from running at large in the public highways; and to pass such by-laws and regulations, with suitable penalties attached, as might, from time to time, be thought necessary for the attainment of the objects contemplated in the charter. The officers designated in the act of incorporation were a president, treasurer, and clerk (who were in all cases to be chosen by ballot), a collector of taxes, and a number of fire-wardens not to exceed ten, together with such other officers not enumerated as should be necessary to carry the by-laws and the provisions of the charter into effect. In case the collector should refuse or neglect to collect the tax according to the tenor of the warrant committed to him, the president must "issue his warrant directed to the sheriff of the county of Litchfield, or his deputy, to distrain the sums or rates neglected by such collector to be collected, to be paid out of the estate of said collector." The assessors were to be appointed by the County Court.

The first meeting of the inhabitants of the borough under the charter was held on the 17th of June, 1818, at which the following officers were elected, viz., Hon. Frederick Wolcott, president; Dr. William Buel, treasurer; and Joseph Adams, clerk. A committee of five was appointed to prepare a code of by-laws for the borough, viz., Seth P. Beers, Julius Deming, Asa Bacon, Phineas Miner, and Ozias Lewis. At an adjourned meeting holden on the 20th of June, it was voted to choose a bailiff by ballot, and Dr. Abel Catlin was elected to that office. Benjamin Tallmadge, Asa Bacon, and Charles L. Webb were appointed a committee of inspection, and Ashbel Marsh was chosen key-keeper.

At the regular annual meeting in September, 1818, Judge Wolcott was re-elected president; Dr. Buel, treasurer; and Mr. Adams, clerk. Messrs. Roger Cook, Ambrose Norton, Moses Seymour, Jr., Oliver Goodwin, and James Trowbridge were chosen fire-wardens. At an adjourned meeting Asa Bacon, Esq., was chosen bailiff; Charles L. Webb, Leonard Goodwin, Jonathan Carrington, and Ambrose Norton assistant bailiffs; and Leonard Goodwin, collector.

The first board of assessors consisted of Erastus Lyman, Esq., Gen. Morris Woodruff, and John N. Gunn, Esq. The amount of the grand list of the borough, October, 1818, as returned by the assessors, was one hundred and twenty-eight thousand nine hundred and thirteen dollars and sixty-five cents.

In 1820 the Hon. Uriel Holmes was elected president of the borough. In 1824 he was succeeded by Dr. William Buel, who held the office for twelve years.

THE PRESS.

On Tuesday, Dec. 21, 1784, was issued in this town the first number of The Weekly Monitor and American Advertiser, printed by Collier & Copp, "in the south end of the court-house." It contains only three Litchfield advertisements, viz., (1) that of William Russell, stocking-weaver from (Norwich, England), who announced that he was ready to make "worsted, cotton, and linen Jacket and Breeches Patterns, men's and women's Stockings, Gloves, and Mitts;" (2) that of Zalmon Bedient, barber, who offers cash for human hair, at his barber-shop, "a few rods north of the court-house in Litchfield;" (3) that of Cornelius Thayer, brazier, who gives notice that he carries on business at the shop of Col. Miles Beach, in North Street, at which shop the jeweler's and silversmith's business "is carried on as usual by said Beach."

The Monitor was continued for a period of twenty-two years, for sixteen years of which it had no rival in the town. It was printed on a sheet about one-third the present size of the Litchfield Enquirer, with coarse type and coarse blue paper. A single compositor might have set the type in a single day for all the new matter which was contained in some of the weekly issues. Yet it is a most interesting epitome of the olden times. From it we are able to glean very many facts and events in the history of this town and county which are preserved nowhere else. Until after the advent of the present century both the town and county were Federal in their politics, and the Monitor was at once the organ and the oracle of the Federal party in this region.

* The village of Litchfield was changed to borough of Litchfield by act of Legislature approved March 21, 1879.

In August, 1805, two young printers—Messrs. Sellick Osborn and Timothy Ashley—came to this town and established The Witness, a violent Democratic newspaper. The Witness was edited by Mr. Osborn, who, though a man of talents and energy, was a most unscrupulous partisan and bitter satirist. Though there was a formidable minority of Democrats in the township at this time, Litchfield Hill was the stronghold of Federalism. Tallmadge, Reeve, Wolcott, Deming, Gould, Tracy, Holmes, Allen, Aaron Smith, Rev. Messrs. Champion and Huntington, and indeed nearly all the leading men of the village, were Federalists, and looked upon Jefferson as an infidel and reprobate. Subsequent to the Presidential election of 1800 (which resulted in the choice of Jefferson to the Presidency), the partisan sermons and prayers of Messrs. Champion and Huntington, of the Congregational Church, had driven several of their church-members (including Deacon Lewis) to Episcopacy. On one occasion, after a political sermon from Parson Huntington, his venerable colleague, Father Champion, prayed first and fervently for "thy servant the President of the United States" (John Adams), and concluded thus: "And, O Lord! wilt thou bestow upon the Vice-President (Jefferson) a double portion of Thy grace, for Thou knowest he needs it!" The summary withdrawal of so many members caused the First Church no little embarrassment. A formal expulsion was proposed; but some of them occupied high social positions, and others were nearly allied to remaining members. The matter was finally adjusted by a simple withdrawal of the "watch and fellowship" of the church from the seceders. The feeling of hostility between Federalists and Democrats was such that prominent men living in the same neighborhood refused to recognize each other when they met; Federal ladies refused even to make formal calls at the houses of their Democratic neighbors; and the children of Federalists were forbidden to associate with those of the hated Democrats. Such was the state of feeling on Litchfield Hill when The Witness opened its batteries on the ranks of Federalism. At first its assaults were treated with contempt. Osborn grew bolder, more bitter, and more personal, gathering up and parading before the public the foibles or follies (real or manufactured) of the principal men of the village, against whose honor no word of suspicion had before been breathed. Charges and insinuations of hypocrisy and crime were freely blended with the most scathing ridicule. This was "bearding the lion in his den." It was not long before Osborn was indicted, tried, and convicted of a libel on Julius Deming, Esq. Osborn and his partner Ashley were both subjected to a fine, in default of the payment of which both were committed to the county jail. Ashley was soon liberated, and Osborn might have been had he complied with the terms of the court; but as—as he himself expressed it—"the only alternative offered him was to have either his body or mind imprisoned, of course he remained in confinement." His friends regarded him as a martyr to his political fidelity. It was published far and wide through the columns of the Democratic journals that his health was sinking from confinement "in a damp and loathsome cell;" that a maniac charged with murder was thrust into the same cell with him, etc. On the 4th of July, 1806, a meeting of the Democrats of Litchfield was held at Phelps' hotel, at which a committee of three was appointed "to repair to the prison and learn the true situation of Mr. Osborn and his treatment since his imprisonment, and to report at an adjourned meeting." At the adjourned meeting, on the 14th, the committee reported in substance that they had visited Mr. Osborn at the jail; that he was confined in the same room with two criminals, both charged with capital offenses; that his room was formed of damp and ragged stone walls, in which the air was impure, stagnant, and offensive, and so dark that it was difficult to distinguish one's features; that his friends were generally denied admission to his room, and could only have intercourse with him through the outer grate of the prison; that his health was failing, etc. From this date the committee visited the prison from time to time, and issued their weekly bulletins through the columns of The Witness. In vain Sheriff Landon denied the truth of the committee's original report. The story of Osborn's persecutions went abroad over the land. The Democracy of distant States held indignation meetings, at which Osborn was extolled, the Connecticut courts denounced, and the Litchfield Federalists execrated. At length it was resolved to have a grand ovation in behalf of Osborn at Litchfield, and the 6th of August was fixed upon for the celebration. The great day finally arrived, and with it came an immense concourse of Democrats from this and other States. Daybreak was greeted with the discharge of one gun at the head of North Street, a responsive discharge on the flag-staff on the public green, and martial music until sunrise. At sunrise seventeen guns were fired with martial music. At eleven the procession moved in the following order, viz.:

Military, commanded by Maj. Stephen Ranney, Lieut. Swett, United States officer stationed at Springfield, acting as marshal, John M. Felder as adjutant, and Chauncey Hotchkiss as quartermaster, consisting of Cavalry, commanded by Capt. Carter.

Band of music.

Matross company from Danbury, commanded by Lieut. Ambler.

" " of this town, commanded by Capt. Bissell.

" " composed of boys, in white uniform.

Light infantry, commanded by Capt. Shethar.

Infantry, commanded by Capt. Grannis.
" " Lieut. Stone.
" " Ensign Norton.
Two of the Committee of Arrangements.
Clergy and Orator.
Gen. Timothy Skinner, President of the Day.
Moses Seymour, Esq., } Vice-Presidents of the Day.
John Welch, Esq., }
Ozias Lewis, Esq. }
Six of the Committee of Arrangements.
Marshals of Connecticut and Vermont.
Collectors of New Haven and Middletown.
Citizens generally.

The procession passed under Osborn's prison window with heads uncovered, each saluting the prisoner with a passing bow, and the military giving him a brigadier's salute. Notwithstanding the hatred with which many of the Congregationalists regarded Democracy, the society's committee had generously tendered the use of their meeting-house for the occasion. Thither the procession wended. The services in the church consisted of a prayer by the Rev. Asahel Morse (Baptist), of Suffield; reading of the Declaration of Independence by Jonathan Law, Esq., of Cheshire; an oration by David Plant, Esq., of Stratford [since member of Congress and Lieutenant-Governor]; and an address by Joseph L. Smith, Esq., of Litchfield.

Before the arrival of the procession at the church an occurrence took place which created much ill-feeling and comment at the time. Messrs. Champion and Huntington entered the church, and were proceeding up the aisle towards the pulpit, when, according to Mr. Champion's statement, he was seized near the shoulder by Joseph L. Smith, Esq., a member of the committee of arrangements, who pulled him around, saying, "You have no business here, and must go out of the house." Mr. Champion replied that he was an old man, and wished for liberty to sit in the pulpit, assuring him that he would make no disturbance. Mr. Smith grew more boisterous, and the two clergymen withdrew. Mr. Smith and his friends published a very different version of the story; while the Federalists reiterated that Smith had at first boasted of the exploit, and declared that he would have called the military to his aid if it had been necessary in ejecting the intruders. Mr. Champion seems to have taken the matter very seriously.

"I was much afflicted," he wrote, "at being cast out of the house of God where I had worshipped almost fifty-four years, and could expect to be there but a few days more. These reflections crowded into my mind when ejected and retiring from the place where God's honor had dwelt."

At the annual election in October, 1805, it may be remarked, not a single Democrat had been chosen to the Legislature in Litchfield County, and the Federalists had not been backward in taunting Osborn about the "revolution," which it was said he had boasted he would produce in this region. At the annual election in May, 1806, the tables had been partially reversed by the election of two Democratic representatives from Litchfield by a vote of three hundred and fourteen to three hundred and eight. A portion of the Democratic enthusiasm in behalf of Osborn is attributable to an appreciation of his services in producing this result.

As an incident of the celebration, it is mentioned that during the day a placard was displayed on the door of one of the principal hotels, bearing the significant words, "No Democrats admitted here." Some gentlemen from a distance put up, as was their custom when this way, with an intimate friend who chanced to be a rank Federalist. He soon inquired if they had come to attend the celebration; and on being answered in the affirmative, he abruptly replied, "Then you cannot be accommodated at my house. As old friends, I should have been glad to see you; as Democrats, I want nothing to do with you!" Such was the spirit of the times.

When the services in the church were over the procession was reformed and proceeded to a large bower which had been erected in the meadow on the south side of East Street, nearly opposite the jail, where a cold repast had been prepared by Capt. Phelps. Seventeen regular toasts were drank, accompanied by the discharge of cannon and music from the band. Among them were the following:

"Justice—May false witnesses, perjured judges, and packed juries be banished from its courts."

"Selleck Osborn—Like Daniel in the lion's den, he is teaching his persecutors that the beasts cannot devour him." [Three cheers.]

"Liberty of the Press—Litchfield Jail its stronghold." [Three cheers.]

"The Political Clergy—If there were twenty Gods, perhaps some one might approve their services; but the one God wants no political pastors." [Three cheers.]

"The memory of our departed friend, Ephraim Kirby—His virtues will live while our memory lasts; his merits shall be known to posterity."

"Litchfield Jail—Our votes will level it as the ram's horns did the walls of Jericho." [Six cheers.]

The Witness complains that the name of Maj. Seymour was stricken from the roll of justices of the peace for this county by the Legislature (May, 1807) because of his participation in the 6th of August celebration.

In June, 1807, The Witness gives the following summary of the suits against Messrs. Osborn and Ashley, viz.:

"Fine and costs in libel suit with J. Deming, Esq.	$346.46
For publishing case of Talmadge & Wolcott vs. Gen. Hart, with comments thereon, fine and costs	605.98
For slandering Thomas Collier	522.00
(Besides costs of complaint in favor of Mr Ashley against Thomas G. Collier, which complaint the county court dismissed.)
Aggregate	$1474.44"

Osborn was not the only man involved in libel suits in those days. The Hon. Tapping Reeve and Capt. Thomas Collier, of The Monitor, were both indicted before the United States District Court at New Haven for libeling President Jefferson; and the Rev. Daniel Huntington, of this village, recovered one thousand dollars from Maj. Babcock, of the Hartford Mercury, a Democratic paper.

The Witness was discontinued in the summer of 1807, having been published about two years. Selleck Osborn was a native of Danbury, and after leaving Litchfield published The Delaware Watchman at Wilmington, Del. A volume of his poems was published in Boston. He died in Philadelphia in 1826.

The Litchfield Monitor was discontinued in 1806, having been published by Mr. Collier for twenty-two years. Thomas Collier, son of Richard, was born in Boston, Feb. 20, 1760, and died in Binghamton, N. Y., 1844. On leaving this town he resided for several years in Troy. In June, 1799, an orphan lad of fourteen years, named John C. Wright, from Wethersfield, entered the Monitor office as an apprentice, remained with Mr. Collier until of age, married his daughter Mary, and for some time published a paper in Troy.

The Litchfield Enquirer, the oldest newspaper published in the county, issued its first number at Litchfield, June 20, 1826. It was owned and edited by Stephen S. Smith, and was then called the Litchfield County Post. Dec. 25, 1828, Smith sold the Post to D. C. McClarey, who conveyed it to Henry Adams less than a month afterwards, Jan. 22, 1829. Mr. Adams changed the name of the paper to The Litchfield Enquirer, and edited it very ably and successfully till his accidental death, by drowning, in February, 1842. The Enquirer then went into the hands of Mr. Charles Adams, a brother of Henry Adams, and an experienced journalist, founder of the New Haven Palladium, and influential in the politics of this State and of New York. On Oct. 2, 1845, Mr. P. K. Kilbourne succeeded as editor,—a position he held for near eight years following. Mr. Kilbourne was the author of a valuable "History of the Town of Litchfield," and assisted Mr. G. H. Hollister very greatly in the preparation of materials for his "History of Connecticut." Mr. Henry W. Hyatt succeeded Kilbourne as editor of the Enquirer, March 3, 1853, selling out to Edward C. Goodwin, Sept. 4, 1856, who was succeeded by Adams & Betts, April 2, 1857, Mr. Adams resuming the editorial chair, while Mr. Betts was publisher. On Oct. 13, 1859, Mr. James Humphrey, Jr., became editor and proprietor of the Enquirer. He was an extremely bright, caustic writer, and edited the paper throughout the war till April 13, 1865, when he sold it to Henry E. Wing and Alexander B. Shumway, the former acting as editor, and the latter as publisher. George A. Hickox, the present editor, succeeded Wing, July 29, 1866, and became sole proprietor in 1869. The Enquirer started as an independent paper, and has been such for several years past; but in its intermediate period, it was a party paper,—first Whig and then Republican in politics. Its original size was five columns. In 1845, Mr. Kilbourne enlarged it to six columns. In 1860, Mr. Humphrey made it a seven-column paper; and, in 1872, Mr. Hickox added another column, making it about double the original size. It has always been fairly prosperous, with a good subscription-list for a local paper.

The Litchfield Gazette was commenced in January, 1808, by Messrs. Charles Hosmer and Oliver Goodwin, and was discontinued May 17, 1809.

Isaiah Bunce came to this town soon after, and commenced The Litchfield Journal, the name of which was changed to The Litchfield Republican in 1819; which, in turn, was succeeded by The Miscellany, a small quarto, in July, 1821. In September, 1822, Mr. Bunce began the publication of The American Eagle, which he removed to New Haven in March, 1826. Mr. Bunce was a man of enterprise, and established a bookstore, reading-room, and circulating library, and was for a few years a justice of the peace.

Nov. 3, 1833, Melzer Gardner, from Hartford, commenced The Litchfield Democrat, which was discontinued in September, 1834. Subsequently, while editing a paper in Richmond, Va., Gardner was shot on board a steamboat near that city by a man to whom he had given offense by an article which he had published.

The Litchfield Sun was started by John M. Baldwin (a native of this town) in February, 1835, who sold out to S. G. Hayes, of New Haven, in September, 1837, who discontinued it in April, 1839.

In January, 1840, Charles E. Moss & Co. commenced The Mercury, which was transferred to Josiah Giles in the following August. It was discontinued some time in 1842. The Mercury was soon succeeded by The Democratic Watchman, also published by Mr. Giles, which was discontinued in 1844.

In 1845, J. K. Averill commenced the New Milford Republican, at New Milford; in September, 1846, he removed his office to this village, and changed the name of his paper to the Litchfield Republican. W. F. & G. H. Baldwin, Albert Stoddard, and Franklin Hull successively continued the publication of the Republican. In 1856 the office was removed to Falls Village, where it was issued under the name of The Housatonic Republican, and subsequently discontinued.

The Litchfield Sentinel was started about the year 1865, by S. H. Baldwin, with J. D. Champlin, Jr., as editor. It was owned successively by Mr. Champlin, Solon B. Johnson, and J. R. Farnum, and in 1873 the material was purchased by G. A. Hickox, the present proprietor of the Litchfield Enquirer.

THE LITCHFIELD LAW-SCHOOL.

This institution, the first of the kind in this country, was established by Hon. Tapping Reeve in 1784. He conducted it as sole principal until 1798, when the Hon. James Gould, LL.D., became associated with him in its management. From 1820, Judge Gould conducted the school alone for several years, and was then assisted by Hon. Jabez W. Huntington. In consequence of the failing health of Judge Gould, it was discontinued in 1833. The Litchfield Law-School was a celebrated institution, and at the time of its close the number of students had been one thousand and twenty-four, every State in the Union having been represented. Of this number fifteen became United States senators; fifty, members of Congress; forty, judges of the higher State courts; ten, governors of States; five, cabinet officers,—Calhoun, Woodbury, Mason, Clayton, and Hubbard; two, justices of the United States Supreme Court,—Henry Baldwin and Levi Woodbury; one, Vice-President of the United States,—John C. Calhoun; and several foreign ministers, among whom was Hon. John Y. Mason, minister to France.

POST-OFFICE.

The Litchfield post-office was established in 1791. The following announcement appeared in the Litchfield Monitor in January of that year:

POST-OFFICE ESTABLISHMENT.

"The Public, particularly Gentlemen in the Town and Vicinity of Litchfield, have some time lamented the want of a regular and weekly Intercourse with the City of Hartford, by a Post immediately from this Town, are respectfully assured that a Post, in conjunction with Mr. Isaac Trowbridge, the Rider from New York, will start from this Office for Hartford regularly once a week, commencing on Monday next, the 31st inst. This Establishment has met the Sanction and Encouragement of Mr. Trowbridge, and the Undertakers wil be subject to the same Regulations and Responsibility required by the Postmaster General. Consequently, every Duty annexed to the Business will be strictly and pointedly observed.

"And that the Public may be better accommodated, and derive a safe Repository for their letters, &c., a POST-OFFICE is opened in Collier's Printing Office, at which Place all Despatches to be transmitted through the Medium of either Post must be deposited. During the Winter (and till the 1st of May next) the Post from New York will ride once a fortnight, and arrive on Tuesday Evening, commencing the 5th of the ensuing month. Those who have Business or Letters are requested to leave their directions at this office, for New York on Tuesday, for Hartford on Saturday Evenings, preceding the days of departure, as the Post will positively start at an Early Hour. Letters will be received at this office for any part of the United States.

"LITCHFIELD, Jan. 24, 1791."

The following is a list of postmasters from the establishment of the office to the present time: Benjamin Tallmadge, Frederick Wolcott, Moses Seymour, Jr., Charles Seymour, George C. Woodruff, Jason Whiting, Reuben M. Woodruff, Leverett W. Wessells, George H. Baldwin, R. Marsh, and H. E. Gates.

THE PHŒNIX BRANCH BANK

was incorporated in 1814. The following were its officers until it was discontinued Dec. 15, 1864:

Presidents.—Benjamin Tallmadge, 1814-26; James Gould, 1826-33; Asa Bacon, 1833-46; Theron Beach, 1846-52; George C. Woodruff, 1852-64.
Cashiers.—James Butler, 1814-21; Austin Kilbourn, 1821-26; Henry A. Perkins, 1826-28; Charles Spencer, 1828-38, Theron Beach, 1838-39; Gustavus F. Davis, 1839-51; Henry R. Coit, 1851-64.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK

was organized Dec. 22, 1864. The first board of directors were Edwin McNeil, David C. Whittlesey, Henry W. Buel, Frederick D. McNeil, and Henry R. Coit. The following is a list of the directors from the organization to present time:

Edwin McNeil, 1864-75; Henry W. Buel, David C. Whittlesey, Frederick D. McNeil, 1864-81; David E. Costwick, 1866-73, J. Deming Perkins, 1873-75; Charles B. Andrews, Henry R. Coit, 1875-81.
Presidents.—Edwin McNeil, 1864-75; Henry R. Coit, 1875-81.
Cashiers.—Henry R. Coit, 1864-75; George E. Jones, 1875-81.

The capital is $200,000; surplus, Jan. 1, 1881, $40,000; dividends since the organization to Jan. 1, 1881, $345,000.

THE LITCHFIELD BANK

was incorporated in 1856, and organized in 1857, with William H. Crossman president, and Edward L. Houghton secretary. It was discontinued.

LITCHFIELD SAVINGS SOCIETY.

This society was incorporated in 1850 by Seth P. Beers, Theron Beach, Edwin B. Webster, Josiah G. Beckwith, George Seymour, Oliver Goodwin, Gustavus F. Davis, William F. Baldwin, Samuel P. Bolles, George C. Woodruff, G. H. Hollister, Ozias Seymour, Charles S. Webb, Charles Adams, and Jason Whiting. The first president was George C. Woodruff; vice-president, S. P. Bolles; secretary and treasurer, G. F. Davis.

Presidents.—1850-53, George C. Woodruff; 1853-56, J. G. Beckwith; 1856-62, Jason Whiting; 1873-78, Edward W. Seymour; 1878, George C. Woodruff, still in office.
Secretaries and Treasurers.—1850-51, G. T. Davis; 1851-52, S. P. Bolles; 1852-75, H. R. Coit; 1875, George E. Jones; 1876, H. R. Coit, still in office.

Regular semi-annual dividends from five to six per cent. per annum have been paid since organization, with extra dividends of two per cent. per year from 1867 to 1872.

The present directors are George C. Woodruff, George M. Woodruff, F. D. McNeil, William H. Braman, Jesse L. Judd.

Deposits, $715,000; surplus, $31,000.

SPRING HILL,

a home for nervous invalids, was opened in the year 1858 by Dr. H. W. Buel. The design of the home is to afford the most thorough medical care and treatment, combined, as far as may be, with the family life. Under this plan the very best results have been and still are attained. Connected with the home are some three hundred acres of land, lying just in the border of the village, and affording ample grounds for recreation and amusement. A cultivated lady acts as matron, and accommodations are provided for from twenty to twenty-five ladies and gentlemen, under the personal care and supervision of Dr. Buel himself.

THE LITCHFIELD MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY was organized in 1833, with Phineas Miller president, Leonard Goodwin secretary, and Oliver Goodwin treasurer.

THE LITCHFIELD HISTORICAL SOCIETY was organized in 1856, with Seth P. Beers president.

THE LITCHFIELD AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY was incorporated in 1818.

THE LITCHFIELD (NEW BANTAM) VIGILANT SOCIETY was organized in 1828.

ST. PAUL'S LODGE, No. 11, F. AND A. M.

The charter of this lodge was issued by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, June 1, 1781, to the following petitioners: James Nichols, John Watkins, Thomas Phillips, Eaton Jones, Benjamin Hanks, John Collins, Noah Blakesley, William Durkee, Daniel Starr, John Colvill, John Kettle, Josiah Norton, and Adino Hale. The lodge was organized June 13, 1781. The following is a list of Masters from its organization to 1881:

Ashbel Baldwin, 1781–82; Benjamin Hanks, 1782–86; Jonathan Kettle, 1786–88; Julius Deming, 1788–90; Isaac Baldwin, Jr., 1790–93; Ephraim Kirby, 1793–95; John Allen, 1795–98; Ephraim Kirby, 1798–99; Isaac Baldwin, Jr., 1799–1801; Ephraim Kirby, 1801–3; Aaron Smith, 1803–6; Peter Sherman, 1806–8; Aaron Smith, 1808–12; Roger Cook, 1812–14; Lucius Smith, 1814–15; Elijah Adams, 1815–16; Lucius Smith, 1816–19; David Marsh, 1819–22; James Winship, 1822–23; Phineas Lord, 1823–24; Phineas B. Taylor, 1824–28; Frederick Buel, 1828–31; Heman W. Childs, 1831–37; Samuel Buel (2d), 1837–43; Stephen Deming, 1843–46; Charles L. Webb, 1846–49; Phineas B. Taylor, 1849–50; Frederick Buel, 1850–52; Frederick D. Beeman, 1852–54; David E. Bostwick, 1854–66; Eli D. Weeks, 1866–68; Alexander B. Shumway, 1868–70; Elbert G. Roberts, 1870–71; Edson Staples, 1871–73; Samuel W. Ensign, 1873–74; William Deming, 1874–75; Charles H. Platt, 1875–77; Walter K. Peck, 1877–79; James J. Newcomb, 1879–80.

MINERALS.

It was thought at one time that the mineral deposits in this town were of great value, particularly copper, and companies were organized for working the "mine." All, however, were unsuccessful. P. T. Barnum was at the head of one of these companies.

TEMPERANCE IN LITCHFIELD IN 1789.

The first temperance organization in this State, and probably the first in the world, was organized in Litchfield in 1789, as follows:

"So many are the avenues leading to human misery that it is impossible to guard them all. Such evils as are produced by our own folly and weakness are within our power to avoid. The immoderate use which the people of this State make of Distilled Spirits is undoubtedly an evil of this kind. It is obvious to every person of the smallest observation that from this pernicious practice follows a train of evils difficult to be enumerated. The morals are corrupted, property is exhausted, and health destroyed. And it is most sincerely to be regretted that from a mistaken idea that distilled spirits are necessary to laboring men, to counteract the influence of heat and give relief from severe fatigue, that a most valuable class of citizens have been led to contract a habit of such dangerous tendency. Hence arises the inability to pay public taxes, to discharge private debts, and to support and educate families. Seriously considering this subject, and the frowns of Divine Providence in denying many families in this part of the country the means of a comfortable subsistence the present year by failure of the principal crops of the earth, we think it peculiarly the duty of every good citizen to unite his efforts to reform a practice which leads so many to poverty, distress, and ruin. Whereupon we do hereby associate, and mutually agree, that hereafter we will carry on our business without the use of distilled spirits as an article of refreshment, either for ourselves or those whom we employ, and that instead thereof we will serve our workmen with wholesome food and common simple drinks of our own production.

"Benjamin Kirby,
Timothy Skinner,
David Buel,
Julius Deming,
Benjamin Tallmadge,
Uriah Tracy,
Ebenezer Marsh,
Moses Seymour,
Samuel Marsh,
James Stone,
Archibald McNeil,
Abraham Bradley,
I. Baldwin, Jr.,
T. Reeve,
Collier & Adam,
Tobias Cleaver,
Amos Galpin,
Thomas Trowbridge,
S. Shethar,
Solomon Buel,
Samuel Seymour,
Daniel Sheldon,
Ozias Lewis,
Lawrence Wessells,
Elijah Wadsworth,
Alexander Catlin,
Reuben Smith,
Lynde Lord,
Bryant Stoddard,
Abraham Peck,
Frederick Wolcott,
Nathaniel Smith (2d),
John Allen,
John Welch,
Arthur Emmons."

"By Necessity and on Principle, in consequence of little experiment and much observation, I have effectually adopted and adhered to the salutary plan herein proposed during several months past, and am still resolved to persevere until convinced that any alteration will be productive of some greater good, whereof at present I have no apprehensions whilst Human Nature remains the same.

"LITCHFIELD, 9th of May, 1789. J. STRONG."

SLAVERY IN LITCHFIELD.

Slavery can hardly be said to have existed in this town during the present century, and it has for years been extinct. In the year 1800 only seven blacks were accounted slaves, though some born such are still living. During the eighteenth century, however, it existed here in a mild form, as it did in other parts of the State. The records of Wills and Distribution show that a considerable proportion of the personal estate of the most opulent of our early settlers consisted of negro servants.

The following document, executed by the first Governor Oliver Wolcott, we find on our town records:

"Know all men by these presents that I, Oliver Wolcott, of Litchfield, in the State of Connecticut, in expectation that my negro servant man, Cæsar, will, by his industry, be able to obtain a comfortable subsistence for himself, and that he will make a proper use of the freedom which I hereby give him, do discharge, liberate, and set free, him, the said Cæsar, and do hereby exempt him from any further obligations of servitude to me, my heirs, and from every other person claiming any authority over him, by, from, or under me. And that my said servant, whom I now make free, as aforesaid, may be known hereafter by a proper cognomen, I hereby give him the name of Jamus, so that hereafter he is to be known and distinguished by the name of Cæsar Jamus. As witness my hand and seal, in Litchfield, Nov. 23, A.D. 1786.

"OLIVER WOLCOTT. [L. S.]

"In presence of
"MARY ANN WOLCOTT,
"FREDERICK WOLCOTT."

During the latter part of the last century the blacks, in imitation of the whites, chose for themselves a Governor and other State officials. Their last Governor was Will, a resident of this town, whose obituary appears in the Monitor of Wednesday, March 6, 1793, as follows:

"Died, on Thursday, of consumption, Will, a free negro (formerly owned by Maj. Seymour), governor of the blacks in this vicinity. His integrity and faithfulness through life will, we hope, entitle him to the rewards of the good and faithful servant."*

"As was the case with the settlers of the New England towns generally, the founders of Litchfield regarded the subject of education as a matter of primary importance. As stated elsewhere, one-sixtieth part of the township (about seven hundred acres) was originally set apart for the support of schools. In December, 1725, eight pounds were appropriated from the town treasury 'for hiring schoolmasters and school-dames' to instruct the children in reading and writing for the year next ensuing, and a like sum was ordered to be raised by a tax upon the parents or guardians of the children, to be gathered by the town collector. Messrs. Marsh, Buel, Hosford, and Goodrich were chosen a school committee. Two years later ten pounds were paid out of the public treasury for the same object, with the proviso that four pounds of this sum should be given for the support of a writing-school, and the balance 'for teaching of children by school-dames,' from which we are to infer that the female teachers did not give instruction in writing. The first reference made by the records relative to building a school-house is contained in the doings of a town-meeting held Dec. 23, 1731,—Mr. Joseph Kilbourn, moderator,—which is as follows:

* Judge Woodruff.

"'Voted to build a school-house in ye center of ye town, on ye Meeting-House Green; and Joseph Kilbourn, Jr., Ebenezer Marsh, and John Gay were chosen a committee to carry on said work.'"

"At the same time it was voted to build the school-house twenty feet square. The school committee were authorized to hire a schoolmaster, and set up a school during the succeeding fall and winter.

"Messrs. Jacob Griswold and Benjamin Gibbs were appointed in December, 1727, to run the lines and set up monuments 'between the school-lots and Pine Island.'

"The question as to how the school-lands should be disposed of to the best advantage appears to have been very difficult to settle. On the 12th of March, 1729, it was voted to sell them for one thousand pounds, and Messrs. Marsh and Bird were designated to manage the sale. Some one, doubtless, called in question the right of the town to make such a sale, as a week later the inhabitants, in general town-meeting convened, appointed Mr. Marsh their agent to apply to the General Assembly 'for liberty to make sale of the school-lands in Litchfield.' The application was unsuccessful, but the people soon found a way to evade the letter of the law. On the 29th of November, 1729, it was 'voted that the school right in Litchfield should be leased out for the maintenance of a school in said Litchfield for nine hundred and ninety-nine years ensuing.' Messrs. Marsh, Buel, Hosford, and Bird, were appointed a committee to lease the lands accordingly. As if apprehensive that even this lease might ultimately expire and thus give their descendants unnecessary trouble, with a far-reaching glance into futurity, they proceeded to bind their successors 'in ye recognizance of ten thousand pounds lawful money, to give a new lease of said Right at the end of said term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years if there shall be occasion.'"

In pursuance of these votes the committee appointed for that purpose, on the 15th of April, 1730, leased to sundry individuals the school right for the time designated; the grantee paying twenty-seven pounds annually for eight years for the support of the school, and the ninth year paying to the selectmen four hundred and fifty pounds, to be forever kept for the support of a school in Litchfield. To the lease was annexed the following:

"Postscript.—Before signing and sealing, the above-mentioned signers and sealers agreed, that whoever occupies and improves all the above land or lands, or any part of them, shall pay all rates or taxes that shall arise upon them or any part of them during the whole term of the lease."

In the year 1867 it was "voted to divide the money for which the school right was sold between the old society, the South Farms Society, and the Church of England in proportion to the list of each part."

In addition to the law-school mentioned on a previous page, the following educational institutions flourished here, all of which are now extinct: Litchfield Female Academy (incorporated in 1827), the Elm Park Collegiate Instutute, the Wolcott Institute, and the Gould Seminary. (For present condition of schools see Chapter VIII.)

EXECUTIONS.

It is believed that no native of Litchfield was ever convicted of murder, and that willful murder was never committed by or upon a white man within the limits of this town. In 1768 an Indian, named John Jacob, was hanged for the murder of another Indian. In November, 1785, Thomas Goss, of Barkhamsted, was executed for the murder of his wife. In these days he would have been acquitted on the ground of insanity. On the plea that his wife was a witch, he split her head open with an axe. Though at times apparently rational, he sometimes declared that he was the second Lamb of God, that he was brother of Jesus Christ, and that he was the child born of the woman mentioned in the Revelation of St. John, "before whom the dragon stood ready to devour the child;" he forbade his counsel to apply for a reprieve, declared the sheriff could not hang him, etc. May 8, 1780, Barnet Davenport, aged twenty years, was executed for murder and arson in Washington. Residing as a laborer in the family of Caleb Mallory, he entered the sleeping-room of Mr. and Mrs. Mallory at midnight and beat them to death with a club, and their little grandchild shared the same fate. After robbing the house and setting it on fire the murderer fled, leaving two other persons asleep who perished in the flames. These persons, it is understood, were executed in Gallows Lane, in this village. Other convictions for capital crimes have taken place before the courts, but these are the only individuals who have ever suffered the extreme penalty of the law in this county.

ASSIGNED TO SERVICE FOR DEBT.

Formerly, by a law of this State, if debtors had no other means to pay their debts they were assigned in service for that purpose. And it is said to have been common for poor foreigners, who could not pay their passage money, to stipulate with the captain of the ship that he might assign them to raise the money. Persons so assigned were called redemptioners, and several were so held in service in this town. Among them was Matthew Lyon, a native of Ireland, who was assigned to Hugh Hannah, of Litchfield, for a pair of stags valued at twelve pounds. Lyon was afterwards a member of Congress from Vermont and from Kentucky. He was convicted under the famous alien and sedition law, and fined. The fine was subsequently remitted by Congress to him or his heirs.

BANTAM FALLS

is a pleasant village about four miles west of Litchfield, a station on the Shepaug Railroad, situated on the Bantam River, which here falls one hundred and twenty-five feet in a distance of less than three-quarters of a mile, an excellent site for manufacturing, as, in addition to the great descent of the river, it has the advantage of Bantam Lake for a reservoir. This picturesque lake has a superficial area of about one thousand acres, the outflow being controlled perfectly by a dam fourteen feet in width, about half a mile from the lake. There are several manufacturing establishments now in operation,—a cotton-mill, a very complete grist- and flouring-mill, a successful carriage-factory, also several dams and unoccupied mill-sites. There are also two thriving stores, one of which is owned by the postmaster and used as a post-office. It is connected by telephone with Litchfield, and the railroad telegraph passes through the village. With the unfailing water-power, which has stood the test of the severe droughts and frost of past years, the inhabitants of Bantam anticipate a future of great prosperity.

The west side of Bantam Lake has attracted much notice from visitors by reason of the picturesque views from the road, which passes along closely hugging the water. One of Brooklyn's world-famous divines, who is also a great traveler, declares that in all his travels he has seen nothing more lovely than this drive.

The cotton-mill referred to above was built in 1876–77 by Dorsey Neville & George E. Jones. Its production has been doubled since business commenced. The carriage-factory is the property of Flynn & Doyle. The flouring-mill belongs to E. McNeill, the gate at the outlet of the lake being owned and controlled by G. E. Jones.

NORTHFIELD

is a hamlet located in the southeastern part of the town. It was incorporated as a parish in 1794.

THE NORTHFIELD KNIFE COMPANY

was organized and incorporated in January, 1858, as a joint stock corporation, the original stock of ten thousand dollars being taken by some forty workmen, only a small portion of the capital being paid in at the start. The company then leased the buildings and water-power of the Northfield Manufacturing Company (organized several years previous for the manufacture of carriages and a variety of other goods, and which venture proved unremunerative), and in their factory, then nearly new, commenced the manufacture of pocket-cutlery. John S. Barnes, a native of Sheffield, England, was elected president of the corporation, and held that office for about four years. Then Samuel Mason, the former secretary, also from Sheffield, was chosen president, continuing in that office for about three years, when (in January, 1865) the management of the business was placed in the hands of F. H. Catlin, of Northfield, he being elected president of the corporation, and which management and office he has had since that time and still retains.

In 1865 this company purchased the entire property of the Northfield Manufacturing Company, including a good water-power, with a fall of over fifty feet, which they have since greatly improved by the building of large reservoirs on the two streams whose waters they control. They have also erected additional factory buildings, numerous dwellings, and a fine store, and provided the village with an increased mail service. Their cutlery has always ranked high for quality, and has achieved an enviable reputation. It received high awards at the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia, in 1876, and at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, is well and favorably known in nearly every State and Territory of the Union, and has been sold for export to several foreign countries. The different styles of pocket-knives kept in stock by this company number about four hundred, while their exhibit at Philadelphia comprised about eight hundred, and that at Paris about nine hundred styles. The annual business is about one hundred thousand dollars, employing about seventy-five operatives, nearly all of whom are skilled Sheffield workmen, many of whom, together with their families, the company has brought over from England.

The present officers of the company are F. H. Catlin president and treasurer, and J. Howard Catlin secretary.

MILTON

is a hamlet located in the northwestern part of the town, and was incorporated as a parish in 1795.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES.*

Samuel Adams, a native of Milford and long a resident of Stratford, came to this village to reside a few years previous to his death, which took place here Nov. 12, 1788, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He had been a prominent lawyer and judge of the Fairfield County Court. His widow, Mrs. Mary Adams, died in this town, Aug. 29, 1803, in the one hundred and sixth year of her age. "She retained," says the Monitor, "her memory, reason, and activity remarkably until about two years before her death. After she was an hundred years old she rode on horseback thirty miles in one day." She was a daughter of Mr.

* Condensed from "Kilbourne's History of Litchfield."

Zachariah Fairchild, and was born in Stratford, May 7, 1698; thus having lived in three centuries.

John Allen, a native of Great Barrington, Mass., was admitted to the Litchfield bar in 1786, and continued to reside here as a practicing lawyer until his death, in the year 1812. He was a representative at seven sessions; clerk of the House in 1796; member of Congress from 1797 to 1799; and member of the State Council from 1800 to 1806. He not only possessed great powers of mind, but was remarkable for his imposing presence, having been nearly seven feet in height, and with a proportionably heavy frame.

John W. Allen, son of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, but left his native town soon after the death of his father. Having studied law, he settled in Cleveland, Ohio, where he became eminent in his profession.

Rev. Horace Agard, son of Mr. Noah Agard, was born in Litchfield, received a license to preach from the Methodist Conference, and for some time labored successfully in his native town. He was subsequently presiding elder of the Susquehanna and Berkshire districts. He died Jan. 8, 1850.

Epaphroditus Champion Bacon was born in Litchfield in 1811; graduated at Yale College in 1833, and settled in his native town as a lawyer. In 1839 he was a delegate to and secretary of the National Convention which met at Harrisburg and nominated Gen. Harrison for the Presidency of the United States. Mr. Bacon was elected a representative from this town in 1840, and again in 1841. While traveling in Europe, he died at Seville, Spain, Jan. 11, 1845, aged thirty-four years.

Lieut. Frederick A. Bacon, son of Asa Bacon, Esq., was born in Litchfield in 1813; entered the navy in his youth, and was attached to the United States schooner "Sea Gull," of the exploring expedition, which foundered off Cape Horn, May 1, 1839, and all on board perished. He was twenty-six years of age.

Gen. Francis Bacon, youngest son of Asa Bacon, Esq., was born in Litchfield in January, 1820; graduated at Yale College in 1829; studied law with the Hon. O. S. Seymour, and settled as a lawyer in his native town. With the exception of two or three years he continued to reside here until his death. In 1847 and 1848 he was first clerk of the House; and in 1849 he was elected to the senate of this State. He was also major-general of all the militia of Connecticut. He died in this town, Sept. 16, 1849.

Isaac Baldwin graduated at Yale College in 1735, settled in Litchfield in 1742, and died here Jan. 15, 1805, aged ninety-five years. He was a representative at ten sessions, clerk of the Probate Court twenty-nine years, town clerk thirty-one years, and clerk of the Court of Common Pleas forty-two years.

Rev. Ashbel Baldwin, son of Isaac Baldwin, Esq., was born in Litchfield, March 7, 1757, and graduated at Yale College in 1776. He was ordained deacon at Middletown, by Bishop Seabury, Aug. 3, 1785, being the first Episcopal ordination in the United States. In September following he was ordained priest by the same bishop. From 1785 to 1793 he was rector of St. Michael's Church in this town, and was afterwards for about thirty years rector of Christ Church, Stratford. He was secretary of the diocese of Connecticut, and member of the general convention. Mr. Baldwin died in Rochester, N. Y., Feb. 8, 1846, in his eighty-ninth year. From his register it appears that he had preached and performed service about ten thousand times; baptized three thousand and ten persons; married six hundred couple; and buried about three thousand persons!

William B. Baldwin, son of Capt. Horace and grandson of Isaac Baldwin, Esq., was born in Litchfield, Jan. 7, 1803, and for more than twenty years was one of the editors and proprietors of the New Haven daily and weekly Register.

Amos Barnes, son of Mr. Enos Barnes, was born in Litchfield. He was an officer in actual service in the last war with Great Britain.

Lyman Beecher, D.D., was born in New Haven, Oct. 12, 1775; graduated at Yale College in 1797, and was ordained pastor of a church in East Hampton, L. I., in December, 1798, with a salary of three hundred dollars per year. In 1810, at the age of thirty-five years, he was installed pastor of the First Church in Litchfield, and remained here in that capacity for a period of sixteen years. This was, as he himself states, by far the most active and laborious part of his life. In addition to his ordinary pastoral services, he was probably more conspicuously identified with the establishment of the great benevolent associations of the day than any other country pastor in New England. Returning full of zeal from the first meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in 1812, he called together, in this village, several clergymen and laymen from various parts of the county, who organized the Litchfield County Foreign Mission Society, the first auxiliary of the American board. He was active in all the reforms of that period. He was three times married.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was born in Litchfield, June 24, 1813; graduated at Amherst College in 1834; was licensed to preach in April, 1838; and was settled as pastor of a church in Lawrenceburg, Ind., in the fall of the same year. From August, 1839, to October, 1847, he was pastor of a church in Indianapolis, Ind.; and since the last named date he has been pastor of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.

John Bird, son of Dr. Seth Bird, was born in Litchfield, Nov. 22, 1768; graduated at Yale College in 1786; practiced law for a few years in his native town; removed to Troy, N. Y., in 1794, and died there in the year 1806, aged thirty-eight years. He had been a member of the Legislature of New York, and a member of Congress from that State. Ex-President Van Buren, in speaking of him, said,—

"John Bird I did not know personally, but have always taken much interest in his character and career. He must, according to all accounts, have been one of the very ablest men in the State, though a very eccentric one. There have been but few men among us who have left behind them so many racy anecdotes illustrative of their peculiarities."

His first wife was a daughter of Col. Joshua Porter, of Salisbury; his second wife was Sally Buel, daughter of Mr. David Buel, of Troy, formerly of this town. He left several children.

Gen. John Ward Birge was born in Litchfield, Jan. 7, 1803, and in his youth went to reside with an uncle in Cazenovia, N. Y. He received his medical degree at Geneva College, and was a successful practitioner in Utica, where, as a surgeon and oculist, he had a high reputation.

George Beckwith Bissell, son of Mr. John Bissell, was born in Litchfield, Sept. 12, 1823; entered the United States navy in his youth. In August, 1846, he was attached to the United States brig "Truxton" when she was wrecked on the coast of Mexico, and with others was seized and held as a prisoner of war. On his release he made a visit to his native town; but soon rejoined the navy, and for eighteen months was attached to the scientific department at Washington. He joined the frigate "Cumberland" in New York, as sailing-master, on the 31st of August, and died at the naval hospital in Brooklyn, Sept. 10, 1848, aged twenty-five years.

Lyman Bissell, son of Mr. Hiram Bissell, was born in Litchfield, Oct. 19, 1812; was captain in the United States army, and paymaster of the New England regiment in the war with Mexico.

John P. Brace was born in Litchfield, Feb. 10, 1793; graduated at Williams College in 1812; and was for some years principal of the Litchfield Female Academy, and subsequently of the Hartford Female Seminary. For a long time he was one of the editors of the Hartford Courant.

Charles Loring Brace, the celebrated traveler, is a son of John P. Brace, Esq., and was born in Litchfield, June 19, 1826. Having graduated at Yale College in 1846 and pursued a course of theological studies, he spent several years traveling in Europe, as a part of the fruits of which he has given to the public three or four very interesting volumes,—viz., "Hungary in 1851," "Home Life in Germany," "The Norse Folk," etc. In May, 1851, during the Hungarian struggle for independence, Mr. Brace was seized as a spy by the Austrian authorities and imprisoned at Gross Wardein; but after a lapse of thirty days he was released through the intervention of Mr. McCurdy, then American minister to Austria.

Abraham Bradley, son of Abraham Bradley, Esq., was born in Litchfield, Feb. 21, 1767, studied law, and became a judge in Luzerne Co., Pa. From 1799 to 1829 he was first assistant postmaster-general of the United States.

Dr. Phineas Bradley, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, July 17, 1769; married Hannah Jones, of this town, and settled here as a physician and druggist. When the office of second assistant postmaster-general was created by Congress, Dr. Bradley was appointed and retained the position for about twenty-five years. He was a gentleman of wealth, and distinguished for his hospitality and benevolence. He died at his beautiful seat, "Clover Hill," two miles north of the national capital, in the spring of 1845, aged seventy-six.

William A. Bradley, son of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, July 25, 1794, and settled in Washington, D. C.

David Buel, Jr., was born in Litchfield, Oct. 22, 1784; graduated at Williams College in 1805; settled as a lawyer in Troy, where he still resides. In 1821 he was a delegate to the constitutional convention of his adopted State; for some years held the office of first judge of the Court of Common Pleas for Rensselaer County, and in 1842 he was elected a regent of the State University. From 1829 to 1847, Judge Buel was a trustee of Williams College.

Rev. Horace Bushnell, D.D., son of Ensign Bushnell, Esq., was born in Litchfield in 1802; graduated at Yale College in 1827, and was a tutor in that institution from 1829 to 1831. For the last twenty-seven years he has been pastor of the North Congregational Church in Hartford.

Julius Catlin, son of Mr. Grove Catlin, was born in Harwinton in 1799. When he was about one year old his parents removed to this village, and this continued to be his home for the succeeding twenty years, though at the age of fifteen he commenced his clerkship in Hartford. He became a successful merchant in that city, where he still resides. Many years ago he was a director of the Connecticut branch of the United States Bank, and was one of the committee appointed to wind up the affairs of that institution, when the parent bank had been crushed by the veto of Gen. Jackson. In 1846 he was appointed commissary-general of the State, and subsequently he held the office of auditor of public accounts. The President of the United States, in 1847, commissioned Col. Catlin as a member of the board of visitors to the National Military Academy at West Point. In the autumn of 1856, Col. Catlin and ex-Governor Dutton were chosen Presidential electors for the State at large. At the annual election in April, 1858, he was chosen Lieutenant-Governor of Connecticut, and was re-elected.

Putnam Catlin, son of Mr. Eli Catlin, was born in Litchfield, studied law with Gen. Tracy, and was admitted to the bar in this town in 1786. He settled in Montrose, Pa., and there held the office of judge of the Court of Common Pleas. He was the father of George Catlin, the celebrated artist and historian of the American Indians, who was himself educated in Litchfield.

John Allen Collier, son of Capt. Thomas Collier, editor of the Monitor, was born in Litchfield, Nov. 13, 1787; settled as a lawyer in Binghamton, Broome Co.,

N. Y. He was a member of Congress, comptroller of the State, commissioner to revise and codify the laws, senatorial elector for President and Vice-President of the United States, and delegate to and chairman of the Whig National Convention of 1848.

Gen. James Collier, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, May 30, 1789; settled in the State of New York, and was quartermaster and acting adjutant at the battle of Queenstown, and participated in that fight. In 1819 he removed to Steubenville, Ohio. He was a prominent citizen.

Julius Deming, an eminent merchant of Litchfield, was born in Lyme, April 15, 1755, and about the year 1781 commenced business in this village. A gentleman of remarkable energy and enterprise, he soon visited London, and made arrangements to import his goods direct from that city, which, probably, was not true of any other country merchant in Connecticut. He was universally recognized by the citizens as the most thorough and successful business man who has ever spent his life here. Prompt in his engagements, scrupulously upright in his dealings, and discreet and liberal in his benefactions, few men in any community ever enjoyed more implicitly the confidence of all. Mr. Deming had little taste for public life. He was three times elected a member of the House of Representatives, and for several years was one of the magistrates of this county. From 1801 to 1814 he served in the office of county treasurer. His position and influence were such that, had he been an aspirant for political honors, there were few offices within the gift of the people of this State which he might not have filled. He died in this town, Jan. 23, 1838, aged eighty-three years.

Miner R. Deming, son of Stephen Deming, Esq., was born in Sharon, Feb. 24, 1810; came to Litchfield with his parents in 1820, and continued to reside here for the next sixteen years. In 1836 he removed to Cincinnati; and in 1839 he became a resident of St. Mary's, Ill. As brigadier-general he was chief in command of the Illinois State troops during the famous Mormon war. Gen. Deming died suddenly, of brain fever, Sept. 10, 1845, while holding the office of high sheriff of Hancock County.

Col. Fisher Gay, son of John Gay, Esq., was born in Litchfield, Oct. 9, 1733; graduated at Yale College, and settled in Farmington, where he was long a justice of the peace and representative. In the early part of the Revolution he commanded a regiment of Connecticut troops sent for the defense of New York, in which city he died in 1776.

Uriel Holmes, Jr., a native of Hartland, graduated at Yale College in 1784, and settled in Litchfield as a lawyer a few years subsequently. He was elected a representative nine times, was a judge of the Litchfield County Court from 1814 to 1817, and during the latter year he was chosen a member of Congress. While residing in Litchfield he was thrown from his carriage in Canton, from the effects of which he died, May 18, 1827, aged sixty-two. Judge Holmes married a daughter of the Hon. Aaron Austin, and had three children,—viz., Henry, M.D., a distinguished physician in Hartford; Uriel, who died July 4, 1818, while a member of the theological seminary at Andover; Caroline, who died young.

Charles P. Huntington, son of the Rev. Dan Huntington, was born in Litchfield, March 24, 1802; graduated at Harvard College in 1822; settled as a lawyer in Northampton, Mass.; he filled various official positions.

Col. Charles Kilbourn, son of Mr. David Kilbourn, was born in Litchfield, March 3, 1758; fled to Canada in the Revolution, and finally settled near Lake Memphremagog, in Stanstead, L. C., where he erected mills of various kinds. The locality still bears the name of Killbourn's Mills on many English and American maps. In the war of 1812 he commanded a corps of provincial troops known as the Frontier Light Infantry. He was also for many years a magistrate, and justice of the Commissioners' Court. Col. Kilbourn died in Stanstead, June 19, 1834, aged seventy-six.

Ephraim Kirby, son of Mr. Abraham Kirby, was born in Litchfield, Feb. 22, 1757; studied law and settled in his native town. He was often chosen a representative; appointed supervisor of the national revenue for the State of Connecticut in 1801, and United States judge for the Territory of Louisiana in 1804. While on his way to New Orleans, whither the duties of his office called him, he died at Fort Stoddard, Mississippi Territory, Oct. 2, 1804, aged forty-seven. Col. Kirby married Ruth, daughter of Reynold Marvin, Esq., and left eight children. He published a volume of law reports in 1789, the first in the United States.

Maj. Reynold M. Kirby, United States army, a son of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, March 13, 1790. For many years before his death he was assistant adjutant-general of the army.

Col. Edmund Kirby, United States army, a brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, April 8, 1794; entered the army as a lieutenant in 1812; appointed aid-de-camp to his father-in-law, Maj-Gen. Brown; served in the Blackhawk, Creek, and Seminole wars; was chief of the pay department, and aid-de-camp to the commander-in-chief during the late war with Mexico. He died at Avon Springs, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1849, aged fifty-five. On the election of President Taylor, Col. Kirby was frequently referred to in the public prints as a probable member of the new cabinet.

Rev. Ethan Osborn, son of Capt. John Osborn, was born in Litchfield, Aug. 21, 1758; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1784, and was settled as pastor of the Congregational Church in Fairfield, N. J., in 1789.

John M. Peck., D.D., son of Mr. Asa Peck, was born in Litchfield, Oct. 31, 1789, and became a celebrated Baptist preacher in Illinois.

William V. Peck was born of Litchfield parents in Cayuga Co., N. Y., where his father, Mr. Virgil Peck, died during his infancy. When the subject of this paragraph was three years old his mother returned with him to this town, and subsequently married Dr. Abel Catlin, in whose family he was brought up. After spending about twenty years in this village he settled as a lawyer in Ohio, and was a judge of the Supreme Court of that State.

Professor William G. Peck, son of Mr. Alfred Peck, was born in Litchfield, Oct. 16, 1820; graduated at West Point, where he was for a few years assistant professor of mathematics. As lieutenant of topographical engineers in the United States army, he was associated with Col. Fremont in his celebrated exploring expeditions. He has since been a professor in the University of Michigan, and is now professor of mathematics in Columbia College, New York. He married Elizabeth M., daughter of Professor Charles Davies, LL.D.

Samuel Shether Phelps, son of Capt. John Phelps, was born May 13, 1793; graduated at Yale College and the Litchfield Law-School, and settled in Middlebury, Vt. Having been successively a paymaster in the war of 1812, aid-de-camp to Governor Galusha, colonel, member of the Council of Censors, member of the Legislative Council, and judge of the Supreme Court, he was elected a senator in Congress in 1838, an office which he held for twelve years. As a lawyer and statesman he ranked with Clay, Webster, Crittenden, and Clayton. Judge Phelps died in 1857.

Col. John Pierce, son of Mr. John Pierce, of Litchfield, early entered the public service, and rose to the rank of paymaster-general in the army, and was a commissioner for settling the accounts of the army. Though his parents never resided out of Litchfield after their marriage, Col. Pierce is said to have been born at the house of his maternal grandfather, Maj. John Patterson, in Farmington. Col. Pierce died in New York, Aug. 6, 1788. He was a brother of the late Miss Sarah Pierce, founder and principal of the Litchfield Female Academy.

John Pierpont, son of Mr. James Pierpont, was born in Litchfield, April 6, 1785; graduated at Yale College and at the Litchfield Law-School, and settled in Newburyport, Mass., as a lawyer. Abandoning the legal profession, he entered the ministry of the Unitarian denomination, and was for many years pastor of the Hollis Street Church, Boston.

Robert Pierpont, son of Mr. David Pierpont, was born in Litchfield, May 4, 1791; studied law and settled in Rutland, Vt. He was Lieutenant-Governor of that State and judge of the Supreme Court.

John Pierpont, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, Sept. 10, 1805; graduated at the law-school in this town, and settled in Vergennes, Vt. He was a judge of the Supreme Court of that State.

Albert Sedgwick was born in Cornwall Hollow in the year 1802; removed to Litchfield in 1830, and continued to reside here for the succeeding twenty-five years. In 1834 he was appointed high sheriff of this county, an office which he continued to hold (with the exception of one term of three years) until 1854, when he was appointed by the Legislature commissioner of the school fund of Connecticut.

Horatio Seymour, LL.D., son of Maj. Moses Seymour, was born in Litchfield, May 31, 1778; graduated at Yale College and at the Litchfield Law-School, and settled in Middlebury, Vt., where he died a year or two since. He was a member of the State Council from 1809 to 1816; and of the United States Senate from 1821 to 1833. In 1834 he was the Whig candidate for Governor of Vermont, but the anti-Masonic candidate was elected. He was also for a few years judge of probate. Judge Seymour received the degree of Doctor of Laws from his alma mater in 1847.

Henry Seymour, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, May 30, 1780; settled as a merchant at Pompey, Onondaga Co., N. Y., where he became wealthy. Removing to Utica, he died there, Aug. 26, 1837. He was a representative, senator, canal commissioner, mayor of Utica, and president of the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company. Ex-Governor Horatio Seymour, LL.D., of New York, is his son.

Daniel Sheldon, Jr., son of Dr. Daniel Sheldon, was born in the adjoining town of Washington in 1780, and during the following year his parents removed to Litchfield; and here the subject of this sketch continued to reside until he entered public life. Graduating at the Litchfield Law-School in 1799, he accepted a clerkship in the treasury department, and retained it until the appointment of Mr. Gallatin as ambassador to France, when he was nominated and confirmed as secretary of legation to that country. When the ambassador was recalled, Mr. Sheldon remained in France as charge d'affaires until the arrival of Mr. Gallatin's successor. He died in Marseilles, April 14, 1828, aged forty-eight. His funeral was attended by all the foreign ministers and consuls present in the city, and the flags of all the American ships in port were placed at half-mast.

Roger Skinner, son of Gen. Timothy Skinner, was born in Litchfield, June 10, 1773; became a lawyer, and removed from this town to Sandy Hill, N. Y., in 1806, where he was elected a representative in 1810, 1811, and 1812, and a senator from 1818 to 1821. In 1820 he was a member of the Council of Appointment; from 1815 to 1819, United States attorney for the Northern District of New York; and from 1819 until his death judge of the United States District Court. On being appointed judge he became a resident of Albany, at which place he died Aug. 19, 1825. He was an intimate friend of the Hon. Martin Van Buren.

Richard Skinner, LL.D., brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, May 30, 1778; graduated at the law-school in his native town, and settled in Manchester, Vt., in 1800. He became State's attorney, speaker of the House, judge of probate, member of Congress, chief justice of the State, and Governor. He received the degree of LL.D. from Middlebury College. Governor Skinner died in Middlebury, May 23, 1833, aged fifty-five.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, daughter of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, D.D., was born in Litchfield, and married the Rev. Dr. Stowe. She is the author of "The Mayflower," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Dred, a Tale of the Dismal Swamp," "Sunny Memories of Foreign Lands," etc.

Frederick A. Tallmadge, son of Col. Benjamin Tallmadge, was born in Litchfield, Aug. 29, 1792; graduated at Yale College in 1811, and settled as a lawyer in New York City, his present residence. From 1834 to 1836 he was an alderman; from 1836 to 1840, a member of the State senate, of which body he was elected president; from 1840 to 1845 and from 1848 to 1853 he was recorder of the city, and chief justice of the police court; and from 1846 to 1848 he was a member of Congress, etc.

Gen. Uriah Tracy, a native of Norwich, and a graduate of Yale College, settled as a lawyer in Litchfield in 1780, and here spent his entire professional life. He was a representative at nine sessions, member of Congress three years, and United States senator eleven years, and rose to the rank of major-general of militia. He was one of the most brilliant men of his day. Gen. Tracy died in Washington City in 1807, and was the first person buried in the Congressional Cemetery.

Gen. Elijah Wadsworth was born in Hartford, Nov. 14, 1747; settled in Litchfield previous to the Revolution; was captain in Sheldon's Regiment of Light Dragoons during nearly the entire war.

John Welch, son of Maj. David Welch, was born in Litchfield, Sept. 23, 1759; graduated at Yale College in 1778; settled as a merchant in his native town, and continued to reside here until his death, which took place Dec. 26, 1845. He was successively a justice of the peace, representative, senator, member of the Constitutional Convention, associate judge of the County Court, and a candidate for Congress. He was successful in business, and left a large estate.

Henry W. Wessells, son of Dr. Ashbel Wessells, was born in Litchfield, Feb. 20, 1809; graduated at West Point in 1833, and entered the army as brevet second lieutenant. He was actively engaged in the Creek war, the Florida war, the war with Mexico, and the late Rebellion. He is lieutenant-colonel in the regular army, and brigadier-general by brevet.

Oliver Wolcott, Jr., LL.D., was born in Litchfield, Jan. 11, 1760, and died in New York, June 2, 1833. He graduated at Yale College, and was successively comptroller of this State, auditor and secretary of the United States treasury, judge of the United States Circuit Court, president of the Bank of America, president of the Constitutional Convention of Connecticut, and Governor of his native State from 1817 to 1827. He was one of the most illustrious statesmen of the early days of the republic,—the intimate friend and adviser of Washington, Adams, and Hamilton,—and, for some time previous to his decease, he was the last surviving member of Washington's cabinet.

Frederick Wolcott, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, Nov. 2, 1767; graduated at Yale College in 1787, and died in his native town May 28, 1837. For more than forty years he was constantly in public life—as clerk of the courts, judge of probate, representative, member of the State Council, senator, etc. No man ever lived in the town who enjoyed more implicitly the confidence of the public. There was a dignity and nobleness in his person and manner which left their impress on all who came within the sphere of his influence.

Gen. Morris Woodruff, son of Mr. James Woodruff, was born in Litchfield, Sept. 3, 1777; educated at Morris Academy, and was bred a merchant. He commenced his mercantile life with Messrs. David Leavitt and Simeon Harrison; and after his connection with them was dissolved he prosecuted the business chiefly on his own account for many years. He was through life much employed as executor, administrator, and commissioner, in settling estates, and as an arbitrator, auditor, and committee appointed by the courts. He was an active and influential member of the church and ecclesiastical society, and of the community generally to which he belonged; repeatedly discharged the duties of various public offices; represented the town of Litchfield in the Legislature fourteen sessions, and was a magistrate of the county twenty-six years. In 1818 he was appointed brigadier-general of the Sixth Brigade; and in 1824 the Legislature appointed him major-general of the Third Division. From 1829 until his death—a period of eleven years—he held the office of a judge of the County Court, and that of commissioner, which succeeded it; and in November, 1832, he was chosen by the voters of the State at large an elector of President and Vice-President of the United States. In all the affairs of life, Gen. Woodruff was distinguished by great activity, energy, perseverance, accuracy, and fidelity to whatever trust he assumed. Of high integrity himself, he was stern in requiring from others observance of its dictates. Ready to do justice to others; keenly alive to every sense of wrong; penetrating in his scrutiny into the conduct and motives of others; convincing rather than persuasive in his intercourse with men, he impelled their concurrence in his views by producing confidence in the soundness of his judgment and the correctness of his purposes. He was steadfast in his friendships, and few men retained with equal warmth the intimacies begun in early years. The associates of his boyhood were through life his most confiding and devoted friends. The dependence of his neighbors and friends on him for advice and assistance was very great; their confidence was never abused, their reliance never failed; and so his means of usefulness among them were large, and his influence extensive. In his domestic relations he was affectionate and kind, inflexible in retaining a high standard of both filial and parental duty, and never failed to show that the highest good of those who were dependent upon him was his invariable motive in all his intercourse with them. Gen. Woodruff was nearly six feet in height, stout, erect, active, and of more than ordinary physical strength. Of robust and vigorous frame and sound constitution, his health was rarely interrupted, and promise of a green old age seemed singularly certain. But in the spring of 1839 his system received a shock, followed by an affection of the liver, under which he declined, and on the 17th of May, 1840, he died, illustrating in his dying hour the peace and consolation of the Christian's hope and confidence in the Saviour in whose church on earth he had been numbered for many years. His remains are interred in our East burying-ground, where a handsome monument has been erected to his memory. Gen. Woodruff married Candace, eldest daughter of Lewis Catlin, Esq., of Harwinton. Their children were George C., who still resides in Litchfield, and is well known to our readers as a prominent member of the bar of Litchfield County; Lucy M., who married Hon. O. S. Seymour, of Litchfield, ex-chief justice of Connecticut; Hon. Lewis B., of New York, late circuit judge of the Second Judicial District of the United States, embracing the States of New York, Connecticut, and Vermont; Reuben M., M.D., a physician of high attainments, who died young in 1849; James, who died in infancy.

Clark Woodruff, brother of the preceding, was born in Litchfield, Aug. 23, 1791, and was educated at Morris Academy. In 1810 he left his native town, and, passing down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, he soon established himself as a lawyer in St. Francisville, in the present State of Louisiana. For many years he was reputed one of the ablest, most eloquent, and successful advocates at the bar; and in the spring of 1828 he was appointed judge of the Eighth Judicial District of the State of Louisiana. He also held the office of State auditor and commissioner, charged with the subject of public improvements in that State, in which he took an active interest. He was also a trustee of Louisiana College. On resigning his judgeship he removed to New Orleans, where he resided until a short time previous to his death. He departed this life at his country-seat at Carrollton, on the Mississippi, about six miles above that city, on the 25th of November, 1851. Judge Woodruff was a polished, courtly gentleman, of fine address, pleasing manners, and cultivated mind. He married Matilda Bradford, of St. Francisville, a highly accomplished lady, by whom he had three children. The only survivor, Mrs. Octavia Besancon, now lives at Carrollton, at the late residence of her father.

The following named citizens of Litchfield have occupied the public stations annexed to their names:

Adams, Andrew, chief justice Superior Court.
Allen, Ethan, general Revolutionary army.
Allen, John, representative in Congress.
Allen, John W., representative in Congress, Ohio.
Andrews, Charles B., Governor of Connecticut.
Beers, Seth P., commissioner of school fund.
Beecher, Lyman, D.D., president Lane Seminary.
Beecher, Edward, D.D., president Illinois College.
Beecher, Henry W., Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.
Bird, John, representative in Congress.
Bradley, Abraham, assistant postmaster-general.
Bradley, Phineas, assistant postmaster-general.
Bushnell, Horace, D.D., pastor and author, Hartford.
Catlin, Julius, Lieutenant-Governor.
Church, Samuel, chief justice Supreme Court.
Collier, John A., comptroller, representative in Congress, New York.
Dutton, Henry, Governor, judge Supreme Court.
Deming, Julius, commissary Revolutionary war.
Gould, James, judge Supreme Court.
Gould, William T, judge, Georgia.
Gould, George, judge Supreme Court, New York.
Hollister, G. H., minister to Hayti.
Holmes, Uriel, judge, representative in Congress.
Hubbard, John H., representative in Congress.
Huntington, Jabez W., representative and senator in Congress, judge Supreme Court.
Huntington, Charles P., judge Superior Court, Massachusetts.
Kirby, Ephraim, United States judge, Mississippi.
Lyon, Matthew, representative in Congress, Vermont and Kentucky.
Marvin, Reynold, king's attorney.
Miner, Phineas, representative in Congress.
Peck, William V., judge Supreme Court, Ohio.
Phelps, Samuel S., judge, United States senator, Vermont.
Pierpont, John, poet, pastor.
Pierpont, Robert, Lieutenant-Governor, judge Supreme Court, Vermont.
Pierpont, John, chief judge Supreme Court, Vermont.
Reeve, Tapping, chief justice Supreme Court.
Sanford, David C., judge Supreme Court.
Sedgwick, Albert, commissioner of the school fund.
Seymour, Horatio, United States senator, Vermont.
Seymour, Origen S., representative in Congress, chief justice Supreme Court.
Sheldon, Daniel, secretary of legation, France.
Skinner, Roger, United States district judge, New York.
Skinner, Richard, representative in Congress, chief justice Supreme Court, Governor Vermont.
Smith, Joseph L., United States judge, East Florida.
Smith, Truman, representative and senator in United States Congress.
Strong, Jedediah, representative in Congress.
Tallmadge, Benjamin, major Revolutionary army, representative in Congress.
Tallmadge, Frederick A., recorder New York City.
Tracy, Uriah, representative and senator in Congress.
Wolcott, Oliver, representative in Congress, signer Declaration of Independence, Governor.
Wolcott, Oliver, secretary of treasury, United States judge, Governor.
Woodruff, Clark, judge, Louisiana.
Woodruff, George C., representative in Congress.
Woodruff, Lewis B., judge Supreme Court, Court of Appeals, New York, and United States Circuit Court.
Woodruff, George M., railroad common laws.
Wright, John C., representative in Congress, judge, Ohio.

NATIVE AND RESIDENT GRADUATES, INCLUDING THOSE WHO HAVE RECEIVED HONORARY DEGREES.

The figures indicate the year of graduation. The † after the name indicates an honorary degree.

1848.—Edward P. and Frederick R. Abbe,* Yale, clergymen in Massachusetts.
1825.—Elisha S. Abernethy, Yale, lawyer; now resides in Bridgeport.
1760.—Andrew Adams, LL.D., Yale, chief justice of Connecticut.

* Born in this town.

1791.—John Allen,† Yale, lawyer and member of Congress.
1840.—John W. Allen,*† Yale, lawyer of Cleveland, Ohio; member of Congress.
1793.—Asa Bacon, Yale, an eminent lawyer; died in New Haven in 1857.
1833.—E. Champion Bacon,* Yale, lawyer, legislator; died at Seville, Spain, 1845.
1838.—Francis Bacon,* Yale, lawyer, senator, major-general.
1850.—Leonard W. Bacon, Yale, present pastor of the Congregational Church, Norwich.
1776.—Ashbel Baldwin,* Yale, formerly rector of St. Michael's, Litchfield.
1810.—Charles A. Baldwin,* Williams, lawyer in State of New York; died 1818.
1735.—Isaac Baldwin, Yale, lawyer, legislator, clerk of the courts; died in 1805.
1774.—Isaac Baldwin, Jr.,* Yale, lawyer and legislator; died in Pompey, N. Y., 1830.
1801.—Isaac Baldwin (3d),* Yale, lawyer; died in 1844. Samuel S. Baldwin,* Yale, lawyer; died in 1854.
1766.—George Beckwith, Yale, pastor of the church in South Farms.
1827.—Josiah G. Beckwith, M D., Union, a practicing physician in this town.
1797.—Lyman Beecher, D.D., Yale, former pastor of the First Church in this town.
1833.—Charles Beecher,* Bowdoin, pastor.
1822.—Edward Beecher, D.D., Yale, late president Illinois College, author, etc.
1828.—George Beecher, Yale, died while pastor of a church in Chillicothe, Ohio.
1834.—Henry Ward Beecher,* Amherst, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn.
1843.—Thomas K. Beecher,* Illinois, now pastor in Elmira, N. Y.
1833.—William H. Beecher,† Yale, formerly pastor in Middletown, etc.
1842.—Frederick D. Beeman, Yale, lawyer, and clerk of the courts.
1800.—Amos Benedict, Yale, lawyer; died in this town in 1816.
1846.—Andrew D. Benedict,* Kenyon, Episcopal clergyman.
1847.—Samuel Benedict,* Trinity, late assistant rector Trinity Church, New Haven.
1846.—Alfred H. Beers, M.D.,* Trinity, physician in Buffalo, N. Y.
1839.—George W. Beers,* Trinity, former member of the bar, Litchfield.
1786.—John Bird,* Yale, lawyer in Litchfield and Troy, N. Y.; member of Congress.
1851.—Edward Bissell,* Yale, lawyer in Fon du Lac, Wis.
1849.—Oscar Bissell,* Yale, pastor of a church in Westminster, N. H.
1833.—William Bissell, M.D.,* Yale, physician in Salisbury.
1833.—Noah Bishop,* Yale, pastor of a church in or near Springfield, Ohio.
1812.—John P. Brace,* Williams, teacher, author, editor.
1846.—Charles Loring Brace,* Yale, author, secretary Children's Aid Society, N. Y.
1850.—Jonathan Brace, D.D.,† Yale, now pastor of a church in Milford.
1843.—John J. Brandagee, Yale, former rector of St. Michael's, Litchfield.
1812.—Solyman Brown,* Yale, dentist, author, clergyman, New York City.
1836.—Frederick Buel, Yale, agent American Bible Society, California.
1826.—William P. Buel, M.D., Yale, physician on California steamer
1844.—Henry W. Buel, M.D.,* physician in his native town.
1805.—David Buel, Jr.,* Williams, of Troy, N. Y., lawyer, judge, regent university.
1836.—Joshua D. Berry, Middlebury, late president Shelby College, Kentucky.
1832.—Amos B. Beach, Union, late rector St. Paul's, Bantam Falls.
1827.—Horace Bushnell, D.D.,* Yale, pastor of North Church, Hartford, author, etc.
1833.—David Butler, D.D.,† Washington, former rector St. Michael's.
1787.—Joseph E. Camp, Yale, pastor church in Northfield.
1822.—Albert B. Camp,* Yale, pastor in Bridgewater, Ashby, Mass., etc.
1786.—Lynde Catlin,* Yale, merchant, and president Merchants' Bank, New York.
1839.—John Catlin,* Yale, teacher, etc.; resides in Northfield.
1751.—Judah Champion, Yale, second pastor of the First Church in this town.
1780.—Amos Chase, Dartmouth, pastor church in South Farms.
1803.—Samuel Church, LL.D., Yale, chief justice of Connecticut.
1844.—John Churchill,*† Yale, former pastor of a church in Woodbury.

* Born in this town.

1718.—Timothy Collins, Yale, first pastor of the First Church in this town.
1758.—Ambrose Collins,* Yale, went a missionary to the Indians, and died.
1758.—Thomas Davies, Yale, former rector of St. Michael's.
1811.—William Deming,* Yale.
1829.—George C. V. Eastman, Middlebury, former rector of church in Bantam Falls.
1822.—Samuel Fuller, D.D., Union, late president Kenyon College, Ohio.
1759.—Fisher Gay,* Yale, colonel Revolutionary army; legislator, magistrate.
1791.—James Gould, LL.D., Yale, judge Supreme Court, principal Law-School.
1827.—George Gould,* Yale, of Troy, N. Y., now judge Supreme Court, N. Y.
1824.—James R. Gould,* Yale, lawyer; died in Augusta, Ga., 1830.
1816.—William T. Gould,* Yale, judge Court of Oyer and Terminer, Augusta, Ga.
1839.—John M. Grant,* Yale, colporteur in Maryland, etc.
1844.—William H. Guernsey,* Yale, clergyman; died in Savannah, Ga., 1850.
1849.—Luther B. Hart, Union, late pastor Baptist Church, North Norfolk.
1820.—Laurens P. Hickok, D.D., Union, now vice-president Union College.
1851.—George A. Hickox, Trinity, now a practicing lawyer in this town, and editor and proprietor Litchfield Enquirer.
1840.—Gideon H. Hollister, Yale, lawyer, clerk of the courts, senator, foreign minister; deceased.
1784.—Uriel Holmes, Jr., Yale, lawyer, judge, member of Congress.
1816.—Uriel Holmes, Jr.,* Yale, died July 3, 1818, while member Theological Seminary, Andover.
1784.—Lemuel Hopkins, M.D.,† Yale, poet, etc.
1794.—Dan Huntington, Yale, former pastor of the First Church in this town.
1822.—Charles P. Huntington,* Harvard, judge Superior Court, Boston, Mass.
1806.—Jabez W. Huntington, Yale, lawyer, judge, member of Congress, senator.
1824.—William P. Huntington,* Harvard, pastor in Massachusetts and Illinois; artist, etc.
1843.—George J. Harrison, Union, now Congregational minister in Milton.
1792.—Isaac Jones, Yale, minister of St. Michael's parish.
1791.—Benjamin Judd, Yale, former pastor in Milton.
1837.—James Kilbourn,* Yale, pastor in Bridgewater, Middle Haddam, and Illinois.
1840.—John Kilbourn, Yale, teacher in State of New York.
1853.—P. K. Kilbourn,*† Union, author of "History of Litchfield."
1787.—Ephraim Kirby,*† Yale, lawyer, judge, author of "Kirby's Reports."
1844.—William H. Lewis, D.D.,*† Kenyon, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Brooklyn.
1788.—Daniel W. Lewis, Yale, lawyer, State's attorney.
1770.—Samuel Lyman, Yale, removed to Springfield, Mass; member of Congress.
1783.—Lynde Lord, Jr.,* Yale, died in his native town in 1813.
1812.—Stephen Mason,* Williams, former pastor in Washington.
1748.—Reynold Marvin, Yale, lawyer, king's attorney, died here July 30, 1802.
1786.—Samuel Marsh,* Yale, lawyer in his native town, and in Norfolk, Va. Truman Marsh,* rector of St. Michael's twenty-seven years; died here in 1851.
1775.—James Morris,* Yale, teacher, magistrate, legislator, captain; died 1829.
1803.—James Morris, Jr.,* Yale, tutor University of Georgia; died in Sunbury, Ga.
1804.—Reuben S. Morris,* Yale, lawyer; died in Utica, N. Y., in 1832.
1848.—Dwight Morris,* Union, lawyer in Bridgeport, judge of probate, legislator, Secretary of State, etc.
1775.—Benjamin Osborn,* Dartmouth, pastor in Tinmouth, Vt., author; died 1818.
1779.—Isaac Osborn,* Dartmouth, farmer, teacher, deacon; died in Litchfield, 1826. Jeremiah Osborn,* Dartmouth, farmer; died in Litchfield in 1829.
1781.—Jacob Osborn,* Dartmouth, farmer and teacher, died in Litchfield in 1821; Ethan Osborn, Dartmouth, pastor Fairfield, N. J., fifty-four years; died in his hundredth year.

* Born in this town.

1729.—Solomon Palmer, Yale, rector of St. Michael's; died in this town in 1771.

1750.—Benjamin Palmer, Yale; died in 1780.

1853.—John M. Peck, D.D.,† Harvard, Baptist pastor in Illinois; author; died 1858. William G. Peck,† Trinity (also at West Point), Professor of Mathematics, Columbia College, N. Y.

1842.—James Peck,* Union, merchant at La Crosse, Wis.

1807.—Amos Pettingill, Harvard, pastor church in South Farms, 1816–1822.

1837.—John H. Pettingill,* Yale, District Secretary American Board, Albany, N. Y.

1804.—John Pierpont, Yale,* clergyman in Boston, author, lecturer, poet.

1813.—Charles Perkins, Yale, lawyer; died in London, Eng., Nov. 18, 1856, aged sixty-four.

1763.—Tapping Reeve, LL.D., Princeton, chief justice of Connecticut.

1802.—Aaron Burr Reeve,* Yale, lawyer in Troy, N. Y.; died in 1809.

1829.—Tapping Burr Reeve;* died in Litchfield in 1829.

1833.—James Richards, D.D., Union, was principal Elm Park Collegiate Institute.

1858.—James Richards, Jr., Princeton, Professor Ancient Languages and Mathematics in Elm Park Collegiate Institute.

1831.—Rollin Sanford,* Yale, merchant in Brooklyn, N. Y.; candidate for Congress.

1797.—Horatio Seymour, LL.D.,* Yale, lawyer, U. S. senator from Vermont twelve years.

1824.—Origen S. Seymour, LL.D.,*† Yale, member of Congress, judge Superior Court, chief justice of the Superior Court of Errors.

1853.—Edward W. Seymour,* Yale, lawyer.

1730.—Elisha Sheldon, Yale, legislator and judge; died in Litchfield in 1779.

1800.—Elisha Sheldon, M.D.,* Yale, died in 1832; buried in Litchfield.

——. Richard Skinner, LL.D.,*† Middlebury, Governor and chief justice of Vermont.

1790.—Aaron Smith, Yale, lawyer, legislator, and merchant; died in this town in 1834.

1806.—Lucius Smith, Yale, merchant, colonel in war with Great Britain, clergyman.

1757.—Reuben Smith, Yale, physician, magistrate, county treasurer; died in 1804.

1815.—Truman Smith, Yale, lawyer, member of Congress, U. S. senator.

1761.—Jedediah Strong,* Yale, member Continental Congress, legislator, etc.

1823.—John S. Stone, D.D., Union, former rector of St. Michael's.

1838.—Benjamin W. Stone, Trinity, former rector of St. Michael's.

1857.—Storrs O. Seymour,* Yale, rector of St. Michael's.

1822.—William Sheldon,* Yale, merchant; died in France in 1826.

1844.—Benjamin L. Swan,† Yale.

1773.—Benjamin Tallmadge, Yale, member of Congress sixteen years.

1830.—Benjamin Tallmadge, Jr.,*† Yale, lieutenant U.S.N.; died off Gibraltar in 1830.

1811.—Frederick A. Tallmadge,* Yale, recorder New York City, member of Congress.

1778.—Uriah Tracy, Yale, lawyer, member of Congress, U. S. senator, general.

1778.—Joseph Vaill, Dartmouth, pastor in Hadlyme; died 1838, after a ministry of fifty-eight years.

1824.—Hermon L. Vaill,* Yale, pastor in East Lyme; also Seneca Falls, N. Y.

1848.—Louis F. Wadsworth,* Trinity, lawyer in New York City, deputy clerk assembly.

1837.—Charles Wadsworth, D.D.,* Union, pastor Arch Street Church, Philadelphia.

1795.—Holland Weeks,* Dartmouth, pastor in Waterbury and in Vermont.

1807.—William R. Weeks, D.D., Princeton; died 1848, aged sixty-six.

1778.—John Welch,* Yale, merchant, judge, legislator; died in 1844.

1805.—William Welch,* Yale, captain U.S.A.; died in the public service in 1811.

1827.—William H. Welch,* Yale, late chief justice of Minnesota Territory.

1747.—Oliver Wolcott, LL.D., Governor, signer Declaration of Independence.

* Born in this town.

1778.—Oliver Wolcott, Jr., LL.D.,* Yale, Governor, Secretary U. S. Treasury, etc.

1786.—Frederick Wolcott,* Yale, lawyer, legislator, judge of probate.

1779.—Ezekiel Woodruff,* Yale, lawyer, adjutant Revolutionary army.

1849.—Curtis T. Woodruff,* Yale, rector Episcopal Church in Woodbury.

1825.—George C. Woodruff,* Yale, lawyer, legislator, judge of probate, member of Congress.

1857.—George M. Woodruff,* Yale, lawyer, judge of probate, railroad commissioner.

1830.—Lewis B. Woodruff,* Yale, judge Superior Court, New York City, circuit judge U. S.

1809.—Simeon Woodruff,* Yale, clergyman, settled at the West.

1836.—Lucius H. Woodruff,* Yale, teacher in Insane Retreat, Hartford; died in 1852.

1803.—Samuel Whittlesey,* Yale, pastor at Washington and elsewhere.

1851.—Julius M. Willey, Trinity, former rector of St. Michael's.†

YALE.

Wm. Beebe, 1873; Wm. B. Clarke, 1849; Marshall R. Gaines, 1865; John T. Hubbard, 1880; T. Ephraim Mower, 1878; D. D. T. McLaughlin, 1834; Allan McLean, 1865; Dickinson W. Richards, 1880; George Richards, 1872; Wm. R. Richards, 1876; George D. Watrous, 1879.

PHYSICIANS.

The following is a list of physicians who have practiced in this town:

Timothy Collins, from Guilford, the first clergyman and physician in the town, preached and practiced here from 1721 till his death, in 1777; Thomas Little, Seth Bird, Daniel Huntington, Phineas Bradley, Samuel Catlin, Hosea Hulbert, Daniel Sheldon, Phineas Smith, Comfort Bradley, Partridge Parsons, Robert Catlin, Abel Catlin, John M. West, Reuben S. Woodward, Isaac Marsh, Joseph Parker, William Buel, Samuel Buel, Alanson Abbe, Manly Peters, Norman Landon, John W. Russell, Josiah Barnes, Moses A. Lee, Anson Wildman, John S. Wolcott, Reuben M. Woodruff, Charles Vaill, Garry H. Minor, Benjamin Welch, Jr., Caleb Ticknor, Samuel R. Childs, William Deming, James K. Wallace, George Seymour, A. Sidney Lewis, Eliada Osborn, David E. Bostwick, Orson Buel (botanic), E. B. W. Camp.

The practicing physicians at present are as follows:

Henry W. Buel, Willis J. Beach, William Deming, H. E. Gates, J. J. Newcomb, Litchfield; J. K. Wallace, Bantam; E. L. Blake, Northfield; Josiah G. Beckwith, Litchfield; Wm. Porter was here in 1873.

PRESENT LAWYERS.

Origen S. Seymour, George C. Woodruff, Henry B. Groves, George A. Hickox, Charles B. Andrews, Wm. L. Ransom, George M. Woodruff, Frank W. Wessells, Dwight C. Kilbourne, Henry H. Prescott, Edward W. Seymour.

CHAPTER XIV.

LITCHFIELD (Continued).

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

Incorporation of the Town—First Town Officers Elected—Representatives from 1740–1882—Military History.

UNDER the original grant this section was called Bantam, and was incorporated as the town of Litchfield in 1724. The record of what appears to be the first town-meeting has no date. At this meeting a committee, consisting of John Buel and Nathaniel Smith, was appointed to hire a minister.

* Born in this town.

† The above list to name of Junius M. Willey is substantially as it appeared in Kilbourne's "History of Litchfield." It is impossible after such a lapse of time to continue the personal history of each person.

"The first meeting for the choice of town officers was held Dec. 1721, and resulted as follows: John Marsh, town clerk; John Buel, Nathaniel Hosford, John Marsh, selectmen; William Goodrich, constable and collector; Benjamin Gibbs and Thomas Lee, surveyors; Eleazor Strong and Samuel Root, fence-viewers; Daniel Culver, hayward; Joseph Bird, collector of minister's rate.

"The only person 'admitted an inhabitant' at this meeting was Mr. Joseph Kilbourn, from Wethersfield, who had recently purchased one-thirtieth part of the township,—being the original rights of Messrs. Mann and Peet.

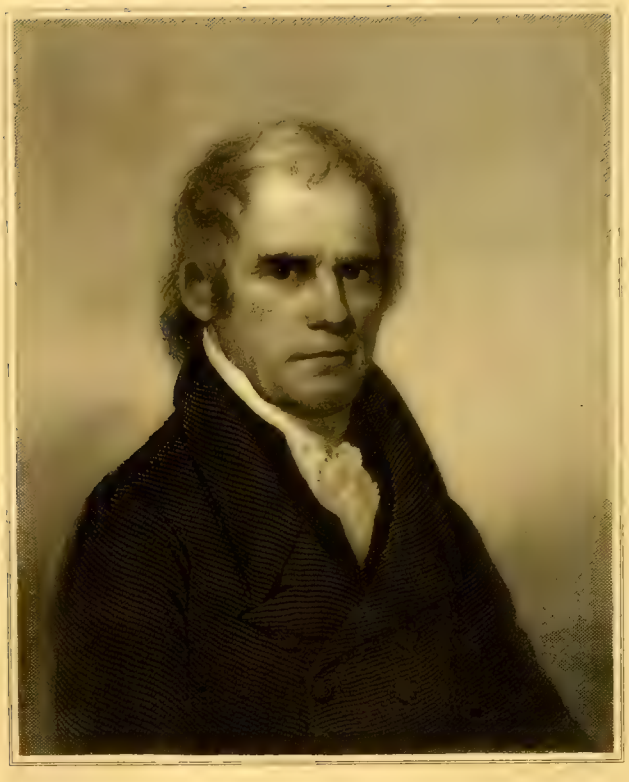
"On the 6th of February, 1721–22, Messrs. Buel and Marsh were voted 'the use of the stream of Bantam River and thirty acres of land,' on condition that they would erect a grist-mill and keep the same in order; and Messrs. Jacob Griswold, William Goodrich, and Benjamin Gibbs were designated to lay out the land for their use.

"On the 8th of the ensuing May, Messrs. Buel, Marsh, Smith, and Hosford were appointed a committee, and fully empowered by the town to negotiate a settlement of the boundary line between Litchfield and Waterbury with a committee appointed by the proprietors of the latter town. At the same time Messrs. Buel and Marsh were directed to petition the General Assembly, on the town's behalf, 'for liberty to set up a church and society in Litchfield.'

"It had been one of the conditions of the several deeds of conveyance to the original proprietors, that the grantees or their sons should build a tenantable house on each home-lot, or division, not less than sixteen feet square, and personally inhabit the same by the last day of May, 1721, and for three years ensuing; and no one was permitted 'to leave or dispose of his share for five years thereafter, without the consent of the first planters.' This was a wise provision, growing out of the dependent and exposed condition of a settlement in the wilderness. Not only was each individual purchaser expected to encourage the settlement by his personal presence and labors, but his assistance in planning and executing the various projects designed for the promotion of the public welfare was deemed indispensable. His proprietorship in these 'western lands' was no sinecure, resorted to for purposes of speculation. He must bear his full share of the burthens and perils incident to the life of a pioneer. For divers reasons, several of the first purchasers, as has been intimated, failed to comply with these terms. On the 8th of June, 1722, in general town-meeting, it was voted that the following persons had 'forfeited their rights to lands in Litchfield by not performing what they were obliged to in the articles of the settlement mentioned in the grand deed,'—viz., Timothy Seymour, Timothy Stanley, Isaac Judson, Jacob Gibbs, John Stoddard, Nathaniel Smith, Paul Peck, John Hart, Philip Bump, Nathaniel Woodruff, Thomas Griswold, John Baldwin, and one of Ezekiel Sandford's rights. Messrs. John Buel, Nathaniel Smith, and John Marsh were appointed a committee to negotiate with the above-named individuals, with power to 'prosecute the forefeiture to effect,' in case the claimants should neglect or refuse to agree to the terms which might be offered them. Probably a compromise was effected with most of the delinquents. Some of them became active and useful men in the town.

"In October of this year the freemen, by a formal vote, expressed their desire to be annexed to Hartford County. They also voted that the tax for the support of the minister and for building the meeting-house should be laid 'one-half on the rights, and the other on heads and stock.'"

REPRESENTATIVES FROM 1740–1881.



1740.—Joseph Bird, Ebenezer Marsh, John Bird, John Buel.
1741.—Ebenezer Marsh, John Buel, Samuel Culver.
1742.—Ebenezer Marsh, Jacob Griswold.
1743.—Ebenezer Marsh, John Bird, Joseph Bird.
1744.—Ebenezer Marsh, Joseph Bird, Edward Phelps.
1745.—Edward Phelps, Joseph Bird, Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin.
1746.—Ebenezer Marsh, Joseph Bird.
1747.—Thomas Harrison, Joseph Sanford.
1748.—Ebenezer Marsh, John Bird.
1749.—Ebenezer Marsh, Joseph Bird, Thomas Harrison.
1750.—Ebenezer Marsh, Thomas Harrison.
1751.—Ebenezer Marsh, Thomas Harrison.
1752.—Ebenezer Marsh, Thomas Harrison, Joseph Kilbourn, Benjamin Webster.
1753.—Joseph Kilbourn, Benjamin Webster, Thomas Harrison.
1754.—Ebenezer Marsh, Benjamin Webster, Thomas Harrison.
1755.—Peter Buel, Benjamin Webster, Ebenezer Marsh, Elisha Shelden.
1756.—Ebenezer Marsh, Peter Buel.
1757.—Ebenezer Marsh, Peter Buel, Elisha Shelden.
1758.—Ebenezer Marsh, Elisha Shelden.
1759.—Jacob Woodruff, Elisha Shelden, Ebenezer Marsh.
1760.—Ebenezer Marsh, Elisha Shelden.
1761.—Ebenezer Marsh, Elisha Shelden, Isaac Baldwin.
1762.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin.
1763.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin.
1764.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin, Oliver Wolcott.
1765.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin.
1766.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin, John Marsh.
1767.—Oliver Wolcott, John Marsh, Ebenezer Marsh.
1768.—Ebenezer Marsh, John Marsh, Oliver Wolcott, Jacob Woodruff.
1769.—Ebenezer Marsh, Abraham Kilbourn.
1770.—David Welch, Abraham Kilbourn, Oliver Wolcott.
1771.—Ebenezer Marsh, John Marsh, Jedediah Strong, Lynde Lord.
1772.—Jedediah Strong, Lynde Lord, John Marsh.
1773.—Jedediah Strong, David Welch.
1774.—Jedediah Strong, John Marsh, David Welch.
1775.—Jedediah Strong, David Welch, Abraham Bradley.
1776.—Jedediah Strong, Abraham Bradley, Andrew Adams.
1777.—Jedediah Strong, Andrew Adams.
1778.—Jedediah Strong, Andrew Adams.
1779.—Jedediah Strong, Andrew Adams.
1780.—Jedediah Strong, Andrew Adams, David Welch.
1781.—Jedediah Strong, Andrew Adams, Bezaleel Beebe.
1782.—Jedediah Strong, Bezaleel Beebe, Isaac Baldwin.
1783.—Jedediah Strong, Bezaleel Beebe, Abraham Bradley, Isaac Baldwin, Jr.
1784.—Ebenezer Marsh, Isaac Baldwin, Isaac Baldwin, Jr.
1785.—Jedediah Strong, Abraham Bradley, Ebenezer Marsh.
1786.—Ebenezer Marsh, Jedediah Strong.
1787.—Ebenezer Marsh, Ebenezer Benton, Jedediah Strong.
1788.—Ebenezer Marsh, Jedediah Strong, Uriah Tracy.
1789.—Jedediah Strong, Uriah Tracy, Tapping Reeve.
1790.—Ebenezer Marsh, Uriah Tracy, Julius Deming.
1791.—Julius Deming, Uriah Tracy, Ephraim Kirby.
1792.—Ephraim Kirby, Uriah Tracy, Solomon Marsh, Bezaleel Beebe.

1793.—John Allen, Uriah Tracy, Bezaleel Beebe.
1794.—Ephraim Kirby, John Allen.
1795.—Ephraim Kirby, John Allen, Moses Seymour, Bezaleel Beebe.
1796.—Moses Seymour, John Allen.
1797.—Moses Seymour, Ephraim Kirby.
1798.—James Morris, Julius Deming, Moses Seymour, Ephraim Kirby.
1799.—Moses Seymour, Ephraim Kirby, John Welch.
1800.—Ephraim Kirby, John Welch, James Morris.
1801.—Moses Seymour, Ephraim Kirby, John Welch.
1802.—James Morris, Frederick Wolcott, Moses Seymour, Ephraim Kirby.
1803.—James Morris, Frederick Wolcott, Uriel Holmes.
1804.—James Morris, Uriel Holmes.
1805.—James Morris, Uriel Holmes.
1806.—Moses Seymour, Norman Buel, Uriel Holmes, Aaron Bradley.
1807.—Uriel Holmes, Aaron Bradley.
1808.—Aaron Bradley, Aaron Smith, Nathaniel Goodwin.
1809.—Nathaniel Goodwin, Aaron Smith.
1810.—Moses Seymour, Aaron Bradley.
1811.—Aaron Smith, Moses Seymour.
1812.—Aaron Smith, Moses Seymour, Morris Woodruff.
1813.—Aaron Smith, Morris Woodruff.
1814.—Aaron Smith, Morris Woodruff, Uriel Holmes.
1815.—William Beebe, Morris Woodruff, Jonathan Buel.
1816.—William Beebe, Jonathan Buel.
1817.—Jonathan Buel, Ephraim S. Hall.
1818.—Stephen Russell, Ephraim S. Hall, Phineas Lord.
1819.—John Welch, Phineas Lord.
1820.—John Welch, Seth P. Beers.
1821.—Seth P. Beers, John Welch.
1822.—Seth P. Beers, John Welch.
1823.—Seth P. Beers, Phineas Miner.
1824.—David Marsh, Morris Woodruff.
1825.—David Marsh, Morris Woodruff.
1826.—Morris Woodruff, Reuben Webster.
1827.—Phineas Miner, William Beebe.
1828.—Jabez W. Huntington, William Beebe.
1829.—Phineas Miner, Morris Woodruff.
1830.—Stephen Russell, Morris Woodruff.
1831.—Stephen Russell, Truman Smith.
1832.—Truman Smith, Elihu Harrison.
1833.—William Beebe, Asa Hopkins.
1834.—Stephen Russell, Truman Smith.
1835.—Phineas Miner, Elihu Harrison.
1836.—Morris Woodruff, Phineas Lord.
1837.—Morris Woodruff, Phineas Lord.
1838.—Samuel Buel, William Ray.
1839.—Samuel Buel, William Ray.
1840.—Frederick Buel, E. Champion Bacon.
1841.—Frederick Buel, E. Champion Bacon.
1842.—Origen S. Seymour, Enos Stoddard.
1843.—Origen S. Seymour, Enos Stoddard.
1844.—Elisha S. Abernethy, Dan Catlin.
1845.—Charles Adams, Dan Catlin.
1846.—David Marsh, George Seymour.
1847.—David Marsh, George Seymour.
1848.—Samuel P. Bolles, William L. Smedley.
1849.—Origen S. Seymour, Christopher Wheeler.
1850.—Origen S. Seymour, Christopher Wheeler.
1851.—George C. Woodruff, Thomas M. Coe.
1852.—Josiah G. Beckwith, William Newton.
1853.—Josiah G. Beckwith, William Newton.
1854.—Frederick Buel, Samuel P. Bolles.
1855.—Philip S. Beebe, Samuel Brooker, Jr.
1856.—Josiah G. Beckwith, Garry H. Minor.
1857.—Josiah G. Beckwith, Edward Pierpont.
1858.—Henry B. Graves, William Bissell.
1859.—Edward W. Seymour, William Bissell.
1860.—Edward W. Seymour, Daniel Stoddard.
1861.—George H. Baldwin, Jacob Morse.
1862.—Philip S. Beebe, George A. Hickox.
1863.—George M. Woodruff, Everitt H. Wright.
1864.—E. H. Wright, T. R. Sedgwick.
1865.—George M. Woodruff, D. E. Bostwick.
1866.—George C. Woodruff, T. L. Saltonstall.
1867.—Henry B. Graves, Eli D. Weeks.
1868.—Henry B. Graves, T. Leander Jennings.
1869.—J. G. Beckwith, J. B. Hopkins.
1870.—E. W. Seymour, Henry Frisbie.
1871.—E. W. Seymour, N. W. Beach.
1872.—George M. Woodruff, Ransom Newton.
1873.—Julius Deming, Charles D. Wheeler.
1874.—George C. Woodruff, James B. Newcomb.
1875.—William Deming, Garner B. Curtiss.
1876.—William Deming, Henry B. Graves.
1877.—Eli D. Weeks, Henry B. Graves.
1878.—Charles B. Andrews, William Bissell.
1879.—Henry B. Graves, Leverett W. Wessells.
1880.—Gideon H. Hollister, Harry Clemens.
1881.—Origen S. Seymour, Frederick S. Porter.

MILITARY RECORD.*

Jacob Forfe, 1st Art.; enl. April 1, 1862; disch. March 16, 1865.
John K. Gordon, enl. Nov. 30, 1864.
J. Donohue, enl. April 6, 1862.
E. B. Smith, enl. May 20, 1861; pro. to first lieutenant; res. Oct. 26, 1863.
W. Wheeler, enl. May 20, 1861; disch. May 22, 1864.
E. Buxton, enl. May 20, 1861; must. out Sept. 25, 1865.
W. W. Davis, enl. May 20, 1861; disch. Sept. 25, 1865.
J. P. Nichols, disch. May 22, 1864.
R. H. Tompkins, L. A. Terryl, G. W. Wheeler.
C. O. Whaples, disch. Sept. 1, 1862.
C. W. Brewer, enl. April 12, 1862.
W. W. Mathews, enl. April 12, 1862; disch. April 17, 1865.
E. Lyman, enl. Aug. 4, 1863; died Aug. 10, 1864.
Henry Wade, 5th Regt.; enl. Nov. 29, 1864; must. out July 19, 1865.
John Daley, 5th Regt.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
H. G. West, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; wounded; disch. May 18, 1863.
E. A. Alvord, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; wounded; disch. July 19, 1865.
H. S. Gooley, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; died Aug. 22, 1862.
Charles Gooley, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. Nov. 22, 1862.
William Somers, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861.
O. Eaghen.
John Rogers, enl. March 5, 1864; disch. April 24, 1865.
O. Dorman, 6th Regt.; enl. July 31, 1863; must. out Aug. 21, 1865.
George Landers, enl. March 3, 1864.
A. Crowe, 8th Regt.; enl. Oct. 10, 1861; disch. Jan. 8, 1863.
George E. Castle, 8th Regt.; enl. Oct. 14, 1861; disch. Oct. 22, 1865.
M. Castle, died Oct. 17, 1862.
Alfonso Benza, 8th Regt.
Peter Guirard, 8th Regt.
John Moore.
C. L. Cartle, 8th Regt.; enl. Feb. 19, 1864; died Aug. 4, 1864.
I. Cohen, enl. July 29, 1864; disch. June 1, 1865.
James Kelley, enl. Feb. 23, ——.
Edward Wadhams, sergeant Co. E, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; re-enl. as veteran; killed May 16, 1864.
Seth F. Plumb, sergeant; enl. Sept. 5, 1861; killed Sept. 22, 1864.
S. M. Clark, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861.
George F. Booth, killed Sept. 17, 1862.
S. B. Fuller, disch. March 24, 1863.
George W. Baldwin, died March, 1862.
F. E. Barber, died Jan. 30, 1862.
W. H. Cable, must. out Aug. 23, 1865.
Charles Culver, must. out Aug. 12, 1865.
R. W. Cook, enl. Oct. 6, 1861; disch. Dec. 15, 1864.
Thomas Mason, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; killed Sept. 17, 1862.
W. D. Musson, disch. March 23, 1865.
F. A. Newcomb, died May 14, 1862.
Jerome Nichols, died Oct. 17, 1863.
Charles Perkins, disch. Feb. 14, 1864.
J. T. Peters, enl. Sept. 27, 1861; disch. Dec. 6, 1862.
Alva Sterne, enl. Oct. 10, 1861; disch. Feb. 22, 1863.
L. E. Sweet, enl. Sept. 25, 1861; disch. Oct. 20, 1862.
John Tompkins, enl. Oct. 10, 1861; died Sept. 7, 1862.
Joseph H. Vaille, enl. Sept. 27, 1861; trans. to Invalid Corps, May 15, 1864.
William Brady.
C. H. Foster, enl. Feb. 24, 1861.
F. G. Gilbert, enl. Feb. 16, 1864; must. out Dec. 12, 1865.
Charles M. Landa, enl. Feb. 17, 1864.
John McGowan.

* For list of Nineteenth Regiment, see Chapter V. For notice of soldiers' monument, see Supplement.

Julius Deming

John Clarke, enl. Feb. 24, 1864; must. out Dec. 12, 1865.
E. Hamma, enl. July 27, 1864; must. out Dec. 12, 1864.
John Kelley, enl. Feb. 24, 1864; trans. to navy.
John Connor.
James White, 9th Regt.
William Brown, 9th Regt.; enl. April 28, 1864.
J. Bluecher, 9th Regt., enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
J. Johnson, 9th Regt.; enl. Nov. 25, 1864; disch. Dec. 16, 1864.
P. Gaffney, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 25, 1864; disch. Aug. 25, 1865.
James McGraw, 10th Regt.
Charles J. Moore, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
George Flyn, 10th Regt.: enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
William Ryne, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864; disch. Aug. 25, 1865.
Charles Warren, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
William Moore, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
John Miller, 11th Regt.; enl. Feb. 21, 1864; wounded; died Sept. 18, 1864.
Jos. Martin, 11th Regt.; enl. March 7, 1864; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
Charles Barber, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; died May 13, 1862.
E. B. Sanford, 12th Regt.; enl. Dec. 22, 1861; disch. about May 25, 1863.
Frank Wells, first lieutenant 13th Regt.; com. Feb. 19, 1862; pro. to captain; disch. April 24, 1866.
C. C. Fisher, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 20, 1862.
S. S. Tuyler, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; pro. to second lieutenant; disch. April 24, 1866.
Charles Thomas, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 20, 1862.
J. Duffs, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862.
A. Bunnell, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. Nov. 25, 1865.
William Baker, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; died Sept. 2, 1862.
H. Banker, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 19, 1865.
P. Banker, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; died May 6, 1865.
William Benedict, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 20, 1862.
C. Birge, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan 11, 1862; disch. Sept. 29, 1862.
And. Bronson, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862.
M. Burke, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.
Charles Catlin, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; died Sept. 2, 1863.
A. Chapel, 13th Regt.; enl Jan. 11, 1862; died Feb. 23, 1863.
E. Cogswell, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
E. H. Curtis, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 28, 1862; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
I. A. Davidson, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. Aug. 12, 1865.
Seth Frink, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 22, 1862.
Loren Halleck, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. July 15, 1862.
W. H. Harris, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan 11, 1862; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
P. Herbert, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 22, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.
S. Herbert, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 22, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.
L. Johnson, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan 11, 1862; disch. May 30, 1862.
J. Kelleher, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; died.
J. M. Kinley, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862.
Henry Mayo, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 20, 1862.
Thomas McGee, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.
O. Mungor, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 26, 1863.
W. H. Norris, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; pro. to Veteran Reserve Corps.
Charles Ostrander, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 7, 1862.
George Ostrander, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862.
W. R. Parker, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862.
C. Parmelee, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 7, 1862; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
P. Peacock, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 5, 1862; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
G. J. Pond, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. June 19, 1865.
R. Provost, 13th Regt.; enl. Jan. 22, 1862; disch. Oct. 5, 1865.
E. S. Richmond, enl. Jan. 11, 1862; killed Nov. 7, 1862.
George Root, enl. Jan. 22, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.
E. O. Thomas, enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. April 26, 1866.
George Starks, enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. May 30, 1862.
W. C. Wakefield, enl. Jan. 11, 1862; disch. Sept. 29, 1862.
William Bradshaw, 14th Regt.; enl. June 25, 1862; died June 16, 1864.
T. H. Foster, 17th Regt.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864; disch. July 19, 1865.
Walter Hale, 20th Regt.; enl. Aug. 18, 1862; died May 3, 1863.
H. A. Barber, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 6, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
Monroe Throop, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
W. H. Bunnell, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 6, 1862.
George Davies, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
C. J. Fish, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 4, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
Henry Payne, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
Lyman Taylor, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
A. C. Tracy, 23d Regt.; enl. Sept. 5, 1862; disch. Aug. 31, 1863.
Frederick Nightingale, 25th Regt.; enl. Oct. 20, 1862; disch. Aug. 26, 1863.
William H. Yemmans, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 9, 1862; disch. July 22, 1863.
Thomas Redding, 29th Regt.; enl. Feb. 25, 1864; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
A. Ward, 29th Regt.; enl. Feb. 25, 1864; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
R. Lampman, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 14, 1863.
J. Edwards, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 28, 1863; died March 4, 1865.
C. V. Lampman, 29th Regt.; enl. July 20, 1865; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
John Blakeman, Co. F, 1st Cav.; enl. Jan. 5, 1863; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Charles Deliber, Co. F, 1st Cav.; enl. July 16, 1863; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
M. Deviney, Co. F, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 1, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Plumb Johnson, Co. F, 1st Cav.; enl. July 5, 1863; capt. May 5, 1864.
Henry Smith, Co. F, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Levi H. Hull, Co. I, 1st Cav.; enl. Aug. 3, 1863; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Charles Marshall, Co. I, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 28, 1864; disch. Sept. 10, 1865.
N. H. Burnes, Co. L, 1st Cav.; enl. Jan. 5, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Charles Black, 1st Cav.; enl. April 26, 1864.
William Carnell, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
William Crimple, enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
Nicholas Dimon, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
Jos. Dehaven, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
Charles Howe, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 29, 1864.
Charles Jones, 1st Cav.; enl. April 26, 1864.
E. Kelley, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 15, 1864.
P. Mackin, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.
P. Macabe, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
Henry Marsh, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
Jule Parrit, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 28, 1864.
W. Philips, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 26, 1864.
P. Rober, 1st Cav.; enl. July 27, 1863.
Jos. Smith, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 25, 1864.
Charles W. Wentworth, 1st Cav.; enl. April 29, 1864.
William Welch, enl. Dec. 2, 1864.
William Arnold, 2d C. Bat.; enl. Feb. 23, 1864; disch. Aug. 9, 1865.
John Davis, 2d C. Bat.; enl. Feb. 24, 1864.
Jos. Hart, 2d C. Bat.; enl. Feb. 23, 1864; disch. Aug. 9, 1865.
W. S. Kimball, 2d C. Bat.; enl. Feb. 23, 1864.
M. B. Lawrence, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 2, 1861; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Eli Parmelee, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Nov. 2, 1861; disch. April 13, 1863.
Ezekiel Scovill, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Oct. 26, 1861; disch. Dec. 26, 1864.
Enos Tompkins, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Oct. 26, 1861; killed by lightning July 16, 1862.
James O'Brion, Co. B, 1st Cav.; enl. Oct. 26, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
Frank Parrit, Co. C, 1st Cav.; enl. July 27, 1863; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
F. C. Shumway, Co. C, 1st Cav.; enl. April 1, 1863; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.
S. A. Wheeler, Co. C, 1st Cav.; enl. April 1, 1863; disch. June 10, 1865.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

JULIUS DEMING.

Julius Deming, an eminent merchant of Litchfield, was born in Lyme, April 15, 1755. He was the fourth in lineal descent from John Deming, named in the charter of Connecticut in 1662. After serving through the Revolutionary war as deputy commissary-general (with the rank of captain of cavalry) under his uncle, Gen. Epaphroditus Champion, of Colchester, he commenced business in Litchfield.

A gentleman of remarkable energy and enterprise, he soon visited London, and made arrangements to import his goods direct from that city, which probably was not true of any other country merchant in Connecticut. He is universally recognized by our citizens as the most thorough and successful business man who has ever spent his life among us. Prompt in his engagements, scrupulously upright in his dealings, and discreet and liberal in his benefactions, few men in any community ever enjoyed more implicitly the confidence of all. Mr. Deming had little taste for public life. He was three times elected a member of the House of Representatives, and for several years was one of the magistrates of this county. From 1801 to 1814, he served in the office of county treasurer. His position and influence were such that, had he been an aspirant for political honors, there were few offices within the gift of the people of this State which he might not have filled. He died in this town, Jan. 23, 1838, aged eighty-three years.

GIDEON H. HOLLISTER.

Hon. Gideon H. Hollister was born at Washington, Conn., Dec. 14, 1817. He graduated at Yale College in 1840. He was the class poet, editor of the Yale Lit., and first president of the Linonian Society, then considered a great honor.

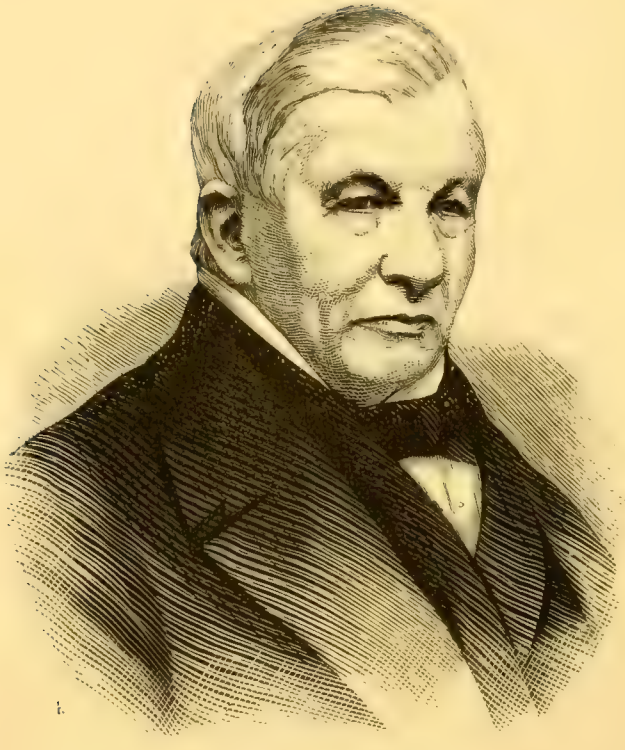
Studying with Judge Seymour, he was admitted to the bar at the April term of the county court, 1842. He began practice in Woodbury, but soon removed to Litchfield, where, in 1843, he was appointed clerk of the court, a position which he held, a single year excepted, till 1852. In 1856 he was elected to the State Senate, where he was largely instrumental in securing the election of Hon. James Dixon to the United States Senate, and for many years, during the time that Mr. Dixon was a power in Connecticut politics, Mr. Hollister exercised great political influence in this part of the State. Both sided with Andrew Johnson in his disagreement with Congress, and both retired from the Republican party with him. He was a delegate to the Peace Convention which met at Philadelphia at the close of the war of the Rebellion, and in 1868 he was sent as Minister to Hayti. On his return he lived for several years at Stratford, practicing law in Bridgeport. He returned to Litchfield in 1876, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1880.

Mr. Hollister is best known, no doubt, as the historian of Connecticut. His history, in two volumes, was published in 1855, and he had designed and partly written a revision of this work, which was intended to include the war history of the State, and a volume of historical sketches of its prominent men. Besides the "History of Connecticut," he had written a novel, "Mount Hope," in 1851, and, in 1866, "Thomas à Becket, a Tragedy" (a work of unmistakable power), and other poems. Of the latter some are very beautiful, particularly the "Phantom Ship," founded on incidents actually occurring in the early history of New Haven, and the "Bride Brook," also founded upon an incident of early Connecticut history.

At the bar Mr. Hollister was an uncommonly dexterous and forcible advocate, specially adroit in cross-examination of witnesses. As a natural consequence he was very powerful with a jury, often winning verdicts where success seemed hopeless. He was the most correct of speakers. His mere extempore speech, always clothed in pure and powerful English, was as elegant and complete in composition as good writing. Hence he could easily accomplish the difficult feat of delivering an address part written and memorized and part extempore, yet so thoroughly fused together, and so excellent and uniform of structure, that no one could separate the written from the extempore, nor detect any flaw at the points of junction. No doubt his thorough acquaintance with Shakspeare, Milton, and Tennyson, with Burke and Webster, contributed largely to the formation of a style of such unusual excellence, but much was also due to powers and aptitudes such as nature has bestowed upon few.

Mr. Hollister was a most interesting man in conversation. His original way of treating every-day subjects, of illuminating hard facts with irresistible flashes of wit, and again of rising without effort into the higher regions of fancy and poetry, as a hawk slants up a hundred feet in the air without waving a wing, gave him a truly wonderful power of fascination by talk. Nor was he in the least overbearing in conversation, as is often the case with good talkers, but added the force of unfailing politeness to marvelous powers of persuasion, such as one must have felt to have appreciated.

In 1847, Mr. Hollister married Miss Mary S. Brisbane, a native of Charleston, S. C., who survives him, together with one of several children, now a member of Trinity College, Hartford.



He was a consistent churchman, and a member of St. Michael's Episcopal Church. He died March 24, 1881.

REV. HIRAM STONE.

The Rev. Hiram Stone was born in Bantam Falls, town of Litchfield, July 25, 1824. He was the son of Russell Stone, and grandson of Thomas Stone, a non-commissioned officer in the Revolutionary war. His four ancestral lines are traced directly to England, one of which is known to extend back to the thirteenth century. His parents died, leaving him in orphanage at an early age. Supporting himself by secular employment, he at length realized the desire, cherished in his youth, of entering the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal Church. After several years of preparatory study in private, he became a candidate for holy orders in this diocese, and in October, 1851, entered the Berkeley Divinity School, then in its incipiency, at Hartford, and connected with Trinity College. Having completed his theological course, and in the mean time pursuing some studies in the college department, he was ordained a deacon, Oct. 2, 1853, by Rt. Rev. T. C. Brownell, in Christ Church, Hartford. The next six months were spent in South Glastonbury, Conn., as assistant to the Rev. Dr. A. B. Chapin. In April, 1854, he accepted the charge of St. John's Church, Essex, Conn., and on the 19th of November was therein ordained a priest by the

Hiram Stone

J. P. Bruce.

Rt. Rev. John Williams, assistant bishop. April 10, 1855, he married Miss Wealthy Ann Lewis, of Haddam, Conn.

In answer to an earnest appeal, he accepted an appointment from the Board of Missions, New York City, as the first accredited missionary to Kansas, his support being assumed by St. Paul's Church, New Haven. Resigning his parish, he left Essex May 12, 1856, for his field of missionary labor, which at that time was convulsed with civil discord heretofore unknown to American history. The settlement of Kansas was just begun, which inaugurated that period familiarly known as the "border ruffian times." A fierce controversy was being urged between the Free-Soil party of the North and the Pro-slavery of the South, each desperately determined on supplanting the other for partisan ends. While on his journey intelligence was received that the town of Lawrence had been sacked, throwing the whole Territory into the wildest alarm. Deeming it not prudent to enter Kansas in the midst of this scene of tumult and blood, he took temporary charge of a vacant parish in Waukesha, Wis., and there waited an abatement of hostilities.

In autumn, leaving his wife and chief effects behind, he resumed his route, arriving at Leavenworth City Nov. 24, 1856. He found things there in the most dire confusion. Thousands of desperate people had come to the territory armed with deadly weapons, every man prepared to take care of himself and carry out his purpose. Some had been murdered and others driven away, both parties inflicting vengeance without stint as occasion or opportunity offered. Hence the newly-organized Territory received the very pertinent title of "Bleeding Kansas." In the midst of these surroundings an organization was effected, Dec. 10, 1856, under the name of St. Paul's Church. This was the first Episcopal parish in the Territory, which at that time extended westward to the Rocky Mountains, and out of which several States and Territories have since been erected. The wife of the missionary joined him April 9, 1857. Religious services were conducted from the outset as opportunities admitted, sometimes in a business house or private dwelling, and occasionally in the open air. After considerable effort a church edifice was erected, and consecrated Nov. 7, 1858, by Rt. Rev. Jackson Kemper, missionary bishop. September, 1859, Mr. Stone was appointed post chaplain at Fort Leavenworth, distant three miles from the city, and, resigning his parish, he entered upon military service. During the four years of the war he discharged duty at this outpost, where it was greatly exposed on the border of a slave-holding State.

October, 1865, he attended the General Convention, in the city of Philadelphia, as a deputy of the Kansas diocese. Oct. 5, 1866, a son was born, named Lewis Hiram. June, 1868, by an order from the War Department, he was transferred to Fort Sully, Dakota, arriving there after a passage of three weeks, ascending by steamer the Missouri River. Here a daughter was born, Sept. 28, 1869, named Carrie Louisa. May 21, 1870, his wife died in garrison, after a distressing and protracted illness. Soon after this he went East on leave of absence, at the expiration of which he was transferred to Fort Totten, Dakota. Here he remained until June, 1872, when he was assigned to Fort Wadsworth, Dakota, where he entered on duty. January, 1876, he tendered his resignation, which was duly accepted by President Grant.

Having dissolved his connection with the United States army, in which he had served for more than sixteen years, he accepted the charge of St. Paul's Church, Bantam Falls, and Trinity Church, Milton, officiating in each of these on alternate Sundays. He is still in charge of these churches, residing at Bantam Falls, where he was born, and where his ancestors lived for several generations.

JOHN P. BRACE.

In losing Mr. John P. Brace, who died in Litchfield on the morning of the 18th of October, 1872, aged eighty years, the State lost one of those men who did, in a quiet way, so much to make Connecticut honored wherever education and intelligence are respected. His name is revered in thousands of families throughout the land, as one of the most successful teachers this "cradle of instructors" has produced. Mrs. Stowe—no mean authority on such a subject—speaks of him in the life of her father as follows (pp. 534–555):

"Mr. Brace was one of the most stimulating and inspiriting instructors I ever knew. He was himself widely informed, an enthusiast in botany, mineralogy, and the natural sciences generally, besides being well read in English classical literature. The constant conversation which he kept up on these topics tended more to develop the mind and inspire a love of literature than any mere routine studies. The boys were incited by his example to set up mineralogical cabinets, and my brother George (Beecher) tramped over the hills in the train of his teacher, with his stone hammer on his shoulders, for many delightful hours. Many more were spent in recounting to me the stores of wisdom derived from Mr. Brace, who, he told me with pride, corresponded with geologists and botanists in Europe, exchanging specimens with them. This school was the only one I ever knew which really carried out a thorough course of ancient and modern history. . . . The interest of these historical recitations, with a professor so widely informed and so fascinating in conversation as Mr. Brace, extended farther than his class. Much of the training and inspiration of my early days consisted, not in the things which I was supposed to be studying, but in hearing, while seated unnoticed at my desk, the conversation of Mr. Brace with the older classes. There from hour to hour I listened with eager ears to historical criticisms and discussions, or to recitations in such works as 'Paley's Moral Philosophy,' 'Blair's Rhetoric,' 'Alison on Taste,' all full of most awakening suggestions to my thoughts.

"Mr. Brace excelled all teachers I ever knew in the faculty of teaching composition. The constant excitement in which he kept the minds of his pupils—the wide and various regions of thought into which he led them—formed a preparation for teaching composition, the main requisite for which, whatever people may think, is to have something interesting to say. His manner was to divide his school of about a hundred into divisions of three or four, one of which was to write every week. At the same time he inspired an ambition by calling for volunteers every week, and there were some who volunteered to write every week

"I remember I could have been but nine years old, and my handwriting hardly formed, when the enthusiasm he inspired led me, greatly to his amusement, I believe, to write every week. The first week the subject chosen by the class was 'The Difference Between the Natural and Moral Sublime.' One may smile at this for a child nine years of age; but it is the best account I can give of his manner of teaching to say, that the discussion he held in the class not only made me understand the subject as thoroughly as I do now, but so excited me that I felt sure I had something to say upon it, and that first composition, though I believe half the words were misspelled, amused him greatly. It was not many weeks I had persevered in this way before I received a word of public commendation, for it was his custom to read all the compositions aloud before the school, and if there was a good point it was sure to be noticed.

"As you may see, our subjects were not trashy or sentimental, such as are often supposed to be the style for female schools. By two years of constant practice under his training and suggestion, I had gained so far as to be appointed one of the writers for the annual exhibition, a proud distinction as I then viewed it. The subject assigned me was one that had been fully discussed in the school in a manner to show to the utmost Mr. Brace's peculiar power of awakening the minds of his pupils to the higher regions of thought. The question was, 'Can the Immortality of the Soul be Proved by the Light of Nature?'"

Mr. Brace's acquirements were vast and multifarious. He was fitted thoroughly in the studies of the three professions—law, medicine, and theology—and could have entered any one with honor. His knowledge of ancient and modern history was both wide and minute. In mineralogy he had made extensive researches and collections; in botany he was a correspondent of De Candolle and other European botanists, and his valuable herbarium will be found a treasure-house of collections. Even in out-of-the-way subjects of investigation, such as heraldry, astrology, the deciphering of ciphers, and composing of music, he was singularly well versed. But his great talent and his services were in the comparatively unknown, but most useful, field of teacher.

Mrs. Stowe, in her novel of "Old Town Folks," has pictured some of his methods and himself under the name of "Rossiter." His ingenuity, invention, patience, and vast memory, with his passion for imparting knowledge, made him an unequaled teacher. So busy was his useful life that he never wrote any scientific or scholastic work, such as he easily might, but left his record and work in the minds and lives of thousands whom he educated, and who still love his memory.

Mr. Brace was first teacher of the famous academy of Litchfield, which was for so many years the leading educational institution for young ladies in New England, under the superintendence of the Misses Pierce. Subsequently (in 1832) he became principal of the Hartford Female Seminary, which, under his guidance, became equally celebrated. In these two institutions Mr. Brace trained many young ladies who have since become leading women in society, charities, or literature throughout the land; among them Mrs. H. B. Stowe, Mrs. Isabella B. Hooker, Mrs. Cyrus W. Field, Mrs. Cornelius Du Bois, of New York; Mrs. Wilson, of Brooklyn; Mrs. Marshall O. Roberts; Mrs. Bliss and Mrs. Van Lennep, of Hartford (the missionaries); Mrs. McCullough, the wife of the United States secretary of the treasury, and numerous others who became wives of ministers or missionaries. No teacher in the United States has ever had so many influential and intelligent pupils. Subsequently to these efforts Mr. Brace entered the editorial profession, and was for a number of years the editor of The Hartford Daily Courant. For the past nine years he has been living in quiet and comfort on the old homestead in the village of Litchfield, enjoying the treasures of his ample library, and the society of friends and pupils who gratefully remembered "the faithful teacher." To the last he preserved his exquisite feeling for nature; birds and flowers were his pleasure almost in his dying moments, and the last names he forgot were the botanical. Even historical dates were remembered by him when many a personal event had passed from his memory.

He died in a genial old age, tended with unceasing care by his devoted wife, and most sincerely mourned by this community.

The only original literary works that Mr. J. P. Brace left behind him were monographs on scientific subjects, and a few poems and works of fiction.

His great work—and one never to decay or pass away—is in the mental training he imparted to thousands of youthful minds throughout the country.

His first wife was from a family well known in Maine for talent and character, Miss Lucy Porter, sister of Mrs. Dr. Lyman Beecher and descendant of the Hon. Rufus King. By her his surviving children are C. L. Brace, J. P. Brace, Jr., and Mrs. J. W. Skinner. He married again—Miss Louisa Moreau, of this city. He was also connected through his sister with the Hon. Charles G. Loring, the late distinguished lawyer of Boston.

JOHN CATLIN.

John Catlin is of English ancestry, and was born in Litchfield, Conn., May 23, 1814. His father, Levi, was son of Thomas, and also was born in Litchfield. He (Levi) married Anna E. Landon, and had eight children, John being the fifth. He was a farmer, and lived three miles southeast of Litchfield village. He was a Whig in politics, and held several town offices. He was born Nov. 11, 1772, and died Oct. 16, 1841. Mrs. Catlin was born Jan. 6, 1779, and died Sept. 24, 1868. Thomas Catlin was a farmer, a soldier in the Revolution, was captain, reared a family, and died aged ninety-three years. The children of Levi were Seth, Daniel, Avis, Ellis, John, Achsah, Guy, and Levi. All save Achsah married and had children.

John Catlin received the advantages of a common-school and academic education, and wrought as a farmer during the summer until he was nineteen, when he determined to delve deeper into learning. He carried his determination into action, and was graduated from Yale College in 1839. Upon graduation he began to teach at Northfield, Conn.; then taught at

John Catlin

F. H. Catlin

Litchfield, then returned to Northfield and taught a private school, continuing there several years, working on the farm during the summer. Giving up teaching he became a merchant at Northfield, and continued in trade eight years. He was postmaster of Northfield many years, and held it under Lincoln's administration. In politics he was in early life a Whig. From the formation of the Republican party he advocated its principles. He was magistrate for many years and school visitor. He is director and a stockholder in the Northfield Knife Company. At the age of seventeen years he united with the Congregational Church, and is now deacon, which office was first given him over thirty years ago.

He married, May 19, 1840, Laura, daughter of Sherman and Polly (Tompkins) Humiston, of Northfield. She was a native of that town, and born Oct. 1, 1813. Their children were Frank H. (now president of Northfield Knife Company), Mary H. (died young), John Howard (secretary of Northfield Knife Company), and James P., a farmer on the homestead.

Sherman Humiston, son of John, was born in Northfield, Conn., Sept. 24, 1789. He married Polly Tompkins, who was born May 5, 1790. He was a thorough and successful farmer, and died March 1, 1828. His wife died Jan. 6, 1860. John Humiston came from West Haven or vicinity, and was among the very early settlers of Northfield. He was a farmer. The first house he built in Litchfield is still standing.

FRANKLIN H. CATLIN.

Franklin H. Catlin, son of John and Laura H. Catlin, was born in Litchfield, Conn., July 22, 1841. After fair educational advantages through boyhood, entered the village store in Northfield as clerk, remaining some five years; then attended the Litchfield Academy a short time, when he entered Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., graduating in May, 1862.

In January, 1863, accepted the office of secretary of the Northfield Knife Company, which he held two years, when he was elected president and treasurer of the same corporation, taking entire charge of the business at the most critical period of its history, since which time his record has been closely identified with that of this company, and he has continuously held and still retains the office to which he was then elected.

He married, November, 1871, Julia M. Lyman, daughter of Rufus and Sarah Lyman, of New Hartford, Conn.

Politically is a staunch Republican; usually, however, not taking an active part in politics, personal attention to the extensive detail of the cutlery business leaving little time for other matters.

MYRON OSBORN.

Myron Osborn is of Welsh descent. His great-grandfather, Benjamin Osborn, came from East Hampton, L. I., and settled in Litchfield, Conn., with his family about 1736. He was born in 1692, and died in 1762. He was a farmer by occupation, and had much to do in shaping the public mind of his day. He married Elizabeth ———, and had the following children,—viz.: Benjamin, Jr., Samuel, John, Bethiah (wife of Ebenezer Beebe), and Rev. Sylvanus, who was a pastor of a Congregational Church in the town of Warren for many years; his widow married Rev. Mr. Day, of New Preston, and became the mother of Thomas and Noble Day.

Capt. John Osborn, third son of Benjamin and Elizabeth Osborn, was born in the town of Litchfield, Conn.; married Lois Peck, and had the following children: John, Ethan, Eliada, Heman (died young), Elizabeth, Rebecca, Anna, and Thalia, all of whom became heads of families. Capt. John Osborn rendered valuable aid to the American army during the Revolutionary war. He and his wife were members of the Congregational Church. After living an honorable and useful life as a farmer, he died Jan. 4, 1814, aged eighty-four years, and his wife died in 1819.

Eliada, son of John Osborn, was born in Litchfield, Conn., and was twice married.

His children were as follows, viz.: Myron, John, Rebecca, Elisha M., Nathan L., and Eliada, all of whom grew to manhood and womanhood, and what was more remarkable, there was not a death among the children until after the youngest was more than sixty years of age. Eliada Osborn was a farmer by occupation and a man much esteemed. He was for many years connected with the State militia, and was known as Capt. Eliada Osborn. In politics he was a Federalist and Whig. He died at the age of eighty-seven years, and his wife at eighty years. She was a member of the Congregational Church.

Myron Osborn, the immediate subject of this sketch, is the eldest son of Eliada, and was born on the 28th of September, 1796, hence is at the present time (1881) in the eighty-fifth year of his age.

Mr. Osborn remained at home on his father's farm receiving such educational advantages as the schools of his day afforded. At eighteen he commenced to work for one Orin Judd, as an apprentice to the carpenter's and joiner's trade. After three years he began to work for himself at one dollar a day, and the most he ever received was one dollar and a quarter a day. One of the first houses he built was his own, which was erected in 1822. He used to take contracts to build residences and other buildings, and many are the substantial houses in and around Litchfield that are standing monuments of his superior workmanship. In 1840 he began the manufacture of linseed oil at Bantam Falls, with Philip S. Beebe, which he followed some twelve years, since which time he has been engaged in agriculture.

Mr. Osborn has been successful in whatever he has undertaken. He is hale and hearty, genial, social, and hospitable. He owns a good farm west of the village of Litchfield. In politics he is a Republican. He married Emeline Goodwin, daughter of Capt. Erastus Goodwin, of South Farms, Conn., Dec. 22, 1824. She was born Sept. 25, 1800. Both Mr. and Mrs. Osborn are members of the Congregational Church, and have been a great many years. Their children are,—(1) Caroline M., wife of George Kenney, of Litchfield; (2) Cornelia, at home; (3) Elizabeth, died at six years of age; (4) Julia E., wife of George William Mason, an intelligent farmer in Litchfield; (5) Eliada G., was a sergeant-major in Company A, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, and lost his life in front of Petersburg, March 25, 1865. He left one daughter, Katie Goodwin. His widow married ex-Governor Charles B. Andrews, of Litchfield; (6) Myron M., died young.

AMOS BISSELL.

Amos Bissell was born in Litchfield, Conn., July 15, 1798. He was the son of Benjamin Bissell, a Revolutionary soldier, who settled in Litchfield more than a century ago. He had a large family of twelve children,—seven daughters and five sons. All the daughters and four of the sons grew to adult age. He was an extensive farmer and large land-owner. He died at the age of seventy-one years.

Amos, the immediate subject of this sketch, spent his early life on the home-farm, and, after the death of his father, took charge of the farm and assisted his mother in the family. At her death the estate was distributed, and Amos received two hundred acres of land, near the old home, where he has since resided. He has added other lands, and now has a large and fine farm. He was married when twenty-eight years of age to Lydia Bridgman Hall, daughter of David Hall, of Litchfield. She died June 12, 1863, aged sixty-one years, having been the mother of seven children, five of whom are now living: Edward is a lawyer at Fon du Lac, Wis.; William is a physician in Salisbury, Conn.; Elizabeth died when a young woman; Julia is the wife of Dr. Allen, residing in the State of New York; Lyman died when a child; Dwight, who occupies the home-farm, and has the principal care of the family, married Elizabeth, daughter of Seymour Pickett, of Waterbury; they have three children, and have buried one; Mary, the youngest daughter, is unmarried and lives at home. And now, after a long and industrious life of more than fourscore years, we find this venerable citizen in the enjoyment of good health and the respect of all. He has been a consistent member of the Congregational Church many years.

THE BISSELL FAMILY.

It is probable that the Bissell family is of Huguenot descent, many of whom fled from France to England to escape the persecutions which followed the massacre of St. Bartholomew in 1572. The family in England is little known, and has but one coat of arms, which is of a religious, rather than warlike, character. It is thus described in "Burke's Complete Armory":

"Bissell, Gu. on a bend, ar.; three escallops, sa. Crest, a demi-eagle with wings displayed, sa. charged on the neck with an escallop shell, or."

The family of John, who came to Windsor, Conn., is the only one of the name known to have come to this country. Tradition asserts that they came from Somersetshire County, England, to Plymouth in 1628.

John came to Windsor, where he first appears in 1640. Here he received the monopoly of the "Scantic Ferry," was the first settler on the east side of the Connecticut River, and the founder of a numerous, energetic, and honorable family even to the present day.

John Bissell, Sr., died Oct. 3, 1677, aged eighty-six; his wife died May 21, 1641.

Children,—John, born in England; Thomas, born in England; Mary, born in England, married Jacob Drake, 1649; Samuel; Nathaniel, born Sept. 24, 1640; Joice, married Samuel Pinney.

SECOND GENERATION.

John, Jr., married Izrel Mason, of Saybrook.

Thomas, married Abigail Moore, 1655; settled on the east side of the river, and died July 31, 1689. Children,—Thomas, born 1656; Abigail, born 1658; John, born 1660; Joseph, born 1663; Elizabeth, born 1666; Benjamin, born 1669; Sarah, born 1671; Isaac, born ——; Esther, born 1677; Ephraim, born 1680.

THIRD GENERATION.

Isaac Bissell, born 1673; married Elizabeth Osborn, May 2, 1706; moved to Litchfield and became the founder of the Litchfield branch of his family; died Nov. 6, 1744; she died June 15, 1761. He bought one-sixtieth part of Litchfield (about seven hundred acres) for four hundred and fifty pounds; also bought a lot in North Street for ninety pounds, April 16, 1730, on which he settled in 1730. The "old red house," built by him about 1740, was at the time of its demolition, in 1853, the oldest house in town. The Congregational parsonage now stands (1881) on the site of the "old red house" built in 1740.

Children,—Elizabeth, born Feb. 4, 1707, probably died young; Isaac, Jr., born March 9, 1709; Abigail, born Jan. 16, 1711, married Thomas Catlin, May, 1732; Sarah, born Feb. 3, 1713, married James Kilbourn, Sept. 11, 1733; Joel, born Jan. 1, 1714; Benjamin, born July 2, 1717; Roger, born March 24,

Myron Osborn

AMOS BISSELL.

Henry B. Bissell

Elnada Kilbourn

1718; George, born March 24, 1720; Joseph, born Sept. 7, 1722; Zebulon, born 1724.

FOURTH GENERATION.

Zebulon, born 1724, married Abigail Smith; was a soldier of the Revolution in Capt. Bezaleel Beebe's company;* was taken prisoner at Fort Washington; died at Woodbury on his way home, as was supposed from the effects of poison given to him, previous to an exchange of prisoners, by the British; was the oldest man in Capt. Beebe's company; estate settled in 1777.

Children,—Zebulon, Jr., born Oct. 3, 1751; Benjamin, born Jan. 15, 1754; Rhoda, born April 5, 1760, married Arunah Blakeslee; Abigail, married John Landon.

FIFTH GENERATION.

Zebulon, Jr., married Sarah Watkins, Jan. 13, 1774.

Children,—John, born Feb. 10, 1776, married Kate Marsh, of Litchfield; was a merchant in Utica and Albany; also built a house in Litchfield, on East Street, where he resided many years; died in 1856; had children,—Samuel (deceased), John, and Edward (lawyers in New York City).

Benjamin, born Jan. 15, 1754, married Esther Benton, Feb. 21, 1779; he died Feb. 28, 1825, aged seventy-one. She died Dec. 27, 1840, aged eighty-three.

Children,—Rebecca, born Feb. 9, 1782, married William Smith, of Chenango, N. Y.; Anna, born Dec. 14, 1784, married Levi Hoyt, of Cooperstown, N. Y.; Nathaniel, born Dec. 31, 1786, married, first, Anna Smith, of Middlebury, Conn.; second, Sarah Marsh, of Litchfield, and had children,—Erastus S., Henry B., Ralph, Frederick, Julia A., and Charles; Benjamin married Melissa Post, of Canaan, Conn., February, 1822, and had children,—Oscar, Benjamin, George, Augustus, Lawrence, and Melissa; Eunice, born Feb. 10, 1790, died unmarried; Abigail, born Feb. 19, 1792, married John Griswold, and had a daughter, Cornelia (married Dr. Charles Vaill); Rachel, born Sept. 18, 1793, married Jonathan North, of Greene Co., N. Y.; Dotha, born Oct. 18, 1795, married John Landers, of Broome Co., N. Y.; Herman, born Jan. 16, 1797, married Anna Peck, Nov. 30, 1820, and had children,—Leonard C., David O., Julius (deceased), Harriet, Frances J., Julius (2d); the family removed to Fon du Lac, Wis.; Amos, born July 16, 1799, married Lydia Hall, March 15, 1827, and had children,—Edward, William, Elizabeth, Julia, Dwight, Mary. Julia married Lyman J. Smith.

* It is related of Capt. Bezaleel Beebe, by his son, the late William Beebe, that in after-years he had many visits from the Revolutionary soldiers formerly of his company. Many of them, in spending the hours in visiting with their old captain, would recount the battles, marches, and imprisonments they had gone through together. While they talked the tears would roll down their aged cheeks, in telling of the hardships and privations they had endured in the camp and marches of that eventful period.

Henry B. Bissell, son of Nathaniel Bissell, was born April 10, 1814. He received a common-school education; married Clarissa M., daughter of Capt. Samuel Wright, of Milton, Conn., April 7, 1841.

They had nine children, of whom six are now living. He is by occupation a farmer. He is a member of the Congregational Church in Litchfield, and was chosen deacon May, 1858.

ELIADA KILBOURN.

Eliada Kilbourn is of English descent, and a lineal descendant of the seventh generation from Thomas Kilborne (as the name was formerly spelled), who was the ancestor of all the Kilbourns in Connecticut, and most of those in other States of the Union and in Canada. Said Thomas Kilborne was born in 1580, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and with his family, consisting of wife, Frances, and children, viz., Margaret, Lydia, Marie, Frances, and John, embarked from London, England, on the 15th of April, 1635, in the ship "Increase," Robert Lea master. The family settled at Wethersfield, Conn. Thomas Kilborne died previous to Dec. 25, 1640, as appears from the Wethersfield Land Records, Book I., page 135.

SECOND GENERATION.

Sergt. John Kilborne, only son of Thomas and Frances Kilborne, was born in 1625, consequently was only ten years of age when he came to America with his parents. His name appears on the Wethersfield Records as early as Sept. 24, 1647, and was a landholder as early as May 20, 1649. Though history has neglected to chronicle his deeds, his name, nevertheless, appears conspicuous upon the "Old Colonial Records" for a period of nearly half a century. He seems to have been an active, energetic spirit in the little colony, and to have possessed in no small degree the confidence of his fellow-colonists. He married Naomi —— in 1650. She died Oct. 1, 1659, leaving three children, viz., John, Thomas, and Naomi. He then married Sarah ——, by whom he had Ebenezer, Sarah, George, Mary, Joseph, and Abraham. He died April 9, 1703, and his wife died Dec. 4, 1711, aged seventy years.

THIRD GENERATION.

Joseph Kilborne, third son of John Kilborne by his wife Sarah, was born in Wethersfield, Conn., about 1672, and was married to Dorothy, daughter of Deacon Samuel Butler, June 4, 1696. She died Aug. 19, 1709, and he married, for his second wife, Hester, daughter of Jacob Gibbs, of Windsor, June 29, 1710. By his first marriage he had the following children, viz., Dorothy, Joseph, Jonathan, and James. By his second marriage, Benjamin, Hester, Elizabeth, and Mary. Joseph Kilborne was one of the first settlers of Litchfield, Conn., and one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church in Litchfield. On the 12th of December, 1721, he was admitted an inhabitant of Litchfield, and on the 17th of December, 1722, he was chosen a selectman, and on the 26th of December, 1722, he was appointed, with two others, "A committee for building the meeting-house." He filled various offices of trust until his death, probably in the year 1744.

FOURTH GENERATION.

Capt. Joseph Kilbourn (the 2d), son of Joseph Kilbourn by his wife Dorothy, was born in Wethersfield, Conn., July 9, 1700, and emigrated to Litchfield, Conn., with his father in 1721, where he married Abigail Steckwell, Nov. 12, 1723. He held nearly all the offices of trust and honor in the town, and was a representative from Litchfield to the Colonial Legislature in October, 1752, and in May, 1753. On the organization of the Episcopal Society in Litchfield, he gave to said society "one-third of an hundred acre lot situated in South Farms." He was a farmer, as his ancestors had been, and lived one-half mile west of the village of Litchfield. He died in 1756, having survived his wife some eight years. His children were as follows,—Elisha, Benjamin, Jeremiah, Ruth, Solomon, Charles, Catharine, Anna, and Abigail.

FIFTH GENERATION.

Solomon Kilbourn, fourth son of Capt. Joseph Kilbourn, was born in Litchfield, March 1, 1736; married Anna Palmer, April 8, 1756, and died July 30, 1806. He was a farmer by occupation. His children were Rachel, Hannah, Jeremiah, Solomon, Anna Olive, Whitman, and Sibbil (also spelled Sybbel.)

SIXTH GENERATION.

Whitman Kilbourn, third son of Solomon Kilbourn, was born in Litchfield, Conn., April 12, 1772; married Thala, daughter of Capt. John Osborn, April 7, 1800. Their children were as follows: Myron, Ethan, Lewis, Eliada, Amanda, and James. His daughter, Amanda, married James B. Peck, of Litchfield. Mr. Kilbourn was a farmer by occupation and a Whig, or more properly now (1881) known as Republican, in politics. He died June 18, 1843, and his wife died May 8, 1865, in the eighty-ninth year of her age.

SEVENTH GENERATION.

Eliada Kilbourn was born in Litchfield, Conn., February, 1809. He remained at home with his parents till their death, when he became the owner of the "old homestead." He married Mary Ann, daughter of Deacon Charles Dudley, of Litchfield, Conn., Nov. 1, 1843, and to them have been born four children, viz., Myron E., born Nov. 1, 1844, married and resides in Wisconsin; Charles D., born April 22, 1847; Caroline, born March 25, 1850; and Florella M. A., born July 5, 1853. Caroline married Frank W. Griswold, a farmer of Goshen; Florella M. A. married Fremont M. Grunins, a farmer in Litchfield. Mr. Kilbourn has always been a farmer, and a man universally respected. In politics a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Kilbourn are members of the Congregational Church in Litchfield. His son, Charles D., has control of the home-farm, which consists of some two hundred acres, which is in a good state of cultivation. In politics he is a Republican, and a member of the Congregational Church. He married Matilda R. Norton, of Norfolk, Oct. 4, 1876, and has one son, Harry N.

NOAH GUERNSEY.

Noah Guernsey was a son of Noah Guernsey, who settled in Litchfield, near Northfield, Conn., at an early day, and was born on his father's farm, April 10, 1793. He married Amanda Crosby, May, 1816. She was born Jan. 29, 1795, and is still hale and hearty, and retains much of the vigor of youth, though she is in the eighty-seventh year of her age. Their children were William H. (deceased); Julia A., wife of Guy Catlin (deceased); Egbert, a prominent physician in New York City; Noah (deceased); and Harriet (deceased). Mr. Guernsey was a farmer by occupation, as his father had been before him. He took a deep interest in political matters, and often held the more important offices in his town. As a Whig, he was often a selectman of the town. Mr. and Mrs. Guernsey were members of the Congregational Church. He died April 16, 1873. He was honest, sober, industrious, and economical. He was esteemed and respected by all who knew him. His widow is residing with her only living daughter, Mrs. Guy Catlin, about one mile northwest of Northfield, Conn.

GUY CATLIN.

Guy Catlin, son of Levi Catlin, was born Oct. 9, 1819, on the farm in Litchfield, Conn., where he continued to reside till his death, Feb. 11, 1861. His advantages for an education were limited to the common schools of his day except a year spent in the Litchfield Academy. On the 23d of May, 1843, he married Julia A., daughter of Noah and Amanda Guernsey, of Litchfield, Conn., and to them were born Amelia G., a teacher in San Francisco, Cal.; Alice A., a teacher in New York City; and Austin H., a conductor on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad. Mr. Catlin was a successful business man and farmer, and although he died in the prime of life, he left his family in comfortable circumstances. He was a staunch Republican in politics. He was a quiet, unassuming man, courteous towards all, and charitable to those who differed from him. The Catlin family is one of the oldest, as well as one of the most highly esteemed families in Litchfield, and the subject of this sketch inherited some of the noble qualities of head and heart of his honored ancestors.

NOAH GUERNSEY.

Guy Carleton

Henry H. Bancroft

HENRY W. BUEL, M.D.

Henry W. Buel, M.D., son of Samuel Buel, M.D., who was a practicing physician of eminence in Litchfield for more than forty years, was born April 7, 1820. In 1840 entered Yale College, and graduated in 1844, receiving the degree of A.B., and in 1847 the degree of A.M. Immediately after leaving college commenced the study of medicine, at first with his father, and subsequently in the offices of Dr. W. P. Buel and Dr. Gordon Buck, of New York City, at the same time attending the courses of lectures at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of that city. Receiving the appointment of junior walker in the old New York Hospital he passed regularly through the grades of junior and senior walker, one year in each; and finally, after receiving the degree of M.D. from the college, was appointed house-surgeon at the hospital, and served the regular period of one year, remaining also a short time longer in that position, and receiving a certificate of recommendation from the governors and surgeons of the hospital. Upon leaving the New York Hospital, in 1849, was appointed resident physician of Sanford Hall, Flushing, L. I., which position he occupied five years. In 1854 returned to Litchfield; in 1856 revisited Europe; and in the year 1858 commenced the institution now known as "Spring Hill Home for Nervous Invalids." Has been president of the Connecticut Medical Society, of the Litchfield Medical Society, member of the State board of charities, and was also appointed by Governor Hubbard one of three commissioners to examine into and report upon the need of provision for the indigent insane of the State.

PAYNE KENYON KILBOURNE, A.M.

Payne Kenyon Kilbourne (son of Chauncey and Hannah Kenyon Kilbourne) was born in Litchfield, Conn., July 26, 1815. He was bred a printer, in the office of the late Nathan Whiting, Esq., long known as the editor of the Religious Intelligencer, the first and oldest religious newspaper in the world. At the age of eighteen years he commenced writing for the periodicals of the day, both in prose and verse, and soon achieved a respectable reputation in that department of literature. In the spring of 1836, Mr. Storer, proprietor of The Literary Emporium, offered a series of prizes for the best tales and poems that should be written for that paper. The committee of award consisted of Mr. Storer (the editor), David Francis Bacon, M.D., and the Rev. Oliver Ellsworth Daggett, D.D. Young Kilbourne (though still in his minority) determined to run his chance of success, and accordingly wrote and sent in an article in Spenserian stanzas, entitled "New England." The committee, after due deliberation, decided that the best poem presented for their examination was one written by the Rev. J. H. Clinch, A.M., of Boston, Mass., and the second best was that from the pen of the subject of this sketch. In December, 1837, when but little more than twenty-two years of age, he became the editor and proprietor of The New Havener, a weekly literary periodical. While under his supervision it numbered among its contributors Prof. Gibbs, of Yale College, Noah Webster, LL.D., Rev. J. H. Clinch, Mrs. Sigourney, and other writers of established reputation. During the autumn of 1839 he removed to Philadelphia, but soon after became associated with Mr. Naudain as joint editor of The Delaware Sentinel, a large tri-weekly political journal published in the city of Wilmington, Del. Here he remained through the "Harrison campaign," perhaps the most exciting one in our partisan annals, and had the satisfaction of believing that his services were generally acknowledged and appreciated. In the mean time he had been a frequent and well-known correspondent of several of the most popular magazines and literary papers in the Union, in the prospectuses of some of which his name had been widely heralded as a "principal contributor."

In the summer of 1841, Mr. Kilbourne left Wilmington with the intention of seeking his fortune in the West, but unforeseen circumstances changed his destination. He soon after became connected with E. B. Greene, Esq., in the editorship of The New England Weekly Review, in Hartford, Conn., a paper which had previously been edited by the celebrated poets John Greenleaf Whittier and George D. Prentice. In June, 1842, he published a volume of one hundred and eighty pages, entitled "The Skeptic, and Other Poems," which was well received by the public. "The Iron Horse," a poem, also from his pen, soon after made its appearance in pamphlet form. He remained in Hartford, as one of the editors of The Review and of The Columbian, until the summer of 1845, when he returned to his native town, and became the editor and proprietor of The Litchfield Enquirer.

During his residence in Litchfield Mr. Kilbourne was four or five times elected a member of the board of education. In 1847 his "Family Memorial," an octavo volume of one hundred and fifty pages, was published. In February, 1850, he was commissioned by Governor Trumbull as a notary public; and in January, 1851, he was appointed and sworn as a commissioner of deeds for the State of Vermont. During the year last named his poem entitled "Bantam" was given to the public in a pamphlet form, and his "Biographical History of Litchfield County" was published in an octavo volume of four hundred and sixteen pages. On the 24th of August, 1852, he was appointed by his excellency Governor Bigler, of Pennsylvania, pursuant to an act of the Legislature of that State, a commissioner, resident in Connecticut, with "authority to take the acknowledgment and proof of any deed, mortgage, or conveyance of any lands, tenements or hereditaments lying or being in the State of Pennsylvania, or any other writing under seal to be used or recorded therein; with full power and authority also to administer oaths, take depositions, and examine witnesses under any commission emanating from any of the courts of said State relating to any cause depending or to be brought in any of said courts."

In consequence of too close application to business the health of Mr. Kilbourne ultimately became so impaired that, in March, 1853, he disposed of the Enquirer office to Mr. H. W. Hyatt.

At the annual commencement of Union College, N. Y., in August, 1853, the president and trustees of that institution conferred upon Mr. Kilbourne the honorary degree of Master of Arts.

In politics Mr. Kilbourne was uniformly recognized as a Whig. Though the life of a politician was far from being congenial to his tastes, his position as editor almost necessarily compelled him to take a somewhat active part in the contests of the day. He was often a delegate to Senatorial, Congressional, and State conventions; frequently officiated as secretary of these conventions, and on the committees on resolutions; and in March, 1855, he was president of the American Senatorial Convention which convened at Winsted, Conn.

In the summer of 1855 he took a trip to the Old World. An account of his tour through England and Wales, in several chapters, was published in the Enquirer in the summer and autumn of that year, under the general head of "Rides and Rambles in the Father-Land."

Mr. Kilbourne was a member of the Connecticut Historical Society; corresponding secretary of the Kilbourne Historical and Genealogical Society; secretary of the Litchfield County Historical Society; corresponding member of the Historical Societies of Massachusetts, New York, and Wisconsin; Fellow of the American Statistical Association; corresponding member of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society, etc. Also clerk of the borough of Litchfield; clerk of the Court of Probate for the district of Litchfield; and commissioner of the Superior Court of Connecticut.

In 1856 he published "History of Kilbourne Family," one of the earliest and best-arranged genealogies published; was Governor Holley's private secretary in 1857; published "History of Litchfield," put in type by himself, in 1859. This publication is a valuable contribution to the historic literature of the State, and takes front rank among the standard local works of our times. Mr. Hollister, in the preface to his "History of Connecticut," vol. ii., gives Mr. Kilbourne a glowing tribute, closing, "I should have been unable to do even the little I have done without him, and am not willing to let this occasion pass without attempting to do him justice: as a genealogist, I have never seen his superior." He died July 19, 1859.

DANIEL SHELDON.

There is no prouder or more enduring personal record than that of a man who devotes his life-work to the advancement of a noble profession and the amelioration of the human race. Such a one is Dr. Daniel Sheldon, one of the first in date and in medical skill of the physicians of Litchfield, who enjoyed in an eminent degree the confidence and respect of his fellow-townsmen. He was entirely devoted to his profession, which he practiced with judgment and sound common sense, detesting quackery and disliking the heroic treatment. Threatened at one time of his life with pulmonary consumption, his experience in his own case indicated a regimen which is still considered the best, if not the only, method of dealing with this dangerous disease. His reputation extended throughout the State and to the city of New York.

Dr. Sheldon's cheerful, kind, and disinterested character made him a general favorite. All his actions were directed by a strong sense of duty. He came of a sound Puritan stock, and was educated in those bracing Calvinistic doctrines which produced in the New England of his youth and manhood "a horror of sin, an enthusiasm for justice, purity, and manliness."

Dr. Sheldon was descended from Isaac Sheldon, an Englishman, who settled in Dorchester, Mass., in 1634. He was born in Hartford, Conn., Oct. 19, 1750 (O. S.). Like many other New England boys his time was divided between farm work in summer and the grammar school in winter, where he acquired a knowledge of Latin and Greek. At the age of seventeen he went to reside with his uncle by marriage, Dr. Bird, of Litchfield South Farms, and studied medicine. He commenced practice in Washington, Conn., and was married in 1777, to Miss Charlotte Judson, of Washington, by the Rev. Daniel Brinsmade. Mrs. Sheldon died in 1782, leaving two children. In 1784 he remarried with Miss Huldah Stone. The celebrated Dr. Lemuel Hopkins, whose wife was a sister of Miss Stone, was then practicing in Litchfield. It was arranged between them that Dr. Hopkins should move to Hartford, and Dr. Sheldon take his place in Litchfield. This was in 1784. Dr. Sheldon remained in Litchfield until he died, in April, 1840, at the age of ninety, having enjoyed excellent health to the end.

He had six children. His eldest son, Daniel Sheldon, Jr., was secretary of the United States Legation in France, and Chargé d'Affaires. He died in Marseilles in 1828. His second and third sons, Frederick and Henry, were successful merchants in New York. His daughter, Mrs. Lucy Beach, still survives him, in healthy, happy, and honored old age, and resides in the house he built in Litchfield, and in which she was born.

Dan.l Sheldon

S. W. Dudley

Herman Beach

CHARLES D. WHEELER.

RESIDENCE OF CHARLES D. WHEELER, LITCHFIELD, CONN.

VIEW OF BARNS OPPOSITE THE RESIDENCE OF CHARLES D. WHEELER.

RESIDENCE OF LEVI COE, LITCHFIELD, CONN.

SAMUEL H. DUDLEY.

Deacon Samuel H. Dudley was born in Litchfield, June 28, 1804. He is descended from William Dudley, who was an Englishman by birth, and the first of the family who emigrated to this country. He settled in Guilford, Conn., in 1639, and died at Saybrook, March 16, 1684. He was twice married; his second wife was Mary Stow, by whom he had nine children, of whom Joseph was born April 16, 1643. He married Ann Robinson; they had nine children, of whom William was born Dec. 17, 1678; married Ruth Strong, of Lyme, Conn., for his first wife, and Rebecca Fish for his second. He raised a large family, among whom was Medad, born Feb. 3, 1724; married Mary Fowler; they had nine children, one of whom was Charles, who married Ruth Hart, of Durham; they had five children, viz., Susan A., Lois, Samuel H., Frederick, and Ruth. The mother died Aug. 27, 1808. Mr. Dudley was again married, to Rhoda Baldwin, of Washington township; they had two children, Mary Ann and Charles. Mary Ann is the wife of Eliada Kilbourn.

Samuel H., the eldest son of Charles Dudley, resided with his father in Litchfield, and worked upon the farm until he was thirty years of age, where he was married, and settled on a farm near the old home. His wife died Dec. 22, 1873, leaving three children, Lucretia, Florence A., and Caroline E.

Mr. Dudley and his wife were consistent members of the Congregational Church, where he has officiated as deacon for more than forty years.

HEMAN BEACH.

Heman Beach was born in Litchfield, June 23, 1813. He was the son of Heman Beach, who was born on Beach Street, in the town of Litchfield, where the family have lived for several generations. The Beach family trace their genealogy to their ancestors who came from England and settled at New Haven at an early day.

Heman Beach, Sr., was a farmer on Beach Street. He married Clarissa Kilbourn, only child of Appleton Kilbourn, who was the son of James, and grandson of Joseph Kilbourn, one of the first settlers of Litchfield and one of the founders of the Presbyterian Church in that town. He was admitted an inhabitant Dec. 12, 1721 (see biography of Eliada Kilbourn). Heman Beach was a farmer in Litchfield; his wife died, leaving three children, two of whom are still living, viz., Marcia, married James C. Newcomb, a farmer on the old Kilbourn homestead; Milo is also a farmer. Mr. Beach was a second time married, to Phebe Landon.

Heman Beach (2d) came on to the place where he now resides when eighteen years of age, with his father, who owned the farm. Here he has lived for fifty years, and is one of the substantial and respected citizens of his town. He has been three times married. First, to Eliza Thomas. She died Dec. 10, 1849, leaving six children,—Algaman G., Thomas W., Eugene I., Charles T., Wesley H., Eliza J.,—three of whom are now living. Mr. Beach was again married, to Minerva D. Goslee. She died Jan. 29, 1853, aged twenty-four years. He was a third time married, to Mary K., daughter of Daniel Keeler, who came to Litchfield when seventeen years of age with his father, from Middlebury, and settled on a farm near the village of Bantam; their children are Edgar D., Frederick E., Oscar D., and Mary C.*

CHARLES D. WHEELER.

Charles D. Wheeler was born in Stonington, Conn., Nov. 18, 1817. He was the son of Christopher and Orinda (Gallup) Wheeler, who came to Litchfield in 1819, where they raised a large family of nine children, as follows: Emeline, Christopher P., Eliza O., Charles D., Emeline Ann, William C., Elizabeth H., Mary Jane, and David M. The father died Jan. 24, 1858, and the mother August 27th of the same year. Only three of the children are now living, viz., Charles D., Elizabeth H., wife of John Williamson, and Mary Jane, wife of Jacob Morse.

Charles D. Wheeler was married when twenty-five years of age to Mary E. Guild, daughter of Albin Guild, of the fifth generation in this country. The family trace their genealogy to John, Samuel, and Ann Guild, who emigrated to this country from Scotland in 1643.

Soon after Mr. Wheeler was married he moved on to the farm where he now resides, and for forty years has pursued the vocation of agriculture. He has large and commodious buildings, with such surroundings as indicate the thrifty farmer. Politically Mr. Wheeler is a Democrat, and has filled the office of assessor, selectman, and represented his town in the Legislature in 1873. Mr. Wheeler and his wife are members of the Episcopal Church. They have one daughter, Jennie Elizabeth, wife of Isaac H. Hutchinson. They have two children, Charles L. and Carrie M.

LEVI COE.

The Coes are of English descent, but very little is known by the historian of the ancestors in this country. Thomas was one of the first of the name to settle in Litchfield County, having come from Middletown, Conn. Married and had children, of whom Levi Coe, Sr., was a son, born in Litchfield, Conn.; married Deborah McCall and had ten children, viz., Dyer, Ira, Walter, Emeline, William, Elizabeth, Olive M., Levi, Maria D., and Thomas M.; the three youngest are living, all born on the old Coe homestead in Litchfield, Conn.

* Since writing the above, Mr. Beach was taken suddenly ill and died March 26, 1881.

Mr. Levi Coe, Sr., purchased this farm before his marriage. He was twice married, but the children are by his second wife. He died in 1832. Mr. and Mrs. Coe were members of the Congregational Church.

Levi Coe, son of Levi Coe and Deborah McCall, was born on the farm now owned by him, Sept. 14, 1810. He has always been a farmer on the old homestead, which he bought of the heirs after the death of his father. His farm consists of some two hundred acres well improved; the buildings are substantial, showing thrift and enterprise. He married Lavinia M., daughter of Samuel and Lavinia (Judson) McNeil, of Litchfield, May 22, 1838. Their children were Dwight McNeil, died at twenty-three; Frederick L., married Sarah C., daughter of William Norton, and has two children, Stanley L. and Philip F.; and Francis M., born Jan. 22, 1852, married Marion J., daughter of Sherman Platt, of Marbledale, Conn.

Mr. Coe is a Republican in politics. He has been magistrate of the town several years. Mr. and Mrs. Coe are members of the Congregational Church in Litchfield.

Samuel McNeil, son of Isaac, was born in Litchfield, was a farmer by occupation, married Lavinia Judson, and had eight children, viz., Isaac H., Lewis J. (deceased), Louisa B., Lavinia M., Mary Ann, Julia E. (deceased), Frederick D., and Charles L. (deceased). Mr. McNeil died at sixty-three years of age, and his wife survived him and died at ninety-two.

JACOB MORSE.

John Morse, of New Haven, born in England about 1619, emigrated and settled at New Haven, 1639, and removed to Wallingford, Conn., 1670. John Morse was one of that noble band who founded the colony of New Haven. His foresight, courage, and enterprise in embarking in the work; his wisdom and prudence; his self-denial, firmness, and perseverance in carrying it on, are well attested by records when read in connection with the history of his times and the privations and trials of his situation. He lived to honor God and do good. Of the time and place of John Morse's birth, and the date of his arrival in New England, we have no certain information. If he had attained his majority when admitted a member of the General Court, 1639–40, he was born as early as 1619, which would have made him eighty-nine years old in 1708, when he, as is alleged, removed from Wallingford. But as his removal at that age is improbable, and as none of his children or grandchildren are known to have attained so great an age, he was not probably born earlier than 1622. That he came unattended by relatives is improbable. Francis Morse and Christopher Morse, of Boston, were not improbably his brothers; and John Morse, who married into the family of Robert Kaine, of Boston, and owned a house in Shoe Lane, London, might have been of the same race. Hopkins, Eaton, and Davenport arrived in Boston June, 1637,—too intent on locating at New Haven to listen to proposals from the General Court to settle in Massachusetts. John Morse probably came in that company, and a careful perusal of all the wills of the first planters of New Haven establishes that fact. He was no common youth. Without regard to the tradition which makes him to have been a relative of the father of Bishop Morse, Sr., he must either have been of high family or extraordinary precocity. He doubtless arrived at New Haven in 1638. The first record of him was dated Feb. 18, 1639–40, when he signed a social compact as one of the proprietors and planters, and was admitted a member of the General Court. At this time he was probably a minor. "Upon the formation of the government he took an oath, July 1, 1644, to support the same." He resided in New Haven thirty years, when he went to Wallingford, Conn., and there resided till his death.

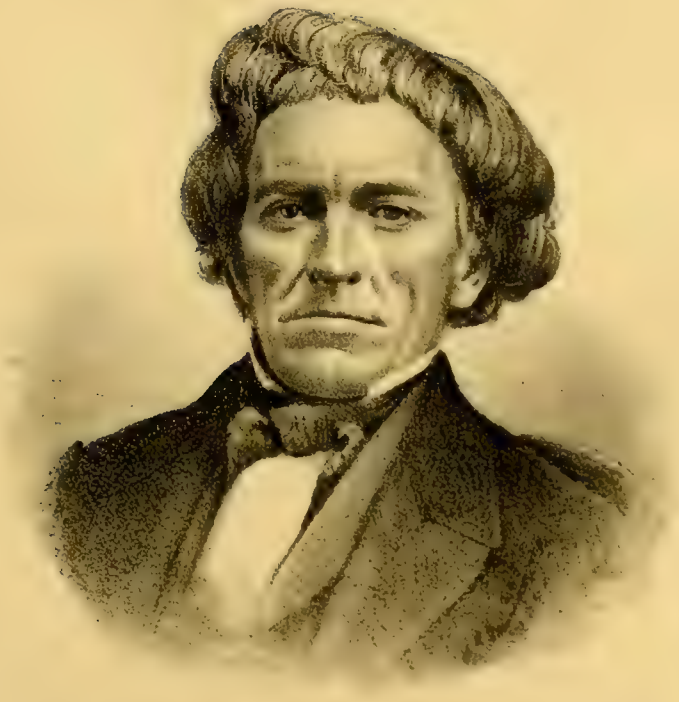
John (2), born Oct. 12, 1650, married Martha Lathrop, Dec. 12, 1677. He died March 31, 1717. His wife died Sept. 21, 1719. They resided at New Haven and Wallingford, Conn.

John (3), born Nov. 10, 1682; died May 14, 1755; married Elizabeth Hall, Feb. 25, 1708; resided at Wallingford. His wife died Jan. 17, 1754.

Levi (4), born Dec. 31, 1722; married Martha Fenn, Jan. 19, 1743–44; resided at Wallingford.

Amos (5), born Nov. 17, 1744; married first to Betsey Ives, second to Esther Andrews, of Litchfield, Conn. He died December, 1819; resided at Litchfield, Conn.

Jacob (6), born March 6, 1792; married Lucretia Gilbert, December, 1813. She died Sept. 18, 1818, and he married Harriet Morse, March 14, 1821, and had the following children, viz., Linus G., Lewis H., Lucretia, Jacob, and Albert (deceased). Mr. Morse was a farmer by occupation and a man much esteemed by all. He died Nov. 1, 1862.



Jacob Morse, the immediate subject of this sketch, was born in Litchfield, Conn., Feb. 19, 1827. He was reared a farmer, which honorable occupation has been the chief business of his life. He has also been engaged as a trader in stock. His advantages for an education were such as the common schools afforded, supplemented with a few terms at the Litchfield Academy. On the 1st of April of 1863, he settled in the village of Litchfield, on the place formerly owned by Julius Deming. In politics he has always been a Democrat, and as such he has been constable and first selectman of Litchfield for more than twenty years, and in 1861 was elected to the State Legislature of Connecticut. On the 16th of October, 1848, he married Mary Jane, daughter of Christopher Wheeler, of Litchfield. She was born Nov. 28, 1825. Their children are Ella O. (deceased); Virginia, wife of Truman Catlin; Christopher W., died young; Harriet E.; Arthur J.; and Dermont L. (deceased).

Levi Coe

Isaac Shorr

DAVID M. GRANT.

Yours Truly, E. F. Plumb

Mr. and Mrs. Morse are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he is one of its principal men and main supporters.

DAVID McNEIL GRANT.

David McNeil Grant was born in the house where he now lives in Litchfield, Aug. 11, 1812. He is the representative of one of the pioneer families of Connecticut. He traces his genealogy to Matthew and Priscilla Grant, who came from Scotland on the ship "Mary and John," and landed at Dorchester, Mass., in 1630. Their descendants were: (2) John and Mary (Hull); (3) Joseph and Sarah (Cook); (4) Increase and Ann (Herford); (5) Ambrose and Hannah (Mason); (6) Charles and Hannah (McNeil); (7) David McNeil and Caroline B. (Judd).

The first Grants—Matthew and Priscilla—landed at Dorchester, Mass., but soon went to Windsor, Conn., with a colony of Scotch people, where the family resided for several generations. Increase Grant was the first of the family to settle in Litchfield County. He came to Torrington as early as 1730. His son Ambrose was the pioneer in Litchfield, and settled in the north part of the town, where he built a large and substantial residence in 1795. Here the family have since resided. He had a family of seven children,—five sons and two daughters. His son Charles succeeded him on the farm. Charles married Hannah McNeil. They had four children,—three sons and one daughter, Harriet Lucretia. She is unmarried, and resides at the old home with the only surviving son, David McNeil Grant. He married Caroline B. Judd in 1860. She died in 1865, leaving two children, Charles H. and Fanny L.

THE PLUMB FAMILY.

The historian is not in possession of any facts relative to the history of the Plumb family prior to their settlement in Litchfield Co., Conn. They are of Scotch origin, however, and the first of the name in America of whom we have any knowledge was Ezra Plumb, who was born probably somewhere in New England, and was one of the early settlers in Litchfield County. He had two sons,—perhaps more children,—Ezra and Ebenezer.

Ezra Plumb (the second) was born in Litchfield, Conn.; married Sarah, daughter of Nathaniel Woodruff, and had a son, John. Ebenezer Plumb was born in Litchfield, Conn., Jan. 23, 1747, married Deborah Griswold, daughter of Elijah Griswold and granddaughter of Capt. Jacob Griswold; Deborah was born May 6, 1746, and died July 2, 1836. They had a daughter, Deborah. Ebenezer Plumb died Sept. 5, 1829.

John Plumb, son of Ezra, was born in the town of Litchfield, Conn., July 4, 1777, and married Deborah, daughter of Ebenezer Plumb. She was born Feb. 26, 1772, in Litchfield, Conn. They had two children,—viz., Frederick W. and Charlotte. Charlotte married Asa Slade, of Kent, Conn., and is still living, and is a widow, eighty-one years of age.

John Plumb was a blacksmith, and a man in moderate circumstances. In politics a Whig. He died in early manhood, aged thirty-four years, and his wife died at forty-eight years of age.

Frederick W., only son of John and Deborah Plumb, was born in the town of Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 28, 1801; married Huldah Seymour Landon, daughter of Capt. Seth Landon, of Litchfield, Conn. (See history of James Landon, of Salisbury, Conn., for history of Landon family.) Mr. Plumb was a substantial farmer, and at his death left his family in good circumstances. In politics he was a Republican. While he always manifested a great deal of interest in political matters, he never aspired to official honors. Mr. and Mrs. Plumb were members of St. Michael's Church, at Litchfield, Conn., and he was a warden of the same. Mr. Plumb was a man universally respected. He died Sept. 25, 1877; his wife died July 19, 1854, leaving to her children the legacy of a Christian character. Their children are as follows, viz.:

(1) John L., born Dec. 14, 1831, married Lucy Fields, daughter of Lyman Fields, of Watertown, Conn., and has five children,—(1) Frederick L., (2) Anna G., (3) Edward L., (4) Willey S., and (5) John F. He is a farmer and florist by occupation, and resides on the old Plumb homestead.

(2) Seth F., born Aug. 27, 1836, received a common-school education, working on his father's farm summers and attending school winters. He taught school several winters until the breaking out of the great civil war, when he enlisted as a private in Company E, Eighth Connecticut Volunteers, July, 1861, and was with his regiment during their three years of service. He re-enlisted with rank of first sergeant, and came home to get recruits for his regiment. Soon after his return to his regiment he was commissioned lieutenant by Governor Buckingham, of Connecticut. He continued with his regiment, taking part in all the engagements of the same, until he was killed at Chapin's Farm, Va., Sept. 29, 1864.

From the Connecticut war record we quote the following:

"One other name I must mention among our honored dead. Our rolls record him only as an enlisted man, with rank of sergeant, for although having been commissioned, he had never been mustered as lieutenant. But fairer character never graced a soldier's uniform, and he lives embalmed in the affections of home and in the hearts of his comrades. He led in the closing prayer of that last meeting before the fight, and his last words as the column moved for the charge were respecting 'that good meeting' and the preciousness of Christ to the soldier. Even the casket in which such a jewel has been carried is prized, and as we write here in camp, on the burying-ground of Litchfield, Conn., weeping friends are preparing the grave of our dear comrade, Seth F. Plumb."

(3) Lemira E., born June 29, 1838, and resides with her brother William H.

(4) William H., born Sept. 17, 1840. He enlisted

Aug. 9, 1862, in the Litchfield County regiment, known as the Nineteenth, served three years, and was honorably discharged with his regiment, July 12, 1865. At the present time (1881) he is a farmer on the "Old Landon Homestead," in Litchfield. He married Emma T., daughter of Ferdinand Buell, of Litchfield, Conn., and they have three children, viz., (1) Ida E., (2) Anna B., and (3) Frederick B.

(5) Charles E., born March 17, 1845, married Emma, daughter of William E. Camp, of Philadelphia, Pa. They have two children,—William Edgar, born August, 1870; Fanny, born September, 1873. He is engaged in business in Philadelphia.

PHILIP S. BEEBE.

Samuel Beebe came to Litchfield in 1721, within three years of the settlement of the town. In Kilbourne's "History of Litchfield" he is recorded as one of the forty-seven "first settlers." From that time to 1867 one male member, and but one of each of six successive generations resided there.

Concerning the antecedents of Samuel Beebe, until recently nothing has been known, and the information herein contained came quite by accident in the way of the writer, and is on the excellent authority of Lucius M. Boltwood, Esq.

The second volume of the probate records of Hartford* contain the record of the will of John Beebe, made at sea in the year 1650, with this preamble:

"I, John Beebye, husbandman, late of Broughton in County of Northampton, being by God's good hand, brought on a voyage toward New England to sea, and there smitten by the good hand of God, so that my expectation is for my change, yet through mercy as yet in perfect memory and understanding."

He names seven children, viz., John, Thomas, Samuel, Nathaniell, Rebecka, Mary, and Jeames, and divides his estate of seventy-three pounds equally among them, and appoints the four eldest, John, Thomas, Samuel, and Rebecka, executors, and his loving friends, William Lewis and John Cole, overseers.

The maker of this will died on the voyage, May 18, 1650. His children settled in New London and Stonington, Conn., and from them probably all of the name in this country are descended.

James Beebe, the youngest son, born about 1641, married, first, in Hadley,† Mass., Mary Boltwood, Oct. 24, 1667; second, in Stratford, Conn., Sarah Benedict, Dec. 19, 1679. His son by his first wife was Samuel, who settled in Litchfield, born June 26, 1672, in Hadley, Mass., whence he removed with his father before 1678. James Beebe, several years after leaving Hadley, resided in Danbury, Conn., where he died in 1728. Samuel Beebe, with Hannah, his wife (of Danbury), removed to New Milford. They are there recorded as members of the First Church of that town. He went to Litchfield by 1721, when the town was first laid out. The records of the town were kept in Hartford at the first, and he is there noticed twice, once as assigned, with others, to the duty of building the "West Fort" of the town, for defense against the Indians, and once as making affidavit in behalf of Matthew Woodruff, who petitions the Legislature for the bounty offered for having killed an Indian. He died between 1728 and 1734.

He had seven children, all born before he removed to Litchfield,—viz., Mary, born 1699, married Enoch Buck, of New Milford, whose descendants still live in that town and Kent; Samuel, born in 1701, settled in Sheffield, Mass.; James, born in 1704, married Abigail Culver; John, born 1706, married Sarah Culver; James and John both removed to Canaan; Sarah, born 1713; Hannah, born 1714; Ebenezer, born Jan. 8, 1716, in New Milford, and removed with his father to Litchfield, to a location near the north shore of Bantam Lake, near which place his descendants lived until 1867. He married (1) Rebecca Webster; (2) Bethia Osborn, daughter of Benjamin and Abigail (Talmage) Osborn, born in East Hampton, L. I., Oct. 17, 1722. By her he had three children, viz., Rebecca, Bezaleel, and Ebenezer. Bezaleel married, July 11, 1764, Elizabeth Marsh, daughter of John Marsh.

The following sketch of his life is taken from Kilbourne's "History of Litchfield:"

Col. Bezaleel Beebe was born in Litchfield, April 27, 1741, and spent his life in his native town, except when absent in the service of his country. At the age of seventeen he enlisted as a soldier in the French war and marched with Capt. Evart's company to Fort George, where he was for some time stationed. He was afterwards a member of Maj. Rogers' celebrated corps of rangers, an account of whose exploits was published in London by their heroic commander; and, with Rogers, he participated in the engagement which resulted in the capture of Maj. Israel Putnam. During much of the succeeding year he was stationed at Fort Miller, under Capt. Whiting. In 1760 he enlisted in a company commanded by Capt. McNeile, of Litchfield, and continued in the service for three years. On the breaking out of the Revolutionary contest he was once more summoned to the field, having been commissioned as a lieutenant in the first recruits raised for that service, April, 1775. He forthwith marched with his company to Boston, and thence, after a short detention, to Crown Point, where

* This book of records has but recently been accessible to the present generation. It contains the following appended note:

"This volume, after having disappeared for many years, was discovered by me, in the city of New York, on Friday, the 6th day of December, 1861. CHAS. J. HOADLEY."

† The probate records of Hampshire Co., Mass., show why James was separated from the rest of the family. By William Lewis, overseer of his father's will, he was apprenticed to Thomas Stanly, of Hartford and Hadley, who, in his will, bequeathed five pounds "unto James Beebe, my servant, to be paid unto him aft he hath p'formed that tyme of service wch was promised by William Lewis, Senior, that he is to be with me until he is twenty and five years old."

WILLIAM BEEBE.

Philip S. Beebe

he was transferred to the quartermaster's department. In November, 1776, a company of thirty-six picked men were sent, under command of Capt. Beebe, to aid in the defense of Fort Washington. Here, on November 16th, he was taken prisoner, with all of the garrison of two thousand six hundred men, after a disastrous conflict in which the British lost twelve hundred men, and the besieged about four hundred. The honorable terms on which the garrison surrendered were disregarded, and the prisoners suffered in the prison-ships a cruelty so severe that when, on December 27th of the same year, an exchange was effected, only six of Capt. Beebe's thirty-six picked men survived the effect of starvation and disease to return home.

It was this cruelty that led Ethan Allen to make to Capt. Beebe the well-known remark, "There ought to be a hell for such scoundrels as Lowrie." Capt. Beebe was allowed the freedom of the city on parole, and was able to do much to alleviate the sufferings of his soldiers, but he was detained as a prisoner of war for nearly a year.

From this time onward he was in actual service until the spring of 1781, at which time he applied for and received an honorable discharge, and once more returned home. He enjoyed in an eminent degree the confidence and respect of his superiors in office, as well as of the soldiers under him.

While chief commander of the coast-guard of this State, he performed the duties and received the pay of a brigadier-general. A commanding figure and a peculiar dignity of character and manner, united to an innate kindness of heart and a courage equal to any emergency, contributed to render him an efficient and popular officer.

He was elected a member of the Legislature for the first time in the autumn of 1781, and several times afterwards, and was much employed by the Court of Probate in settling the estates of persons deceased. He departed this life May 24, 1824, aged eighty-three.

Col. Beebe had six children, viz., Sarah, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Joshua Garrett; Rebecca, married Reuben Rockwell, of Colebrook; Ebenezer, married Catherine Fair Knox, of New York, was major United States army; James, married Abi McEwen and settled in Winchester; William, born March 24, 1782, resided at the homestead in Litchfield, where he died Nov. 18, 1861.

During a long life, spent wholly in Litchfield, he was identified with all its public affairs. He served it in both houses of the Legislature and in many offices of trust. By probity of character, strength of will, and earnestness of convictions, he filled a large place in the community and in the church, of which he was a consistent and useful member, and gained in an unusual degree the confidence and esteem of his associates. He bore worthily the unblemished name of his ancestors, and bequeathed it as their chief inheritance to his descendants.

He married Clarissa Sanford, daughter of Joseph Sanford, of Litchfield. Their children are:

1. Eliza, married Dr. John W. Russell, and immediately after their marriage removed to Mount Vernon, Ohio, where Dr. Russell still (1881) resides.

2. Rebecca, married Alexander Howard, and lived in Mount Vernon until a short time before her death, in 1865, at Davenport, Iowa.

3. Philip Schuyler, born March 13, 1812, remained on the homestead in Litchfield until 1866. He married, first, Catherine E. Hall, of Newark, N. J., Oct. 10, 1838. She died Nov. 29, 1843, leaving one child, Harriet, who married Rev. Henry S. Kelsey. She died Aug. 4, 1865.

Philip S. married, second, Lucy Beebe Robbins, of Canaan, his third cousin. She died April 27, 1876, at Vineland, N. J. Their children are:

1. Sarah Holley, born Nov. 10, 1848; married Moses Lyman, Jr., of Goshen, and lives at Waverly, N. Y.

2. William, born Sept. 4, 1851, graduated at Yale College in 1873; married Elizabeth Febiger, of Wilmington, Del., June 22, 1880, and lives in New Haven.

The other children of William Beebe are: Harriet, died in 1837, unmarried; Olive, married Sheldon W. Peck, resides in Beloit, Wis.; Clara, married Joshua H. Darling, of Warsaw, Wyoming Co., N. Y.

CHAPTER XV.

WINCHESTER.

Geographical—Topographical—List of Proprietors of Winchester—Allotment of Lands—Survey, etc.—Indian History—First Conveyance of Land—First Roads—The Pioneers—Their Locations—Incidents of Pioneer Life—Initial Events—Reminiscences of Mrs. Swift—The First Forge—The Pioneer Grist-Mill—The First Saw-Mill—The Revolution—Names of Soldiers, etc.—Assessment Roll of 1783.

THE town of Winchester lies in the northeast corner of the county, and is bounded as follows: On the north by Colebrook, on the east by Barkhamsted, on the south by Torrington, and on the west by Goshen and Norfolk. It is situated in the "Evergreen district of the State," and is hilly and mountainous. The soil is a coarse gravelly loam and well adapted to grazing. The territory embraced within the limits of this town was granted by the Colonial Legislature in January, 1686, to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, and subsequently, Feb. 11, 1732, by a dissolution of the partnership between the two towns, it came under the sole proprietorship of Hartford.

THE PROPRIETORS OF WINCHESTER.

By a law of the General Assembly it was enacted that the owners of each township should have a corporate existence under the title of "Proprietors," vested with authority "to survey and allot to each individual his pro rata share according to the lists of 1720 of the land in the township to which he was assigned."

The first meeting of the proprietors of this town was held May 14, 1744, and was organized by choosing William Pitkin as moderator, and Thomas Seymour as clerk and register of deeds.

The following is a list of the names of the original proprietors, "with the several sums annexed to their names by which the respective rights and shares of said proprietors of the township of Winchester aforesaid are to be apportioned and holden, or divided to and amongst them, their heirs and assigns, according as the same is sett and apportioned in the deed of partition made of that part of those lands called the Western Lands, which was sett out to and among the inhabitants of Hartford," viz.:

	£	s.	d.
William Pitkin, Esq., heirs	251	0	0
Mr. Richard Lord's heirs	161	0	0
Rev. Mr. Thomas Buckingham	100	0	0
William Whiting, Jr.	21	0	0
Peter Pratt	41	0	0
Nathaniel Jones	39	10	0
Daniel Smith	23	0	0
Samuel Burnham	24	0	0
Thomas Hopkins	97	0	0
Jacob Merrill's heirs	64	0	0
Aaron Cook's heirs	171	0	0
John Pratt, Jr.	55	10	0
John Ensign	38	10	0
William Roberts, Jr., heirs	29	0	0
Joseph Easton	40	10	0
Timothy Phelps' heirs	71	0	0
Joseph Keeney	44	0	0
John Porter	33	0	0
William Cole	52	0	0
Capt. Thomas Seymour	206	0	0
Joseph Well's heirs	20	10	0
Samuel Church's heirs	31	0	0
Stephen Andrus	35	0	0
Henry and John Arnold	93	0	0
Wilterton Merrill	134	0	0
Thomas Burr	91	0	0
Col William Whiting	35	0	0
Capt. Joseph Wadsworth	44	10	0
Mr. John Whiting	125	0	0
John Pellett	21	0	0
William Williams	105	10	0
John Cole	40	0	0
Thomas Wells	79	10	0
Jonathan Barrett	49	0	0
Thomas Pellett	46	0	0
Joseph Keeney, Jr.	49	0	0
Isaac Kellogg	48	0	0
Richard Olmsted	73	0	0
John Shepard	64	10	0
Jonathan Olcott	41	0	0
Ensign Nathaniel Goodwin	124	10	0
James Ensign	121	10	0
Edward Dodd's heirs	22	0	0
Thomas Judd's heirs	61	10	0
Ebenezer Webster	38	10	0
Thomas Day's heirs	38	0	0
James Bidwell's heirs	18	0	0
John Skinner	138	0	0
Joseph Root	1	0	0
Thomas Meekin's heirs	24	0	0
Joseph Sedgwick	28	0	0
Jonathan Burnham	21	0	0
Richard Goodman	77	0	0
Caleb Watson	21	0	0
Lemuel Deming's heirs	15	0	0
Obadiah Spencer	161	0	0
Thomas Dickinson's heirs	51	0	0
Aaron Cook's heirs	51	10	0
John Kellogg's heirs	54	0	0
Thomas Burnham, Jr., heirs	29	0	0
James Porter	27	0	0
Richard Gilman	58	0	0
Caleb Benton	41	10	0
John Camp's heirs	2	0	0
Rev. Mr. Benjamin Colton	100	0	0
Thomas Burr, Jr.	51	10	0
Joseph Gilbert	53	0	0
Samuel Hubbard	25	0	0
Thomas Hosmer	193	0	0
Richard Burnham, Jr.	56	0	0
Thomas Whaples	26	10	0
Ephraim Tucker	32	0	0
John Hazletine	21	0	0
Richard Seymour	61	10	0
William Day	23	0	0
John Goodwin	52	10	0
John Williams' heirs	46	0	0
William Pratt	31	0	0
Jacob Webster's heirs	38	0	0
Mr. John Haynes' heirs	121	0	0
John Benjamin, Jr.	18	0	0
Thomas Burnham's heirs	51	0	0
Jonathan Bull	44	10	0
Jonathan Ashley	52	0	0
John Bantry	109	0	0
Caleb B. and Thomas Bunce's heirs	115	0	0
Joseph Cook	77	0	0
David Forbes	75	0	0
James Williams, Jr.	43	0	0
John Burnham, Jr	30	0	0
Samuel Burr	45	10	0
Joseph Farnsworth	25	0	0
John Butler	29	0	0
John Easton's heirs	90	0	0
Charles Kelsey	38	0	0
Samuel Spencer	60	10	0
Joseph Butler	66	10	0
John Abby	27	0	0
Phebe Russell	8	0	0
Ozias Goodwin	78	0	0
Ichabod Wadsworth	62	10	0
Timothy Porter	52	0	0
John Kilborn	51	0	0
James Poisson	18	0	0
Jonathan Tayler	27	10	0
Thomas Day, Jr., heirs	18	0	0

"The next meeting of the proprietors was held at Hartford, Oct. 8, 1750, which appointed a committee 'to proceed to and view the lands and make report to the next meeting, and to warn the Indians not to set fire on any of the lands upon peril of suffering the penalties of the law in case they so do.'

"The next meeting, held in January, 1751, voted, 'That whenever twenty proprietors should signify their wish to proceed to the settlement of the township, the clerk should call another meeting.' The next meeting, held in October, 1753, appointed a committee to form a plan for dividing and settling the township, but without result. More than two years later, Jan. 22, 1756, another committee was raised to view the lands, survey and renew the bounds and corners thereof, and to report to the next meeting a plan of laying out and settling the same. The plan reported and adopted at the next meeting, November, 1757, was to lay out two acres on the pound to each of the proprietors in two divisions, and that Col. Samuel Talcott, Capt. Thomas Seymour, William Pitkin, Jr., and Mr. John Robins, Jr., be a committee, before the next meeting, to adjust and make up the interests of each of the proprietors, for the more speedy settling and laying out of said two divisions; and in January, 1758, a committee was appointed 'to make and draw a lot for the proprietors, for their precedence and succession in laying out the two divisions in manner and form following, viz.: By making so many uniform papers as there are to be allotments, and on each of said papers write the name of the proprietor to have his share or allotment governed or laid out by said draft, and in a just and proper manner cause said papers to be drafted out of some covered instrument, as Providence shall direct, the lots No. 1, 2, 3, etc., in order as they come out, and make a return thereof to the proprietors under their hands;' and any proprietor owning by purchase or otherwise, to have all his rights added together in one allotment.

"The committee was intructed to divide the township into six tiers, running northerly and southerly, parallel with the eastern line of the township; the first five to be one mile and six rods wide (including a reservation for a six-rod highway northerly and southerly, where it will best accommodate), and the sixth, or westernmost tier, so broad as to take up the rest of the land. They were then to begin at the southwest corner of the township and lay out the lot first drawn by lines at right angles to the tier lines, and so proceed northward, in course, as the lots were drawn (each lot containing one acre to the pound of the proprietor's interest), not less than three and a half miles, unless the next lot will extend more than three and three-quarters miles northward; and then begin at the south end of the next tier east, and then to proceed northward, as in the first tier; and then to proceed with the third tier east in the same manner.

"In laying out the second division the committee were to begin at the northeast corner of the township, and lay out the first lot to the same proprietor who had the first allotment in the first division; and then to proceed southerly, laying out lots to the proprietors of the corresponding lots in the first division, in successive tiers, of the same extent southward as those in the first division were to extend northward.

"In the first division the committee were instructed to locate the rights of Caleb Beach, Landlord Mott and his son Mott, and of Ebenezer and Joseph Preston, so as to take into their allotments the lands and buildings then occupied and improved by them. They were also to reserve in the second division two mill lots of six acres each,—one on the Still River, embracing the Gilbert Clock Company's works, and the other 'The Old Forge Privilege,' on the lake outlet, now owned by the Winsted Manufacturing Company.

"On the fourth Monday of May, 1758, the committee reported their action, and exhibited a plan of their survey and allotments of the two divisions to a meeting of the proprietors, which was accepted and ordered to be recorded.

"The third and final division of lands in the township was ordered in November, 1763, and the committee reported their laying out of the same December 1st following, which report was accepted and ordered to be recorded. The undivided land in the northwest, or Danbury quarter, was laid out in three half-mile tiers, and one tier of one hundred rods, running northerly from the first division lands to Colebrook line, parallel with the west line of the town and reaching easterly to the third or westernmost tier of the second division, and allotments of one acre to the pound were made on a new drawing of lots beginning at the southerly end of the westernmost tier and proceeding northerly to Colebrook line; then beginning at the north end of the second tier and proceeding to the south end; then proceeding northerly on the third tier, and returning southerly on the one-hundred rod tier to its southerly end. The remaining allotments were made on the west, south, and east shores of Long Lake, so as to appropriate all the undivided lands of the township, except a section about a mile square at the southeast corner of the township afterwards taken on execution by parties who had made the 'Old North Road' by order of the General Assembly, and known as the 'Henshaw Tract.'

"Reservations of six-rod highways were made running northerly and southerly, 'where they would best accommodate,' in all the tiers, and located reservations four rods wide were made easterly and westerly, at irregular intervals, across the tiers; but the reservations in the aggregate fell far short of the requirements of the town.

"So far as the general plan and mechanical execution of this survey is concerned it seems excellent. The tier lines—except a blunder in their bearings in the first division—were accurately laid out and well defined. The lines of marked trees between the lots and on the tier lines are still readily found and traced wherever the primitive forest remains. The centre bounds, with stones containing the initials of the original owners, are generally still to be found in sections outside of the villages. But the system of triple division of owners' rights operated very unfairly on the small proprietors, and this injustice was aggravated by the width of the tiers on which the rights were laid. This operation may be illustrated by examples.

"Joseph Root had a proprietary right of one pound on the list of 1720. It entitled him to three acres of land. One of these was set to him unless he had sold his right to some larger proprietor in a strip of land in the first division one mile long and half a rod wide; another acre in the second division, of the same dimensions, and the third acre in a strip half a mile long and one rod wide. John Camp's heirs had a two pound interest, which in like manner was allotted to them in two detached strips of one rod wide and a mile long, and a third of two rods wide and half a mile long. In this way all the small proprietors found their allotments made in three detached driblets instead of in one salable plot, and only eighteen out of one hundred and six proprietors had allotments in parcels of one hundred acres or more.

"The reservations for northerly and southerly highways could be located within each tier where the road would best accommodate, but the located reservations for easterly and westerly highways could not be used unless the nature of the ground was adapted to a traveled road. As a consequence of this, so hilly and precipitous is the territory of the town, that scarcely one of its reservations has been opened for public travel, and not one in its whole extent. The result is that probably no town in the State has afforded as little encouragement to its settlers in the matter of highways.

"In another respect there was a meanness in the allotment of the land which it is to be hoped is unparalleled. It had been the uniform custom of township proprietors to make a liberal reservation of lands to aid the settlers in the support of the gospel and of common schools. Our stepfathers gave not a rood of land for support of schools at home or abroad, and as to religious endowments, they allotted three hundred acres each to two of their own resident clergymen, who, not being subject to taxation, could not regularly come in for their shares of the ill-gotten spoil.*

INDIANS—THOROUGHFARES.

"The Green Woods section of Litchfield County, though abounding with game, seems not to have been a permanent abiding place of the Indian, save along the Tunxis or Farmington River on the east, and the Housatonic on the western border. The Scaticoke Indians dwelt along the Housatonic, their chief residence in Kent. The Weatogues, of Simsbury, crowded out from the Tunxis valley by the white settlers, took refuge on the meadows of the Housatonic in Canaan.

"On the east a small tribe, or fragment of a tribe, probably crowded out of Farmington, took up their abode in New Hartford, near the gorge where the Farmington River breaks through a mountain ridge, which spot was designated by the early settlers as 'the Kingdom,' and eventually by the specific name of 'Satan's Kingdom.'

"A portion of this tribe moved up the Farmington to the foot of Ragged Mountain in Barkhamsted. Modern wiseacres assert that their council-fire was the mythical 'Barkhamsted Light-house,' of which so much has been said and so little known. The head man, or the last man of this tribe, named Chaugum, lived and reigned to near the close of the last century. His descendants in the female line, a race of bleached-out, basket-making, root-gathering vagabonds, with high cheek-bones and bow-and-arrow eyes, have continued to dwell on the Ragged Mountain domain and kept up the council-fires until a very recent period. A daughter of Chaugum married a runaway servant of Secretary Wyllys, of Hartford. They settled in the Danbury quarter of Winchester, and their descendants are the only known representatives of the aboriginal race in this town.

"Not a single mountain, lake, or river bears an Indian name. The flint arrow-head is occasionally found on the intervale lands, and in considerable numbers along the south shores of Long Lake, together with some other stone implements, indicating a resort there for fishing and hunting. There was also a cleared spot around a copious spring of water on the east shore of the lake, on land of Deacon Joseph W. Hurlbut, where numerous arrow-heads have been found."

The oldest conveyance of land recorded in Winchester bears date Nov. 28, 1729, by which John Kilbourn, of Hartford, conveys to Jonathan and David Hills, of Hartford, "all (his) right, title, share, and interest in and to a large Tract of Land, commonly known as the Western Lands, belonging to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, as it abuts on the Towns of Woodbury and Litchfield, west on the Colony Land, north on the Colony line, and east on Farmington and Simsbury, or however butted and bounded."

The first road through this town was the trail followed by the settlers en route to the lands at Goshen, Norfolk, and Canaan. Where it was located is unknown, but for a long time it continued to be the traveled path to the West.

"The General Assembly, at its May session in 1758, 'being advised that the road or way now often traveled through the towns of Simsbury, New Hartford, and Norfolk, to and through the northwestern parts of Canaan, towards Albany, is in many respects ill-chosen and unfit for use, and that some new and better road through said towns, or some of them, or the towns adjacent, may probably be discovered more direct and convenient, as well for carriages as traveling, to the great accommodation and benefit of his Majesty's subjects, and especially in time of war, occasionally traveling or marching, either from the eastern or central parts of the colony;' therefore

"Resolved, That Col. John Pitkin, of Hartford, Seth Wetmore, of Middletown, Mr. Wells, of Glassenbury, and Col. David Whitney, of Canaan, be appointed a committee, as soon as conveniently may be, to repair to and through said towns (and towns adjacent if need be), and with all care and diligence to view and observe said roads now used; and also, with the utmost care to explore and find out how and where any other shorter and better way, in whole or in part, may be practicable, and their full description thereof, with their opinion thereon, to make report to the Assembly at their session in October (then) next."†

"This committee," says Mr. Boyd, "at the May session in 1759, reported a new line of road, not departing in any instance more than two miles from a straight line, extending from the court-house in Hartford to Col. Whitney's in Canaan, and a plan of the intervening towns, with the line pricked thereon.

"The Assembly accepted this report, and directed the committee 'to lay out and make plain and certain the said new country road from the mansion-house of Samuel Humphrey, in Simsbury, to Col. David Whitney's in Canaan.' In May, 1760, the committee having discharged their duty, the Assembly ordered the way to be cleared and made passable for traveling before Nov. 20, 1761, by the towns and proprietors of townships through which it ran, and in case of non-compliance by any such towns and proprietors, the committee was to take such other measures to that end, at the expense of the delinquents, as would without fail accomplish the service before May 1, 1762.

"This thoroughfare, known to a former generation as 'The North Road,' and now almost a myth, had in its day an importance and renown which justifies our detailed history of its origin and progress. According to tradition, it was a wonder of the age that a direct and practicable route could be found and opened through the jungles and over the succession of steep rocky hills and mountains of the Green Woods for travel, and the movement of troops and munitions between Hartford and Albany. It soon became, and continued until 1800, the great and almost the sole thoroughfare of the colony in the direction of Albany. Continental troops passed over it for frontier service. Detachments of Burgoyne's army, as prisoners of war, marched over it to the quarters assigned them.

* Boyd's History.

† Colonial Records, vol. ix., pp. 94–95.

"There is a tradition that Col. Ethan Allen, while on military service in the Revolutionary war, presumed to desecrate the Sabbath by traveling over this road, instead of spending the day in sacred meditations at the hostelry of Landlord Phelps, or Roberts, on Wallen's Hill, or of Landlord Freedom Wright, further westward, when a little bushy-headed grand juror of our town emerged from his log cabin on the roadside, seized the bridle-rein of the colonel's charger, and attempted to arrest him as a Sabbath-breaker. The colonel, sternly eyeing the legal dignitary, drew his sword, and flourishing it aloft, irreverently exclaimed, 'You d—d woodchuck! get back into your burrow, or I'll cut your head off!' Grand Juror Balcomb, finding what a Tartar he had caught, prudently abandoned his captive and retired to his cabin.

"It should not be inferred from the amount of travel that this road was an Appian Way. On the contrary, direct as it was, it went up and down the highest hills, on uneven beds of rocks and stones, and passed marshy valleys on corduroy of the coarsest hemlock log texture. Commencing at the North village in New Hartford, it ran westerly up a steep hill, then turned northwesterly through the Bourbon region, crossing the Green Woods turnpike a little west of the toll-gate; then northerly by zigzags to the top of a lofty hill; then over Wallen's Hill, by the northeast school-house, down to Still River, near Daniel Wilson's; then up Dishmill Hill and onward by the Rowley Pond to Colebrook, and onward through Colebrook Centre to Pond Hill, in Norfolk, and thence by Norfolk Centre and Canaan toward Albany.

"Another bridle-path entered the township from the vicinity of Burrville and passed northwesterly by Landlord Mott's tavern to the south part of Norfolk before any settlement was made. In 1762 a committee of the Assembly, previously appointed, reported a highway along this route, 'beginning at a rock about three rods west of the fore door of the house belonging to Rev. Mr. Gold in Torringford, and running in a northwesterly direction a little more than a mile to Still River, about a hundred rods south of Yale's mill (at Burrville), thence in a northwesterly direction, by Spectacle Pond and Mott's house, to a stake and stones in Norfolk line.'

"This was the South road, by which emigrants from the southeastern towns wended their toilsome way to the western townships, in process of settlement. It was so 'hard a road to travel' that good Landlord Burr, living near the Hayden brickyard, used, as it was said, to detain his traveling guests until after morning worship that they might have the benefit of his prayers in aid of their arduous efforts to get up the old dug-way road, west of Burrville, an aid greatly needed.

"The first of these roads was for many years the only way of access from the east to the Winsted section of the town. By the second, many, but not all, of the immigrants came into the 'Old Society.' Several of the earliest pioneers came in from Torrington and Goshen, at the extreme southwest corner of the township, and located in Hall Meadow and the Blue Street region."

The first settler within the present bounds of Winchester was Caleb Beach, who purchased lands in May, 1750, and erected the first house in the town. This pioneer dwelling stood on the east side of the Hall Meadow road, about one-half mile north of the Torrington line, and near the line of Goshen.

In the proprietors' vote of January, 1758, ordering the survey and allotment of the first and second divisions of land, the committee were instructed "to lay out to Mr. Caleb Beach, or his assignees, his share or allotment in the division where his house now is, so as to take in his house, barn, and orchard, if his allotment shall be wide enough to take [them] in." The lot set out to him or his assignees under the instructions is a lot of sixteen and two-thirds acres, within Lot No. 6, in the first division. He conveyed away his right to this allotment March 18, 1756, and probably soon after moved back to Goshen, where he died Jan. 13, 1760, aged sixty-one years. His will was probated and recorded in the Litchfield Probate Court, and contained the following bequests of his earthly possessions:

"Imprimis, to my present beloved wife, Hannah, I give and bequeath one chest and one bed, and one great spinning-wheel, and one double spinning-wheel, to be her own and at her dispose.

"Item, To my eldest daughter, Sarah Andros, the wife of Elon Andros, of Wallingford, I give and bequeath to her, out of my estate, but five shillings; she having received her portion of my estate before.

"Item, To my sons Caleb and Hezekiah Beach, of Goshen, I give and bequeath my plough-irons, and drag teeth, and plows haius, viz. to my eldest son, Caleb, two-third parts, and to Hezekiah one-third part, to be their own and at their dispose.

"Item, To my son, Joel Beach, of Torrington, I give and bequeath three steel traps, with the chains belonging to them, and my shaving-knife, to be his own and at his dispose.

"Item, To my daughter, Margit Beach, I give and bequeath three chests, one table, six puter platters and plates, three puter basins, four puter porringers, one pair of tongs, one fireshovel and one trunnel, one pair of andirons, one brass warming pan, one brass skillet, a brass kettle, one iron kettle and three iron pots, to be her own and at her dispose."

Mr. Beach was grandson of Thomas Beach, an early planter of Milford, son and youngest child of Deacon John, of Wallingford, and brother of Deacon John, of Goshen, from whom Beach Street took its name. He was born at Wallingford in 1699, where he married the first of his three wives. Thence he first removed to Goshen, and afterwards to Winchester.

Caleb Beach was born at Wallingford in 1699; died Jan. 13, 1761. He married, first, May 26, 1726, Eunice Tyler. She died Jan. 10, 1733. He married, second, Oct. 4, 1733, Margaret Thompson. He had a third wife, named Hannah.

Joel Beach, third son of Caleb, and inheritor of his traps and shaving-knife, came into the town with his father at about fifteen years old, and is named as of Winchester in the record of his first marriage, in 1757. He afterwards lived in Torrington until 1761, when he purchased his lifelong residence on Blue Street, a little south of the stone school-house.

He is described by a cotemporary* as "a conservative of the first water,—conservative in his dress, in his food, and in all his habits,—six feet four or five inches high, gaunt and erect, with a pock-marked, weather-beaten face, large hands and feet, clothed in butternut-colored coat, vest, and small-clothes, garnished with long pewter buttons, stockings of black and white sheep's wool, cow-hide shoes of enormous size, crowned with a broad-brimmed, round-topped hat of dubious color; his customs on week-days, Sundays, and training-days were always the same, from early manhood to extreme old age. His fare was simple, consisting of bears' meat, venison, and wild turkey, when game abounded, and beef, pork, and mutton in after-years, with toast and cider, mush and milk, and bean porridge as his only luxuries."

He was, withal, a mighty hunter, never failing to bring down the deer, fox, or wild turkey with his six-foot shooting-iron.

He was also a fish fancier, and had stoned up a tank around a copious spring on the side of the road in front of his house, in which he kept a speckled trout of great size. There is another legend that a neighbor, with a long hooked nose, tinged at the end with deep red, coming along the road one day stooped down to drink from the tank. The trout, seeing the red protuberance as it touched the water, and fancying it a gaudy insect, sprang upwards and seized it. The nose recoiled, but too late. The fish was drawn out of the water, and dropped on dry land. Great was the rage of the man of the nose for a few moments, but as he surveyed the poor floundering fish, and reflected that he had got the worst of it, pity superseded wrath. Looking around and seeing no witness of his successful angling, he kindly restored the fish to the water and went on his way a happier man for his magnanimous act.

Mr. Beach's wife was also a dead shot. One day, near sunset, she discovered a panther in a tree near the house. Her husband was away, but his loaded gun was at hand. She seized and primed it, took deliberate aim, and lodged a bullet in its brain.

Mr. Beach died Nov. 28, 1820, aged eighty-four, leaving his original farm neither increased nor diminished by a single acre.

Samuel Gilbert, from Coventry, became a landowner and resident of the town in 1752.

Ebenezer Preston, from Wallingford, and Joseph Preston, from Farmington, became owners of an undivided right of land in 1754, under which they entered upon and improved a small tract of land adjoining Torrington line, extending from Blue Street road eastward to the north, and South road in the second tier, which, under a vote of the proprietors, was allotted to them in the division of 1758. Here was their first dwelling-place. They afterwards lived, in various parts of the town, to a good old age, leaving sons and daughters.

Joseph Preston, Sr., died in 1774.

Joseph Preston died in Winsted in 1824, aged eighty-five. He is believed to have been son to Joseph, the pioneer. He and his wife, known as "Uncle Joe" and "Aunt Keziah," lived early in this century in a log shanty on Sucker Brook. They were a simple-minded couple, who lived by basket-making and renovating splint-bottomed chairs. They once lost the day of the week, and made Sunday a day of labor. They started for meeting on their old pillioned horse on Monday, and learning on the way their unintended desecration of the Sabbath, returned home and spent the rest of the day in penitential and devotional exercises.

Jonathan and John Preston, father and son, from Waterbury, were here in 1767.

Samuel Preston, son of Ebenezer, owned and occupied a part of his father's land in 1768, and afterwards, until 1790, lived in the extreme southwest corner of the town.

THE PIONEER TAVERN.

Landlord Adam Mott, originally from Windsor, erected his hostelry on the bridle-path that preceded the old South road as early as 1754. It stood opposite the Hurlbut Cemetery, and on or near the site of the house of John Neth. The building was neither imposing nor spacious. Its walls were of unhewn logs, its roof of hemlock bark, with an opening in the ridge for the escape of smoke from the capacious stone chimney which ascended to the level of the garret floor. The landlord had two strapping boys who slept under the roof, and occasionally worked off their superfluous animal force by a wrestling match before getting into bed. One cold winter night, when the hearth was all aglow with coals and embers of the consumed firewood, the boys, in their shirt tails, grappled for a trial of strength. They struggled long and vigorously. At length one of them got the dead lock of the other at the edge of the yawning chimney. Both of them went headlong down the crater into the coals and embers in the fireplace. Whether the fare of the next day was called pork or bear's meat tradition does not say. It is presumable, however, if it was of the last night's roast that it was done brown.

* Rev. Abel McEwen, D.D., of New London.

How a tavern could be sustained in this uninhabited region is hard to conceive. Landlord Mott, however, took courage and made the best of his business. To an inquiry as to how he succeeded in retailing his first keg of rum, he replied that he was doing remarkably well; that hunters, when they came along, would fill their bottles, and that nearly every day he bought a glass of tanzy bitters of his wife, and that she would then buy one of him with the same fourpence-halfpenny.

The bark-roofed tavern, in the course of years, gave way to a red lean-to mansion of the old Windsor order of architecture, and this in its turn to a pleasant modern cottage, drawing its water from the original well.

Landlord Mott became poor, and died in his native Windsor. He had children (as appears by deeds on record): Jonathan, Adam, Jr., Lent, and Eunice, wife of Aaron Neal, of Farmington, and may have had others.

Jonathan Mott, son of Adam, Sr., came into the town with his father, and lived in a house on the slope of the hill, southeast of the tavern, which has long since disappeared. He died in 1818, aged one hundred and three, and was buried at the town's charge.

Adam Mott, Jr., succeeded his father in the homestead until 1767, and afterward lived west of the old Everitt tavern. He went to Ticonderoga in 1775, in Capt. Sedgwick's company; served in Capt. Beebe's company in 1776, at Long Island, and was in other service during the Revolution. He removed to Vernon, N. Y., in his old age, where he was frozen to death at the age of about one hundred years.

Lent Mott, son of Adam, Sr., had land from his father near the old Everitt tavern, on which he early resided. He served in the Northern campaign, in 1775, and probably did other service.

Loammi Mott, son of Adam, Jr., married, April 18, 1795, Polly, daughter of Samuel Clark, of Winchester, and moved with his father-in-law, about 1800, to Stockbridge, Mass.

Ira Mott, son of Adam, Jr., owned land on the Brooks Street road in 1784, and on Blue Street in 1788.

Moses Miller and Joshua Merrills were here prior to 1758, and owned land on Hall meadow.

William Filley, called in the deed "late of Torrington, now of Winchester," bought in 1761 seventy acres of land on Hall meadow, which included the land and house previously occupied by Caleb Beach, the first settler. He was drowned in a deep pool called the tub, in the West Branch, Aug. 3, 1774, aged thirty-nine.

Deacon Abraham Filley inherited a portion of his brother William's estate, and resided in the town most of his life. In 1772 his homestead was a part of the Col. Ozias Bronson farm. In 1774 he was of New Hartford, whence he removed to Winsted and had charge of Doolittle's mill; and afterwards lived and died in Old Winchester. He is said to have made a wooden clock with a penknife. In his later years he became a maniac, and was confined in a detached building.

Remembrance Filley, brother of William, also lived here, and served in the Revolutionary war. Thomas Hosmer, Jr., came into the town soon after 1761. Cornelius Merry and John Smith, Jr., were also here about this time.

David Austin, Jr., built and resided in the house adjoining the pond outlet.

Benoni Hills was born in Suffield in 1701; removed to Durham in 1724–25; to Goshen about 1740; afterwards to Torrington, and finally to Winchester, where he died, "ripe for Heaven," June 24, 1793, in his ninety-second year. Several years before his death he selected two rough stones of mica slate, and shaping them to his liking, engraved in rude letters on one of them, "Benoni Hills, this is my house;" and on the other, "O eternity, death is come;" to which is added, "June 24, 1793, B. H. æt. 93." Working at these stones was the special enjoyment of his leisure hours. He brought them with him from Torrington, and gave special directions to have them placed over his grave, where they now stand, in the old Winchester burying-ground.

Seth Hills, "of Winchester," is grantee in a deed of Oct. 9, 1765, conveying to him fifty acres bordering on Torrington, in the third tier, first division, which he had probably occupied earlier. Mr. Hills was first deacon of the church, and first representative of the town; a man of hardy constitution, indomitable energy, sound, good sense, and sincere piety; his integrity without a stain. He served as wagon-master in the Saratoga campaign; was present at Burgoyne's surrender, and assisted in clearing the field of the dead and wounded when the battle was ended. He died at Vernon, N. Y., June 3, 1826, aged nearly ninety years.

Capt. John Hills was here Dec. 6, 1776, and doubtless earlier. He lived in a house that stood in or adjoining the Hurlbut Cemetery. He was a gunsmith by trade, and his shop stood near his house. He sold his homestead to James Atkins in 1781, and afterwards removed to Charlotte, Vt., where he died March 15, 1808, aged seventy-six. He was great-grandfather of Deacon Abel S. Wetmore, now a resident of this town.

Beriah Hills came into the town after 1769, and lived on Torrington line on the east side of the road, in the third tier, second division, running north from Fyler's. He was for several years appointed "to read the psalm" in the old meeting-house, and died March 25, 1778, in his fifty-second year.

Medad Hills, of Goshen, third son of Benoni, a gunsmith, who made muskets for the State during the Revolution, was a large land-owner in Winchester, and resided at one period in the Norris Coe house. He had a son, Hewitt, who came into the town in 1788, and became one of its most prominent citizens.

Jesse Hills, son of Deacon Seth, lived on the farm recently occupied by Samuel Hurlbut (second), which he sold to Elijah Blake in 1798.

Chauncey Hills, second son of Beriah, a noted stammerer, lived in his father's homestead bordering on Torrington line until about 1802, when he sold out to Luke Case and William Bunnell, and removed to Litchfield, Herkimer Co., N. Y.

Benoni Hills, oldest son of Beriah, had no real estate during the life of his father.

In 1751, Capt. Josiah Avered, of Woodbury (Bethlehem Society), became the owner of undivided lands in Winchester, and was soon after disabled by the kick of a horse, and confined to his bed until his death in 1765. His property being almost exhausted during his protracted confinement, his widow, Mrs. Hannah (Hinman) Avered, or Everett, as now spelled, soon after his death removed with her aged mother and seven children to the wilds of Winchester while there were as yet but three families in the central part of the old society. They stayed in a house on the farm now owned by Deacon Abel S. Wetmore until a clearing had been made and a house erected on their land about two miles north of the Centre, on the old South country road, as it then ran toward Norfolk.

REMINISCENCES OF MRS. SWIFT.

"It is evident," says her granddaughter, Mrs. Swift, in her reminiscences, "that my grandmother removed from Bethlehem in 1765; and with her children came also her mother, Mrs. Mary Noble Hinman, who died in Winchester at ninety-two years of age. The date of her death is not known. Her grave is on the left hand of her daughter's, as you face the headstone of the latter.

"She is said to have been born in Northampton, and to have removed to old Milford at the age of sixteen, and that soon afterward, on a Sabbath morning, she and her sister went into the forest to collect thorns with which to dress themselves in order to attend church at New Haven. This sister was ancestress of President Day.

"During the severe winters of that period the hungry wolves howled in the little enclosure of my grandmother's cottage during the nights, and were seen to jump over the fence when any one opened the door. Many are the incidents related in my childish ears of the sufferings of the family during the Revolutionary war, particularly in the 'hard winter' of 1783.

"No grinding could be done at the mill; snow fell every other day for six weeks, and the wind and drifting seemed only a continuation of the storm. Grain and corn were boiled for family use. Wood was drawn on the tops of the drifts on a hand-sled by my Uncle Andrew (the youngest son) on snow-shoes, and received by his sisters through a window at the back of the house. My Uncle Noble at this period was a chaplain in the army, and my father (Josiah) also away getting his profession, and afterwards in command of a company on the Canada frontier.

"During the hard winter a piece of check-woolen for soldiers' shirts was put into the loom, but it was impossible to weave it on account of the cold; so it was all wound out in balls, then doubled (one thread white and the other blue) and twisted on the 'great wheel'; and thus prepared, my grandmother and her four daughters sat in a circle,—enclosed by blankets suspended from the joists overhead around the high fireplace—and knitted the yarn into stockings for the army. One night during these times my grandmother and her children sat up amid the howlings of the winter blasts in consultation whether they should break up housekeeping and each take care of themselves. After retiring and passing the remaining night sleepless, grandmother arose in the morning, and told her family that 'by the help of God they would keep together.'

"When she was eighty-four years old she often rode on horseback from her home, two miles, to the village, went to the store, then stopped at my father's to rest, and then rode home alone. She was eighty-nine at her death.

"During the war my Aunt Diana, one Monday morning, received an invitation to a wedding just one week from that evening; she must, therefore, have a 'new gown.' The only store in the town was south of the burying-ground, near Torrington line, nearly four miles distant. My grandmother rode over the hills to the store, where she found a pattern of chintz which she could have for eleven and a half yards of checked woolen shirting for soldiers' wear; but could not buy it with 'Continental bills.' The old lady returned about one hour before 'sundown' and told her story. 'We had,' says my aunt, 'wool, cards, wheel, net, loom, and blue dye all in the house, but not a thread of yarn. That night, before I went to bed, I carded, spun, washed, and put into the dye-tub one run of yarn, and so the work went on; the cloth was wove, the 'gown' pattern purchased, made up, and worn to the wedding at the week's end. I have often seen this gown; and in 1843 I slept under a bed-quilt, made principally from its remains, in a good state of preservation.

"On another occasion, years afterwards (within my own memory), this Aunt Diana, being engaged at her cheese-tub, heard the cry of a chicken at the open door; looking out she perceived a large hen-hawk pounced on a poor fowl, her back towards her. With a long cheese-knife in her hand she sprang lightly forward and sat down over the hawk, took him by the head and, with her knife, cut it off. 'He acted as if he felt ashamed when I was doing it,' she said, when she told me the story. Often have I played with its great talons.'

"Aunt Diana, afterwards wife of Deacon Theophilus Humphrey, of Canton, was almost ninety-one years old at her death, Dec. 11, 1843. She was remarkable for her piety and talents; was educated beyond what was common at that early period; had spent three years at school in New London."

Dr. Josiah Everitt was probably the first physician in the town. He studied medicine with Drs. Bird, of Bethlehem, and Hall, of Woodbury, and settled in Winchester as a physician, living first in the store building, recently torn down, that stood in front of Mr. Theron Bronson's new store at Winchester Centre, and afterwards, through his remaining life, in the house now occupied by his son, Noble J. Everitt, a quarter of a mile south of the Centre. He served as captain of a company of Connecticut troops in the Northern army in the first year of the Revolutionary war. He died, Feb. 5, 1829, aged eighty.

Andrew Everitt resided with his mother in the old homestead until her decease, and continued to own and occupy it until 1809, when he sold it, and removed to Vernon, N. Y., where he died.

Jonathan Coe, of Torrington, purchased one hundred acres of land at the south end of the third tier, first division, lying immediately north of the farm of Deacon Seth Hills, in 1764, which remained in his family ninety-nine years. In 1765 he conveyed one-half of this lot to his son Oliver, and the other half to his son Robert.

Oliver Coe moved on to the south half of the above lot at or soon after the date of his deed, and occupied the same until his death, Dec. 31, 1775, at the age of thirty-seven. He served in the Continental army, under Capt. Sedgwick and Col. Hinman, at Ticonderoga, in 1775; was discharged November 20th; was taken sick on his way home near Lake George; procured a horse on which he reached home November 28th; and was confined to his bed with the camp or typhoid fever until his death, five weeks afterwards.

Robert Coe settled on the north half of the hundred-acre lot aforesaid, and remained until 1768, when he sold out to his brother, Jonathan Coe, Jr.

Jonathan Coe, Jr., known as Ensign Jonathan Coe, moved with his father and mother in 1768 on the farm until then occupied by Robert Coe, where Jonathan Coe, Sr., died. He removed to Winsted in 1796, and resided until near his death in the house afterwards occupied by Col. N. D. Coe. Ensign Coe may be considered the father of the Methodist denomination in the town, having been perhaps the earliest convert and a consistent and earnest supporter of the order through his life.

Oliver Coe, Jr., owned and lived on the Henry Drake farm, near Torrington line, in the second tier, first division, from 1805 to 1814, when he moved to Hudson, Ohio, and died there Aug. 14, 1825, aged sixty-one. He served on several tours of duty in the Revolutionary war, and on the breaking out of the Indian war again enlisted for three years, and served in Gen. Harmer's campaign down the Ohio, and was one of seven survivors of Col. Harden's detachment which was cut off by the Indians on the headwaters of the Scioto in the fall of 1791. He also served as military guard of the surveying party that surveyed the Ohio Company's purchase; after which he returned to the place of his nativity and became a thrifty and wealthy farmer, enjoying in a high degree the respect and confidence of the communities in which he lived.

Gershom McEwen and family, consisting of Mary, Sarah, Robert, Samuel, and Gershom, came in to this town from Stratford, Conn., in 1766, when he bought of David Austin the farm now owned by Marcus Munsill, about a quarter of a mile south of Winchester Centre. He was called of "Winchester" in 1773. He owned and occupied land next south of Sylvester Platt's farm until his death, Aug. 31, 1794.

Enoch Palmer, from Farmington, came to Winchester in 1767, and lived in the late homestead of Adam Mott, Jr., which stood on the site of Noble J. Everitt's house, next north of the Robert McEwen house, now owned by Marcus Munsill, until 1773, when he removed to a farm on the old north country road, near the Wallen's Hill school-house, where he died in 1795.

Simeon Loomis was here in 1767.

Aaron Cook, from Torrington, purchased in 1767, and occupied during his life, the lot at the southeast corner of the second tier, first division, immediately north of the Preston reservation, and lived on the south part of Blue Street. He died May 19, 1804, aged fifty-nine.

Eleazer Smith had a child born in Winchester in 1768, but is named of Barkhamsted in a deed of June 22, 1770, conveying to him land at the angle of the old road to Winchester Centre, north of Sylvester Platt's. He built and occupied the old house recently torn down that stood east of the north and south road, opposite the turn westward of the road to the Centre. In 1791 he sold to Thomas Spencer, Jr., after which his name disappears. He had ten children born in the town.

Noah Gleason, from Torringford, bought a house and lot of John Smith in 1769, on the east side of Blue Street, near Torrington line, which he occupied until about 1776.

Noah Gleason, Jr., owned and occupied land adjoining his father, on the west side of Blue Street, from 1783 to 1787, and afterwards on the Brooks road.

Daniel Grover, of Stratford, a shoemaker, bought in 1769 a lot of land at the parting of the Norfolk and Brooks Street roads, in first tier, first division, which he occupied, living in a house near N. T. Loomis, until 1785. He had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot.

Joseph Hoskin, from Torrington, came to Winchester probably in 1769, and lived on a road bordering on Torrington line, at the south end of the third tier, first division. He served as trumpeter in the cavalry detachment that went down from Litchfield County to Long Island, whose gaunt appearance, rusty equipments, and pacing horses excited the ridicule of Washington's army, until their good service in the battle and retreat from Brooklyn Heights made them better appreciated. He was a kind-hearted, jovial man, as was indicated by his lifelong sobriquet of "Uncle Joe." He died in Winsted, December, 1818, aged eighty-two.

Reuben Tucker, from Bolton, bought lands adjoining Norfolk line on both sides of Mad River in 1769, on which he resided after 1770 until his death in 1811, at the age of sixty-four. He left a large family of children, most of whom removed from the town early. His son, Isaac Tucker, lived in the town as late as 1830. Mr. Tucker built the first saw-mill on the site near the Norfolk line, now owned by the Brooks'.

Timothy Grover, brother of Daniel, owned land south of and adjoining Daniel's, which he occupied until his death, in 1780.

Capt. Jonathan Alvord, of Chatham, came into the town in 1770, and lived in a house, long since taken down, near the northwest corner made by the Dugway road where it turns west to Winchester Centre, until he sold out to Rev. Joshua Knapp, in 1773.

Eliphaz Alvord, Esq., son of Jonathan, above named, came to Winchester in 1770, and following the marked trees to the land he had purchased, cleared and planted a garden and built a log house in three weeks, and then returned and moved his family and effects to his new home, carrying one child in his arms and another behind him on one horse, his wife riding another horse with an infant in her arms, while their effects were drawn on an ox-cart. He afterwards built, opposite his first log house, on west side of the Dugway road, a red lean-to house, a little north of the line of the road westerly to the Centre, in which he resided during his remaining life.

Both houses have long since disappeared, and no new structures mark their sites.

He was chosen town clerk at the organization of the town in 1771, and continued to hold the office, with the exception of two years, until his voluntary resignation in 1819. His records are a model of accuracy and penmanship, and the vote of thanks for his faithful services was well merited. In 1779 he was appointed the first justice of the peace in the town, and held the office until disqualified by age, discharging the duties with equal ability and rectitude. If in doubt as to the law of any case before him on trial, he almost invariably went to Litchfield and consulted Judge Reeve or some other able counsel before deciding the points. His cases were invariably recorded at large, with great precision, and in perfect legal form, even to the taking of recognizances and administering of oaths. His records give a better insight to the prevailing habits, customs, and vices of his day than can be obtained from any other source.

Warham Gibbs, from Litchfield, came into the town in 1770, and lived on the east side of a road, now discontinued, running southerly from Winchester Centre, by the first meeting-house, to the Luther Bronson place. The road, the house of Mr. Gibbs, and the old meeting-house, and all other traces of civilization in that vicinity, except a few ancient apple-trees, have disappeared for near half a century. Mr. Gibbs was moderator of the first town-meeting, and the first constable of the town; also frequently appointed "to assist in reading the psalm" on Sundays, and to discharge other public trusts and duties. He went to Ticonderoga and Canada in 1775 and 1776 as lieutenant and captain, and did other service in the Revolutionary war. He removed from the town in 1780.

Lewis Wilkinson, from New Milford, with his sons, Jesse and Levi, came to Winchester in 1770, and lived until 1773 on the farm on the Brooks road,—afterwards owned by Abram Andrews,—and afterwards, until 1784, on the farm on the west side of the Brooks road recently owned by Nathan Tibballs.

Jesse Wilkinson, son of the above, lived on lands adjoining his father's, in a red lean-to house.

Levi Wilkinson, son of Lewis, lived between his father and his brother Jesse, on the west side of Brooks road, until 1789.

Samuel Wetmore was born in Middletown, Middlefield Society, March 13, 1692; married, June 21, 1722, Hannah Hubbard, born July 21, 1700. He came to Winchester at the age of seventy-nine years, in 1771, and settled with his son, Samuel Wetmore, Jr., on the farm now owned and occupied by his great-great-grandson, Deacon Abel Samuel Wetmore. He died Dec. 30, 1773, aged eighty-one, and is said to have been the first person whose remains were deposited in the Winchester burying-ground.

Dr. Truman Wetmore, married, Oct. 18, 1799, Sylvia Spencer, daughter of Thomas; she died March 27, 1800, and in her memory he added the name "Spencer" to his Christian name, Dec. 27, 1800; he married (second) Elizabeth Jarvis; she died May 7, 1844, aged fifty-eight; he died July 21, 1861, aged eighty-seven. Soon after the death of his first wife he began the study of medicine, under Drs. Woodward, of Torrington, Moore, of Winsted, and McEwen, of Albany, N. Y. Receiving his diploma in 1802, he commenced practice in Vermont, but in 1806 returned to Winchester, and in the following year, on the breaking out of the spotted fever in this county, he was the first who treated it successfully. He was a well-read and successful physician of the old school, a poet of local celebrity, a musical composer (some of his tunes being still retained in the worship of the churches), a man of genial humor and tender feelings, and a chronicler of olden times to whom the compiler is largely indebted. He continued in practice until the age of seventy-five. His residence until about 1828 was on the south side of Cooper lane, about half a mile west of the Centre, and during his remaining life in the old parsonage house now owned by his son-in-law, Leonard B. Hurlbut.

David Goff's name is on the petition for incorporation of the town, dated Aug. 4, 1767, but it does not appear that he was ever a land-owner, nor is his residence ascertainable. He was an early member of the church, and is occasionally named on the records as holding subordinate town offices. From an affidavit of Col. Aaron Austin, accompanying a petition of Goff for compensation for military service, it appears that he served as sergeant in Capt. Griswold's company, in an expedition to Canada in 1775, and that in 1776 he and his son enlisted in the company of which Austin was captain, and that in the retreat from Canada in that year he was the means of saving the army from destruction, by devising and carrying out a plan of getting the boats up the Chamblee rapids by means of drag-ropes, with men on the shores to tow them, instead of carrying them and their freight a circuit of some miles by land, as had been the custom, which it was impossible to do without teams, of which the army was destitute. It appears by the same document that he was afterwards a lieutenant in the Continental army. It also appears by Sedgwick's "History of Sharon" that he resided in that town during a part of the Revolutionary period.

Capt. Benjamin Benedict, from Danbury, was here in 1771, and was chosen a surveyor of highways at the first annual town-meeting. He built a saw-mill on the south side of Mad River, above the bridge, nearly all traces of which have now disappeared.

Capt. Timothy Benedict, from Danbury, named in his first deed, Timothy Benedict, Jr., bought in 1771 the eastern half of the lot originally purchased by Capt. Benjamin Benedict, lying on both sides of Mad River, and inclosing the Danbury school-house, on which he resided until his death. His wife, Mrs.

Lydia Benedict, died in this town Feb. 21, 1824, aged ninety-five. The land records show that he had three sons, Timothy, Jr., William, and Joshua, who came with him to Winchester and to whom he conveyed portions of his land.

Timothy Benedict, Jr., owned land on both sides of Mad River east of the highway and running south from the Danbury school-house, and lived on the east side of the road, nearly opposite the Danbury burying ground, until his decease.

Timothy Benedict, son of Timothy, lived and died (March 29, 1820) on the easterly side of the turnpike above the toll-gate.

Deacon Nathaniel Dutton came here from Woodbury in 1771. He remained two years, and then returned to Woodbury.

Daniel Platt and John Bradley were here in 1771.

Lemuel Stannard, Jr., from Saybrook, is a signer of the petition for incorporation of the town in 1771. He was born April 13, 1750.

Abel Stannard, supposed to be the son of Lemuel, Sr., bought in 1779 a lot lying immediately north of the Little Pond, and built and lived in a square-roofed house on the road running along the east side of the pond.

Lemuel Stannard, Sr., from Saybrook, is grantee, in 1778, of a lot in second tier, first division, near Reuben Chase's, which he conveyed to his son William in 1789, describing it as his homestead. In 1796 he is alluded to in a deed as "Lemuel Stannard, late of Winchester, deceased."

William Stannard occupied his father's homestead until 1790, when he sold out to Col. Ozias Bronson; and afterwards owned land in Danbury Quarter, which he conveyed to his father-in-law, Peleg Sweet, in 1800.

Seth Stannard married, Nov. 13, 1785, Martha Preston.

Ezra Stannard, son to Lemuel Stannard and Ruth, his wife, owned in 1793 and 1794 the Humphrey farm, on the east side of Long Pond, south of the Pratt farm, which he sold to Levi Ackley and Ozias Spencer.

In 1771 all the inhabitants, with the exception of some half-dozen families, were west of the old South country road, a section not exceeding one-sixth part of the township. The whole population, as stated in the petition of April 4, 1771, is twenty-eight families and one hundred and seventy-nine souls within the society of Winchester, and only four families without the society and within the town. The "Danbury Quarter," embracing the four half-mile tiers in the northwest corner of the town, is, as yet, nearly unoccupied. The four families located without the society are on the North country road, at the northeast corner of the town, and will be again referred to.

The following new inhabitants are found on the records of this year in Old Winchester Society: Thomas Spencer, Alexander Leach, John Corey, Levi Bronson, Roswell Coe, Elisha Smith, Samuel Hurlbut, and Reuben Thrall.

Thomas Spencer, from Saybrook, in 1772 moved on to the farm recently purchased of Bronson and Munsill by Rufus Eglestone, lying north of his homestead, and bordering on the west side of the Long Pond south of Sucker Brook. The house which he built and occupied during his remaining life remained standing until the winter of 1862–63, and then yielded to the wintry blasts. He was a prominent man of the town, and nine of his children became heads of large and influential families; but of more than twenty of his descendants now residing in this town not one bears the name of Spencer. He was born Jan. 16, 1736, O. S., and died May 1, 1807, aged seventy-one.

John Spencer, oldest son of Thomas, in 1784 bought of David Austin thirty-nine acres of land in the heart of the west village of Winsted, embracing all of Main Street from Camp's Block southerly and easterly to Clifton Mill bridge, and the whole of High Street, Elm Street, the Green Woods Park, and adjacent streets. He entered on this purchase, cleared a few acres, and built a log house, on the flat near the corner of Elm and Main Streets, before any bridge had been erected across Mad River at Lake Street, or any road opened south of the bridle-path now known as Hinsdale Street. Despairing of ever having access by a road and bridge to the civilized part of the town, and unwilling to rear a family in this savage region, he sold his purchase for three dollars an acre, and bought a two-hundred-acre farm in Danbury Quarter, lately owned by Edward Rugg, then a well-populated section of the town, on which he lived until 1799. He died in Oneida Co., N. Y., Feb. 14, 1826.

THE PIONEER FORGE.

Thomas Spencer, a millwright by trade, lived until about 1795 in a house that stood on the east side of the Dugway road, nearly opposite a road that turns west to Winchester Centre village. In 1795, in company with Benjamin Jenkins and James Boyd, he built the first forge in the town, on the "Old Forge Site," on which the grinding works of the Winsted Manufacturing Company now stand. He also built a store, in which he traded in company with Hewett Hills, on the depot grounds of the Connecticut Western Railroad Company, on the north side of Lake Street; and also the rear part of the tenant-house on south side of Lake Street, directly opposite the store-building, in which he lived until his removal to Vernon, Oneida Co., N. Y., about 1801 or 1802. He died at Vernon, N. Y., about 1828.

Capt. Grinnell Spencer settled in Winsted, and first lived on a high hill about one hundred rods west of the Spencer Street road, adjoining his original orchard, which can be seen from the west village of Winsted. About 1808 he built and occupied until his death the house on Spencer Street road now owned and occupied by his son-in-law, Amos Pierce. He improved more than two hundred acres of land as a dairy-farm, and for many years spent his winters in Charleston, S. C., as a dealer in cheese. He was an energetic, public-spirited, warm-hearted man, always the foremost to turn out and break the winter roads, to attend upon the sick, or to relieve the misfortunes of his neighbors. He died March 5, 1843, aged seventy-four.

Alexander Leach, a Scotchman, came from New Haven to Winchester, and owned a farm in the Danbury Quarter, immediately north of the Edward Rugg farm. He died in 1777.

Alexander Leach, Jr., lived on the homestead as late as 1791.

William Leach also lived on the homestead for many years, and afterwards in other parts of the town. He served in the Continental army, and drew a pension. He died, probably, after 1830.

John Corey, from Goshen, owned and occupied in 1772–73 a part of the W. F. Hatch farm on the Little Pond, and probably soon after left the town.

Lieut. Thomas Hurlbut, immigrant, ancestor of Capt. Hurlbut, of Winchester, belonged to the first company that garrisoned the fort at Saybrook in 1636. He served and was wounded in the Pequot war in 1637; settled in Wethersfield, and is supposed to have died soon after 1671.

Capt. Samuel Hurlbut, from Newington Society (Wethersfield), came from Torrington to Winchester, and first purchased, with his brother-in-law, Levi Bronson, the Artemus Rowley farm, near Torrington line, in the third tier, from whence he removed in 1774 to the Centre, and built the red lean-to house which stood on the site of his grandson's (Samuel Hurlbut) present dwelling, where he lived until his death, March 23, 1831, at the age of eighty-three. He began the world as a carpenter and joiner; afterwards became a tavern-keeper, at a period when "the landlord" stood next in rank after the minister and merchant, at the same time managing a large farm and a saw-mill, and in later years engaged with his sons Samuel and Lemuel in country trade.

Gen. Leonard Hurlbut, oldest son of Capt. Samuel, lived and died in the house recently occupied by his son-in-law, William H. Rood, about a mile northeasterly from Winchester Centre. He was a large dairy-farmer.

Samuel Hurlbut, Jr., second son of Capt. Samuel, went into trade at Winchester Centre in early life with Chauncey Humphrey, and afterwards, in company with his brother Lemuel, continued the business until his death, at the age of seventy-four.

Lemuel Hurlbut, youngest child of Capt. Samuel, was endowed with a hardy constitution, a manly person, pleasing address, and a sanguine temperament. His perceptive faculties predominated over his intellectual, and his tastes ran to fine animals and highly-cultivated lands. Though a large trader, he was rarely seen at the desk or behind the counter. His department of the business of the brothers S. & L. Hurlbut was to receive and market the cheese, of which they were extensive purchasers, and to cultivate and improve their lands.

Stephen Hurlbut, born Dec. 12, 1760, half brother of Samuel, from Wethersfield, Newington Society, came into the town about 1782; he bought and settled on a lot of land south of and near Rufus M. Eggleton's. He died April 14, 1807, aged forty-six.

Martin Hurlbut, from Wethersfield, came, when a boy, to live with his half-brother, Capt. Samuel, and continued to reside in the town until his death, April 5, 1810, at the age of forty-seven.

THE PIONEER MERCHANT.

Deacon Levi Bronson, from Berlin, married, Oct. 25, 1769, Hannah Hurlbut, sister of Samuel, and came with him to Winchester. He built the Artemus Rowley house, in which he lived until about 1795, when he moved to Catskill, N. Y. A cotemporary says of him,—

"Mr. Bronson was a large and prosperous farmer, and withal a merchant. His goods for trade he mainly bought of Sheldon Leavitt, of Bethlehem. He made a large amount of potash. His store was in his dwelling-house,—the first, and for many years the only, store in the town."

Capt. Roswell Coe came from Torrington and bought a farm in the southwest part of the town, which he occupied until 1789, when he returned to Torrington.

Elisha Smith, Esq., from Torrington, bought of Enoch Palmer the Noble J. Everitt place, about a hundred rods south of Winchester Centre, which he occupied until 1776, when he sold to Martin North and returned to Torrington, where he spent his remaining life as a farmer and trader, occupying a high position as a magistrate and representative of the town.

Reuben Thrall, from Torrington, bought and occupied until his death, May 23, 1777, a farm immediately north of Roswell Coe's, in the southwest part of the town, afterwards a part of the Wade farm. He died May 20, 1777.

The new-comers of the year 1773 were Abram Andrews and his sons, Theophilus, Abram, Jr., Daniel, and Eli, John Austin, Rev. Joshua Knapp, Hawkins Woodruff, Reuben Miner, and Gideon Wilcoxson.

Capt. Abram Andrews, Sr., from Danbury, bought a farm of eighty acres, lying north of the old Everitt house, in the Danbury Quarter, now in part belonging to Mr. Tibball's farm, a part of which he occupied until his death.

TRAVELING TINKER.

Theophilus Andrews, son of the foregoing, is described by a cotemporary as "a Yankee dyed in the wool; by profession a tinker, he traversed the northern part of the county, with his kit of tools in a pair of leather saddle-bags swung over his shoulders, mending brass kettles and molding pewter spoons and buttons." He continued his peregrinations as late as 1810, and afterwards went to live with a son in Central New York.

Abram Andrews, Jr., is described by the same cotemporary as "a Yankee diverse from 'Theof.,' but of equal doodle. Both were wiseacres, but neither of them added more than a cubit to his ten-acre patrimony." He removed to Central New York after 1805.

Ensign Daniel Andrews, third son of Abram, Sr., "was a man of sense, energy, industry, and uprightness." He built and occupied until his death, July 20, 1828, aged seventy-nine, the lean-to house a little east of the Danbury school-house.

Eli Andrews, fourth son of Abram, Sr., lived on a part of his father's original farm until his removal to Central New York after 1801.

Daniel Andrews, son of Ensign Daniel, married Sarah Platt; she died Dec. 16, 1848, aged seventy-two; he died Oct. 4, 1854, aged eighty-two.

John Austin bought this year of David Austin thirty-five acres of land within the present village of Winsted, and sold the same to John Walter in 1779.

Rev. Joshua Knapp, from Danbury, the recently ordained pastor, purchased and lived on a lot next south of the homestead of Eliphaz Alvord, Esq., at the northwest corner made by the parting of the east and west road to Winchester Centre, from the north and south Dugway road.

Hawkins Woodruff bought and lived a few years on the farm now owned by Frederick Murray, on the old road from Winsted to Winchester.

Reuben Miner came from New London, was a blacksmith by trade, and first built a house and shop near the original meeting-house, from whence he removed in 1775 to the centre of the township, and built and occupied until his death the old house now owned and occupied by Joel G. Griswold, on the old road from Winsted to Winchester. He was a man of earnest piety and zeal and an estimable citizen.

Jonathan Sweet first owned the B. B. Rockwell farm, between the two ponds, and afterwards a tract of land on Blue Street, adjoining Goshen line.

Gideon Wilcoxson, from Stratford, owned and is supposed to have lived on land lying north and northeast of the Little Pond, probably the Daniel Beckley place. He served in the Revolutionary war, and died while a prisoner in the Sugar-House in New York.

The new-comers of this year (1774) were Ozias Brownson and his sons, Ozias, Jr., Levi (second), Salmon, Asahel, Abijah P., and Isaac; Joseph Frisbee, Phineas Griswold, Ambrose Palmer, Joel Roberts, Peter Corbin and his sons, Peter, Jr., and Daniel; John Videto and his son John, Jr.; Stephen Wade and his son Amasa; Ichabod Loomis, William Castel, Benjamin Preston, and Gideon Smith.

Col. Ozias Brownson lived on the farm now owned by Reuben Chase, about a mile and a half southerly from the Centre. He was a blacksmith and a farmer, and is described by a cotemporary as a "professor of religion, somewhat fierce and overbearing, industrious and thrifty, abounding in horses. He had children, —one daughter and six sons. These sons were of gigantic strength, and the colonel worked the five oldest to a great profit." He served as a lieutenant and captain of militia in several tours of duty during the Revolution. He died March 12, 1810, aged sixty-eight.

Ozias Brownson, Jr., built the house at Winchester Centre now owned by Rev. Frederick Marsh, in which he lived until 1802, when he sold out to Rev. Archibald Bassett, and soon after removed to Amsterdam, N. Y. He married, Jan. 12, 1792, a daughter (Grace) of Daniel Coe Hudson, of Torrington,* and called his eldest son George Washington Jefferson, a name which somewhat dumfounded Parson Robbins at the baptism. "He could build a house, a cart, or a plow, or any other article of wood and iron. He worked all day at the anvil or on his land, and journeyed two-thirds of the nights. At length he pulled up stakes and moved to the German Flats to grow hemp."

Levi Brownson, second son of Ozias, Sr. (known as Levi Bronson, second), owned and occupied until his death an extensive farm near the southeast corner of Norfolk, living in the red house near the Norfolk line.

Salmon Brownson, third son of Col. Ozias, lived and died on the farm now or lately owned by his son, Luther Bronson.

Asahel Brownson, fourth son of Col. Ozias, lived and died in the house on Blue Street lately occupied by Archibald Dayton, now deceased, who married his widow.

Abijah Peck Brownson, fifth son of Col. Ozias, lived on Brooks Street, north of Nelson T. Loomis, until his removal to Vernon, N. Y., about 1800. "He was the Anak of the family, —a man of pleasant temperament, and brimful of courage and fortitude." Many a strong wild colt did he shoe; many a wild steer did he yoke; and many a time did he bind his neighbor, John Lucas, a respectable man, but strong and occasionally crazy.

Isaac Bronson,† youngest son of Col. Ozias, and the only one born in the town, built and resided until his death in the house at the Centre now owned by his son Theron. He was the largest land-owner in the town. He was also a trader for many years, and a large dealer in dairy products from his own farms, and purchased from others. He was a prominent and influential man in the town, —a justice of the peace,

* The compiler heard Mr. Brownson relate an incident of his marriage illustrating the customs of that day. On the morning after the wedding he started from Torringford to Winchester in a sleigh, with his bride and a two-gallon bottle of rum, and on his way home found the road fenced up in three successive places, with gatherings of neighbors at each fence prepared to salute his wife or bottle before allowing him a passage homeward.

† The "w" was retained in the name of the Winchester Brownsons until after 1810, by some of them, as appears by their recorded deeds, as late as 1825.

and three times a representative to the General Assembly.

Lois, daughter of Col. Ozias Brownson, married, Dec. 9, 1779, Seth Wetmore, and in advanced life Maj. Benoni Bronson.

The family of Bronson, once the most numerous with one exception in the town, has but few representatives remaining.

Ensign Joseph Frisbie, from Torrington, first lived on Lot 6, in the southwest corner of the town, and afterwards, in 1782, removed to a lot opposite the original meeting-house, with a saw-mill thereon, probably erected by him.

Elijah Frisbie, son of Joseph, in 1791 owned the Silas Hoskin place in Winsted, which he sold to Benjamin Whiting in 1793, and afterwards owned and occupied the Samuel A. McAlpin place, about a mile south of Winchester Centre, until his removal to Vernon, N. Y., about 1800.

Phineas Griswold, from Wethersfield, lived until 1784 near Torrington line, on the old South country road.

Ambrose Palmer, son of Job, of Litchfield, lived on a part of the John J. Fanning farm, in the Danbury Quarter, until 1791, when he returned to Litchfield.

Benjamin Preston, from Goshen, lived near the Widow Everitt place on Brooks Street, in Danbury Quarter. He was a cripple from his birth, and lived by making baskets, birch brooms, and splint chair-bottoms.

Joel Roberts owned and lived on a farm now absorbed in the B. B. Rockwell, J. G. Griswold, and Emory Coe farms until his death in 1780.

Capt. Peter Corbin, with his sons Daniel and Peter, Jr., came from Danbury, and lived on the Asaph Brooks farm in the Danbury Quarter. His house stood on the east side of the way, opposite Mr. Brooks. He removed to Colebrook in 1805, and spent his remaining life with his son Peter, Jr. He was captain of the first company of the Alarm Regiment of Connecticut in 1780.

Peter Corbin, Jr., lived in the old part of the house of Asaph Brooks, above mentioned, until his removal to Colebrook, about 1805.

Daniel Corbin lived on a hill, west of Asaph Brooks, about half way to the house of Lloyd Humphrey, in Norfolk.

John Videto, a foreigner, came from Danbury, and lived on the old South country road, next south of the Widow Everitt farm, until his death, Nov. 29, 1799, at the age of eighty-five years and eighteen days.

John Videto, Jr., came with and lived in the same house with his father until his removal to Austinburg, Ohio, in 1807, with his son Jasper.

Stephen Wade moved to Branford, where he married Maria Abigail Hoadley. He came with his son Amasa to Winchester in 1774, where they settled on the farm recently occupied by Isaac Wade, in the southeast part of the town. He died Feb. 8, 1817, aged ninety-three.

Amasa Wade resided on the same farm until his death, Aug. 30, 1838.

Stephen Wade lived on Brooks Street, Danbury Quarter, until his removal to Vernon, N. Y., about 1825.

Amasa Wade lived on a farm adjoining his father's, and, in partnership with his brother Isaac, owned and carried on the tannery afterwards owned by the Elmores.

Ichabod Loomis migrated to this town from Torrington in 1774, and died July 31, 1785. He lived on a farm in the Danbury Quarter, lying on a road parting northeasterly from the South country road, a little south of the Widow Everitt house.

Thaddeus Loomis lived near Goshen line, north of the Norfolk road, on land that was afterwards a part of the farm of Levi Bronson (second). He removed in 1802 to Salisbury, Herkimer Co., N. Y., where he was for many years a justice of the peace, and for four years an assistant justice of the County Court. He married, May 26, 1789, Lois Griswold, daughter of Phineas. She died in 1827; he died in Holley, N. Y., June 14, 1832.

Capt. Abiel Loomis lived in Winsted, on Spencer Street, in a house that stood on the site of Widow Lucy Coe's residence, until about 1809, when he removed to the farm now owned by William Johnson, on the Dugway road, in Old Winchester. About 1815 he purchased the Dudley tannery in Winsted, and removed to the house on Main Street next west of the tannery, where he died Oct. 16, 1818, aged forty-five.

David Alvord (brother of Eliphaz), from Chatham, came from Torrington in 1774, as appears by the records of births. In 1776 he bought the lot on which the parsonage house of Rev. Mr. Booge was afterwards erected, on which he lived until 1785.

William Castel, from Ridgefield, owned land and resided in the old society.

Elijah Castel, son of William, owned and lived on land south of the Edward Rugg farm in Danbury Quarter.

John Beach came into town this year from Torrington, and lived on the farm recently owned by Artemus Rowley, near the south end of third tier, first division, until 1781, when he returned to Torrington.

The new-comers of 1774 in Winchester Society were Lemuel Bassett, Daniel Loomis, James Sweet, Jonathan Sweet, Reuben Sweet, Hezekiah Elmer, John Miner, and Elisha Wilcoxson.

Lemuel Bassett, from New Haven, first owned seventy-three acres of land, embracing a considerable portion of Winchester Centre village, which he sold in 1777, and afterwards bought and lived on a small lot near Col. Ozias Bronson's.

Daniel Loomis, son of Ichabod, of Torrington, lived on the old country road, immediately north of his brother Ichabod, and south of Widow Everitt's.

James Sweet, supposed from Goshen, owned a lot on Blue Street, north of the stone school-house.

Reuben Sweet owned the lot next south of James Sweet's, which he conveyed to Jonathan Sweet in 1777, and moved to Wallen's Hill in Barkhamsted, near the first Winsted meeting-house.

Jonathan Sweet owned lands adjoining those of James and Reuben, and also a part of the B. B. Rockwell farm, between the two lakes, all of which he disposed of in 1771 or earlier.

John Miner, from New London, brother of Reuben, of Winchester, came from Torrington, and settled and died on the farm lately owned by Emory Coe, deceased.

Hon. Phineas Miner, second son of John, lived in the old parsonage of Mr. Booge until his removal to Litchfield in 1816. He died in Litchfield in 1839. Mr. Miner, with only a common-school education, studied law under Judge Reeve, of Litchfield, and entered on the practice in Winchester in 1798. By close study and faithful preparation of his cases, as well as by his ardor in trying them, he early attained a good standing at the bar, and eventually ranked among the ablest advocates in the county. He was by nature unfitted for legal trickery, or for any dishonorable act. He repeatedly represented Winchester, and afterwards Litchfield, in the Legislature, having served in this capacity during eleven sessions. He was chosen to the State Senate in 1830 and 1831; was elected a representative in Congress during the sessions of 1832 and 1833, and was judge of probate for Litchfield district at the time of his death.

William Miner, third son of John, owned and lived in the Daniel Murray house, on the Dugway road, until his removal to Ohio in 1816.

Capt. Elisha Wilcoxson, from Stratford, was here in 1775.

The new-comers of the year 1776 were Philip Priest, Daniel Forbes, Martin North and his sons, Martin, Jr., and Rufus, Truman Gibbs, Joseph Agard, and Gershom Fay.

In 1777 the following came into the society: Nathan and Peter Blackman, Samuel Clark, Joseph Dodge, Timothy Fay, William Fay, James Stevenson, Joseph Sweet, and Jonah Woodruff.

The new-comers of this year (1778) were Lemuel Stannard, Sr., Seth Griswold, James Hale, and William Barbour.

In 1779, Elijah Hubbard, Daniel Clark, and Christopher Whiting came.

In 1780 came Stephen Spencer, Simeon Hurlbut, John Church, Thomas Cannon, Stephen Scovil, Benjamin Woodruff, William Barnstable, and Prince Negro.

1781.—Elijah Andrews, and his son, Elijah, Jr., James Adkins, Isaac Adkins, Richard Coit, Aaron and Joseph Agard.

1782.—Daniel H. Cone, John Deer, Jonathan Deer, John Marshall, Levi Norton, Samuel Roberts, Chauncy Smith, Elijah Thompson, and David Ward. The freemen admitted this year were Reuben Miner, William Barbour, Jonah Woodruff, and Jonathan Alvord.

1783.—The new-comers of the year were Benoni Brownson, William Chamberlin, and William Chamberlin, Jr., Jedediah Coe, Timothy Cook, Joseph Elmore, and Joseph B. Elmore, his son, Isaac Filley, Benjamin Judd, Joseph Platt, Samuel Smith, and Benajah Smith, his son, Ephraim Smith, Samuel Stancliff, Josiah Wade, Daniel Ward, Hopkins West, Nathaniel White. The freemen admitted this year were Capt. Peter Corbin, Levi Brownson, David Ward, Ichabod Loomis, Stephen Spencer, Samuel Smith, William Fay, David Austin, Jr., John Church, Benoni Brownson, and Levi Norton.

1784.—David Gaylord, Samuel Hawley, Didaymus Shepard, Peleg Sweet.

1785.—Salmon Hawley, Charles Kent, Zeba Meacham, Simeon Moore, Jr., Capt. John Nash, Abraham Nash, Daniel Sandifouk, Nathan L. Wade, Justus Wright.

1786.—William Keyes, London, a negro.

1788.—Zalmon Benedict, John Benedict, Nathan Broughton, Ephraim Foot, Roswell Grant, Hewitt Mills, Jacob Kimberly, Jacob Kimberly, Jr., David Murray, and Heman Smith. Roswell Grant joined the Continental army when seventeen years old, and endured hard service with characteristic fortitude. When Baron Steuben was selecting his corps for special discipline, he passed in front of Grant's company while on parade. Grant was surprised to find himself the only man taken from the company, being, as he said, "such a little nubbin' of a fellow, I had no idea he would take me." While in the Highlands, he was posted as guard on one of the bleakest points in extremely cold weather; the army moved without recalling him, but he stuck to his post until relieved two days after. Going to Litchfield in his advanced life on foot, a neighbor intrusted him with a letter to be delivered there. He had reached within a mile of his home, after dark, on his return, when he discovered that he had brought the letter back. He immediately turned and walked fourteen miles to Litchfield, delivered the letter, and came home before daylight the next morning.

1789.—Francis Bacon, John Bacon, Levi Brownson, David Deers, John Lucas, Deacon Levi Platt, Sylvester Platt, Daniel Thompson.

1790.—Isaac Skinner.

1791.—Adna Beach, Rev. Publius V. Booge, Nathan Brown, Levi Coy, Silas Fyler, Roman Fyler, Theodore and Russell Goodwin, Capt. Moses Hatch, Simeon Hatch, Josiah Hull. The freemen admitted and sworn this year were John Spencer, Elijah Frisbee, Levi Brownson, Salmon Brownson, Silas Hurlbut, Roman Fyler, Jonathan Deer, Ezra Stannard, Elisha Hills, Peter Corbin, Jr., Noah Benedict, Zebina Smith, Chauncey Mills, Nathan Wheeler, and Benjamin Wheeler.

1792.—John B. Hall, Elind Taylor, Waite Hill.

1793.—William R. Case, Reuben Marshall, John McAlpine, Jr., Samuel Wheaden, Rufus Crane, John Joles.

1794.—Maj. Lloyd Andrews, Francis Bacon, David Bebee, Dr. Nath. Elmore, Gillett Hinkley, Epaphras Loomis, Deacon Lorrain Loomis, Orange Mott, Daniel Wells, Erastus Thrall.

1795.—Roger Coe, Joshua Beach, William Crocker, Phineas J. and Mathew Griswold, Luther Holcomb, Levi Marshall, Loami Mott, Daniel Phelps, Daniel Phelps, Jr., John C. Riley, Seth Holmes, Ezra Holmes, Silas Taylor, D. T. S. Wetmore, Reuben Tucker, Jr., Miles Wilkinson.

1796.—Roger Barber, Ephraim Bowers, Levi Daw, William Gray, Sylvester Hall, Nathaniel Hoyt, Deacon Micajah Hoyt, George Kingsbury, David Strong, Elijah Starkwether.

1797.—Eli Frisbie, Clark McEwen, Stephen Gaylord. The freemen admitted and sworn were Daniel Corbin, Thaddeus Loomis, Daniel Wells, Sylvester Hall, Asahel Bronson, Asher Loomis, Eli Frisbie, Israel Douglass, Roger Coe, Amos Tolles, Seth Lucas, and Daniel Eggleston, Jr.

1798.—Elijah Blake, Elijah Blake, Jr., Jonathan Blake, Henry Blake, Ithnel Blake, Deacon Allen Blake, Capt. William Bunnell, Chauncey Humphrey, Asahel Wells. From 1810 to 1813 he kept tavern in the yellow store building, recently torn down, that stood in front of the new store of Theron Bronson. During the war of 1812 he was connected with the introduction of British goods to the States from Canada, a quantity of which were seized at Hartford as smuggled, thereby reducing him to poverty.

1799.—John Breden.

1800.—Benjamin Wheadon, Eliakim Benedict, Lent Mott, Jr., Silliman Hubbell, Josiah Cowles, Augustus Humphrey, Caleb Beach, Arah Loomis, Isaac Wilcox, Jr.

1801.—Richard Beckley, Roger Cook, Abel Pibballs, Nehemiah Bailey. The following new electors were admitted this year: Abijah Wilson, Jr., William Filley, James Gilbert, Newell Haydon, Eli Andrews, Levi Daw, Levi Filley, Jonathan Douglass, Elijah Benedict, Lorrin Sweet, Cyrus Butrick, Anson Cook, Reuben Rowley, Joseph Ellsworth, Levi Fox, Joel Wright, Jesse Porter, John C. Riley, Obadiah Platt, Levi Hoyt, Reuben Scovill, Joseph Mitchell, Luther Holcomb, Daniel Wilcox, David Holmes, Ebenezer Rowley, Stephen Knowlton, Samuel Wetmore (third), Orrin Bronson, Stephen Hart, John C. Barber, Moses Hatch, Nathaniel Hoyt, Micajah Hoyt, John Wetmore, Joseph Cook, Isaac Bronson, Chauncey Bronson, Eden Benedict, Joseph Preston, Amasa Wade, Andrew Pratt, Anson Allen, Lyman Doolittle, Ozias Spencer, Zenas Wilson, Stephen Hurlbut, Abel McEwen, Levi Coy, Lloyd Andrews, Asahel Morse, Isaac Wade, Eliphalet Mills, Nathaniel Smith, William Westlake, and William Chickley.

1802.—Mathew Adams, Theodore Bailey, Timothy Bailey, Ithamar Bailey, James Barton, William Chickley, Jonas Ellwell, Benjamin Paine, Phineas Warren (second), Jesse Horton. The freemen admitted and sworn this year were Deacon Josiah Smith, Nathaniel Balcom, Michael Grinnell, Silliman Hubbell, Abel Stannard, Levi Ackley, Gideon Hall, Asher Rowley, Levi Norton, Jr., John Wetmore, Jr., David Coe, Moses Camp, Samuel Camp, Salmon Treat, Horace Eggleston, Reynold Wilson, Josiah Apley, Arah Loomis, John Deer, Elijah Starks, Hawley Oakley, Fisher Case, Rufus Grinnell, James Henshaw, Ezra Rockwell, Truman Smith, Phineas Warner, Rufus Holmes, and Roswell Grant.

1803.—John Hamilton, Jupiter Mars, Oliver Smith, Daniel Rice. The electors admitted and sworn were as follows: Phineas Reed, Amos Hungerford, Joel Kimberly, Elisha Kimberly, Samuel Hoadley, Ransley Bull, Ithamar Bailey, Jacob Seymour, Stephen Wade, Stephen Gaylord, James Barton, William Phillips, Nathan Potter, Timothy Bailey, and Eli Marshall.

1804.—Elihu Everitt, Isaac Jacklyn, Seth Porter, Isaac Sweet.

1805.—James Beebe, Jared Curtis, Levi Hoyt, Elijah Pinney, Isaac Tucker, Chauncey White.

1806.—Wait Loomis, Daniel Murray, Roger Root, Roger Root, Jr., Gurdon Root, Asahel Smith.

1807.—Samuel W. Baldwin, Levi L. Hatch, Zenas Neal, Lancelot Phelps, Sr., Roger Starkweather.

1808.—Asaph B. Brooks, Asher Case, Samuel Cone and Warren Cone, sons of Daniel Hurlbut Cone, Erastus G. Hurlbut, Ammi Murray, John Storer, or Story, George Tuttle. The electors admitted this year were Elijah Blake, Jr., Jonathan Blake, Joseph Coit, Jesse Clark, Elisha Rowley, Reuben Baldwin, Asa Mallory, Lemuel Hurlbut, Eben Coe, William Miner, Isaac Tucker, John Westlake, and Elisha Smith.

1809.—Fisk Beach and Noble J. Everitt. The electors admitted this year were William Chamberlin (2d), Asher Case, Lyman Strong, Daniel Burnham, and Roger Starkweather.

1810.—Capt. Eli Richards and William Crum. The electors admitted this year were Ira Preston and Riley Whiting.

The following were here prior to 1830: Apollos Dean, Joseph Eggleston, James Bragg, Dr. Zephania Swift, Luman Whiting, Moses Drake, Moses Drake, Jr., Edward Griswold, Phineas Griswold, Jr., Lewis Hart, Samuel D. Gilbert, Ebenezer Cowles, Joel Clark, Henry Dayton, Benjamin Phelps, Frederick Phelps, Jonathan Saxton, Salmon Bail, Jonathan F. Baldwin, Randall Covey, George Chase, Dudley Chase, Reuben Chase, Sheldon Miller, Hiram Church, Samuel Bandle, Willard Hart, Rufus Drake, Harvey

Ford, John M. Galagher, Archibald Dayton, William S. Marsh, Daniel Beckley, Norris Beckley, Oliver Loomis.

THE FIRST GRIST-MILL.

"David Austin's name first appears as grantee in a deed from Cornelius Merry, of 1764, in which he is described as of Winchester. He probably came from Suffield. For thirty years or more he was, perhaps, the most prominent and enterprising citizen of the town. His first residence was on the Pantry lot. In 1769 he purchased the Ensign lot, extending east and south from the outlet of the Long Pond so far as to embrace the pond stream and all the village of Winsted between Lake Street Bridge and Clifton Mill, a region then literally a howling wilderness, unapproachable by reason of its jagged mountain ridge, and heavy growth of timber, shrubs, and brambles. In 1771, he opened a cart-path through the forest, down to Sucker Brook, and thence over the hills west of the pond to its outlet, by which he conveyed the materials for the first grist-mill in the town. This mill, and a saw-mill contiguous, were erected at the turn of Lake Street, near the summit of the hill. The mill stood where the road now runs, a little northeastward of the Henry Spring Company's shop; the road as first opened running down the hill close to the old white dwelling now known as the Factory House. The water of the lake was raised some three feet above its natural level, by a frail dam of hemlock logs and plank, about three rods south of the present causeway, and let out by a new channel through a bulkhead,—the decayed parts of which are still to be seen in their place,—and conveyed across the road nearly opposite the old stone-chimney mill-house, and thence on the east side to the junction of Rockwell and Lake Streets, and then again turned across Lake Street and poured on the wheel of the mill.

"This mill was for about twenty years the eastern terminus of civilized habitation towards Mad River valley. Mr. Austin's first residence in Winsted was in a log house nearest to the pond outlet. He subsequently built the stone-chimneyed lean-to house now known as the mill-house already mentioned. In one of the rooms he kept a small store of goods, at the same time personally attending his mill and saw-mill and his other concerns. A cotemporary says of him,—

"'The deacon commonly tended his own mill. In times of drought, when other mills failed, he ran his day and night, and had so disciplined himself that he would turn a grist into the hopper, lie down to sleep on a bench, with his old turnip watch ticking at his head, and wake at the precise moment when the last kernel was running out.'"

FIRST SAW-MILL.

Sept. 25, 1779, it was "voted that Deacon Samuel Wetmore, and the owners of the saw-mill by the meeting-house, shall have the privilege of the dam by Capt. Hill's, as agreed."

This saw-mill was the first erected in the town. It originally stood near the county road, at the foot of the hill, north of the burying-ground, and was carried by means of a dam on the east side of the road, which flooded the meadows east and northeast of the road. It was probably at this time moved down the stream to the vicinity of the old meeting-house, in order to get a better head of water. It was eventually removed down to the site of the mill and cheese-box factory recently owned by the McAlpines.

An incident connected with this mill has been handed down, which pleasingly illustrates the characters of the first two deacons of the Winchester church. Deacon Wetmore sawed the logs of his neighbors in regular order, according to their priority of claim. A certain day was fixed for sawing the logs of his bosom friend and colleague, Deacon Seth Hills; but in the morning, before Deacon Hills had come to draw his logs on to the logway, another neighbor came, who was in pressing and immediate need of some lumber, and prevailed on Deacon Wetmore to let him draw in the logs he required to be sawed. Some of the logs were drawn in when Deacon Hills arrived. Irritated at finding himself superseded, he made some sharp remark, which was sharply replied to by his colleague. Both of them fell from grace to wrath. "I'll never draw another log to your mill," says Deacon Hills. "And if you do, I'll never saw it for you," says Deacon Wetmore. Other defiant words were bandied back and forth, until their wrath, by repeated blowing off, came down from high to low pressure. Several world's people were listening to their unedifying abjurations. A pause ensued. One of the deacons beckoned the other to follow him. They retired to a neighboring clump of bushes, whence the voice of penitent prayer arose. Grace prevailed over passion, and on returning to the mill, Deacon Hills assisted in drawing in his neighbor's logs, cheerfully postponing his own turn until his neighbor could be accommodated.

"THE COLD SUMMER."

The spring of 1816 was cold and backward, and the summer cold and dry. Frosts prevailed in every month of the year. The mowing lands yielded less than half an average crop. Scarcely an ear of corn in the town came to maturity. Potatoes were few and small, and dairy products were as scant in quantity as low in price. Much apprehension prevailed of a famine winter, which was measurably averted by a provident planting of turnips when it was perceived that other crops were to fail. This crop was large, and thereby the lack of hay was partly made good in wintering such stock as was not killed or sold off in the preceding fall.

THE REVOLUTION.

The first record relating to the Revolutionary struggle is under date of 1775, as follows:

"That the troopers be freed from paying anything for their colors."

"To raise two-pence half-penny on the List of 1775, to purchase a town

Stock of powder and lead, and also to pay other necessary charges arising in the town."

The following soldiers from this town went to Ticonderoga in 1775, in Capt. Sedgwick's company, Col. Hinman's regiment:

Warham Gibbs, lieutenant, Charles Wright, Jr., Adam Mott, Ebenezer Shepard, Stephen Arnold, Freedom Wright, Nathan Balcom, Hawkins Woodruff, John Derby, David Goff, Peleg Sweet, Oliver Coe, Sr., William Stannard, Lemuel Walter, Noah Gleason, Jr., Abraham Wilkinson, Elisha Smith.

Charles Wright and Ebenezer Shepard marched to the relief of Boston on the Lexington alarm.

Samuel Hurlbut, John Sweet, and Lemuel Stannard served in the Seventh Regiment in 1775.

Daniel Hurlbut Cone and William Lucas served in Col. Meigs' regiment in 1775.

Benoni Brownson served in Capt. Hooker's company in 1775.

Stephen Knowlton served in 5th company, Third Regiment.
Judah West " 8th " Second "
Gideon Wilcoxson* " 10th " Seventh "
Shubael Cook " 4th " Eighth "
Ebenezer Rowley " 9th " " "

Nathan Blackman served in Capt. Smith's company, Eighth Regiment.

David Beebe served in Capt. Smith's company, Eighth Regiment.

Truman Gibbs served in Maj. Weld's company.

Benjamin Palmer served in Maj. Weld's company.

Josiah Adkins served in Capt. Arnold's company, Wooster's regiment.

John Arnold served in Capt. Denny's company, Hosford's regiment, in 1776.

William Leach served in Col. Ducher's (Fourth) regiment in 1779; also in Capt. Converse's company, Seventh Regiment, in 1780.

Lemuel Walter, served in Capt. Alden's company, Col. Butler's regiment, in 1780.

Samuel Roberts, served in Capt. Alden's company, Col. Butler's regiment, in 1780.

John Balcom, served in Capt. Alden's company, Col. Butler's regiment, in 1780.

Daniel Walter served in Col. Swift's regiment in 1780.

Oliver Coe, Jr., served in Capt. Porson's company, Col. Butler's regiment, in 1780.

Samuel Mott served in Capt. Porson's company, Col. Butler's regiment, in 1780.

Peter Corbin served in Sherman's company, Eighth Regiment, in 1780.
Daniel Wright " " " " " " "
Ebenezer Coe " " " " " " "

The following other men served in the Continental army prior to 1780, as appears by a certificate of the selectmen:

George Hudson, Peabody Stannard, Jonathan Preston, Prince Negro, John Fay, Stephen Hurlbut, Levi Wilkinson, Stephen Schovil, Adam Mott, Remembrance Filley, Gershom Fay, William Fay, Timothy Fay, Seth Stannard, Jesse Wilkinson.

Of these, Remembrance Filley, Gershom Fay, and William Fay belonged to Capt. Beebe's Litchfield company.

Oliver Coe, Jr., and Wait Loomis also served under Gen. Harmer, in the Indian war in Ohio.

David Austin, Daniel Corbin, and William Leach belonged to Capt. Medad Hill's company, enlisted in 1776.

William Stannard served in Capt. Morris' company, Bradley's regiment, in 1781.

Richard Coit served in the Sixth Troop in 1781, and in various regiments during the war.

David Goff and his son served in the Northern army in 1776.

* He served in Capt. Beebe's company in 1776, and died while a prisoner of war in the Sugar-House, New York.

The town records refer, in 1777, to "those who went out with Ensign Ozias Brownson last April, with Sergt. Timothy Benedict in August, and with Lieut. Benedict;" in 1778, "to Sergt. Freedom Wright, and John Balcom, Jr., for doing a tour of duty last year in the Northern army;" in 1780, "to those men who are or may be detailed with the army between the 1st day of June last and the 1st of January next." In 1781 it was voted to try to get Dolphin's son (a negro) "to count for Winchester," and "to make application to Gen. Parsons, or some other general officer, to try to procure a pardon for Jonathan Preston, on account of his deserting the army," and "to raise a man to supply the place of George Hudson in the Continental army." In 1782 it was voted "to hire the men now called for, for the guard at Horse-Neck, and to fill the deficiencies in the Continental army till December next."

Many other inhabitants, not named in any of the pay-rolls or votes of the town referred to, are known to have been in the service.

John Church served in the Canada invasion under Arnold, and was in the battle at Saratoga.

Deacon Seth Hills served at Saratoga, and was present at Burgoyne's surrender.

Joseph Hoskin served as a trooper on Long Island, and was in the rear-guard at the retreat from Brooklyn Heights.

Capt. Moses Hatch enlisted at sixteen, and served through the war.

A company, of which John Hills was captain and Ozias Brownson lieutenant, served at New York while Gen. Putnam commanded in that department.

MUSTER ROLL OF CAPTAIN JOHN HILL'S COMPANY.

Capt., John Hills; Lieut., Benjamin Benedict; Ensign, Ozias Brownson; Sergts., Elisha Wilcoxson, Jonathan Coe, Eliphaz Alvord, Joseph Frisbee; Corps., Samuel Hurlbut, Abel Wetmore, Josiah Smith, John Wright; Fifers, Belah Hills, Levi Brownson; Drummers, Joseph Dodge, Andrew Avret, John Austin; Privates, Daniel Andrus, Eli Andrus, Steven Arnold, Joel Beach, Nathan Balcom, Jonathan Balcom, John Balcom, Jr., John Beach, Timothy Benedick, Azariah Bradley, Aaron Cook, Hezekiah Elmer, Remembrance Filley, Daniel Grover, Zimri Hills, Chauncey Hills, Seth Kellogg, William Kies, Ichabod Loomis, Samuel McCune, Gershom McCune, Jr., Reuben Miner, Samuel Preston, Joseph Plat, Philip Priest, William Fay, Phineas Griswold, Ambrose Palmer, Reuben Sweet, Peleg Sweet, William Stannard, Reuben Palmer, Lazarus Palmer, Lemuel Stannard, Jr., Jesse Wilkinson, Reuben Wilkinson, Reuben Tucker, David Alvord, Lemuel Walter, John Walter, James Stevenson, Richard Coit, Thomas Spencer, Amasa Wade, Joel Roberts, Timothy Fay, Steven Hurlbut, Phineas Potter, Preserved Crissee, Abraham Andrews, Jr., John Austin, Jr., Samuel Mott, Phineas Smith, David Mills, Daniel Corbin, Simeon Hurlbut, Samuel Roberts, Elijah Castel, Benjamin Palmer, Silas Filer, Peter Corbin, Jr., Samuel Castel, Moses Derbye, William Leach, Isaac Filley, John Spencer, Moses Roberts, Jacob Palmer, Daniel Loomis, Abner Coe, John Church, —— Palmer.

At the annual town-meeting, 1776, in addition to the routine business, the selectmen were instructed to provide the camp equipage ordered by the Assembly, viz., three tents, six pots, and nine bottles or canteens for the town.

Sept. 25, 1777, it was "voted to provide the articles

mentioned in the Governor's proclamation for the soldiers at the town's cost, and to give them to them, viz., to the soldiers," and "that Gen. Samuel Wetmore and Sergt. David Austin be a committee to procure the above-mentioned articles and to take care of them." It was also voted that Gershom McCune, Jonathan Alvord, and Martin North be a committee to provide for the families of those men that are enlisted into the Continental army according to the Act of Assembly.

December 1st, of the same year, Samuel Wetmore, Gershom Fay, Capt. John Hills, David Austin, and Jonathan Coe were appointed a committee for supplying the families of such soldiers belonging to this town, now in the Continental army, with such clothing and provisions as may be necessary for their support.

It was also voted, "that those men that went volunteers to the Northward and Southward shall receive five pounds each out of the treasury;" and "that those men who went with Ensign Brownson last April, and with Sergt. Timothy Benedict in August, and with Lieut. Benedict, shall receive five pounds for going volunteers."

At a town-meeting, Jan. 13, 1778, the Articles of Confederation of the thirteen United States were presented for approval, and by vote on each successive article were accepted; and thereupon the oath of fidelity to the State of Connecticut was administered to those present and certified in the records. The names of others who took the oath afterwards were also recorded. We subjoin the names in alphabetical order, giving the dates of administration only of those taking the oath subsequent to January 13, 1778.

David Alvord, Eliphaz Alvord, Jonathan Alvord, Abraham Andrews, Daniel Andrews, David Austin, John Austin, Lemuel Bassett, Joel Beach, John Beach (Feb. 12, 1779), Benjamin Benedict, Timothy Benedict, Levi Brownson, Ozias Brownson, William Castel, John Church (July 18, 1782), Samuel Clark, Jonathan Coe, Robert Coe, Roswell Coe, Daniel Hurlbut Cone (Dec. 2, 1782), Richard Coit, Peter Corbin, Daniel Corbin, Joseph Dodge, Hezekiah Elmer, Noble Everitt, Andrew Everitt, Mrs. H. Everitt (Jan. 18, 1782), Gershom Fay, Remembrance Filley, Joseph Frisbee, Warham Gibbs, Phineas Griswold, Bela Hills (Dec. 2, 1782), Seth Hills, John Hills, Benoni Hills, Joseph Hoskin, Samuel Hurlbut, Rev. Mr. Knapp, William Keyes (Feb. 12, 1779), David Loomis (Dec. 2, 1782), Ichabod Loomis, Robert McCune, Samuel McCune, Gershom McCune (Dec. 4, 1778), Reuben Miner, John Miner, Adam Mott, Lent Mott, Martin North, Ambrose Palmer, Joseph Platt (Feb. 5, 1778), Ebenezer Preston, Samuel Preston, Benjamin Preston, Philip Priest, Chauncey Smith (Dec. 2, 1782), Eleazer Smith, Thomas Spencer, William Stannard (Dec. 2, 1782), Lemuel Stannard, Jr., Abel Stannard (July 25, 1782), Lemuel Stannard (March 10, 1782), James Sweet, John Sweet, Jonathan Sweet, Peleg Sweet, Reuben Tucker, John Videto, Jr., Amasa Wade, Samuel Wetmore, Abel Wetmore, Elisha Wilcoxson, Jesse Wilkinson, Reuben Wilkinson, Jonah Woodruff.

Sergt. Freedom Wright and John Balcom, Jr., were allowed five pounds each for doing a tour of duty the previous year in the Northern army.

It was voted, that if the committee on trial cannot procure a sufficiency of provisions for the families of those men who are gone into the Continental army, the selectmen shall be empowered to lay the matter before the Governor and Council, or Assembly, and pray them to point out some way for our relief; and also to pray for a tax on non-resident proprietors to support the country roads.

Ensign Ozias Bronson, Joseph Hoskin, Samuel Hurlbut, Roswell Coe, Ambrose Palmer, Samuel Preston, and Phineas Griswold were appointed a committee to provide for the families of the soldiers.

ASSESSMENT ROLL, 1783.

WINCHESTER SOCIETY.

Names.	Amount of Taxable Property. £	s.	d.
Daniel Andrus	50	5	0
Abram Andrus	31	8	6
David Alvord	33	11	6
Theophilus Andrus	15	0	0
Abram Andrus, Jr.	26	5	6
Eliphaz Alvord	68	0	0
Isaac Adkins	49	11	0
Jonathan Blackman	38	13	9
Levi Brownson	59	15	9
Timothy Benedict	49	7	6
Capt. (Ozias) Brownson	98	4	0
William Benedict	26	5	6
Benoni Brownson	39	2	6
Peter Blackman	40	3	0
Joseph Bown	21	0	0
Lemuel Basset	6	2	6
Capt. Benedict	81	8	6
Timothy Benedict, Jr.	48	1	6
Joel Beach	44	0	0
Elijah Castle	22	8	0
Aaron Cook	51	7	6
Richard Coit	3	8	3
Abner Coe	30	3	0
Capt. (Peter) Corbin	56	16	0
John Church	35	1	6
Peter Corbin, Jr.	21	0	0
Jedediah Coe	21	0	0
Jonathan Coe	70	15	0
Samuel Clark	30	14	0
Robert Coe	52	9	9
Samuel Castle	21	0	0
Daniel Cone and David Ward	78	7	3
William Chamberlain	25	15	6
Rezel Coe	91	17	6
William Castle	31	2	0
Timothy Cook	22	16	6
Daniel Clark	29	1	1
Joseph Dodge	33	4	6
John Dear and Salmon Hoskin	50	5	0
Eli Dolphin	37	14	0
Andrew Everit	36	19	0
Hannah Everit	14	1	6
Joseph Elmer	42	0	0
Josiah Everit	30	10	0
William Fay	24	10	6
Remb. Filley	1	18	6
Isaac Filley	27	0	0
Abraham Filley	79	1	6
Joseph Fridge	51	2	0
Daniel Grover	23	19	6
Phineas Griswold	47	2	0
Seth Griswold	51	0	0
Joseph Hoskins	39	7	6
Stephen Hurlbut	20	15	0
Elijah Hubard	24	15	6
Samuel Hurlbut	93	17	6
Seth Hills	84	6	0
Widow Mary Hills	5	7	3
James Hale	29	11	6
Benjamin Judd	17	2	0
Seth Kellogg	38	2	0
Ichabod Loomis	66	13	6
Daniel Loomis	34	0	6
Widow Leach	2	9	6
William Leach	12	15	0
John Marshall	26	8	9
Lent Mott	32	2	6
Gershom McCune, Jr.	56	1	0
Adam Mott	22	6	6
John Minor	43	18	3
Samuel McCune	62	2	6
Gershom McCune	49	13	6
Robert McCune	94	19	6
Reuben Miner	34	0	6
Martin North, Jr.	23	17	6
Martin North	49	13	6
Levi Norton	40	8	6
Joseph Platt	37	6	6
Benjamin Preston	4	16	0
Ambrose Palmer	51	0	0
Samuel Preston	59	1	0

Names.	Amount of Taxable Property. £	s.	d.
Ebenezer Preston	34	2	0
Moses Roberts	21	0	0
Samuel Roberts	33	2	0
Ephraim Smith	22	0	0
Ephraim Smith (deaf)	19	13	0
Samuel Stanclift	0	12	0
Eleazer Smith	32	19	6
Lemuel Stannard	27	3	7
Abel Stannard	28	2	0
Chauncey Smith	25	13	6
Samuel Smith	14	15	3
Stephen Spencer	37	8	3
Thomas Spencer	69	13	0
William Standard	20	10	6
Reuben Tucker	45	18	0
Elijah Thomson	42	4	6
John Videto	28	16	6
Jonah Woodruff	36	17	6
Nathan White	38	0	6
Daniel Walter	23	0	0
Christopher Whiting	48	0	9
Samuel Wetmore	61	0	9
Elisha Wilcoxson	74	7	9
Abel Wetmore	47	0	0
Amacy Wade	60	17	9
Lewis Wilkinson	23	7	3
Jesse Wilkinson	27	18	3
Levi Wilkinson	24	12	0
Hopkins West	46	0	0
Total, Winchester Society	£4242	14	10

WINSTED SOCIETY.

Names.	Amount of Taxable Property. £	s.	d.
David Austin, Jr	35	18	6
David Austin	45	13	3
Elijah Andrews	55	5	6
Nathan Balcam	27	0	0
Jonathan Balcam	28	0	0
John Balcam	43	4	9
Samuel Clark (2d)	21	13	0
Uzal Clark	28	16	0
David Crisse	73	18	0
Silas Dunham	25	0	0
Jesse Doohttle	54	14	0
Abijah Fuller	21	19	9
Comfort Goff	19	8	0
Samuel Hayden	46	4	3
Abel Hoskin	55	16	0
Stephen Knowlton	28	19	9
David Mills	76	6	0
Phineas Potter	30	14	0
Lazarus Palmer	21	0	0
Reuben Palmer	21	0	0
Eleazer Porter	36	15	3
Enoch Palmer	59	5	0
Benjamin Palmer	23	14	0
Samuel Stanclift	18	0	0
Elisha Spencer	23	10	0
John Sweet	23	18	0
Josiah Smith	84	14	6
Comfort Stanclif	24	0	0
Simeon Rogers	32	4	9
Ebenezer Rowlee	46	10	0
Zebulon Thomson	4	2	0
Henry Walter	37	17	0
Freedom Wright	42	13	3
John Wright	21	6	0
Charles Wright	34	13	3
John Wright, Jr	45	9	6
John Walter	31	1	0
Lemuel Walter	28	6	6
David West	47	2	0
Total, Winsted Society	£1425	12	9

The list was made up of the following items:

	£	s.	d.
134 polls from 21 to 70 years, at	18	0	0
40 " " 16 to 21 " at	9	0	0
122 oxen, 4 years old or upwards, at	4	0	0
271 cows and steers, 3 years old or upwards, at	3	0	0
100 steers and heifers, 2 years old or upwards, at	2	0	0
77 " " " 1 year " " at	1	0	0
120 horses, 3 years old and upwards, at	3	0	0
9 " 2 " " " at	2	0	0
7 " 1 year " " at	1	0	0
154 swine, at	1	0	0
28 smokes or fire-place, at	0	7	6
92 " " at	0	3	9
586 acres of plow-lands, at	0	10	0
1027 " meadow-lands, at	0	8	0
51 " bog meadow-lands, at	0	5	0
409 " bush pasture-lands, at	0	2	0
12219 " timber-land, at	0	0	6
3 silver watches, at	3	0	0
5 taverners assessed at	15	0	0
1 store, at	25	0	0
1 grist-mill and saw-mill, at	24	5	0
1 saw-mill, at	8	15	0
2 saw-mills, at	4	0	0
1 physician, at	10	0	0
2 shoemakers, at	5	0	0

CHAPTER XVI.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

Pioneers in Winsted Society—Manufacturing Interests—The Winsted Bank—The Hurlbut Bank—The Hurlbut National Bank—The First National Bank—The Winsted National Bank—The Winsted Savings Bank—The Mechanics' Savings Bank—St. Andrew Lodge, No. 64, F. and A. M.—Meridian Chapter—Tyrian Council—Orion and Union Lodges, I. O. of O. F.—Temperance Organizations—Palmer Post—Knights of Pythias—Libraries—Early Schools—The Winsted Herald—The Winsted Press—The Winsted News—Post-Office Difficulties—List of Old Inhabitants—The Borough of Clifton—The Borough of Winsted—Incorporation—First Officers Elected—Wardens from 1858 to 1881—Burgesses from 1858 to 1881—Clerks, Treasurers, and Bailiffs from 1858 to 1881—Water-Works—Fire Department, etc.—Population of Town from 1756 to 1880.

"THE opening of the old north road was soon followed by a settlement in the northeast corner of the town, distinct and distant from the earlier settlement in the southwest section, to which our attention has thus far been directed. Long Lake and the mountain ridges extending from its north end to Colebrook line effectually separated these communities from each other until near the close of the last century, when the improvement of the splendid water-power along the Lake Stream and at the Still River Falls gradually drew settlers to the intermediate region. The Winsted settlement began some twenty years later than that of the old society. The records show but four resident land-owners there in 1771, when the town was incorporated, and none of their names are found on the petition for the incorporation."

The following is a list of the early settlers, etc., of the borough of Winsted, commencing in 1770:

Lieut. John Wright, from Wethersfield to Goshen in 1740, came thence to Winsted, it is believed, in 1769 or 1770, and settled, with his large family, on the northeast side of the old North road, near Colebrook line, on the site of the homestead now occupied by Edward and Edwin Rowley. His title of lieutenant is said to have been acquired during his service in the French war. He had sons,—Samuel, Moses, David, and John.

Charles Wright, son of John, Jr., probably came from Goshen to Winsted about 1775, and lived near his father until his removal in 1801 to Jefferson Co., N. Y. He served as sergeant in Capt. Sedgwick's company on the northern frontier in 1775.

Capt. Freedom Wright became a land-holder in 1777, and lived and kept a tavern in the house, now burned down, recently owned by Albert Kelsey and wife, in the same neighborhood with his father and brothers. He was a soldier in Capt. Sedgwick's company.

A daughter of John Wright, Sr., named in his will, married Elijah Rockwell, Esq., first justice of the peace, and town clerk of Colebrook, and was the grandmother of John T. Rockwell, of Winsted.

Ebenezer Shepard, from Goshen, in 1771 bought lands bordering on Colebrook line, on the road to Colebrook, by way of Nelson Beardsley's, on which he lived until 1775, when he sold out to David Crissey, and moved into Colebrook. He served in Capt. Sedgwick's company on the northern frontier in 1775.

John Balcom, Jr., from Mansfield, Windham Co., came into the town this year; he owned and lived on a lot of land east of Still River, nearly opposite the Horace Rowley place, and lived in a log house on the hill adjoining Barkhamsted line.

1772.—John Balcom, Sr., is named of Winchester in a deed of this year, conveying to him Lot 10, second division, next south of the Daniel B. Wilson farm.

Jonathan Balcom, son of John, Sr., lived on Wallen's Hill, between Roswell Smith's and Joel Meade's.

Nathaniel Balcom, son of John, Sr., lived on the homestead of his father until 1813 or 1814, when he removed to Wayne Co., Pa.

Elias Balcom was here in 1774. In 1776 he had some interest in the mill-lot, and the corn-mill, saw-mill, and dwelling-house thereon, which he quit-claimed to Stephen Chubb, of New Hartford.

Jacob, Joseph, and Elias Cabit, sons of Elias Balcom, were baptized in the Winchester church in November, 1775. The former is said to have carried on horseback the earliest mail between Hartford and Albany.

Nathan Balcom died Aug. 7, 1808, aged eighty-four.

1773.—John Austin, Abel Hoskin, Josiah Smith, Truman Smith, Josiah Smith, Jr.

1774.—Stephen Arnold, Zebulon Shepard, Phineas Potter, Sheldon Potter, Daniel Potter.

1775.—David Crissey, Preserved Crissey, Israel Crissey.

1776.—David Mills, Chauncey Mills, Eliphalet Mills, Daniel Mills.

1777.—Ensign Jesse Doolittle and sons, Jesse, Jr., Zerah, and Lyman, Samuel Hayden and sons, Seth and Moses, John Darbe, or Derby, Henry Walter and son John, Daniel Walter, Ira Walter, Ebenezer Rowley, Jr., Asher Rowley.

1778.—Barzillai Clemons, Cyrenus Handee, Uzal Clark, Stephen Knowlton, Jr., Simeon Rogers, Abigail Fuller, Elisha Spencer, Ozias Spencer, Ranney Spencer, Elisha Spencer, Jr.

1782.—Eleazer Porter, Samuel Clark, Timothy Cook.

1783.—Silas Dunham, Comfort Goff, Elisha Mallory, Amasa Mallory, Elisha Mallory, Jr., Asa Mallory, Comfort Stanclift, Samuel Stanclift, John Sweet, Zebulon Thompson, David West, Jr., Judah West.

1783–91.—Nathaniel Russell, Daniel Russell, Benjamin Russell, Giles Russell, Hamlin Russell, Benjamin Wheeler, Sr., Benjamin Wheeler, Jr., Othniel Brainard, Jr., Seba Brainard, William Case (of Barkhamsted), Nathan Hoskin, John Jopp (a native of Sterderton, Scotland), John Jopp, Jr., Nathan Wheeler, Anson Wheeler, Esq., Capt. Zebina Smith, Deacon Elisha Smith, Miles Smith, John Shaw (a Hessian soldier from Burgoyne's army, captured at Saratoga), John Shaw, Jr., Charles Barnes, John Allen, John Allen, Jr., Jesse Filley, David Holmes, Isaac Wheeler, Hezekiah Woodruff, Jr., Luke Hart, Selah Hart, Stephen Hart, Samuel Hart, Moses Darbe, Benjamin De Wolf, Daniel De Wolf, Eleazer Kellogg, Caleb Munson, Jr., Norton Wright, Deacon Shubael Cook, Urijah Cook, Reuben Cook, Anson Cook, Lieut. Jonathan Dunham, Deacon Michael Grinnell, Salmon Treat, William Waterman, Jr., Daniel Eggleston, Jr., Daniel Eggleston, Sr., Lewis Miller, Sheldon Miller, Daniel Marshall, John Burton, Thaddeus Fay, Ezra Griffin, Theodore Hoskin, Roswell Hoskin, Solomon Palmer, Jonathan Rogers, Joseph Loomis, Jonathan Coe.

1792.—Jenkins & Boyd, the pioneer manufacturers of Winsted, came into the society this year, and erected the first scythe-factory in the State, and the third in the country, on the site of the Winsted Manufacturing Company's East Village Works. About 1795, in company with Thomas Spencer, Jr., they erected the first forge for making bar-iron in the town, on the lake stream, opposite the grinding-shop of the Winsted Manufacturing Company. In 1802 they erected another scythe-factory on the site of the Winsted Hoe Company's shop, near the corner of Lake and Meadow Streets. Benjamin Jenkins, of the above firm, was born Oct. 15, 1765. He came to Winsted in 1792.

James Boyd came to Winsted, with his brother-in-law and partner, Benjamin Jenkins, in 1792, having previously learned from him the scythe-maker's trade at New Windsor, his native place. He first lived in a small house that stood on the west side of North Main Street, nearly opposite the parsonage-house of Rev. James Beach, which was built by him and his partner in 1795, and jointly occupied by them until 1802. He then built and moved into the house on the east side of Main Street, West village, opposite Munro Street, now owned by John T. Rockwell, where he spent his remaining life, and died Feb. 1, 1849, aged seventy-eight years. In 1803 he dissolved partnership with Mr. Jenkins, taking for his share the joint property of the firm in the West village. In 1808 he built a forge and saw-mill on the water-power opposite the Clarke House, now owned by the New England Pin Company. In 1822 he built a drafting- and forging-shop in rear of the Beardsley House, and in 1828 he rebuilt the "Upper Forge," on the lake stream, above Hulbert's present iron-works. He also built, in 1816, the old iron-store on Main Street, next north of Dudley's brick block.

Deacon John Lee, Ephraim Scovill and son Reuben, Capt. Abijah Wilson, Capt. Zenas Wilson, Reynold Wilson, Abijah Wilson, Jr.

1793.—Levi Ackley, Epaphroditus Bligh, Israel Douglass, Benjamin Whiting, Jr., Guernsey Goff, Enoch Goff, William Merriam, Joseph Mitchell, Andrew Pratt.

1794.—Thomas Boyd, Ananias Dearthick (a Baptist preacher), James Frisbie, Godfrey Jones, Joel Lucas, Zacheus Munsill, William A. Stone, Daniel Brown, Absalom Griffin, Timothy Cannon, David Collins, Samuel Cummins, Josiah Curtis, James Eggleston, Horace Higley, Asher Loomis, Seth Lucas, Truman Seymour, Amos Tolles, Elisha Lewis.

1796.—Levi Barnes, Jehiel Burr, Eli Fox, Levi Fox, Dr. Aaron Moore, Gideon Hall, Nathan Rose, Samuel Westlake, Samuel Westlake, Jr., William Westlake, John Westlake, Thomas Westlake, Randall Shattuck, Oliver White, Oliver White, Jr., Asahel Miller, Joel Miller, Timothy and William Soper (father and son), Daniel Wilcox, Frederick Eggleston, Samuel and Moses Camp, Moses Camp, Sr., Aaron Marshall, Daniel White.

1798.—Merritt Bull, Cyrus Butrick, Joseph Cook, son of Aaron and Lydia, and a native of the town, is on the list of this year as a resident of the old society. In 1809 he bought the Aaron Marshall place, on the Pratt road, where he afterward dwelt until his death, Oct. 11, 1814, aged thirty-nine. Jonathan Douglass, brother of Israel, owned, from 1798 to 1801, a part of the Kinney farm, on Spencer Street road, and lived on the west side of the road, not far from Amos Pierce's residence. Capt. George Frasier, a Scotchman, is on the tax-list of this year as a resident of Winsted. He was a trader near the Wallen's Hill school-house for a few years, and probably for the most part resided over the line in Barkhamsted. Levi Norton (2d), Elihu Rockwell, Reuben Rowley, oldest son of Ebenezer, and a native of the town, is on the list of this year. In 1801 he became owner of the portion of the East village bordered by the Holabird property on the north, Still River east, Main Street south, and Oak Street west, which he exchanged in 1802 for a farm in the northeast corner of the town, recently owned by Joel Mead, now deceased, on which he lived until his removal to Hitchcockville in 1847, where he died, May 2, 1851, aged seventy-four. Joel Wright, Joseph Holmes, Rufus Holmes, Willard Holmes.

The settlers for 1799 were Isaac and Mary Bellows, Roswell Marshall, Charles Osborn, Nathaniel Parks, Theodore Smith, and Henry Sanford.

The new-comers of this year, 1800, were Bissell Hinsdale, Philemon Kirkham, Josiah Apley, Elijah Benedict, Nathaniel Smith, Solomon Lemley, Jacob Lemley, William Davis, Gedeliah Chase.

Philemon Kirkum, Esq., attorney-at-law, came from Norfolk to Winsted in 1800, and built a house on the site of Weed's Block, which was burned down March 25, 1853. He soon sold this house to Bissell Hinsdale, and in 1807 he built the original house on the lot next north of the Congregational chapel, which was taken down by Dr. Welch to make room for his present dwelling. In this house he lived until his removal to Norton, Ohio, in 1814. He was a native of Guilford, Conn., served for four or five years in the Revolutionary war, afterwards studied law with Augustus Pettibone, Esq., of Norfolk, and was in due course admitted to the Litchfield bar.

1801.—Ezra Rockwell, Jacob Chamberlin, Aaron Loomis.

1802.—Col. Hosea Hinsdale, Col. James Shepard, Jesse Clark, Nathan Wheeler Clark, Salmon Burr, Jacob Seymour, John Phillips, Thomas R. Bull, Timothy Persons, Alpheus Persons.

1803.—Samuel and Luther Hoadley, brothers. They were for ten years prominent and highly-esteemed business men, and by their ingenuity and enterprise contributed largely to the growth and prosperity of the village. Samuel retired from business on his appointment as major of volunteers in the war of 1812. He was promoted to a colonelcy. Hawley Oakley.

1804.—Erastus Burr, Roswell Burr, Halsey Burr, Luke Hayden.

1805.—Reuben Baldwin, Eliab Bunnell, Andrew Walter.

1806.—Rev. James Beach, Capt. Ezekiel Woodford and son Erastus, Romanta Woodford, Ezekiel Woodford, Lester Woodford, Benjamin Barber Woodford, Erastus Sterling Woodford, Lucius J. Woodford, George Woodford, Joseph T. Cumming, Samuel Rowley, Jr., Benjamin Johnson, Bemsley Carpenter, Elizur Hinsdale, Elam Rockwell, Daniel Burnham, Joseph Miller.

1807.—Benjamin Skinner, Capt. Lemuel Clarke, Lucius Clarke, Jasper Grinnell, David Tallmadge, Eben Coe, Deacon Elisha Smith.

1808.—Dr. Lyman Strong, Hermon Munson.

1809.—Deacon James H. Alvord.

1810.—Jesse Byington, William Goucher, Joshua Hewitt, Isaac Johnson, Selden Mitchell, William Murray, John Rohrabacher, John Storer, Riley Whiting.

Settled from 1811 to 1821.—Andrew Brusie, Russell Page, Charles C. Caul, Eleazer Hawley, John Maltbie, Darius Turrell, Samuel Williams, Daniel Albro, Nathan Champion, William Green, Christopher Lyon, George Sage, William Caul, David Marble, Joseph W. Hurlbut, Dr. Henry Noble, George Roberts, Horace Reynolds, Samuel Bartlett, James C. Cleveland, Lewis McDonald, Joel Miller, Dr. Luman Wakefield, Lucius Clarke, Alpha Rowley, Halsey Bailey, Silas Burton, Orrin Cleveland, Shubael Crowe, Reuben Hall, David Munson, Ansel Shattuck, Sheldon Kinney, Capt. Stephen Fyler, Harry Bishop, Leveritt Bishop, Seth Bishop, Jehial Coe, Willard Holmes, Henry B. Crowe, Riley Smith, Chester Soper, Wheelock Thayer, Daniel G. Tuttle, Jesse Williams, Nisus

Kinney, Silas Hoskins, Elias Rowley, Nelson Wilson, Norman Spencer, Stephen Rowley, Horace W. House.

1822.—Elisha A. Morgan, William O. Talcott, M.D., Oliver Loomis, Alanson Loomis, Henry L. Gaylord, Luman Hubbell.

Among the more prominent inhabitants of the society not already named who came in during this decade (1830 to 1840) were Orentus Bronson, James Birdsall, Elliot Beardsley, George Taylor, Dr. James Welch, James Humphrey, Asa Parke, Alvin Gilbert, Ambrose Whiting, Horatio L. Wetmore, Anson Foskett, David N. Beardsley, Elisha Kilborn, William G. Batcheller, Caleb J. Camp, Seth L. Wilder, Normand Adams, Willard S. Wetmore, John G. Wetmore, and Chester Wentworth.

THE WINSTED BANK

was organized Nov. 20, 1848, with the following board of directors: George Dudley, William S. Holabird, Warren Phelps, Reuben Cook, William L. Gilbert, James Humphrey, and Everit Bevins. The officers were as follows: Presidents, George Dudley, from organization until Dec. 2, 1862; Elliot Beardsley, until Nov. 13, 1865, when he was succeeded by Henry Gay, who officiated until Aug. 21, 1867. Cashiers: E. S. Hamilton, to Sept. 3, 1850; William H. Hill, until Oct. 8, 1850; John C. Tracey, until Oct. 27, 1854; William H. Teller, to March 4, 1856; Henry Gay, until Dec. 7, 1863; Rufus E. Holmes, to Oct. 31, 1864; George Dudley, Jr., until Aug. 21, 1867. Closed.

THE HURLBUT NATIONAL BANK.

The Hurlbut Bank, of which this is a successor, was organized March 23, 1854, with the following board of directors: William H. Phelps, Lemuel Hurlbut, C. J. Camp, E. A. Phelps, Abraham Alvord, John K. Shepard, and Gorman Adams. The first president was William H. Phelps, who remained as such until his death, Aug. 27, 1864. He was succeeded by Rufus E. Holmes, who officiated until Jan. 19, 1874, when he was succeeded by William L. Gilbert, the present incumbent. The first cashier was George Alvord, who officiated until Nov. 28, 1856, when he was succeeded by Rufus E. Holmes, who in turn was succeeded by George W. Phelps in 1863. Mr. Phelps resigned Nov. 1, 1865, and Warren Phelps was chosen his successor. Jan. 24, 1866, Charles B. Holmes was appointed cashier, and officiated until June 27, 1874, when he was succeeded by Henry Gay, the present incumbent.

The present board of directors is constituted as follows: William L. Gilbert, George Dudley (deceased), Edward Camp, Elias E. Gilman, J. H. Norton, C. B. Hallett, and R. E. Holmes. The original capital was $100,000, which was increased to $205,000, Sept. 15, 1857. It was organized as a national bank in July, 1865. Surplus, Dec. 2, 1880, $102,500.

THE WINSTED NATIONAL BANK

was organized March 15, 1879. The first officers were John G. Wetmore, President; Henry C. Young, Cashier, with the following board of directors: John G. Wetmore, Henry C. Young, Thomas M. Clarke, Orlow D. Hunt, Lyman W. Case, Augustus H. Fenn, Charles Alvord, and George H. Alvord, all of Winsted, and George W. Beach, of Waterbury, Conn.

The present officers are John G. Wetmore, President; Thomas M. Clarke, Vice-President; and Henry C. Young, Cashier. The present board of directors are John G. Wetmore, Thomas M. Clarke, Henry C. Young, Orlow D. Hunt, Lyman W. Case, Charles Alvord, of Winsted, George W. Beach and Lewis Beardsley, of Waterbury, and Solomon Sackett, of Colebrook, Conn.

The bank was organized with a capital of $50,000, with authority to increase to $250,000.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF WINSTED was organized in 1879 with the following directors: David Strong, Lyman R. Norton, Francis Brown, Franklin Moore (deceased), Charles B. Hallett, George S. Burnham, and Elias E. Gilman. The present (1881) directors are the same, except I. B. Woodruff in place of the late Franklin Moore. The first president was Elias E. Gilman, and the first cashier Frank D. Hallett. They are the present incumbents. The capital of the bank is $50,000.

THE WINSTED SAVINGS BANK

was incorporated in June, 1860. The corporators were George Dudley, William H. Phelps, Elliot Beardsley, C. J. Camp, Warren Phelps, Moses Camp, E. S. Woodford, John Boyd, Lucius Clarke, Lyman Case, John G. Wetmore, T. M. Clarke, William L. Gilbert, N. Adams, Roland Hitchcock, Gideon Hall, Edward A. Phelps, George D. Wadhams, Dwight E. Williams, E. Grove Lawrence, Willard Gaylord, and Theron Bronson. The first officers were Warren Phelps, President; Moses Camp, Vice-President; Lyman Baldwin, Secretary and Treasurer.

Warren Phelps was president from the date of incorporation to July, 1862; Moses Camp from 1862 to 1874; John T. Rockwell from 1874 to 1878; John Hinsdale was elected to that position in 1878, which office he now holds. Lyman Baldwin was secretary and treasurer from the date of incorporation to the time of his death, in 1874; Lorenzo M. Blake from 1874 to 1875; George S. Rowe was elected to succeed him in 1875, and is the present incumbent. The present amount of deposits is $854,000; surplus, $60,000. The first deposit was made by Jane Bartholomew, of Goshen, Conn., the amount being $76.

THE MECHANICS' SAVINGS BANK

was organized in 1875, with the following officers: Normand Adams, President; Thomas M. Clarke, Vice-President; Elias E. Gilman, Treasurer; William L. Gilbert, Harvey B. Steele, Charles B. Hallett, Joseph H. Norton, Harvey L. Roberts, Directors; William L. Gilbert, Warren Phelps, T. M. Clarke, J. G. Wetmore, Elias E. Gilman, H. B. Steele, J. H.

Norton, C. B. Hallett, David Strong, N. Adams, Reuben Rockwell, John Hinsdale, J. R. Cooke, Roland Hitchcock, G. W. Phelps, C. H. Blake, H. L. Roberts, H. A. Bills, I. B. Woodruff, H. P. Lawrence, Delos Stevens, Timothy E. Williams, Trustees.

The present (1881) net deposits are about $300,000, and the total deposits have been about $400,000.

ST. ANDREW'S LODGE, F. AND A. M., No. 64, was chartered in the spring of 1823, with the following officers: Josiah Smith, W. M.; Hosea Hinsdale, S. W.; Wheelock Thayer, J. W.; Elisha Smith, Treas.; James M. Boyd, Sec.

The first lodge-room was fitted up in the old academy building, now a tenant-house, immediately north of Forbes' cabinet establishment, on Main Street, West village.

In 1853, on application to the Grand Lodge of members of St. Andrew's Lodge, its charter was restored, new officers were appointed, and work was resumed in Woodford's original brick block, which was burned down March 25, 1853, and the lodge was removed to the Clark & Wetmore store, then standing on the site of the Clarke House. This store was burned down in 1856, and the furniture, jewels, regalia, and all the records of the lodge were consumed. The lodge was reopened in Chamberlin's store, now owned by John M. Burr, and thence, in the same year, was removed to Weed's brick block, and thence to Woodford's new block.

The present officers of the lodge are as follows: Stephen P. Goodsall, W. M.; Edwin S. Beecher, S. W.; D. P. Kilbourn, J. W.; Rev. G. W. Stanley, Chap.; Henry H. Drake, Treas.; Wm. A. Warner, Sec.; Sylvester F. Rowe, S. D.; F. J. Kilbourn, J. D.; Harry Howe, S. Stew.; Florin Benedict, J. Stew.; John Van Ostrum, Tyler.

MERIDIAN CHAPTER, No. 15, ROYAL ARCH MASONS, was early located at Canaan, and its charter was revoked by the Grand Chapter in 1839. It was reinstated at New Hartford in May, 1848, but not reorganized. It was transferred and reorganized at Winsted in May, 1857, occupied the same hall with St. Andrew's Lodge.

The present officers are as follows: Edward G. Wallis, H. P.; Frederick M. Cooke, K.; Stephen P. Goodsall, S.; Edwin M. Platt, C. of H.; Dwight Phelps, T.; Henry H. Drake, Sec.; A. P. Balch, P. S.; L. McDermont, R. A. C.; Hugh Shepard, M. of 3d V.; S. B. Horne, M. of 2d V.; J. F. Lincoln, M. of 1st V.; J. A. Bushnall, S. S.; W. W. Weaver, J. S.; Rev. G. W. Stanley, Chap.; J. Van Ostrum, Tyler.

TYRIAN COUNCIL OF ROYAL MASTERS, No. 31, was chartered and installed in 1858, and has occupied the same hall with the preceding orders.

The present officers of the council are Edwin M. Platt, T. I. M.; E. A. Nellis, I. D. M.; F. M. Cooke, I. P. C.; Benj. Lawrence, Treas.; Dwight Phelps,* Sec.; L. D. Hart, C. of G.; John F. Peck, C.; E. S. Beecher, Stew.; Rev. G. M. Stanley, Chap.

MAGNOLIA CHAPTER, No. 16, O. E. S.,

was organized by dispensation Feb. 24, 1875, and the Grand Chapter O. E. S. of Connecticut granted a charter Oct. 14, 1875, and appointed Charles J. York, W. P.; Abbie A. Fyler, W. M.; and Mariam R. Drake, A. M. The following members have been elected to said offices:

1876.—C. Lyman Norton, W. P.; Abbie A. Fyler, W. M.; Mariam R. Drake, A. M.

1877.—C. Lyman Norton, W. P.; Mariam R. Drake, W. M.; Annie E. S. Hatch, A. M.

1878.—C. Lyman Norton, W. P.; Mariam R. Drake, W. M.; Delia M. Streeter, A. M.

1879.—Henry H. Drake, W. P.; Harriet F. St. John, W. M.; Delia M. Streeter, A. M.

1880.—Jenison J. Whiting, W. P.; Delia M. Streeter, W. M.; Ellen A. Nellis, A. M.

The present officers are Edward M. Platt, W. P.; Ellen A. Nellis, W. M.; Roxie M. Granger, A. M.; Carrie A. Granger, Sec.; Mariam R. Drake, Treas.; Ida Kilmer, C.; Ella Platt, A. C.; Hattie B. Rossetter, A.; Estella J. Plamb, R.; Etta D. Horne, E.; Alice E. S. Peck, M.; Ruth C. Benedict, E.; Lydia J. Miller, W.; Salvenah E. Granger, C.; John B. Riggs, S. The chapter has a membership of ninety.

The Odd Fellows have also had two lodges in this village, both extinct; these were "Orion Lodge" and "Union Lodge."

There have been several temperance societies; all of which are now extinct. Among these was the "Winsted Temperance Society," organized Aug. 16, 1829, with the following members: Rev. James Beach, Solomon Rockwell, Asaph Pease, Willard Holmes, Salmon Burr, Austin Crane, Norman Palmer, William S. Holabird, Anson Cook, James H. Alvord, Lyman Case, Sidney Munson, Horace E. Rockwell, Erastus Woodford, Josiah Smith, Leumas H. Pease, and Eleazer Andrews. Accessions of members were rapidly made from month to month until, in 1836, there were enrolled two hundred and ninety-seven males and two hundred and sixty-eight females. Other organizations were the "Winsted Total Abstinence Society" and the "Washington Society."

PALMER POST, No. 33, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,

was chartered March 11, 1869, with the following members: Samuel B. Horne, Frederick L. Pond, David W. Coe, Salmon A. Granger, Benjamin F. Marsh, Robert E. Horne, Charles L. Hewett, Whelock

* Past Grand Master of Grand Lodge; present Grand High Priest and Worthy Grand Chaplain; Past Worthy Past Grand Master of Grand Council.

T. Batcheller, John J. Horne, Jeffrey Skinner, William F. Hilton, Paul McLocklin, Joseph H. C. Batchelder. The first officers were Samuel B. Horne, Post Commander; Charles L. Hewett, Senior Vice-Commander; Stephen W. Sage, Junior Vice-Commander; Ralph Lina, Adjutant; David W. Coe, Quartermaster; William H. Lewis, Jr., Chaplain; Paul McLocklin, Sergeant-Major; Joseph H. C. Bachelder, Quartermaster-Sergeant; W. A. Wadsworth, Officer of the Day; William C. Dennen, Officer of the Guard.

The present officers are Charles L. Hewett, Post Commander; Lucius Bissell, Senior Vice-Commander; Darwin C. Andrews, Junior Vice-Commander; John W. Fordyce, Adjutant; Benjamin F. Marsh, Quartermaster; Henry L. Roberts, Surgeon; Henry W. Baker, Chaplain; Robert A. Cutler, Officer of the Day; Truman Hyde, Officer of the Guard; Jeffrey Skinner, Quartermaster-Sergeant; John H. Thurman, Sergeant-Major.

Total members mustered, one hundred and twenty-six. Of the original charter members but two have died, Pond and McLocklin.

UNITY LODGE, No. 35, KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, was chartered May 23, 1873. The first officers were Past Chancellor Commander, W. H. C. Batchelder; Chancellor Commander, B. F. Marsh; Vice-Chancellor Commander, F. J. Northrop; Prelate, J. L. Tatro; Master of Exchequer, H. M. Calder; Master of Finance, Ralph Hinman; Keeper of Records and Seals, S. R. Hinsdale; Master-at-Arms, George M. Bradford; Inner Guard, E. C. Dearborn; Outer Guard, William H. Thorp.

The present officers are Past Chancellor Commander, George Jessup; Chancellor Commander, Samuel B. Horne; Vice-Chancellor, Hugh Shepard; Master of Exchequer, Stephen Crossman; Master of Finance, William B. Phillips; Keeper of Record and Seal, Charles Rowland; Master-at-Arms, John Stacker; Inner Guard, Gustave Newman; Outer Guard, Henry Leversedge.

LIBRARIES.

There was a library in the old society prior to 1845; there was also one kept in the office of Solomon Rockwell & Brothers. In 1808 one flourished in the west school district. "The Winsted Historical and Theological Library" was organized by the Congregational Society about 1810. In 1812 one was organized by some young men in the West village and kept at the house of Col. Hosea Hinsdale. The East village organized one in 1820, and the Methodist church subsequently formed one which was longer lived than any of its predecessors. All of the above are now obsolete.

BEARDSLEY LIBRARY, WEST WINSTED.

In 1874, Mrs. Delia R. Beardsley appropriated ten thousand dollars to the founding of a public library in West Winsted. This amount was committed to a board of seven trustees, selected by herself, who were to expend five thousand dollars for books and magazines during the current year, invest the remaining half of the donation, and thereafter use the income derived from it for replenishing the library, its affairs remaining under their supervision. The institution was opened to the public, with three thousand books, on the evening of September 15th, by an address from the late Rev. Joseph Eldridge, D.D., of Norfolk, Conn. It is open afternoon and evening, Sundays excepted, with a librarian in attendance, and has increased to four thousand four hundred volumes.

Mrs. Beardsley furnished rooms in Beardsley Block, and gave their use for a term of years. Since her death, in 1878, her family has generously continued the rooms rent-free. The expenses are paid by tickets of membership. While permanently benefitting the people of the village, Mrs. Beardsley designed this library to be also a memorial of her late husband, Deacon Elliot Beardsley, and placed a portrait of him in the rooms.

EARLY SCHOOLS.

The first recorded action in reference to schools is found under date of Dec. 17, 1773, the year of Rev. Mr. Knapp's settlement; it was voted "to raise two pence on the pound of the rateable estate for the support of schools in this [First] Society." It was also voted "that the north district begin at the house now owned by Medad Hills, and contain all the north part" (of the society), "that the west district contain all the inhabitants on the west road from the crotch of the paths and all west," and "the east district to contain all the rest of the Society;" "that the money raised by the tax be divided according to the list, and that Warham Gibbs, Reuben Thrall, Ebenezer Preston, Seth Hills, Oliver Coe, Samuel McCune, Benjamin Benedict, Abram Andrews, and Daniel Platt be school committee; that money [raised?] in each district be laid out in each district as shall best accommodate the same, if it shall be laid out in the year; if not laid out in the year, to be returned to the society treasury."

Jan. 6, 1774, it was voted "to reconsider all the votes that have been passed in this meeting concerning schooling." Here the matter rested, so far as taxation and the organization of school districts was concerned, until Dec. 2, 1777, when it was voted "to raise two pence on the pound on last August list, to support schools," and Deacon Seth Hills, Ensign Ozias Brownson, Philip Priest, Eliphaz Alvord, Capt. Gibbs, Phineas Griswold, Lieut. Benedict, and Eleazer Smith were appointed school committee.

Whatever may have been done pursuant to these votes, there is no record of their repeal, and at the annual meeting in 1778 similar votes were renewed, and a rate of sixpence on the pound was granted, and a collector in each district appointed to collect the same.

We have no means of ascertaining when or where the first school-houses were erected, or what teachers were employed, or for what length of time; but we have reason to suppose that schools were first opened in private houses by voluntary associations, and that these were aided, but not wholly sustained, by taxation.

The next action appears on the society records in 1786, when a new school district was organized, "beginning at Torrington line, by a stream called the Branch, and to extend up said Branch so far as that an east line will include Capt. Elmer [now Widow Norris Coe], from thence down y^{e} country road, including Doctor Everitt [now Theron Bronson], John Nash, and all on the north side of said country road, and to include Phinehas Griswold's, from thence south to Torrington line," and Jonathan Coe and Levi Brownson were appointed district committee. This description is not very definite, but probably is intended to designate the district which built about this time the "Two-Chimney School-house," that stood, until burned down, in a southeast direction from the burying-ground.

In 1788, on the petition of Eliphaz Alvord and others, another district, to be called the Second District, was organized, beginning on Long Lake, at the mouth of Sucker Brook, and extending up said brook to the north end of the third tier, first division (near the Dugway School-house), then to the northwest corner of the tier, then southerly along its west line to the southwest corner of the Gershom McCune, Jr., (late Sylvester Platt's) lot, thence easterly along his south line, direct to Long Lake, and thence northerly along the shore thereof to the mouth of Sucker Brook.

In January, 1790, we find the following appointment of district school committees:

Samuel Clark, who lived in the Daniel Murray house, for the northeast district, which embraced the east part of Danbury Quarter, and extended south to Mr. Clark's.

Andrew Everitt, who lived in the old Everitt house, for the northwest district, embracing the principal part of Danbury Quarter.

Amasa Wade, for the southwest district, embracing the territory west of Branch Brook, nearly as far north as the Norfolk road.

Capt. Joseph Elmore, for the southeast district, embracing the centre and the southern portions of the society, lying west of Branch Brook, and southwest of Sucker Brook.

Capt. Elisha Wilcoxson, who lived in the William Johnson house, for the second or Sucker Brook district.

In 1798, by vote of the town, a new district was established, partly out of Winchester Society, and partly out of Winsted Society, the boundaries of which were directed to be placed on file in the town clerk's office, but, as no such file is to be found, its limits cannot be ascertained. It probably embraced the northern half of the present Sucker Brook district, and extended easterly to the Austin Mill, or Mad River, in Winsted. The committee were Deacon David Austin, Levi Norton, and John Miner.

In 1792 another district was formed, embracing essentially the territory of the present West Winsted district, there then being no village in existence, all the inhabitants living on the Coe and Spencer Street roads to Colebrook, the two roads there diverging from the original school-house, which stood on the site of the present West Winsted school-house, and was burned down about 1808 or 1809.

In the records of Winsted Society, under date of Dec. 27, 1784, we find a vote that the districts set off for schooling by a committee chosen for that purpose be established according to their doings, but no record of the districts so established is to be found. Oct. 5, 1785, a tax of "one penny halfpenny" on the pound was laid for the "use of schooling," but was reconsidered and annulled at an adjourned meeting on the 26th of the same month. Dec. 8, 1788, Ebenezer Rowley and Ensign Eleazer Kellogg were appointed school committee. No further reference to school matters is found until Dec. 8, 1794, when it was voted to divide the society into school districts, and a committee was appointed for that purpose, who reported Jan. 12, 1795. The report was accepted and placed on file, but not recorded, and the file is not to be found.

The following are extracts from the early reminiscences of Mrs. Nelly M. Swift, daughter of Dr. Josiah Everitt, born in 1786, which illustrate the school customs and mental culture at the period referred to, from which we extract her notice "of the great day of examinations and exhibitions, when eight district schools assembled in the large, unfinished meeting-house, in the winter of 1793–94:"

"The reading and spelling of the schools occupied the forenoon, and the afternoon was devoted to dramas, comedies, orations, etc. One corner of the church was inclosed in curtains, and each school took its turn behind the scenes to prepare for their special exhibitions on the stage.

"The late Deacon Levi Platt was the teacher of the school to which I belonged. Well do I remember the directions given by him to the little girls as to dressing their hair for exhibition, viz.: the night previous our mothers were to wet our heads with home-brewed beer, and our hair was to be combed and braided very tightly before going to bed; in the morning, the last thing after we were dressed for the exhibition, the braids were taken out, and the hair lay in waving lines all over our shoulders.

"Among the variety of things he taught us was the practice of spelling a whole sentence all together, or more particularly the first class. The sentence to be publicly spelled was 'Abominable Bumble Bee with his tail cut off;' but Mr. Platt thought best to shorten it to 'Abominable tail cut off.'

"Imagine, if you can, in soberness, a large, thoroughly-trained school class spelling or chanting before the assembled families of the town, in this wise:

"'A—	there's your A.
"'B-O—	there's your Bo, and your A-bo.
"'M-I—	there's your Mi, and your Bo-mi, and your A-bo-mi.
"'N-A—	there's your Na, and your Mi-na, and your Bo-mi-na-and your A-bo-mi-na.
"'B-L-E—	there's your Ble, and your Na-ble, and your Mi-na-ble, and your Bo-mi-na-ble, and your A-bo-mi-na-ble.

"'T-A-I-L— there's your Tail, and your Ble-tail, and your Na-ble-tail. and your Mi-na-ble-tail, and your Bo-mi-na-ble-tail, and your A-bo-mi-na-ble-tail.

"'C-U-T— there's your Cut, and your Tail-cut, and your Ble-tail-cut, and your Na-ble-tail-cut, and your Bo-mi-na-ble-tail-cut, and your A-bo-mi-na-ble-tail-cut.

"'O-F-F— there's your Off, and your Cut-off, and your Tail-cut-off, and your Ble-tail-cut-off. and your Na-ble-tail-cut-off, and your Mi-na-ble-tail-cut-off, and your Bo-mi-na-ble-tail-off, and your A-bo-mi-na-ble—tail—cut—off.'

"In the afternoon each school had its oration, poem, dialogue, comedy, or tragedy. One of our dialogues was called 'Old Gibber,' in which the late Abel McEwen, D.D., of New London, took the part of Old Gibber; his wife was Charity Bronson. Oliver Marshall, Seth Hills, Joseph Coit, and myself had parts.

"First Scene.—Old Gibber and his wife talking about the war; wife stirring the hasty-pudding; daughter Betty (myself) setting the table; John, the son, just home from the war, etc.

"Another scene is a bar-room, with such talk as we may suppose would take place there during the war of the Revolution.

"The boys of this period were remarkable for their successful imitations of every kind of business.

"The late Samuel Hurlbut, Sr., was justice of the peace. Samuel Stanley (son of Dr. Everitt's third wife, who died young) was a lawyer, also Sylvester Griswold. Lemuel Hurlbut was constable, etc. Mock courts were held in my father's long kitchen. Writs, attachments, and executions were all made out in due form. A statute book of laws was compiled, specifying a great variety of things contrary to law, for which culprits would be arrested, tried, and punished by imprisonment for so many hours, etc. Witnesses were summoned, examined, cross-examined, and impeached, etc.

"A newspaper was edited and published weekly by Samuel Stanley, before mentioned. It was ruled in columns, had editorials, news, anecdotes, advertisements, etc. These boys, at that time, were none of them over twelve years old!"

For the present condition of schools, see the General History.

THE WINCHESTER INSTITUTE.

In 1856–57 the late Samuel Hurlbut, Sr., had a partial plan for endowing a literary institution in this place, but died without making any provision for it. Soon after, Theron Bronson, Esq., took up the matter, and besides contributing liberally himself, collected considerable money from others. With these funds and his own private property Rev. Ira Pettibone erected the building known as the Institute, at an expense of nearly $10,000. It was first occupied for school purposes in the spring of 1860, and was formally set apart for educational uses in September of the same year, with an appropriate address by Rev. Dr. Eldridge, of Norfolk, and other suitable services.

For some years it was successfully managed by Mr. Pettibone as a boarding and day school, with a large attendance of pupils. Afterwards it was controlled by his son, Col. Ira W. Pettibone, who had previously been associated with him in the school. Col. Pettibone graduated at Yale College in 1854, was colonel of the Tenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and resigned in November, 1862. He remained at Winchester until 1871, when he became a professor in Beloit College, where he continues to the present time. His successor was J. Walker Macbeth, A.M., a graduate of Edinburgh University, who, after two or three years, was succeeded by James Cowles, A.M., a graduate of Yale College in 1837. He continued teaching until 1877, when he removed from town, and since that time no school has been kept up. In 1869 the private ownership in the Institute building and grounds was purchased by Mrs. Jonathan Blake and her daughter, Mrs. Mary Ann Mitchell, and by them given to seven trustees and their successors "for the purpose of sustaining, carrying on, and maintaining a seminary of learning similar to the institute now and heretofore carried on in the conveyed premises, and to possess all the powers necessary for that purpose."

THE WINSTED PRESS.

THE WINSTED HERALD

was established in 1853, making a creditable début as a six-column folio on the 14th of May of that year. For the first five years of its existence its title-page bore the caption of Mountain County Herald, which, at the commencement of the sixth volume, was changed to that it now bears.

The Herald was founded by Thomas M. Clarke and Stephen A. Hubbard, and for eight months was published by them under the firm-name of Hubbard & Clarke. In February, 1854, Mr. Clarke withdrew from the paper to accept the editorship of a new weekly journal (The Leader) just at that time established at Bridgeport. The editorial tripod he vacated came into the possession of Mr. Edmund C. Stedman, then a youthful but promising journalist, but who at that time was comparatively unknown in the literary world. For fourteen months the Herald was published by Hubbard & Stedman, at the end of which time Mr. Clarke returned to Winsted and became Mr. Stedman's successor, and from that time until the following July the names of Hubbard & Clarke appear as publishers. At that date Mr. Hubbard (the present well-known managing editor of the Hartford Courant) retired from the paper to engage in other business, and for the following ten years,—until November, 1865,—Mr. Clarke was sole editor and proprietor, when he sold his establishment to a new joint-stock corporation known as the Winsted Printing Company. The new organization called to the editorial department Theodore F. Vaill, of Litchfield, who had just sheathed his sword after a three years' service in the war of the Rebellion as adjutant of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, popularly known as the Litchfield County Regiment. Mr. Vaill presided over the columns of the Herald nearly ten years, until his death, which occurred in February, 1875. He was succeeded by his brother, J. H. Vaill (the present editor), who since 1868 had been in charge of the business department of the paper. In 1876 an additional chair was set in the sanctum, which for about two years was acceptably filled by F. H. Giddings,—his entree in the journalistic arena,—from whence he was called to editorial service on the Springfield Republican, and later to the Berkshire Courier and Paper World.

The Herald started out on its career as a six-column folio. With its twenty-fifth issue it was enlarged to seven columns, which size it retained until December, 1866, when it was again enlarged, this time to eight columns. Its press, however, refused to properly print a sheet of that size, and after an eight months' trial the former size of seven columns was adopted. At the opening of 1874, a new and larger press having found its way to the Herald office, the paper was again enlarged, this time to a nine-column folio. A year later, Jan. 1, 1875, still another enlargement was undertaken, the style being changed from four to eight pages, six columns to a page. This form and style was continued until April, 1880, when the Herald returned to its former more generally acceptable size and style,—an eight-column folio.

During recent years the Herald has been the medium of a greater amount of local news (of which it makes a specialty) than any other paper in the county, having probably a larger corps of regular local correspondents than any paper in the State. Though nominally Republican in politics, it pays but little attention to political matters, except during regular campaigns, believing that the best and most acceptable service it can render is in the dissemination of local intelligence and the discussion of matters chiefly of local interest.

THE WINSTED PRESS.

The first number of the Winsted Press bears the date of July 5, 1873. The paper was started by Henry A. Bills, a politician, and Lucien V. Pinney, a journeyman printer, and was published by the firm of Bills & Pinney until the early part of October of that year, when Mr. Pinney bought Mr. Bills' interest in the concern, and, as editor and proprietor, has continued the publication of the paper up to the present writing (January, 1881). The Press began its career as a Democratic paper, its Democracy being defined by the Democratic State Central Committee of Connecticut, but at the close of the year 1874 the paper, though still adhering nominally to the Democratic party, began to show signs of apostasy to Democracy as defined by the State Central Committee, and to advocate what was afterwards known as the "greenback doctrine,"—i.e., government paper money as against bank paper currency, Mr. Pinney defending himself as a Democrat in so doing by the action of certain of the Western Democrats at the time. As the probability of the adoption of the greenback policy by the Democratic party of the nation diminished, the advocacy of that policy by the Press increased in earnestness, until it became the leading feature of the paper. With one exception, this was at that time the only journal published in New England in pronounced opposition to national banks and "hard money." The Greenbackers of the State held their first convention at New Haven on the 9th of March, 1876, and organized a third party, putting a State ticket into the field. Mr. Pinney was placed in nomination for Secretary of State, a nomination which has been accorded him at each successive State convention since that time, and the Press pulled down its Democratic flag and hoisted the Greenback banner, under which it is still sailing, having given vigorous support to two Greenback candidates for the office of President of the United States,—Peter Cooper (whom its editor, as delegate from Connecticut, helped nominate at Indianapolis, Ind.), in 1876, and James B. Weaver, in 1880. The paper has been very free in the discussion of religious subjects, and by its pronounced opposition to the prevailing Christian sentiment of the time and locality has earned the reputation of being "the wickedest paper in Connecticut,"—a distinction of which its publisher seems rather proud than otherwise. It is peculiar in its frequent disregard of public sentiment, and its apparent inclination, other things being equal, to take the unpopular side of public questions, rather than the side which has commended itself to public favor. Started as a five-column quarto, the Press was, after the first year, changed to an eight-column folio, in which form it is still published every Thursday, at the original office, in a building on the corner of Main and Bridge Streets, opposite the Clarke House, Winsted.

THE WINSTED NEWS

was started in 1874 by Mr. Henry A. Bills, and has had a wide circulation throughout this vicinity as the leading Democratic paper of the county. In September, 1880, it was purchased by W. A. McArthur, formerly editor and proprietor of the Ludlow (Vermont) Tribune, and a native of Salisbury, Conn. Under his management it has lost none of its political character, and has devoted more attention to local and vicinity news, making it more valuable as a family paper. After its change in proprietors the office was removed to North Main Street from its old stand on the Flat, and has since been known as the Times and News, each village now having a post-office and a newspaper. It is an eight-page quarto, and has a circulation of about twelve hundred.

POST-OFFICE TROUBLES.*

In 1833, on application of inhabitants of the West village, the General Assembly granted a borough charter to comprehend the part of the borough of Winsted lying west of the second tier line. Conservatism again took the alarm, and at the first meeting for choice of officers a ticket was elected not favorable to the objects contemplated by the charter. A small tax was laid for purchasing a fire-engine and organizing a fire company. Payment of the tax was refused by some of the tax-payers, and there was not found sufficient vitality in the corporate body to enforce the payment. The bantling had a paralyzed existence of two or three years, and then expired. Its primary object was to secure an efficient fire organization, but behind this there was a plan for securing a second post-office in place of the original office, which had been recently transferred to the East village, the two villages being then distinct communities, separated from each other by a wide space of land not then obtainable for building purposes.

* From Boyd's History.

In this connection a sketch of post-office changes, and the almost perpetual dissensions growing out of them, which have given to our community an evil fame, seems appropriate as an element of our history. Indeed, to ignore them would be like performing the play of Hamlet with Hamlet himself left out.

There was a time, strange as it may seem to the present generation, when the Post-Office Department was conducted without reference to party politics; when the postmaster-general was not a cabinet officer; when the ruling question in the appointment of a deputy postmaster was, is he honest, capable, and acceptable to the community? when the best interests of the public and of the Department were the sole considerations applied to questions of location of offices. These principles were recognized and acted on not only in the days of Washington and Jefferson, but onward through the administrations of Monroe and the second Adams.

About 1806 the only post-office in Winchester was held by a zealous Democrat, in the Widow Hall house, on the turnpike beyond the eastern border of the present borough of Winsted. The West village had then become a business centre, and also more central to the whole town than any other point on the mail-route. On a representation of these and other considerations to Postmaster-General Granger, a removal of the office to the West village was ordered, and a high-toned Federalist was appointed to the place of his Democratic predecessor.

It is a rule, with scarcely an exception, that when rival villages exist in close vicinity each to other, a feeling of jealous rivalry grows with their growth, and if they are both within the same post-office delivery this feeling is liable to become highly intensified. To this rule Winsted has been no exception. Prior to and during the war of 1812 the Federal element predominated in the West village and the Democratic in the East. Efforts were made from time to time to change the politics of the postmaster and the location of the office, without avail until the resignation of the Federal incumbent in 1830, when, on an ex-parte hearing of an application from the East village, an unexpected appointment was made, and the location of the office transferred to that section. A second-class earthquake could scarcely have produced a greater sensation. The West village at once sent a deputation to Washington, accompanied by a Hartford Times editor, and, on a second ex-parte hearing, the Department ordered the office to be reopened in the West village; but it could not be made to stay there. Within six months, on another ex-parte hearing, the department ordered it back to the East village. Remonstrances flowed in so thickly that in about a year an oily-tongued official, rejoicing in the name of Barnabas Bates, was sent to investigate the case. Nearly three days were devoted by him to a public hearing of the contending parties. He reported to the Department, in substance, that both parties ought to have it, but as they could not, it had better be located at an intermediate point, half a mile distant from each village centre, where next to nobody then wanted it, and, as a consequence, it rested in the East village until after the Harrison campaign, when, under a new postmaster, it again returned to the West village, leaving a branch office for receiving and delivering letters in the East. Two years after, under Capt. Tyler's accidental reign, the office went back to the East village, and the branch office to the West, and so continued through the administration of President Polk.

By this time the nomination of postmasters within a congressional district had by usage become the unquestioned prerogative—not to say perquisite—of the sitting members. Our member acted honestly and wisely by obtaining the establishment of a new office in the West village, and leaving the old office where it then happened to be, and appointing two new postmasters. With this arrangement the land had rest for some years, but in the mean time each village had encroached on the intermediate vacant space. The Naugatuck Railroad was opened in 1849, and the two villages became one. But this one village had three sections instead of two,—the East, the West, and the Flat. The Flat, being the central point and the railroad terminus, naturally looked to a speedy preponderance over the other sections. A consolidated post-office seemed easy of attainment. Senator Dixon, like Barkis, "was willin'" and ready to help by "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," and Representative Hubbard was befogged, and, like a thunder-clap in a clear sky, the announcement came that the West office was defunct, and the East office was transferred to the Flat. Fearful was the indignation of the outlying East- and West-enders. Their reciprocal heart-burnings, the growth of a half-century, dissolved into thin air. The whilom combatants became loving friends, and turned their combined batteries upon the new victor. The Department, finding itself in a quandary, sent another political seer, named Nehemiah D. Sperry, to look into the matter, and see what was expedient to be done in the premises. Nehemiah heard the parties publicly and privately, by daylight and with a dark lantern. He, too, got into a quandary, and betook himself to secret negotiations and quack nostrums. The result was a restoration of the two offices, a very imperfect healing of the new sore, and a general impression that Nehemiah was a wonderful negotiator. The two offices remained as they were until a new muddle grew out of the manipulations of a defeated candidate for Congress in the Fourth District, who got the Republican nomination, but could not get votes enough to elect him. His successful Republican colleagues, sorrowing for his defeat, conceded to him the bestowment of the post-offices in the district. The people, it seemed, were not suited with his nominations for the post-offices, and a delegation of them went to Washington and had a hearing before Postmaster-General Creswell, who appointed two meritorious soldiers to the places. "It would be a wrong conclusion to draw," Mr. Boyd continues, "from this detail of sectional squabbles, that our community is wholly given up to them, or that the feelings engendered are very deep or bitter. The question at once settled, general good feeling is soon restored, and the combatants return to their business, and, with accustomed energy and cordiality, unite in promoting unsectional measures of improvement or benevolence."

HIGHLAND PARK.

Though hardly within the province of a merely historical and biographical work, a distinguishing feature of Winsted, Highland Park, demands notice here, since it is not only a remarkable spot in the topography of the county (everywhere picturesque when less than grand), but, touched by the hand of landscaping art, is a rich testimonial of the march of the esthetical in taste among the severe, practical progeny of the old, still severer Puritan stock which settled Litchfield County, and to whom, as agriculturists, fell the duty of delving out a living among the forests, and from rocks covered with but little fertile soil, and who could not afford to indulge to much extent whatever of the love of the beautiful they may have possessed.

The Park is the glory of Winsted, the resort in summer days of throngs of its people, and is surpassed in wild and varied beauty, and in the grandeur of the views from its summit, by but very few spots, if any, in the whole country. Landscape artists find here choice pictures for the pencil and brush which remind them of the most recherché places among the Adirondacks, the White Mountains, the Alleghanies, and the Blue Ridges of Virginia. "There is everything here which the lover of wild and beautiful nature need have, or might think he would like, except marine scenery, and that would add but little to the grandeur one beholds from Mount Case," is the testimony of an artist of extensive travel and national celebrity; and it well expresses the general delight of tasteful people who visit this spot, and, though the Park has been open to the public only since the summer of 1879, vast numbers of people from all parts of the land have visited it. It covers, with its immediate adjuncts, several hundred acres of forests, open and picturesque grounds, formerly pastures, etc., surmounted by Mount Case (so named in honor of the memory of its once owner, and the former owner of the domain of the Park proper, the late Dr. Lyman Case, a leading and greatly-esteemed citizen of Winsted), from the top of which, some fourteen hundred feet above the level of the sea, the eye surveys a vast territory of remarkable mountain peaks and picturesque valleys. Well up the mountain-sides of the Park excellent carriage-roads have been made, and everywhere through the forests (or "woods," in New England vernacular) romantic footpaths have been opened and graded, and here and there vistas cut with an exquisite art-hand, making delicious effects and surprises. The forests of the Park contain a great variety of trees, singularly tall, beautiful, and umbrageous, and in consequence of that variety present in the autumn a wonderful blending of gay colors, heightened in effect by the deep green of hemlocks, which everywhere abound in groves, groups, and in single majesty. Great aggregations of bowlders (some of them of huge size), massive ledges, tall, perpendicular cliffs, flowing springs of pure water, and acres of ferns (of fourteen species) are some of the important features of this charming tract of land. This park lies mainly in the town of Winchester, but partly in the borough of Winsted, its northern gate being only about six rods distant from the tracks of the Naugatuck and Connecticut Western Railroads, making it easy of access from Bridgeport and Hartford, and is provided with dancing platform, ladies' parlor, various "retreats," etc., for the pleasure and comfort of picnicers and tourists, together with an astronomical tower on Mount Observation. It is expected that in time a considerable portion of it will be covered with summer cottages, most delightful sites for which it contains in great number. Winsted is singularly blessed in its park, so adjacent to its business centres. It requires but a few minutes to withdraw from the busy village, with its humming factories and bustling railway stations, into the cozy nooks of beautiful groves and forests. The great rocks, cliffs, and peaks, and the pathways of the Park have all been given classic and romantic names, and upon the top of a giant ledge, called, from its shape, "Tarpeian Rock," is posed a neat log cabin, which can be seen from some twenty miles distant, and overlooks a delightful valley, in which lies the eastern portion of the village of Winsted. Within the cabin is fitted up with appropriate taste, and contains many rare curiosities and relics, and, with its books, is the rustic summer "library" of the tasteful proprietor, and, in fact, projector and artist of the park, Mr. Lyman W. Case, a middle-aged gentleman of rare powers and extensive culture in science and literature, and withal, formerly a professional man, an able lawyer in New York, an honor to his native town, and one of those rare men of disciplined tastes and catholic hearts of whom too few are found in any part of the world, and who would richly merit a high place in the history of the county for his public spirit in opening Highland Park, and the unsurpassed taste and skill which he has displayed in developing it, without consideration of his accomplishments as a scholar and polished man of the world.

LIST OF OLD INHABITANTS.

The following is a list of inhabitants in the town in 1880 over seventy years of age, for which we are indebted to the Winsted Herald:

Diadema Camp..... 95
Roxalana Murray..... 94
Mary Richards..... 91
Sophia Brown..... 90
Chester Wentworth..... 89
Mary Crocker..... 89
Betsey Hall..... 88
Jeremiah Carey..... 88
Chester Bancroft..... 88
Prusha Culver..... 87
Abi P. Roys..... 86
Alva Nash..... 86
Warren Phelps..... 86
David Lewis..... 85
Miranda F. Holmes..... 85
Mary Evers..... 85
Eben Johnson..... 84
Charlotte Austin..... 84
Lloyd Humphrey..... 83
Abigail Hall..... 83
Julius H. McCoy..... 83
Judson Wadsworth..... 83
Miles Davis..... 82
Anna K. Shepard..... 82
Abijah Watson..... 82
Margaret Watson..... 82
Roswell Smith..... 81
James Newman..... 81
John Boyd..... 81
Polly Spencer..... 81
Amos Beecher..... 81
Abigail Loomis..... 80
William Newton..... 80
Maria Corbin..... 80
Reuben Chase..... 80
Lucy Cleveland..... 80
Henry Ward..... 80
Catharine Ray..... 80
Electa Chase..... 80
Huldah Marshall..... 79
Joanna McCarthy..... 79
Mortimer McMahon..... 79
Sally Thorpe..... 79
Elvira Coe..... 79
Mary Poole..... 78
Fannie Bissell..... 78
Ira Pettibone..... 78
Sarah Olmsted..... 78
Austin Maloney..... 78
Anna Knapp..... 78
William F. Hatch..... 78
Jennette Stillman..... 78
Julia Shea..... 78
Ruby Phillips..... 77
Deborah Strong..... 77
Hannah Burnham..... 77
Luman Catlin..... 77
Hannah Andrews..... 77
Harvey Wakefield..... 77
Mary Thompson..... 77
Mary Rouse..... 77
Selinda Bradley..... 77
Mary Maloney..... 77
Maria Lewis..... 77
George Taylor..... 76
Harriet Ford..... 76
George Dudley..... 76
Candice Catlin..... 76
Elisha Capron..... 76
Joel Todd..... 76
Amos Pierce..... 76
Horace Rowley..... 76
Sally Rowley..... 76
Lucy Smith..... 76
Lavina Hall..... 76
McPherson Hubbell..... 76
Joanna Hanley..... 76
Roswell Perry..... 76
Polly Root..... 76
Hiram Root..... 75
Caroline Lawrence..... 75
Hannah Murphy..... 75
Mary Keegan..... 75
Samantha Phillips..... 75
Marilla Palmer..... 75
Bridget Downs..... 75
Charles L. Norton..... 75
Daniel Wilson..... 75
Martha Roberts..... 75
Mary McCarthy..... 75
Hilamond Fyler..... 75
Mary Dute..... 75
Catharine Quigley..... 74
Annie M. Norton..... 74
John McAlpine..... 74
Polly Leroy..... 74
Silas Hurlbut..... 74
Lucy Chase..... 74
Norris Beckley..... 74
James Craigh..... 74
Sophia Wheelock..... 74
Orpha Ward..... 74
Lois Derry..... 73
Emeline Catlin..... 73
Noah Barber..... 73
Sophronia Dolphin..... 73
Lavinia Welch..... 73
James Welch..... 73
Electa Dudley..... 73
Thomas C. Davis..... 73
Peter Bullis..... 73
Adam Shoars..... 73
Amelia Davis..... 73
Emily W Case..... 73
Isabella Bartlett..... 73
Normand Adams..... 73
Charlotte Reynolds..... 73
Abigail Phelps..... 73
Bennett Palmer..... 73
William C. Phelps..... 73
Lawrence Steger..... 73
William L. Gilbert..... 73
Charles J. Hunt..... 73
Rufus Eggleston..... 73
Sarah Eggleston..... 72
Kate Carey..... 72
Adelaide Wilson..... 72
Lucinda Davis..... 72
Margaret Craigh..... 72
Emily Taylor..... 72
Mary Baldwin..... 72
Daniel S. Allen..... 72
John Wing..... 72
Laura Wilson..... 72
Clarissa Wadsworth..... 72
Catharine McGuire..... 72
Maria Hart..... 72
Emeline Watson..... 72
Sally Humphrey..... 72
Sarah Goodsell..... 72
Ann Horne..... 72
Eliza P. Hewitt..... 72
Philo G. Sheldon..... 72
Mary Platt..... 71
Ira T. Neal..... 71
Charles L. Norton..... 71
Harry Brooks..... 71
George W. Streeter..... 71
Orson B. Eldridge..... 71
Sophronia Catlin..... 71
Eliza Capron..... 71
Eli Barnes..... 71
Julia M. Coe..... 71
Edward Camp..... 71
Catlin Bills..... 71
Lucia Williams..... 71
Vingenze Angiola..... 71
Emily C. Hopkins..... 71
Whiting Miner..... 70
Annie Miner..... 70
Lucy Loomis..... 70
B. B. Rockwell..... 70
Wilbur Richards..... 70
Kate Roach..... 70
Hiram Perkins..... 70
Ann Price..... 70
Elijah Morse..... 70
Elvira Miller..... 70
Abel B. Snow..... 70
Edwin Alsom..... 70
Asahel M. Rice..... 70
Sophia Duquet..... 70
Samuel S. Beach..... 70
Rollin L. Beecher..... 70
Lucy A. Wetmore..... 70
Edwin Halsted..... 70

By the foregoing list it appears that of the one hundred and seventy-six persons in the town on the 1st of June last over seventy years of age four, all females, were over ninety, two were eighty-nine, three were eighty-eight, one was eighty-seven, three were eighty-six, three were eighty-five, two were eighty-four, four were eighty-three, four were eighty-two, five were eighty-one, eight were eighty, five were seventy-nine, nine were seventy-eight, eleven were seventy-seven, fifteen were seventy-six, thirteen were seventy-five, ten were seventy-four, twenty-two were seventy-three, nineteen were seventy-two, fifteen were seventy-one, and eighteen were seventy.

Of the above list six at least have died since the enumeration was made.

There were two hundred and sixty-four persons between the ages of sixty and seventy, and one hundred and one less than one year old.

The most numerous family is that of Carroll, forty-eight; while the Smiths number forty-six, the Johnsons forty, and the Whites thirty-eight. The most common Christian name is Mary, of which three are two hundred and twenty-four. The names of Orpha, Sarepta, Abigail, and Polly are apparently running out. Of the six Pollys the average age is sixty years.

THE BOROUGH OF WINSTED.

The borough of Clifton, which comprised what is now known as West Winsted, was incorporated in 1832. This municipal organization was succeeded in May, 1858, by the present borough of Winsted, which embraces the East and West villages and the Flat.

The first borough-meeting was held Aug. 2, 1858, when the following officers were elected: Wm. H. Phelps, Warden; Rollin L. Beecher, Edward Camp, John T. Rockwell, Charles Cook, Charles B. Weed, John G. Wetmore, Burgesses; John Hinsdale, Clerk and Treasurer; Caleb P. Newman, Bailiff.

WARDENS.

The following is a list of wardens from the incorporation of the borough to 1881:

Wm. H. Phelps, 1858–61; John G. Wetmore, 1862–65; Chas. Cook, 1866–68; Elias E. Gilman, 1869; Wm. C. Phelps, 1870; James A. Bushnell, 1871; Harvey B. Steele, 1872; Mortimer E. Dutton, 1873–74; David Strong, 1875–76; Alex. Waters, 1877–78; Wilbur F. Coe, 1879–80.

BURGESSES.

Rollin L. Beecher, 1858–61, 1867–68, 1871; Edward Camp, 1858–62; John T. Rockwell, 1858–62, 1864; Chas. Cook, 1858–65; Chas. B. Weed, 1858–63, 1865–68; John G. Wetmore, 1858–61, 1871–74; Wm. H. Phelps, 1862–64; Chas. B. Hallett, 1862; James R. Alvord, 1863–66; Elias E. Gilman, 1863–66; Thomas Watson, 1863–66; Albert N. Beach, 1865; Hiram Perkins, 1866–74; Chas. Alvord, 1866; Wheelock T. Batcheller, 1867–70, 1873–74; James A. Bushnell, 1867–70; David S. Miller, 1867; Chas. S. Norton, 1868; Francis Brown, 1869–71; Ralph H. Moore, 1869–74; Samuel W. Pine, 1869–70; Rufus E. Holmes, 1871; Henry G. Colt, 1872–73; Sidney F. Dickerman, 1872–73; Timothy Hulbert, 1872; George Dudley, Jr., 1874–75; Timothy P. Skinner, 1874–75; David Strong, 1874; Wm. V. Barclay, 1874–76, 1879–80; Elizur B Parsons, 1875–80; Joseph Pettit, 1875; Jeffrey Skinner, 1875; Hiram P. Lawrence, 1876–79; Samuel Greer, 1876–78; Willard S. Wetmore, 1876; Burrall B. Pinney, 1876; James G. Woodruff, 1877–78; Orlow D. Hunt, 1877–78; Wilbur F. Coe, 1877–78; Samuel S Newton, 1879; Lawrence McDermont, 1879–80, Edward H. Welch, 1879, Lucien V. Pinney, 1880; James T. Morgan, 1880; Chas. B. Andrews, 1880.

CLERKS AND TREASURERS.

John Hinsdale, 1858-66; Wm. B. Phelps, 1867-68; H. Hungerford Drake, 1869-81.

BAILIFFS.

Caleb P. Newman, 1858-60, 1862, 1867-70; Lamphier B. Tuttle, 1861; Dennis W. Stevens, 1863-65; Alex. T. Thompson, 1866; Stephen W. Sage, 1871-80.

WATER-WORKS.

The first move towards the construction of water-works was an instruction to the warden and burgesses "to ascertain whether the borough has a right to draw water from Long Lake; whether the amount taken through a six-inch pipe would be prejudicial to the manufacturing interests of the borough, and, if it probably would be so prejudicial, whether a reservoir of sufficient capacity to meet the wants of the borough might not be constantly filled by the waste water of the lake." A petition was presented to the General Assembly, in 1860, for power to take water from Long Lake or the Little Pond, which was granted. The preliminary survey was made in 1860 and 1861. The works were constructed at a cost of one hundred thousand dollars, and at present there are ten miles of pipe. The supply is drawn from a beautiful sheet of water known as Long Lake, lying partly within the westerly bounds of the borough.

The first election of water commissioners was held Aug. 1, 1860, when the following were chosen: Lyman Case, John T. Rockwell, and Wm. L. Gilbert. The present commissioners are H. Hungerford Drake, M.D., Edward E. Culver, John E. Pine.

From 1872 to June, 1879, the works were under the supervision of Dr. H. Hungerford Drake, under whose supervision the improvements of strengthening the embankments, removing the two bridges which stood over the waste-weir and substituting the combination waste-weir and roadway, and reconstructing the bulk-head were made.

The fire department was organized Nov. 17, 1862, and the borough was divided into four districts. The first fire-warden was Francis Brown. His assistants were John W. Rowe, Hiram Perkins, and L. C. Palmer. The present organization of the department consists of four hose companies.

The police court was established in 1864, and the first bailiff was Caleb P. Newman.

POPULATION.

The following figures give the population of the town at the time specified: 1756, 24; 1774, 339; 1781, 688; 1800, 1368; 1810, 1466; 1820, 1601; 1830, 1766; 1840, 1667; 1850, 2179; 1860, 3550; 1870, 4102; 1880, 5085.

CHAPTER XVII.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.*

WOODEN-WARE.—The saw-mill was, of course, the first utilization of water-power in this as in most other primitive communities. The location of the earliest of these has already been noted. Besides supplying the home demand for lumber, they early turned out a limited supply of white-wood boards and clap-boards, which were sledded over winter snows to Hartford and other distant towns. White-ash sweeps, oars, and materials for ship-blocks were also got out and carried to Hartford and Wethersfield for up-and-down river navigation of the Connecticut.

Dish-mills for making wooden bowls, trenchers, and mortars followed as accessories to the saw-mills. They used up the slabs from the saw-mill logs by cutting them into disks, which were centred and turned in coarse lathes to the convex surface of the outer dish. With a curved turning-tool, the outer dish was separated from the disk, and then smaller ones were turned off successively until the disk was exhausted. The slabs from which these disks were made were wider and thicker than were taken from logs when lumber increased in value. The trenchers and mortars were turned by a similar process. The maker or peddler of these articles packed them into a strong bed-tick, in which they were carried on the back of a horse, along the narrow bridle-paths, to the earlier-settled towns, where they were bartered for "store-pay." At least four of these mills were located along the lake stream, and as many others in various parts of the town, in the last century, two of which—one at the Meadow Street crossing of the lake stream, and the other opposite the old lean-to mill-house on Lake Street—were in operation as late as 1805.

Cheese-Boxes, Scale-Boards.—Early in this century John McAlpine erected and carried on a shop on the stream at the foot of the burying-ground hill, in Old Winchester, for making scale-boards, used for separating cheeses from each other when packed in casks for distant markets. As he enjoyed a monopoly of the manufacture in the centre of the dairy region of Connecticut, the demand for his article was extensive until the practice of packing each cheese in a separate box was adopted. This change necessitated the manufacture of round boxes, with covers, of sizes fitted to the various diameters and thicknesses of the cheese. This mode of packing went into vogue between 1820 and 1830, and was universally adopted as early as the latter year. One of the earliest manufacturers of this article in Winchester was Silas H. McAlpine, whose shop on the Naugatuck branch is believed to be still in operation. Another establishment on Hall meadow, now owned by Nelson D.

* Condensed from Boyd's History, with additions to the present time.

Ford, has been and is still in operation. These works were built in 1845 by Harvey Ford, father of the present proprietor, who ran it about ten years, and then put it into the hands of his two sons, one or both of whom have conducted the business until the present time. For the first five years there were from ten thousand to fifteen thousand boxes made up each year; since then some less, with variation from year to year. At present, and for the past few years, in addition to the cheese-box business, there is quite a business done in the saw-mill in coarse lumber. Another establishment was carried on in Winsted by Cook & Bacon, from 1842 to about 1846, in a shop adjoining the lake stream saw-mill.

Grist-Mills.—The two early grist-mills of the town have been already noted. The first was built by David Austin in 1771, near the lake outlet; the second, supposed to have been originally built by Elias Balcomb about 1776, stood on the west side of Still River, immediately south of the stone bridge. It was owned and operated for many years by Ensign Jesse Doolittle, and was carried off by a flood about 1800, and was rebuilt by Samuel and Luther Hoadley about 1844.

Both these mills had three run of stones and were carried by permanent water-power. The Austin mill was rebuilt by the Rockwell Brothers about 1810, and was finally burned down and abandoned in 1835. The Hoadley mill was abandoned by Riley Whiting about 1825, and the brick-clock factory (burned down in 1870) was erected on its site.

The Clifton mill was erected by Case, Gilbert & Co. about 1836, and was operated as a grist-mill until about 1869.

Three or more feed-mills have come into existence within a few years: one owned by John G. Wetmore, opposite the Clarke house, another owned by Wing Persons, on Lake Street, and a third owned by Frederick Woodruff, on North Main Street.

Scythe-Works.—Until the closing part of the last century the scythe was, in this country, strictly a hand-made tool, wrought out in smiths' shops by sledge and hammer, and ground on a stone turned by a hand-crank, or hung on the shaft of a flutter-wheel, without gearing or other appliances. The Harris family, of Pine Plains and Salisbury, learned the trade of a negro slave purchased by their immediate progenitor from a former master who had taught him the trade.

The first establishment in the country for welding, drawing, and plating the scythe under trip-hammers by water-power, and grinding it on a geared stone, was erected by Robert Orr, of Bridgewater, Mass., during or after the Revolution. The second establishment of this nature was erected by Col. Robert Boyd, near the west bank of the Hudson, between New Windsor Landing and Newburg before 1790. Benjamin Jenkins, from Bridgewater, was foreman, and James Boyd, of New Windsor, was an apprentice in these works. They became brothers-in-law, and in 1792 came to Winsted and erected the third establishment in the country on the site of the Winsted Manufacturing Company's present works on Still River. In 1802 they built another establishment on the site of the Winsted Hoe Company's plating-shop on Lake Street, and soon after separated, Mr. Jenkins taking the original works on Still River,—from whom they have passed by successive conveyances to the present owners,—and Mr. Boyd taking the Lake Street works, and carrying them on, individually or with partners, until near the close of his life, in 1849.

The Winsted Manufacturing Company was chartered May 6, 1835. The annual production at beginning of business was about five thousand dozen scythes, but the present annual production is ten thousand. Thirty-three men are employed. The present officers of the company are John T. Rockwell, President; Joseph H. Norton, Agent and Treasurer; and Allen H. Norton, Secretary.

The presidents of the company have been as follows: Aug. 22, 1835, Theron Rockwell; 1848, Evert Bevins; Sept. 29, 1851, Rufus Holmes; Sept. 26, 1853, Charles Reynolds; Sept. 24, 1855, George Dudley; Aug. 28, 1865, E. Grove Lawrence; Aug. 26, 1867, William L. Gilbert; Aug. 31, 1880, John T. Rockwell.

Merrit Bull, an early apprentice of Jenkins & Boyd, erected a scythe-shop in 1802 or 1803, on the site of the present stone-shop, at the crossing of the lake stream by Meadow Street, which he managed until his death, in 1824, when the works went into the hands of S. & M. Rockwell, and formed the starting-point of the large and prosperous establishment built up and managed by the successive firms of Rockwell & Hinsdale, Hinsdale & Beardsley, Elliot Beardsley, and the Beardsley Scythe Company. This company was incorporated July 12, 1851, and the following were the first officers: Francis Brown, President; Elliot Beardsley, Agent, Secretary, and Treasurer. The present officers are Philo G. Sheldon, President; Edward P. Wilcox, Agent, Secretary, and Treasurer. Number of hands employed, thirty-five; capacity per month, one thousand dozen; value of annual product, sixty thousand dollars.

Halsey Burr, an apprentice of Mr. Jenkins, built a scythe-shop in 1814, near the site of F. Woodruff & Sons' feed-mill, on North Main Street, which he carried on in a small way until a few years before his death.

In 1831, Wheelock Thayer, previously a partner and acting manager in the scythe business of James Boyd & Son, erected the scythe-works on Mad River, now owned by his daughter, and carried on by the Thayer Scythe Company.

The process of manufacturing scythes has been from time to time greatly improved by the invention of new machinery. The first of these in date and importance was a spring die, with attachments to the trip-hammer for holding the back and setting down and smoothing the web of the scythe,—a very slow and laborious process when performed with the hand-hammer. The next improvement was, by a series of light tilt-hammers, to shape and finish the point; the next was a machine for turning and finishing the heel; another was for spinning the straw rope for binding up the scythes in dozen packages, by a machine similar to the Dutch wheel and flyer for spinning linen. Most of these improvements have originated in Winsted.

Scythe-making was—with the exception of wooden ware—the earliest factory work carried on in Winsted, and has been uninterruptedly prosecuted to the present day, little impeded or accelerated by protective tariffs. The three establishments now in operation have a capacity for making two hundred and fifty thousand scythes per annum, and rarely fail of turning out that number.

Bar Iron and Blistered Steel.—Bar iron had been made directly from the brown hematite ores of Salisbury, Kent, and Amenia from time immemorial. In Litchfield County bloomery-forges stood on most of the available water-courses in nearly all the western towns. They furnished iron for three rolling- and slitting-mills,—one in Canaan, another in Litchfield, and the third in Washington, where the iron was rolled and slit into rods for nail-making. These mills worked up only a small portion of the iron manufactured. Besides domestic uses of all kinds, it was largely made into anchors, which were sent to the seaboard.

Nearly all of these bloomeries, and all of the slitting-mills, have long since disappeared; and their sites would mostly be forgotten did not the cinder-heaps and imperishable charcoal-brays indicate their location.

In 1795, Jenkins & Boyd, in company with Thomas Spencer, Jr., erected the first forge in Winsted, on the water-power of the Lake Street grinding-works of the Winsted Manufacturing Company.

In 1803 the Rockwell Brothers removed and put up their Colebrook forge on the site of Timothy Hulbert's present iron-works on the lake stream.

In 1808, James Boyd erected another forge on Mad River, immediately opposite the Clarke House; and in that or the following year the Rockwell Brothers built another forge on the lake stream, below and adjoining the Connecticut Western depot grounds.

In 1811, Reuben Cook, in company with Russell Bunce and Charles Seymour, of Hartford, built the old Cook forge on Still River, where the axle-works of R. Cook & Sons now stand.

All of these forges manufactured refined bar iron from the best quality of Old Salisbury Ore Hill pig iron, for the supply of the United States armory at Springfield, which required the best iron the country could produce. If there was the slightest defect in the quality, the finished gun-barrel would reveal it by defective polish or failure to stand the proof of a double-test charge. Only a limited portion of the iron made could be brought up to these crucial tests by the best-skilled workmen. Iron of a slightly inferior grade was required for scythes, wire rods, and fine machinery. A still lower grade answered for the ordinary uses of country blacksmiths.

In the process of refining, the cinders drawn off through the tent-plate retained a percentage of iron nearly equal to the ordinary hematite ores. This was worked over in a chafery or bloomery fire, and produced a strong coarse iron, which was worked into tires, axle and crow-bar patterns, and plow-moulds, or into heavy shafting, saw-mill cranks, etc. Each forge had in connection with it a drafting-shop, with lighter hammers, to draw down the bars into rods and shapes of all kinds in demand, and especially to work up the refuse iron by welding to each piece an equal layer of blistered steel, and drawing the united masses into sleigh-shoes.

The iron and scythe business constituted the staple manufacturing business of Winsted until near 1840, when the government had settled its policy of importing its gun-iron from Norway; the English had introduced better and cheaper iron of every form and size than heretofore; when the puddling process of iron-making had grown up in more favored localities; when wood and charcoal had advanced in price, while transportation of raw material and manufactured articles—always a heavy burden—could no longer be endured. Under all these discouragements the iron manufacture rapidly died out. The lower Rockwell forge on the lake stream was converted into a scythe-shop about 1845. The Boyd forge, opposite the Clarke house, breathed its last about the same time. The upper forge on the lake stream lingered on until about 1850. The middle forge on the lake stream was sold by Elliot Beardsley to Timothy Hulbert in 1853, and was changed into a forge for puddling scrap-iron, and is now conducted by the Hulbert Iron Company. The Cook forge, on Still River, about 1850 confined its operations to working scrap-iron into axle-drafts for finishing in the Cook Axle Company's works, of which the forge became a component part.

The consumption of bar iron in Winsted, instead of decreasing with the decadence of its home manufacture, has steadily increased. The new brands of Norway iron were found cheaper and better for scythes, hoes, and other articles than the costly home-made refined iron, and came into general use in our hardware manufactures. The scythe manufacture increased. The hoe manufacture was introduced, and soon consumed more iron than the whole scythe interest had required in 1830, and other new hardware manufactures took the place of the iron-forge.

Blistered Steel.—The first cementing steel-furnace in Western Connecticut was erected before 1800, in Colebrook, by the Rockwell Brothers, under the supervision of Mr. Jencks, an ingenious iron and steel worker from Taunton, Mass., which has been perpetuated to the present time, though rarely operated of late years. It was found that the Salisbury iron was deficient in the ingredient, whatever it is, that produces an edge-tool quality in steel. The steel produced has an elastic quality, fitting it for carriage-springs, hay- and manure-forks, and similar articles, and before 1850 was largely used for these manufactures, and likewise for sleigh-shoes and for general blacksmith work. Since 1850 the steels made from Swedish and Russian irons have nearly superseded the domestic irons, except those recently made from spathic ores.

The second steel-furnace in this region was put up early in this century by Col. Abram Burt, in Canaan, Conn., and continued in operation but a few years. The third was erected in Winsted by James Boyd & Son, in 1832, on the site of Thompson's bakery, south side of Monroe Street, adjoining the bridge. It was designed for converting their own iron into steel, which they were then largely supplying to fork-manufacturers; but was soon abandoned by reason of inducements held out by the Colebrook concern, making it more advantageous to have their iron converted there than to do it themselves.

Cut Nails.—Shingle-nails were cut from old hoops and headed by hand for the First Congregational meeting-house in 1800. The cutting-machine is supposed to have been worked by hand. Another machine for cutting shingle-nails from hammered strips of iron, by water-power, was started by James Boyd about 1808, and soon abandoned.

In 1810, Jesse Byington rented water-power from the old Jenkins scythe-shop proprietors, and erected a nail-factory a little south of the Winsted Manufacturing Company's scythe-works, in which he used a newly-invented machine for cutting nails more accurate and uniform in size than by the old hand machines, but without heading them. Before and during the war of 1812 he employed more men as cutters and headers than were employed in any other branch of business in the place. After the return of peace, in 1815, and the introduction of the combined cutting-and-heading machine, Mr. Byington's business broke down, and has never since been resumed in any form.

Axes.—Axe-making as a trade, distinct from other smith-work, was introduced here by Elizur Hinsdale in 1804 or 1805. He first had his shop on Lake Street, near the lake outlet, and in 1806 erected a shop on the site of the Foundry and Machine Company's works, which he subsequently enlarged to a trip-hammer and grinding-works adapted specially to his business, which he prosecuted until near the close of 1819, when he failed, and the business was abandoned.

About 1828, after the Collins axe-factory went into operation at Collinsville, Nathaniel B. Gaylord, then owner of the old Jenkins scythe-works, entered into the business of axe-making under the supervision of Marcus Morgan, an original worker in the Collins establishment. Mr. Morgan soon after purchased the works and prosecuted the business until 1832, when he sold out, and the Winsted Manufacturing Company now occupy the premises.

Iron Wire.—In 1812, Samuel and Luther Hoadley and James Boyd erected a wire-factory on the west wing of the clock-factory dam, the first, or one of the first, erected in the country for breaking down iron wire from the rod and drawing it down to any size from a half-inch to a hair's diameter. The rods, of the very best Salisbury iron, were hammered down to a half-inch square, and then rounded by trip-hammer swaging-dies, and then, after successive annealings, were drawn down by "rippers," as they were called, to a size whence they could be further reduced by a continuous drawing around an upright block. It was the ripping operation, by self-acting pincers seizing the point of the wire at the plate, drawing it about eighteen inches, then letting go and sliding back and taking a new hold at the plate, and drawing another length, which was then new in this country. At that period there were few, if any, rolling-mills in the country that rolled out round rods suitable for wire-drawing.

The business was profitable, and was vigorously prosecuted until the close of the war, when foreign competition paralyzed it, and compelled its abandonment.

Leather.—In the last century, the regular shoemaker—as distinguished from the cobbler and cat-whipper—was also a tanner. He had his vats, under cover, in or out of doors, in which he tanned his own and his neighbors' skins, and made them into boots and shoes on the same premises with his tan-vats. Of these tanneries there were in the last century three or more in Old Winchester, to which the traveling currier periodically resorted, and curried, or smoothed and softened, the sides of leather when taken from the vats. The oak bark, then solely used for tanning, had its outer surface shaved off, and was then pounded or crushed under a heavy circular stone attached to a ten-foot shaft, stationary at one end, and rolled round a circle by a draft-horse, the bark being distributed along the circular track, and kept there by a man or boy with a rake. Two of these, owned respectively by the Wade and Blake families, continued in operation, by water-power and modern improvements, until about 1850. Both are now abandoned. There was a like establishment in Winsted, erected and owned by Elias Loomis, at the close of the last century, at the foot of "Dish Mill Hill," where the Woodruff tannery now stands, which was abandoned many years before the present works were erected.

About 1800 it was practically ascertained by trial that hemlock bark possessed the astringent and other properties requisite for tanning, and, in consequence, the business was thenceforward conducted on a larger scale in the Green Woods region.

Col. Hosea Hinsdale and Col. James Shepard came to Winsted in 1802, and erected a large tannery on Spencer Street, where now is the fish-pond of Eugene Potter. The business was successfully prosecuted here by Col. Hinsdale until 1851, when he sold out to J. S. and J. T. Rockwell, and the business is now conducted by the latter.

In 1807, Col. Shepard sold out his interest to Col. Hinsdale, and, in company with Asahel Miller, erected the original tannery, on the site of the present tannery of George Dudley & Son. This establishment was owned and managed successively by Shepard & Miller, Abiel Loomis, and Alanson Loomis, until purchased by George Dudley in 1832.

In 1820 another tannery was erected by Horace Ranney, at the corner of North Main Street and the Cook bridge, taking its water-power from the west wing of Cook's dam, which was successively owned and managed by Ranney & Hawley, Norman Spencer, Jonathan K. Richards, Charles B. Hallett, and others, and was abandoned as a tannery in 1857.

In 1821, Horace Ranney erected another tannery, on the site of the present Woodruff tannery, on North Main Street, now owned by George Dudley & Son, which was successively managed by Lewis & Foster until 1834, by James A. Ayrault until 1841, since which it has been owned and managed by Frederick Woodruff until his sale to Dudley & Son, it having during his ownership been carried away by a flood, and afterwards rebuilt and enlarged.

The tannery business of Winsted has, since 1850, been confined to preparing sheep- and calf-skins for book-binding and similar purposes, and has become one of the prominent branches of our manufactures. The skins are imported from England, after having been split into two or more thicknesses, salted, and packed in hogsheads ready for the vat. The bark is finely ground in a mill in the second story of the building, and passed to a large receiving vat, where it is soaked in water until the tanning principle is extracted, when the liquor or tea, as it is termed, is drawn off into a line of receiving vats, and the exhausted bark is thrown out. A paddle- or flutter-wheel is fixed over each vat, and connected by gears with a line of shafting propelled by water-power. A sufficient number of vats are filled with the hemlock tea; the right number of skins are thrown into each vat, and the flutter-wheels are set in motion and operate on the surface of the liquid, creating a current which keeps the skins in constant movement, and perfects the tanning process without hand-labor. The tanned skins are then smoothed, trimmed, assorted, and packed for market, the whole process requiring less than three weeks' time.

This branch of business was originated in Winsted by George Dudley, before 1850, in the works he purchased from Alanson Loomis in 1832. In 1853 he rebuilt and enlarged his works, and added two three-story buildings for dyeing the skins when tanned. In company with his son, George Dudley, Jr., he subsequently purchased the Woodruff tannery on North Main Street.

In 1851, J. S. & J. T. Rockwell, previously engaged in this branch of tanning in Colebrook, erected the four-story tannery on the site of the Hinsdale premises. These works are now owned by John T. Rockwell.

Woolen Cloths.—Joseph Platt is believed to have been the first clothier in the town. He built a clothier's shop and fulling-mill in the Danbury Quarter between 1783 and 1787. The establishment had a brief existence. It is not mentioned in any deed on record, and its precise locality is unknown.

The first clothier in Winsted was Mr. Daniel Marshall, whose shop stood on Lake Street, as it then ran, nearly opposite the house at the corner of Lake and Rockwell Streets, and the fulling-mill in the rear on the lake stream. Mr. Marshall died in 1794, and Daniel Wilcox became the owner until his sale of the premises to the Rockwell Brothers, in 1813. A carding-machine was added to the establishment about 1804. The Rockwell Brothers, in 1813, erected additional buildings, and began the manufacture of broadcloths and satinets. The business was enlarged and vigorously prosecuted during the continuance of the war of 1812, and moderately thereafter until 1830, in the hope of making it a paying business, but with doubtful success. In 1835 the works were burned down, and never rebuilt.

About 1816 another clothier's works was erected by Ansel Wilson, on the site of the Strong Manufacturing Company's new factory. Chester Soper purchased this establishment about 1830, and a few years after erected a woolen-mill on the premises, in which he manufactured broadcloths until about 1838. The works were afterwards carried on by John Thornton and others until 1845, when the woolen business was abandoned and the building afterwards used for making joiners' tools.

Another clothier's works, built about 1814 on the Naugatuck branch in Old Winchester, and carried on by Alva Nash and others until 1828, when it was converted into a woolen-mill for making broadcloths and satinets by John M. Galagher, who failed within a few years, and was succeeded by Isaac Bird, who continued the making of satinets until the establishment went into the hands of the Winchester Centre Manufacturing Company, in 1854. This company confined its operations to making woolen knitting-yarn until the establishment was burned down about 1860, and was never rebuilt.

The Home Manufacturing Company, a joint-stock concern, was organized in 1846, and the same year erected the factory building on Mad River now occupied by the New England Pin Company, and went into the manufacture of broadcloths and doeskins. It labored under the disadvantage of having no stockholders acquainted with the business, and was unfortunate in selecting overseers of the manufacturing department. No profits were realized, and in 1850 the concern was wound up. The establishment was sold to Anson G. Phelps, who operated it, in connection with his woolen-mills at Wolcottville, until 1852, when it was purchased by the Hartford Pin Company.

Not one of the foregoing enterprises proved successful, and most of them ended disastrously.

The William L. Gilbert Clock Company.—The manufacture of clocks, of which this establishment is an outgrowth or enlargement, was commenced here in about 1807, by Riley Whiting, for the manufacture of wooden clocks, for which Connecticut was formerly so famous. The manufacture of brass clocks was begun in 1825. The first company organized was that of Clarke, Gilbert & Co., then William L. Gilbert & Co., later the Gilbert Manufacturing Company, and the present company, the William L. Gilbert Clock Company, which was organized in 1871 with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, with William L. Gilbert president, and I. B. Woodruff secretary and treasurer.

In 1871 the works of the company were destroyed by fire, but by the energy and enterprise of the proprietors they were immediately rebuilt. The reputation of the goods of this house was such that the demand required more extensive facilities for their production before the works were destroyed by fire; consequently, availing themselves of the opportunity of making improvements in rebuilding, the new premises were much enlarged, making them more commodious and far better adapted for the desired purpose. The establishment is supplied with all modern improvements, and is complete in all its appointments. They manufacture a large variety of clocks, and at present are making a specialty of fine regulators, set in elaborately and richly-carved cases. The clocks produced by this company are unexcelled for beauty of design, style of finish, quality of material and workmanship, and real merit as timekeepers. The salesrooms of the company are located at New York City, Chicago, Ill., and Glasgow, Scotland, and are under the management of Mr. George B. Owen, who has been connected with (and interested in) this business since 1866. Mr. I. B. Woodruff, the secretary and treasurer, has been connected with and closely identified in the management of the business since 1851, a period of thirty years, during which the factories have never been closed except for purposes of inventory and repairs.

Cards.—At the beginning of the war of 1812, two establishments for making hand- and machine-cards were started, one by Coe, Miller & Co., in the Shepard & Miller tannery, and the other by the Hoadley Brothers, in their grist-mill. Both companies used one set of machines for cutting and bending the teeth, and another set for pricking the leather, and the teeth were inserted in the leather by children at their homes. Other machines shaped and turned the handles, on which the hand card-leathers were fastened by tacks. Two causes put an end to this branch of manufacture,—one, the return of peace in 1815 and the influx of cheaper cards from England, and the other, the invention by Mr. Levi Lincoln of a combined machine, which in one operation pricked the leather, cut and bent the teeth, and stuck them through the pricked leather.

Wagons and Carriages.—There were, doubtless, wheelwrights and wagon-makers in Old Winchester at an early day, but the compiler has no knowledge of them. Randall Covey had a wagon-maker's shop at the Centre from 1817 to 1821.

Joseph Mitchell was probably the first wheelwright in Winsted. His house and shop, now torn down, were directly opposite the residence of Sheldon Kinney, on Main Street. He made cart-wheels and bodies from the beginning of the century, or earlier, to about 1830.

Selden Mitchell, son of Joseph, above, made light wagons in the basement in rear of the Kinney house above mentioned from 1809 to about 1820.

In 1813, Shubael Crow and Ebenezer R. Hale erected a carriage-maker's shop on the site of John T. Rockwell's tannery, in which wagons and chaises were made until after 1830 by Crowe & Hale, Crow & Bandle, Henderson & Ball, and others,—the premises having been used from 1823 to 1826 for manufacturing pails, tubs, and keelers by Hinsdale and Dimock.

Wagon-making was subsequently carried on in Winsted by James Hermance from 1838 to his death, in 1840, and by G. W. Gaston from 1849 onward to 1872.

In 1851, Walter & Son erected a large carriage-shop on the corner of Elm and Centre Streets, which has since been managed successively by Erwin M. Walter, Uriah S. Walter, W. H. Stickney, and Franklin Lincoln, and is now owned and managed by Joseph F. Lincoln.

In 1856 the Winsted (joint stock) Carriage Company was organized, and carried on a large business in Southern wagons and buggies until the opening of the war of the Rebellion, occupying the old Soper woolen-factory. In 1866 the company was reorganized with a reduced capital, and Marcus Bird, Walter Stickney, Wm. S. Holabird, and others as stockholders, and was wound up in 1867.

The Gillman Carriage Company was organized with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars in 1867, and purchased the factory property of the Winsted Carriage Company; and soon after, on the burning down of the factory building, erected a spacious establishment on the same site with facilities for a large business. This establishment was burned down in 1870, and the operations of the company were thereby suspended.

Another carriage establishment was erected on Case Avenue in 1870 by Walter Stickney, Bennet

Palmer, and Wilbur W. Green, with capacity for a large amount of work. It is now conducted by Wilbur W. Green.

An oil-mill was erected by Bissell Hinsdale, on Mad River, a little west of the Clifton Mill works, about 1816, which was worked only a few years, and was removed before 1830.

The spring steel hay and manure forks were introduced as a substitute for the coarse and clumsy articles previously in use soon after the war of 1812. They were made here in numerous small shops by handicraftsmen, no machinery save the sledge and hand-hammer, propelled by muscular arms, being used. Large quantities were made, not only for supplying the country stores, but for the New York and Philadelphia markets. The three Browns,—Orrin, Harris, and Isaac,—Oliver White, Julius Weaver, and others were engaged in this business. Establishments grew up in other places in which the tilt-hammer came into use for drawing out the tines, which made the hand-labor operation unremunerative, and the business was, in a great measure, abandoned here about 1850.

Foundries.—The casting of iron clock bells was begun in Winsted by the Hoadley Brothers, about 1810, as a secret process, in a detached building, from which outsiders were rigidly excluded. The skilled founder of the establishment ran away after some two years' service. In 1812, Nathan Champion commenced the same business in the Jenkins scythe-shop, that stood on the Strong Manufacturing Company's premises, and afterwards built a shop near the Winsted Manufacturing Company's works, in which he made other small castings.

In 1834, Nathaniel B. Gaylord erected a foundry on the site of the Strong Manufacturing Company's works for casting stoves, plows, gears, and general custom-work, which he operated until 1846, after which it was carried on a short time by Calvin Butler, of Canaan, and was then abandoned.

In 1847, Taylor & Whiting erected a foundry in connection with their machine-shop, now owned and operated by the Winsted Foundry and Machine Company, which is now the only establishment in the borough.

In 1853, John Boyd erected another foundry for large castings in connection with his machine-shop, adjoining Lake Street bridge, on Mad River, which was discontinued in 1854.

Machine-shops.—In 1831, George Taylor erected the original building of the present Foundry and Machine Company's establishment on Main Street, for making woolen machinery as a specialty, and doing general job-work in that line. Two years later he associated with Ambrose Whiting as a partner, in the name of Taylor & Whiting. They did a large business in carding-machines and spinning-jacks for some twenty years. After the retirement of Mr. Whiting, in 1857, the concern was organized as a joint-stock company, with the name of The Winsted Foundry and Machine Company, by which the business is still carried on.

In 1823, James Boyd and James M. Boyd began making saw-mill cranks, mill spindles, and various other branches of heavy forging in a shop then built on the west side of Mad River, in rear of the Beardsley house. To this business James Boyd & Son added, in 1830, the making of finished coach-axles and mill-screws. In 1851, after the death of Mr. James Boyd, the junior partner erected the present machine-shop on the site of the old shop, for the purpose of enlarging the mill-iron and axle business of the old firm, and in 1853 built the foundry last referred to as an appendage to the establishment. The works were purchased by the Clifton Mill Company in 1857, and were a few years after employed in the manufacture of monkey-wrenches. Wing Person's feed-mill now occupies the site.

Reuben Cook, deceased, the head of the firm of R. Cook & Sons, began making iron in 1811, on the site now occupied by the axle-factory, and had for a time associated with him the late Russell Bunce and Charles Seymour, of Hartford. The iron used was made from the red or hematite ore from the mines at Salisbury, Conn., which mines were worked during the war of the Revolution. The pig iron was hauled across the county thirty miles to Winsted, where it was made into refined iron, which was carried thirty miles farther to Springfield, Mass., where it was made into guns. About one-third of the entire product, not being quite fine enough for gun-barrels, was made into tires, crowbars, sleigh-shoes, plow-molds, and mill-cranks.

In 1825, over half a century ago, Mr. Cook began making axle-drafts. At that time the arms were forged eight-sided by a trip-hammer with a straight die, and were made round as nearly as possible by the blacksmith who bought them. He continued making drafts in this manner until 1832, when he began to swage the arms of the axle round under the hammer, and was the first to adopt that improved method. In the same year he built a shop in addition to the forge already in use, and made mill-irons, cranks, etc. The business increased moderately, and improvements were continually made, and in 1839 the present firm was organized and the axles were entirely finished on the premises. This makes the firm the oldest in the country that is still doing business without change of name. The works have been twice destroyed by fire, once in 1852, and again in 1871, but were immediately rebuilt.

The firm of R. Cook & Sons has always endeavored to keep up with the times as its founder had done from 1811, when but a very young man he started in business against very sharp competition from other parties in the same town, who have long since gone out of business life, and some of whom are deacesed.

Charles Cook was the inventor of the case-hardened wrought iron pipe-box, the first ever made, and it is now used with great success for extra fine carriage axles.

Carpenters' Tools.—About 1828, Samuel Boyd engaged in the manufacture of steel hoes and shovels, and erected the original buildings of the Clifton Mill Company works on the south side of Mad River. He also manufactured in these buildings nail-hammers, socket-chisels, and draw-shaves until 1833, when the business was discontinued.

The Winsted Hoe Company.—In 1852, John Boyd, Louis R. Boyd, and Daniel B. Wheelock began to manufacture planters' hoes for the Southern market in the brick scythe-works at the corner of Lake and Meadow Streets. It was a new business and encountered serious difficulties, one of them being the anti-slavery proclivities of the first and third partners, of which the Southern customers were duly notified by competing manufacturers. The obnoxious partners withdrew from the concern, and it became a decided success under the name of "The American Hoe Company." The hoes became the leading article in the market. They were sent to England and duplicated as to the style and finish by English manufacturers, but their work proved inferior in working quality.

The establishment was enlarged by the erection of grinding and polishing works on two other water-powers, and in 1855 employed more hands than any other concern in the borough. The business was prosecuted with much energy and fair success until the breaking out of the Southern Rebellion in 1861. The war closed the market, and so closed the shops. They remained closed until peace returned in 1865, when Mr. T. M. Clarke—who for twelve years previously and from its commencement, with one short interruption, had edited and published the Winsted Herald—organized the Winsted Hoe Company, and as its president and principal manager revived the business. Under Mr. Clarke's management the business has been largely increased by the addition of new branches,—more especially the manufacture of edge-tools,—and in the extent of its business and in financial strength the Winsted Hoe Company now ranks among the first in Litchfield County.

The T. C. Richards & Co. Hardware Manufacturing Company is also located in West Winsted. This is one of the representative institutions of the town, and is under the efficient management of Mr. T. C. Richards.

Bolts and Nuts.—The Clifton Mill Company, soon after the purchase of Samuel Boyd's works on the south side of Mad River, engaged in the manufacture of nuts and washers, and about 1855 added carriage-bolts and nuts to its other manufactured articles, adding for that purpose the three-story building on their premises, and also the Boyd machine-shop at the foot of Lake Street. On the purchase of their works by the Winsted Hoe Company, the nut and bolt manufacture was discontinued.

Another carriage-bolt manufacture was started on the premises of R. Cook & Sons by Franklin Moore and Edward Clarke about 1867, which is still in active and successful operation, under the ownership and management of Alfred E. Moore, son of Franklin Moore, deceased.

Table Cutlery.—In 1852 the "Eagle" works, a joint-stock company with a capital of twenty-five thousand dollars, was organized and put in operation under the supervision of Albert Bradshaw, an English cutler, in a brick factory building on the lake stream, adjoining the Connecticut Western depot grounds. The business not proving successful, operations were suspended about 1854, and in 1856 the establishment was purchased by Rice, Lathrop & Clary, under whose ownership the brick factory building was burned down, and a smaller wooden building was erected on its site; and soon afterwards the auger-factory building on Mad River, near the corner of Main and Coe Streets, was purchased. This building was burned down and rebuilt about 1866. Mr. Clary died in 1861, and Mr. Rice retired from the concern in 1862. George F. Barton came in as a partner with Mr. Lathrop in 1864, and retired from the partnership in 1872, leaving Mr. Lathrop the sole owner.

Pocket Cutlery.—In 1853, Thompson & Gascoigne (Englishmen) carried on a small pocket-cutlery business in the factory of the Eagle Company, which was soon after taken up by Beardsley & Alvord, and gradually enlarged and made profitable. In 1856 they built their cutlery-works at the lake outlet, and have since transacted a large and prosperous business in the name of "The Empire Knife Company." In 1880 the concern was moved to the present site, formerly occupied by the table-cutlery establishment of William P. Lathrop.

In 1854, C. F. Clark, an Englishman, started a pocket-cutlery concern in the attic of the Cook axle-factory, which was taken up by Horace Phelps, and after a trial of one or two years was abandoned.

Augers.—The Winsted (joint stock) Auger Company was organized in 1853, with a capital stock of ten thousand dollars, and immediately after erected the factory on Mad River, near the corner of Coe and Main Streets, at a cost beyond their capital. It was managed inefficiently by men unacquainted with the business, and was wound up before 1860.

*Pins.—In 1852, Erastus S. Woodford, J. B. Terry, and others organized "The Hartford Pin Company" (joint stock), and purchased of Anson G. Phelps the woolen-factory building on Bridge Street, opposite the Naugatuck Railroad depot grounds, and began making pins the same year. The company at once came into conflict with the Howe Pin Company, of Birmingham, in respect to a patented sticking-machine for sticking the pins on paper, which impeded operations until the question of infringement was settled by litigation in the United States Circuit Court. In 1857 the factory property and machinery of the company became the property of James R. Keeler, who conveyed the same to "The New England Pin Company," organized in May of the same year, and composed of said Keeler, Hector Armstrong, C. O. Crosby, and John G. Wetmore, stockholders, and with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars.

* For history of New England Pin Company, see biography of John G. Wetmore, Esq.

The Wyoming Pin Company was organized in March, 1880, with Mr. T. S. Carroll president and secretary. The manufacture of pins was commenced in September, 1880. The establishment was burned in January, 1881, and started again in March following. The factory employs twenty-two persons, and has a capacity of one million and eighty thousand pins daily. Mr. Carroll is also the manufacturer of a champagne tap, upon which he has a patent now pending.

Steel Fire-Irons.—Benjamin and Edward Woodall (Englishmen) began making, of highly polished steel, shovels and tongs and other fire-irons, about 1850; and in 1854 organized the "Winsted Shovel and Tongs Company," under the agency of Justus R. Loomis; they bought the Halsey Burr scythe-shop and water-power, and erected the factory building now used as a feed-grinding mill by Frederick Woodruff, on North Main Street. The concern lacked capital, energy, and business skill, and was closed up about 1857.

The Winsted Plane Company, organized in 1851, entered on the manufacture of joiners' tools in the old Soper woolen-factory building, and continued until about 1856, when it became insolvent and was wound up.

The Clifton Lumber Company was organized in 1854, and erected the building near the Naugatuck depot, now occupied by the Winsted Printing Company, for planing lumber and manufacturing doors, sashes, and blinds by steam-power. The concern was wound up in 1857.

Another company or partnership, consisting of Ralph H. Moore, Franklin Moore, and others, in 1872 erected a factory on Case Avenue for making plated spoons and other plated articles. This establishment was destroyed by fire in 1873.

The Borden Condensed Milk Company, consisting of Gail Borden, Theron Bronson, and Elhanan W. Tyler, was organized in 1863, and purchased the factory building near the Naugatuck depot, now occupied by the Winsted Printing Company, in which they condensed milk until 1866, when, not finding the location favorable for the business, the concern was wound up.

The Henry Spring Company, located at West Winsted, was organized at New Haven in 1869, and its location was transferred to Winsted in April, 1870, and the grinding-shop on Lake Street, erected by the American Hoe Company, was purchased by the Spring Company, and its machinery placed therein. The spring made by them is a patented article, combining equal strength and elasticity with springs of other manufacture of a third more weight, and are in constantly-increasing demand for light buggies and carriages.

The Winsted Paper Box Manufactory, R. L. Preston proprietor, is the only institution of the kind in town, and greatly merits its present success. The manufacture of tin-, brass-, and copper-ware is also carried on extra.

The Winsted Gas Company was organized Oct. 15, 1860, with a capital stock of twenty thousand dollars, nearly half paid in, and directors were appointed as follows: George Dudley, Erastus S. Woodford, Moses Camp, Elliot Beardsley, Caleb J. Camp, Jabez Alvord, John Hinsdale, James R. Alvord, and Henry Gay.

The directors chose the following officers: Moses Camp, president; Erastus S. Woodford, secretary; and Henry Gay, treasurer.

A small gas-works was erected in 1861 on Prospect Street, and continued with varied success until April, 1874, when the company was reorganized with a capital of sixty thousand dollars, the old works abandoned on Prospect Street, and new fire-proof brick works erected on Case Avenue, and main iron pipes relaid, much larger than before; also extended to the East village (so called), and through North Main Street to Cook's.

The directors elected at the reorganization in 1874 were Henry Gay, George Dudley, Caleb J. Camp, Edward R. Beardsley, Edward Clarke, J. M. Loweree, Harvey L. Roberts, Henry G. Colt, George W. Phelps.

At a directors' meeting, held April 24, 1874, Henry G. Colt was elected president, and Sidney F. Dickerman secretary and treasurer. The same efficient officers have continuously had charge of the works since its reorganization; but time's changes have necessitated changes in the board of directors, which in May, 1881, are as follows: Henry G. Colt, H. H. Tibbals, Edward R. Beardsley, Sidney F. Dickerman, Henry Gay, Rufus E. Holmes, T. F. Rowland, Harvey L. Roberts, and Edward Clarke.

CHAPTER XVIII.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

First Congregational Church, Winchester—First Congregational Church, Winsted—Second Congregational Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—St. James' Church—St. Joseph's Church—The Women's Christian Temperance Union.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, WINCHESTER CENTRE.

The "Society of Winchester," which was practically the Congregational Church, was incorporated in 1768. Under the act of incorporation a society meeting was held June 29, 1768, and the following votes passed:

"Voated, That John Smith should be Moderator for sd. Meeting.
" That Seth Hills should be Clark for sd. Sosiety.
" That all free agents be lawful voaters.
" That Thomas Hosmer should be fust Commety man for sd. Sosiety.
" William Filey sec^nd^ Commety man for said Sosiety.
" Seth Hills be third Commety man for sd. Sosietay.
" That the Sosiety will except 74 pounds of the tax yearly."

Sept. 20, 1768, at an adjourned meeting, it was

"Voated, That the meeting on the Saboth should be continued att John Hills til December next."
"That the Sisiety will aply to the Association for advice."

Oct. 13, 1768,

"Voated, That y^e^ Society wil wait til week after next for Mr. Mills."
"Voated, That the Comity shall try for Mr. Pitkin proid Mr. Mills don't com."

At the annual meeting, first Tuesday of December, 1768, Thomas Hosmer, Seth Hills, and John Hills were chosen society committee; Seth Hills, clerk; and Thomas Hosmer, treasurer; and the committee were instructed to apply to Samuel John Mills to supply them.

At the annual meeting, Dec. 28, 1769, the privilege of voting extended to "all free agents by vote of a former meeting, was confined to all the inhabitants that are of age;" and after choice of committee, clerk, and treasurer, the following additional appointments were made: "John Hills, corester; Abram Filley, corester; David Austin, to read the Psalm; Beriah Hills, to assist to read the Psalm."

And it was voted

"That our anuel meeting shall be warnid by the Comnity by setting up a paper on a post by the Meeting-House at least eight days before y^e^ meeting, telling the place and time of day."

At the annual meeting, Dec. 11, 1770, after appointment of officers, the sweeping of the meeting-house was set up to the lowest bidder, and bid off by Jesse Wilkinson at five shillings and sixpence for the year. The expenses of the year were reported to be sixty pounds four shillings and threepence, and of the years 1768 and 1769, sixty-nine pounds eight shillings and ninepence, and the meeting adjourned to the first Monday of March, 1771, at which adjourned meeting it was "Voted, That we will send a petition to the Assembly next May for tound privileges."

"Voted, That we will send a Petition to the assembly next May for a Tax for the Settlement of a Minister and building a Meeting-House."
"Voted, That Beriah Hills and Warham Gibbs shall assist in reading the Psalm."
"Voted, That John Hills and Abram Filley shall sett the Psalm."

The first mention of a meeting-house in the infant society is made in a vote in 1769, already quoted. No record is found referring in any way to the building of this sanctuary; nor is any traditionary account of its erection, or by whom it was erected, discoverable. No tax was laid to pay for it, and no building committe was appointed to superintend it.

On the 20th of September, 1768, it was voted that the Sabbath meeting should be held until the next December at John Hills' house, which stood near the Hurlbut Cemetery; then follows, in December, 1769, the vote requiring notices of society meetings to be placed on a post by the meeting-house. These votes would indicate 1768 as the year of its erection. It stood on the slope of a hill, on the west side of a road long since discontinued, coming up from the Luther Bronson house, and passing immediately in front of the houses of Marcus Munsill and Noble J. Everitt, to Winchester Centre. It was a low, steep-roofed building, thirty feet long and twenty-four feet wide, with nine-feet posts, covered with wide rabbeted boards one inch thick. It stood on a side hill above the road, the rear resting on the ground, and the front supported by sections of chestnut logs, three to four feet in diameter, lying diagonally under the corners. A huge chestnut butt, set up perpendicularly at the front door, with a series of steps cut crosswise of the timber, gave access to the ground-floor. Opposite the door was the pulpit or rostrum, three to four feet high. The seats were rough planks or slabs with legs at the ends inserted in auger-holes. Originally there was no floor overhead, but as more room was required to accommodate the worshipers, joists were inserted in the cross-beams, and boards laid down loosely for a floor, except on a space of nine feet square over the rostrum. This was the gallery. Access was gained to it by a plank ladder outside, at one of the ends of the building, ascending to a door in the gable. The interior was neither ceiled nor plastered.

"SABA-DAY HOUSE."

"Near this church edifice there appears to have been another religious building peculiar to New England in the last and early in the present century, called a Sabbath-day house, or, as spelled in the one of the two instances in which it occurs in our records, a 'Saba-day house.' It is first mentioned in a vote of temporary adjournment of a society meeting in December, 1761, probably by reason of the extreme cold in the meeting-house. The second mention of it is in the survey of the road formally laid out and established in 1772, along the line of the bridle-path which had previously been the only means of access to the meeting-house, in which two prominent landmarks are 'a birch-tree near a saw-mill, then N. 13 E. to a Sabbath-day house.' Such buildings were erected by individuals living distant from places of worship for the accommodation of their families before and during the intervals of worship in the inclement weather of winter. They were generally long, low buildings of two apartments, with a fireplace in each attached to one chimney. A supply of fuel was provided in the fall. Some member of the family or families owning those apartments went forward early on the Sunday morning and made up the fires, and the rest of the parties followed in such season as to thoroughly warm themselves before going into meeting. At the intermission they returned to their rooms, warmed themselves, and such homely fare as they had brought with them, ate their dinners, discussed the morning sermon, and returned to the afternoon exercise, at the close of which they again warmed themselves at the fires, and returned to their distant homes."

The church proper—as an ecclesiastical body—was organized by Rev. Mr. Roberts, of Torrington, and Rev. Ammi R. Robbins, of Norfolk, Oct. 30, 1771, with the following members: Widow Mary Loomis, Widow Hannah Averit, Dinah, wife of Wm. Filley, John Hills, Seth Hills, Adam Mott, Abiah Mott, Lent Mott, Abraham Filley, Robert Macune, Joseph Preston, Mary Preston, Amy, wife of Joel Beach, and Elizabeth Agard.

"After y^e^ Church was gathered y^e^ following persons were admitted members in full Comm^n^. with the Church, viz.: David Austin, Mary Austin, Mary Wilkinson, Mary Goffe, Mercy Filley.

"The Church then proceeded to and made choice of Robert Macune to be the Moderator or Clerk of this church.

"Attest,

"NATH^L^. ROBERTS, Pastor of y^e^ Ch., Torrington,

"A. R. ROBBINS, Pastor of Ch., Norfolk."

The following members were added to the church prior to the ordination of its first pastor, in 1772: Nov. 3, 1771, Warham Gibbs and Eunice, his wife, by profession. Jan. 19, 1772, Ebenezer Preston, by letter from the church at Torrington; Martha Preston (his wife), by letter from the church at Harwinton; Eliphaz Alvord, by letter from the church at Chatham; Esther Alvord (his wife), by letter from the church at Chatham. Feb. 10, 1772, Capt. Jon. Alvord, by letter from the church at Chatham; David Goff, by profession. July 26, 1772, Samuel Wetmore and Anna, his wife, by letter from Middlefield; Simeon Loomis, by profession.

The records of the society show that endeavors were made, both before and after the gathering of the church, to secure a permanent minister. Mr. Peter Starr, afterwards the lifelong minister of Warren, was invited to preach, on probation, in July, 1771. A Mr. Hale was employed four "Saboths"; a Mr. Potter was invited, on probation, in September, 1771, and in case he did not come, a call, on probation, was voted to Mr. Judson; and it was also voted to have Dr. Bellamy, of Bethlem, and Rev. Mr. Robbins, of Norfolk, act for them in hiring a candidate "that they think will sute the society." Sept. 30, 1771, it was left "with the comity to hire a candidate as they shall think best; but not to hire one that is determined not to settle." Oct. 31, 1771, the committee was directed to "apply to Mr. Jonson to supply us six Saboths." Feb. 13, 1772, it was voted "that the society will give Mr. Sam^ll^ Jonson amedeat call for a settlement." February 17th following, the committee were directed to apply to Mr. Brooks to supply for three Sabbaths; and on the 31st of March following, an application was voted to Mr. Napp to supply for six Sabbaths, and the committee was directed to go or send after him. July 10th following, "Mr. Napp" was applied to to preach twelve Sabbaths on probation.

Sept. 23, 1772, it was voted "that the society will give Mr. Joshua Napp a call for a settlement in the ministry amongst us;" and a settlement was proposed of two hundred pounds, payable in installments, and a salary beginning at thirty-five pounds, and increasing five pounds annually until it should reach sixty-five pounds, which was modified so that it should increase in proportion to the increase of the grand levy until it should reach sixty-five pounds. He was ordained Nov. 11, 1772.

The ministers have been as follows: Joshua Knapp, 1772–89; Publius V. Bogue, 1791–1800; Archibald Bassett, 1801–6; Frederick Marsh, 1809–51; James H. Dill, 1846–51; J. W. Cunningham, 1852–54; Ira Pettibone, 1857–66; Arthur Goodenough, present pastor.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

In tracing the settlement of the Winsted section of the town, we have thus far made no mention of the Ecclesiastical Society of Winsted as an organized body. Its religious services up to this period were mainly held beyond the eastern border of the town. Its first meeting-house was there erected, and the first minister there ordained and settled. Its original members were residents along the old North country road and its vicinity, and a larger portion of them in Westchester and a considerable number in Barkhamsted.

To modern Winsted, its origin and growth, its struggles and dissensions prior to 1801, would seem a myth, did not its quaint old records avouch the reality of its history. These records begin with a society meeting lawfully warned and held March 17, 1778, at the dwelling-house of John Balcom, by a warrant granted by Matthew Gillett, justice of the peace, dated seven days earlier. Of this meeting John Wright was chosen moderator and Eleazer Kellogg clerk; Isaac Kellogg, Josiah Smith, and John Balcom were appointed committee-men; and it was voted that the annual meetings of the society should be holden on the second Monday of December annually, and that warnings therefor should be set up at Austin's mill, Abram Callers' shop, and at the crotch of the road that goes from John Wright's to Lemuel Walter's, twelve days before such meeting. Another meeting, held September 15th of the same year, voted that the money paid to Mr. Porter and to Mr. Ausbon for preaching, and also the money due Mr. Balcom for boarding Mr. Ausbon, should be paid out of a tax when collected. At the annual meeting of this year it was voted "that a meeting be warned to see if this society are a mind to be made a distinct town." The same subject was brought up at various subsequent meetings, but no definite action appears to have resulted.

At the annual meeting in 1780 the matter of locating and building a meeting-house seems to have been first agitated, and it was voted "that we will git the original plans of Winchester and Barkhamsted, and apply to Cornal Shelding to find the middle of this society, and if he cant by them give us the senter, then to measure the bounds of this society, the said Shelding to measure, and that this society will pay the cost to Cornal Shelding for doing the business for said society, and that Lieut. John Wright to see the bisness done." The subject was resumed May 24, 1782, when it was voted "that we do try to agree to pitch a stake for a meeting-house," and "that we apply to the next county court for a committee to pitch a stake for our meeting-house," and "that we nominate Esq. Asaph Hall, of Goshen, Maj. Jiles Pettibone, of Norfolk, and Esq. Ensign, of Hartland." In December, 1792, Col. Sheldon was substituted for Esq. Ensign on this committee, and at a meeting, Aug. 25, 1783, it was voted "to establish the stake for our meeting-house where it now stands pitched by Col. Shelding, Maj. Pettibone, and Esq. Hall, and that Ensign Jesse Doolittle shall go and make returns to the honorable county court of our voting the establishment of our meeting-house stake."

This looked like an auspicious beginning of the constructive work of the society, but the appearance was deceptive. A meeting was called, Dec. 22, 1783, "to see if the society will go on to bild our meeting-house where the stake now stands," and the question was decided in the negative. On the 2d of February, 1784, it was voted "that we chuse a comitte to go and view the society and se if we can't pitch a stake for ourselves;" and December, 1784, it was voted "to go on and build a meting-house at the stake pitched by the committee," the house to be forty-five by thirty-five feet and a suitable height for galleries; and a tax of sixpence on the pound was laid for defraying expenses. This again looked hopeful; but at a meeting in January, 1785, the hopeful project was knocked in the head by a vote "that all the bisness voated" in the previous meeting "be holy set aside consarning bilding a meeting-house in this society."

On the 9th of May, 1786, another committee, consisting of Capt. Josiah Smith, Nathaniel Russell, Ensign Jesse Doolittle, Othniel Brainart, Capt. Robert Whitford, and Sergt. Reuben Sweet, pitched a stake at the west end of Jonathan Sweet's lot, where it was voted by more than two-thirds to build the house. In June following it was decided to build a house fifty by forty feet, with height in proportion, and that an agent be sent to the county court to get the stake established. Again the project was nullified by a vote of Sept. 4, 1786, "that we will not send an agent to the county court."

Another stake-pitching committee was appointed Sept. 25, 1786, which seems to have performed its duty. In October following it was voted "that this meeting be adjourned to the place where the committee have prefixed for to build a meeting-house;" and it was there "voted, by more than two-thirds, that we will bild a meeting-house where the committe have pitched the stake." Although this vote of more than two-thirds was solemnly taken on the very ground prefixed by the committee, yet subsequent records show that the stake would not yet stay pitched. But, before tracing these measures to a final result, it is fitting to advert to other occurrences in the history of the society.

Up to 1786 preaching was had at irregular intervals, and no money raised by taxation for its support. Individuals seem to have advanced money, and to have found difficulty in getting it refunded. The society, in 1780, voted "to make up the sink of money due individuals for advancements, according to Congress scale." In 1782, May 14th, it was voted to hire preaching, and "that the committe do advise where to apply for a candidate," and that Lieut. Josiah Smith be appointed to read the Psalm on Sabbath-days, and that E. Kellogg read the Psalms when Lieut. Smith is absent.

In 1783 it was voted to have preaching in the summer, and in the fall a tax of seven pounds was voted "to be applied for the youse of supporting singing." A committee was also chosen "to regulate the singing in this society on the Sabbath-day, and to introduce such tunes as they shall think proper to be sung on Sabbath-days;" and it was also voted that preaching should continue during the winter.

It might be inferred that, with preaching summer and winter, and the support and regulation of singing under the supervision of three choristers, and a committee to introduce tunes proper to be sung on the Sabbath, harmony and concert of action might have been promoted; but stakes could not be pitched and voted on so often without moral friction. Heart-burning and dissensions prevailed to such a degree that in October, 1785, a mutual council, consisting of Rev. Messrs. Taylor, of New Milford; Canfield, of Roxbury; Huntington, of Middlebury; Belden, of Newington; and Smalley, of New Britain, was called to advise with the church and society in regard to the subsisting difficulties. The records fail to show the result, if any was reached. Harmony, in any event, was not restored. Meetings were frequent, and contradictory in action. Votes passed at one stage of a meeting were not infrequently voted down before adjournment, and the doings of one meeting were undone by another. The meetings were often protracted into the night, and unfair advantages taken in carrying measures at a late hour that could not be accomplished in a full meeting. To correct some of these irregularities a standing rule was adopted about this time, "that no vote should be put after sunset for the futer, except the business so drive them that they find it necessary, and passed a vote to continue the same before sunset." Another vote required "that all accounts against the society shall be brought to the annual meeting yearly, or shall be forfeit for the futer, except it be made to appear that it could not be done."

The following votes illustrate the way of doing business in committee of the whole, under the new rule, and show an example of thoroughness worthy of all imitation:

"Voted, Elkana Phelps £1 11*s*. 4*d*. for boarding Mr. Fowler eleven sabbaths.

"Voted, Eleanor Kellogg, £9 6*s*. 0*d*. for the youse of his house.

"Voted, Enoch Palmer for boarding ministers and house room for holding meetings sabbath-days, £1 9*s*.

"Voted, Elisha Mallory for boarding Mr. Beach 1 week, 4 days, 12*s*.

"Voted, Capt. Josiah Smith, for boarding Mr. Hitchcock and other ministers 3½ weeks and keeping their horses, £1 6*s*. 3*d*.

"Voted, Ensign Doolittle for going to Torringford to get Mr. Edmund Mills to preach hear, 3*s*.

"Voted, Samuel Hayden for holding meetings in his house for 28 Sabbaths, £2 2*s*.

"Voted, That those that board ministers in the summer season, and keep their horses, for the future be allowed 7*s*. 6*d*. a week."

The pitching of stakes for a meeting-house having been played out in 1786, it was thought best to defer the building of a meeting-house and to settle a minister; and accordingly, at the annual meeting of the year, it was "voted, by more than two-thirds, that we give Mr. Parsons a call in order to a settlement." It was also voted to give him a salary of forty pounds a year, and the use of two hundred pounds as a settlement. A committee was also appointed to purchase a place or settlement for the use of the minister of the value of about two hundred pounds, to be holden as the property of the society.

The church having united with the society in a call to Rev. Stephen Parsons to settle with them in the gospel ministry, his reply was laid before the society on the 12th of March, 1787; whereupon it was voted to settle Mr. Parsons agreeable to his "Ritten Answer," which is as follows, viz.:

"March y^e^ 11th, 1787.

"To the Church and Society of Winsted, wishing grace, mercy, and peace to be multiplied unto you.

"Having taken into consideration the call you gave me to settle with you in the work of the Gospel ministry, as it appears to me a matter of great importance that I am lead by the Spirit of God in the right way to promote the general cause of God in the world, I thought it my duty to give you some idea of my present profession and principles respecting Christian fellowship and connection with churches.

"As to my profession, it is what is called in this State a strict Congregationalist, and my connections are with the ministers and churches of that denomination, which appears to me the nearest to the rule given in God's Word of any within the compass of my acquaintance, on which account I can by no means renounce my connection with them. Yet I could heartily wish the wall of partition between the different denominations was broken down, that all the true friends of Christ were united in one army, under the glorious captain of our salvation, against the kingdom of Satan, the prince of darkness. Wherefore, I think it my duty to maintain and cultivate liberal sentiments and hold fellowship with all those who appear to practice and love the truth; and if I was to receive an ordination, I should choose to apply to a number of ministers of different denominations, not exceeding that of my own.

"If the church and society in this place can receive me on these principles, and there is a prospect of their being united, so that I may be useful in this part of the vineyard of Christ, and at the same time promote the general good of mankind, it appears to be my duty to comply with your call. Otherwise, I have no desire to be received by giving up my principles or renouncing my connections. I close with subscribing myself yours to serve in the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ.

"STEPHEN PARSONS."

Why this acceptance of the call did not result in the settlement of Mr. Parsons does not appear. It may have been frustrated by a conflict of views between the candidate and the consociation in regard to church order and fellowship. It only appears on record that the church and society, on the 18th of April, 1787, voted "to continue the call to Mr. Parsons to settle with us in the Gospel ministry."

The parsonage lot, which, a few years after, became a subject of fatal contention, was purchased at this time, and a tax was laid to provide the first payment therefor, and a parsonage-house was soon after erected thereon, and so far finished as to serve as a place of worship until a meeting-house should be located and erected. It stood east of Barkhamsted line, at the intersection of road from the clock-factory with the old country road, was occupied successively by Rev. Mr. Woodworth, Moses Haydon, Isaac Brown, and others, and was torn down many years ago.

The location of a meeting-house site was again attempted this year (1787). A stake was pitched, and the society voted that they "be agreed to build," etc.; but no building was built, and no further steps were taken in that direction until 1791.

The records during this interval show the progress of events and the nature of the business transacted. A better knowledge of the law of stake-pitching and other ecclesiastical matters was provided for by the purchase of a society law-book and a quire of paper, "to keep accompts on." The law-book was ordered to be kept two months at David Anstus', two months at Nathan Wheeler's, two months at Othniel Brainard's, two months at Sergt. Jonas Weed's, two months at Enoch Palmer's, and two months at Zebina Smith's; and other regulations were adopted for a general diffusion of legal knowledge. An application to the Assembly was voted for a land tax, "to better enable us to pay for the parsonage lot, and to build a meeting-house;" and then a vote was passed "that we will build a meeting-house if we can be agreed on a place."

In August, 1791, Rev. Ezra Woodworth preached in the society as a candidate, and a sharp negotiation soon followed with reference to his settlement. No little diplomatic skill was found requisite to adjust the terms. Mr. Woodworth wanted an absolute conveyance to himself of the parsonage lot as a part of the bargain. A large portion of the society, on the other hand, were strenuously opposed to alienating the property to a minister, whose long stay with them would be very precarious. The minister carried his point, and on the 7th of November the society decided to make the conveyance, in accordance with his demand, and the compact was completed. On the 15th of December a committee was chosen to proceed with the ordination, and the 18th of January, 1792, was assigned for the ill-omened ceremony.

In the mean time, deep trouble in regard to the hard bargain of Mr. Woodworth with the society was daily becoming more manifest. Six days before the ordination a meeting was called, and a committee appointed "to go and see if Mr. Woodworth will make any alterations as to his settlement or not," and another committee was appointed "to appear before the ordaining council, and oppose the opposition, if any there be, against his ordination." Four days after, another meeting was called "to see if the society will make any alterations as to giving our society farm as a settlement to Mr. Woodworth," and a committee of six was appointed to converse with him, and agree on some different plan of settlement.

The interview resulted in the following change of terms, committed to writing:

"Whereas, there is a dissatisfaction in some persons' minds in the proposals made to Mr. Woodworth in respect to his settlement, and in order to form a better union, propose to exchange the terms of the same, as follows, viz.: to except of the yuse of said farm as a parsonage with the house and barn, said farm to be appraised by indifferent men when he receives the same, and also when he resigns the same, and the betterments, if any there be, to be allowed to him or his heirs, and the property to be kept good, to be as a settlement in the room of receiving the property of said farm as in the former plan; the vallew of said former proposals of settlement being made equal thereto, to be determined by the judgment of indifferent men, to be paid in neat cattle in the spring, or fat cattle in the fall, as agreed on, and the salary to remain as in the former proposals.

"EZRA WOODWORTH,
"NATH. CROWE,
"ELKENA PHELPS.
"WILLIAM MOORE.

"Dated Winsted, January 16, 1792."

This agreement removed all hindrance to the ordination, which took place on the day appointed. Had the agreement been adhered to in good faith, it is more than probable that harmony would have been restored, and that the faithful ministrations of a pastor valuing the souls of his flock more than their fleeces would have strengthened the walls and enlarged the borders of this feeble Zion.

Mr. Woodworth, now invested with the pastoral office, had a field for eminent usefulness. An inviolate adherence to the terms of adjustment effected two days before his ordination was a dictate alike of policy and duty; but he and his adherents seem to have thought otherwise. A meeting of the society was called, April 6, 1792, which voted to reconsider the prior vote of January 16th, by which the tenure of the society parsonage lot was changed, and that Mr. Woodworth should be put into possession of the same, according to the terms first agreed on.

The society, though hitherto divided as to the location of their meeting-house, seems to have acted harmoniously in other matters; and nearly all were of the standing order; but this breach of faith on the part of the minister and his adherents produced irremediable discord. Certificates of withdrawal began to be handed in by seceding members, most of whom connected themselves with the infant Methodist and Baptist churches in the vicinity. Endeavors were made to recall members already withdrawn, and to prevent others from withdrawing, by an offer of the minister to relinquish a portion of his salary for the five coming years, but without avail. Secession went on until many of the best and ablest members of the church and society had identified themselves with other denominations.

Notwithstanding this debilitated and distracted condition of the society, the adhering members resumed the project of locating and building a meeting-house, as the only means of sustaining their position. They voted, Sept. 14, 1792, not to build at the stake established by law, wherever that might have been, and "to see if the sosiaty will Be willing to Bild a meeting-house at the senter of the land of the sosiaty, allowing those things that ought to be considered to draw from the same its due and proper weight;" then followed a vote to build on "a certain nole of land at the west end of Mr. Woodworth's land, as near the town line as the ground will admit of;" and then a committee of nine men was appointed to pitch a stake and apply to the Assembly to establish the same. The committee thus appointed reported to an adjourned meeting, October 2d, as follows:

"To the Inhabitants of the Society of Winsted, convened at the usual place by us the 2d day of October, 1792:

"Whereas, we, the subscribers, being appointed a Com. at the last special meting to fix a Stake on a Sertain Spot of Ground near the town-line, so-called, on the Rev. Mr. Woodworth's lot, at the most convenient spot to erect a meating-house for the inhabitants of said society near the town-line, in consequence of our appointment, we, on the above said 2d day of October, repaired to said place, and after taking into the moste mature and Deliberate consideration all those matters and circumstances that ought to be considered according to the best information gained and our ability, we are of opinion that the Sartain spot of ground is situated near the heighth of said nole upon said lot, or near the south end to Beach Stake and Stones cast up, to be the most convenient and commodious place for the same, and have fix the above said stake and stones, and marked the same on the particular spot of ground which we have established for said purpose, the day and date above certifyed by us, the day and date above."

This lucid report was, by vote, "excepted," and measures were taken to get the place established by the Assembly. Measures were also taken to ascertain the size and length of timber required, and to see how cheap they could get some man to build the house, and a tax of a shilling on the pound was laid.

The beech stake, now planted, marked, reported, and accepted, was destined to stand. A day was fixed for the people to meet for the purpose of finding stone and laying the under-pinning. It was also voted that the people will find cake and cheese by free donation for refreshment at raising the meeting-house.

At this stage of the proceedings another attempt was made to conciliate "those of the society that think themselves agreaved as to giving away the society's farm," etc., by submitting the matters of grievance to arbitration; but no conclusion was reached. The meeting-house was raised, covered in, and floored in season for the annual meeting, Nov. 25, 1793. It stood on the south border of a grove near the east-and-west road, between the late residence of Harris Brown, deceased, and the old country road. It was fifty feet long, forty feet broad, and two stories high, without tower or steeple, a very unpretending and short-lived sanctuary. No traces of it now remain except a large stone horse-block. It was sold and taken down when the present house of worship was first erected. Some of its timbers were worked into the original building of the East Village Hotel.

The doings of the society have now been brought down to 1793, a period of fifteen years. It took twelve years of controversy to locate a meeting-house, and it might have required a dozen years more had not the intervening contest about the settlement of a minister led to the withdrawal of some twenty members. The unfinished church opened its doors to a congregation small in numbers, disheartened by long dissensions, and unable to sustain the burdens they had assumed. The records of the following seven years indicate the quiet of exhaustion rather than the prevalence of Christian graces. Taxes were more easily laid than collected. New names from time to time appear on the records, but the accessions brought no element of strength to the society as then constituted and located, for the new-comers were mainly from the Still River valley, now filling up with settlers interested in a transfer of the meeting-house to their vicinity.

Patient endurance of the burden of supporting a grasping minister had its limit. At the annual meeting in 1797 it was voted "to choose a committee of five to treat with Rev. Mr. Woodworth, to see what measures can be come into on account of the burthen the society is under as to paying his salary, and whether he is willing for a dismission or not." This vote was followed by another in December following, "to choose a committee, with power to agree with Rev. Mr. Woodworth on his dismission, and that said committee allow no more than the society's former contracts." This committee arranged with the pastor that the existing connection should be dissolved at the expiration of the year, and that the society should pay and confirm all contracts with Mr. Woodworth, and what should be found due him to be paid or secured by notes of hand on demand. It was also voted to call a dismissing council on the 9th of January, 1798. The result of this council is not recorded, but the dismission took place at or near the date specified. Mr. Woodworth was afterwards settled at Whitestown, near Utica, N. Y., for several years. His subsequent history is unknown.

In January, 1799, Rev. Salmon King, after preaching as a candidate for settlement, received a call, which he declined, and in October following a call was voted to Rev. Noah Simons, but was not accepted.

About this time Rev. Aaron Kinney was employed, and continued to supply the pulpit for four or five years.

Hitherto the old North road had been the great thoroughfare of travel for the adjoining region, and a large portion of our inhabitants had settled along its borders, on Wallen's Hill, and northwestward to Colebrook line, and the location of the meeting-house best suited their convenience. But near the close of the century the water-power of the Still River and Mad River valleys began to attract manufacturers to those secluded and comparatively inaccessible regions. The Green Woods turnpike, a shorter and far more level line of travel than the old road over the hills, was opened in 1799. It at once diverted all the long travel from the hill road, and opened a direct access to the valleys. Hamlets grew up around the Doolittle and Austin mills. The Wallen's Hill meeting-house ceased to be central, and it became apparent that the young and energetic new-comers of the valleys were soon to assume the lead, and take the direction of society affairs out of the hands of the dispirited and exhausted champions on the old country road.

In July, 1799, a vote was carried for building a new meeting-house by subscription, in one year from the 1st of October then next, where Capt. Charles Wright and others had that day pitched a stake, and on the 7th of October following, Col. Hezekiah Hopkins, of Harwinton, Esq. Elisha Smith, of Torrington, and Maj. Jeremiah Phelps, of Norfolk, were appointed to advise as to the location, and at the annual meeting following it was decided to build the house where this committee had put a stake and stones, if the County Court should establish the same.

These brief votes embrace all the preparatory measures recorded in reference to building the present house of worship in the East village of Winsted, and the evirtual extinction of the ancient régime on Wallen's Hill. New men, not identified with old controversies, took the lead, and effected an entire renovation of the society.

The new meeting-house was raised, covered in, and floored in 1800, and in this condition was used for worship until its final completion in 1805. The funds originally subscribed and contributed not being adequate for its completion, application was made to the Legislature for a lottery in aid of the enterprise. There were at the same time two other like applications from the societies of Preston, in New London County, and Canterbury, in Windham County, and a joint lottery was granted to the three societies. They were jointly represented in the management of this gambling scheme, and the details were so arranged that the two drawings were allowed by the Winsted society to be made in Preston and Canterbury, in consideration of some equivalent advantages conceded to Winsted. As a result of these arrangements, the two eastern societies failed to realize any profit, while Winsted secured about six hundred dollars. With this sum, and additional subscriptions, the interior of the house was finished and the building painted in 1805.

The pulpit of the new meeting-house was first supplied by Rev. Aaron Kinney, who had been for a few years previous the minister in charge at the first meeting-house on Wallen's Hill. He continued his labors two or three years, and then removed to Alford, Berkshire Co., Mass. Several candidates were then successively employed for brief periods, the last of whom was Rev. James Beach, who received a pastoral call, and was ordained on the 1st day of January, 1806, with a salary of three hundred and fifty dollars a year, and an advance of funds to purchase a dwelling, repayable in installments from year to year. His pastorate continued until his dismission, in 1842.

Mr. Beach was succeeded by Rev. Timothy M. Dwight, who, after supplying the pulpit until February, 1844, received a call for settlement, which he declined; soon after which Rev. Augustus Pomeroy, after supplying the pulpit for two or three months, received a nearly unanimous call to the pastorate, and was presented to the consociation for approval and installation in June following. After a long and searching examination on the question of approval, it was found that there was a majority of one in the united body sustaining his examination; but on analyzing the vote it appeared that there was a majority of two of the lay delegates sustaining, and a majority of one of the clerical members of the body non-sustaining, the examination. By one of the rules of the body, in case of non-concurrence of either the clerical or lay delegates,—although there should be a majority of the whole,—in case of a call for the application of this rule, the candidate should be rejected. The call was made by a lay member, and the synodal body refused to install the candidate.

Mr. Pomeroy continued to supply the pulpit for about a year after this result, near the end of which the church dissolved its connection with the consociation, and the call for his settlement was renewed on the 19th of November, 1844, but the majority in his favor being essentially reduced, he declined acceptance, and withdrew to another field of labor. We state the facts of this case in the briefest possible form, without note or commentary, save that the grounds of objection to Mr. Pomeroy were doctrinal rather than personal, and that his Christian character was unquestioned.

After Mr. Pomeroy several other candidates filled the pulpit, the most prominent of whom, and the longest incumbent, was Rev. John D. Baldwin, afterwards member of Congress from the Worcester district, Massachusetts. After his departure, Rev. Ira Pettibone, from York Mills, N. Y., was employed, called, and settled early in 1846. He continued his pastorate until measures were taken for the formation of a second Congregational church in the West village, when he resigned, and engaged in teaching at Cornwall. His resignation was not occasioned by discontent or dissension in the congregation.

In 1853 fifty-one members of the church, residing in the West village, were regularly dismissed in order to form themselves into a new church. They were immediately thereafter organized as "The Second Congregational Church of Winsted."

In February, 1854, Rev. Henry A. Russell, a graduate of Yale Theological Seminary, was called and ordained to the pastorate of the First Church, and continued his ministrations until his resignation and dismissal, Aug. 25, 1858.

On the 30th December, 1859, Rev. James B. Pierson was called; and the call was unanimously renewed in May, 1860, and he was ordained November 14th following. His ministrations continued until his dismission in March, 1862.

Rev. M. McG. Dana, now pastor of the First Congregational Church, Norwich, supplied the pulpit from May 11, 1862, until Dec. 25, 1864; and during the intermediate time a call for settlement was tendered him, which he declined.

In January, 1867, a call to the pastorate was tendered Rev. —— Walker, and accepted by him, but was not consummated by installation. He supplied the pulpit until April, 1869. Rev. H. E. Cooley afterwards supplied the pulpit for one year, ending Sept. 1, 1870.

On the 15th of October, 1870, Rev. Thomas M. Miles was called, and on the 10th of November following was installed as pastor. He was dismissed in 1879, and was succeeded by the present pastor, Rev. Timothy J. Lee. The present deacons are David Strong and Hubert P. Wetmore.

SECOND CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

This church was organized Jan. 18, 1854, with the following members: James R. Alvord, Elliot and Delia (Rockwell) Beardsley, Lyman and Rebecca C. (Mather) Baldwin, John and Jerusha (Rockwell) Boyd, Ellen W. Boyd, Susan M. (Ashley) Birdsall, Desire (Knapp) Camp, Miranda N. (Goodwin) Camp, James and Eliza A. (Wright) Cone, John and Harriet A. (Watson) Cone, Willard and Miranda (Frisbie) Holmes, Betsey (Shepard) Hinsdale, Mary P. Hinsdale, Julia (Whittlesey) Holly, Timothy and Ruth L. (Kelly) Hulbert, John and Amanda M. (Alvord) Hinsdale, William F. and Emeline (Baldwin) Hatch, Sally (Palmer) Jaqua, Silas C. and Maria Johnson, Miranda (Hoskins) Loomis, Sarah A. Loomis, Phelps H. Parsons, Elizur B. and Mary A. (Catlin) Parsons, William S. and Ellen A. (Griswold) Phillips, Lucy S. (Jaqua) Roberts, James and Lavina M. (Hubbard) Welch, Joel J. and Laura E. (Walter) Wilcox, Sophia (Goodwin) Westlake, Reuben and Nancy (Wheeler) Baldwin, Mary M. Holmes, Martha E. Beardsley, Clarissa (Treat) Rockwell, Harriet A. (Burt) Rockwell, Elizabeth H. Rockwell, Mary (Beach) Camp, Climena (Foskett) Gaston, Lucy A. (Jennings) Wilkins, Jerusha T. (Bonfoey) Jaqua, Jennison J. and Sarah J. (Spaulding) Whiting, Judson Wadsworth.

Until the completion of the church edifice service was held in Camp's Hall, a period of three years and eight months. On the 10th of March, 1856, the society's committee were authorized to purchase a site, and Thomas Watson, John Boyd, and Moses Camp were appointed building committee. The house was dedicated Sept. 16, 1857, free from debt.

In July, 1859, Elliot Beardsley, Thomas Watson, John T. Rockwell, and Samuel L. Andrus were chosen a committee, and instructed to proceed, as soon as possible, to erect a building suitable for a lecture-room. It was raised and covered during the autumn and completed the following year (being furnished by the ladies), at a cost of two thousand dollars.

Nov. 15, 1859, the bell, weighing two thousand one hundred and ninety pounds, and costing seven hundred dollars, was put in position. On the morning of Feb. 10, 1860, by a severe gale, the spire was blown over, carrying the bell with it, and one-third of the roof was crushed in by its fall. Nearly a year was occupied in making repairs and in building the present spire, at a total cost of about three thousand dollars. The chuch was re-entered for worship Jan. 6, 1861.

In July, 1864, Edward R. Beardsley, on behalf of numerous subscribers, reported that two thousand dollars had been raised to purchase an organ, and asked permission of the society to place it in the gallery. It was dedicated on the first Sabbath of January, 1865. The parsonage was purchased May 23, 1864, for two thousand five hundred dollars.

March 10, 1873, the society voted to make extensive repairs upon the church, chapel, and parsonage, resulting in the frescoes and carpet of the former and the comfortable and enlarged accommodations of the latter, at a cost of about four thousand dollars. The whole expense, thus far, of the lots, buildings, and improvements, is not far from thirty thousand dollars.

Deacons.—Jan. 26, 1854, Elliot Beardsley and John Hinsdale were chosen deacons. The former served until his resignation, March 20, 1856, and on the 3d of April following Thomas Watson was elected, and held the office until Dec. 31, 1874. Dec. 6, 1869, Everett C. Holmes and Aaron T. Case were chosen. Dec. 31, 1874, George M. Carrington was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Watson.

Pastors.—The first pastor, Rev. Charles H. A. Bulkley, was installed on Tuesday, Dec. 6, 1854. After a pastorate of four years and four months he was dismissed, April 5, 1859.

An interval of two years occurred, after which the second pastor, Rev. Hiram Eddy, was installed, on Wednesday, Jan. 9, 1861. In June, 1861, he was granted leave of absence for two months to accept the Governor's appointment of chaplain in the Second Connecticut Volunteers. He was taken prisoner at Bull Run, suffered severely in rebel prisons at Richmond and elsewhere for more than a year, and at length returned to his pulpit, which had been supplied in his absence by the society and neighboring ministers for the benefit of his family. His pastorate of four years and eight months was closed by his dismission, Oct. 16, 1865. Eight months later the third pastor, Rev. Charles Wetherby, was installed, on the 14th of June, 1866. After a pastorate of five years and four months he was dismissed, Oct. 18, 1871. For a year and four months following the church was served by Rev. M. B. Angier and others, until the installation of the fourth pastor, Rev. L. H. Hallock, Feb. 13, 1873.

The offerings of the church for benevolent objects, during the twenty-one years of its existence, amount to about thirty thousand dollars.

The present officers, Dec. 31, 1880, are as follows: Pastor, Rev. L. H. Hallock, installed Feb. 13, 1873; Deacons, Everett C. Holmes, George M. Carrington, John Hinsdale, Samuel B. Forbes; Secretary and Treasurer, John Hinsdale.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.*

It is now nearly one hundred years since the first Methodist preachers entered Litchfield County. Litchfield circuit, which embraced a wide extent of territory, first appears in the Conference Minutes in the year 1790. The eloquent Freeborn Garretson was the presiding elder, and the preachers of the circuit were Samuel Wigton and Henry Cristie. The first preaching by Methodist preachers in the Winsted valley was probably a few years earlier than 1790, and as no private houses in those days were opened for the itinerants, it is likely that here, as elsewhere in New England, the first sermon was preached in the open air. But the seed thus sown bore abundant fruit, and a Methodist Church was organized, and was in active operation several years before the existence of any other church organization in Winsted. In those days the country round about was a wilderness, and the manufacturing wealth of Winsted only included two saw-mills, a forge, a grist-mill, and a factory for turning wooden dishes and bowls. The first store-keeper was Elisha Lewis, and the first hotel was built by a Mr. Wheeler, and kept by him till the year 1800.

The first meetings of the Methodists were held in private houses of the members; then the red school-house on Spencer Street was employed, and in 1807 a lot near the school-house was purchased from Merit Bull, on which was erected the first Methodist church in Winsted. The edifice was raised and completed under the direction of Col. Samuel Hoadley as chief builder. That first church, the scene of many spiritual triumphs and a Bethel to many noble men and women, was found sufficient for the wants of the community till 1834, when it was outgrown by the steadily-increasing society, and the present large and commodious church was built on Main Street.

In the early days Methodism was an unwelcome intruder among the pastures of Congregational orthodoxy in New England, and Litchfield County was not an exception. The following extract, taken from the church records of the Winsted Methodist Church, not only throws light on the spirit of those times, but also refers to the early connection of the celebrated Coe family with Methodism: "The first Methodist meetings were held in private houses, and were largely attended by young people, often to the grief and scandal of their parents. Jehiel Coe, now in his seventieth year, relates that at one of those meetings Jonathan Coe, Jr., was happily converted, but his good mother was offended at his joining the Methodists. For her sake, and that the family might be able to hear and judge for themselves, it was planned that the next Methodist service should be held in the house of the young convert. At the meeting Jonathan's grandfather, both aged and blind, sat as a worshiper and listened to the sermon. At the close of the sermon the old man rose and said, 'This is a man of God.' The mother was soon after converted and joined her son, and she was followed by other members of the family. The Coe house from that time became the home of the itinerants, and the family in its rapidly-multiplying branches became firm and active supporters of the rising Methodist Church."

* Contributed by Rev. J. Pullman.

The Winsted Methodist Church has had the services of many of the most eminent preachers of its denomination, among whom the following may be mentioned: Jesse Lee, Freeborn Garretson, Daniel Ostrander, and Nathan Bangs as presiding elders, and Aaron Hunt, Laban Plark, Charles Sherman, Daniel Smith, Davis W. Clark, Seymour London, and Ebenezer Washburn as pastors.

The present condition of the church is one of prosperity. There are two hundred and fifty members and a flourishing Sunday-school, of which Charles J. York is superintendent. The parsonage is a commodious and elegant home for its pastors. The church also has a fund which aids in meeting current expenses.

Among the prominent members of the church at present are Edward Manchester, C. J. York, L. C. Colt, C. S. Foster, Lucius Griswold, S. A. Granger, A. H. Snow, P. G. Sheldon, Eugene Potter, George White, and J. E. Dean. Rev. Joseph Pullman is the pastor.

ST. JAMES' CHURCH.

The first stated worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Winsted was begun in 1847, by Rev. H. Frisbie, and some funds were then raised for a church edifice. During the following year arrangements were made for building a church, and a location was agreed on. The present Episcopal church was soon after contracted for, and was completed in October, 1848; and on the 27th day of that month the parish of St. James was legally organized by choice of Rev. Jonathan Coe, Jr., rector; James R. Coe and Uriel Spencer, Jr., wardens; and Dr. John L. Wakefield, Hon. William S. Holabird, and Alexander Durgin, vestrymen. The church was consecrated the same autumn. Rev. Jonathan Coe, Jr., was succeeded in 1854 by Rev. James W. Coe, who officiated for one year. In 1856, Rev. James R. Coe, brother of the first rector, was chosen rector, and officiated as such until 1860, when he was succeeded by Rev. David H. Short, who remained about two years, after which the parish was for some time supplied by Rev. J. D. Berry, D.D., of Litchfield. In 1866, Rev. William H. Williams was chosen rector and served two years; and was succeeded by Rev. William H. Lewis, Jr., who remained until May, 1870, when Rev. D. P. Sanford took charge of the parish. The present rector is Rev. G. M. Stanley.

ST. JOSEPH'S CHURCH.

Boyd, in his "Annals of Winchester," states that Roman Catholic worship was instituted in Winsted in 1851 by Rev. James Lynch, who resided at Birmingham, in New Haven County, and occasionally visited Winsted. Mass was celebrated in the schoolhouse of the west district. Such was the inaugural step of what is now an extensive observation of Catholic rites over a large portion of Litchfield County, with Winsted as a centre. In 1852 land for the site of a church was secured (the spot now occupied by St. Joseph's Church), the most prominent site in the borough of Winsted (eastern portion). In the same year (1852) Rev. Thomas Quinn, a native of Nova Scotia, and then a recent graduate of the Roman Catholic theological seminary at Fordham, N. Y., entered upon pastoral duties at Winsted, and commenced the erection of St. Joseph's Church. Father Quinn was a man of fine gifts as a preacher and orator, and soon made himself felt in the community, and pushed on the work of church building rapidly, enlisting more or less aid from Protestant parties. Being appointed in 1853 to a more important field, he was succeeded in that year by Rev. Philip Guillick, a man of great resolution and of unusually fine talents as a persuasive preacher, who had already, through his remarkable successes, won the distinguishing sobriquet of "the great church-builder" among the priesthood far and wide. Father Guillick completed the building of the church under great difficulties, soliciting funds for it in various parts of the diocese of Hartford (which then included Connecticut and Rhode Island), and in New York.

Rev. Thomas Hendrickson, now bishop of Providence, succeeded Father Guillick in 1854, but was transferred in 1855 to Waterbury, whereupon Rev. Richard O'Gorman succeeded him in the pastorate of St. Joseph's. In 1856, Rev. Lawrence Mangan succeeded Father O'Gorman, and the former was succeeded in 1860 by Rev. Daniel Mullen, who on the breaking out of the war of the Rebellion was transferred to the chaplaincy of the Ninth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers. In 1861, Rev. Philip Riordan was appointed to the pastorate of the church, and remained in charge till 1864, when Rev. Father Leo da Saracena, of the order of St. Francis d'Assisi (and who had succeeded the Rev. Mullen as chaplain of the Ninth Regiment), was appointed to the pastorate by Bishop McFarland.

During the various pastorates above mentioned, the Catholics of the towns of Litchfield, Goshen, Torrington (Wolcottville), Norfolk, Colebrook's River, in Connecticut, and New Boston, Mass., had been more or less frequently, and finally regularly, served from St. Joseph's. On the advent of Father Leo a somewhat new order of things was established, and, while the towns mentioned continued to receive the same service from Winsted, St. Joseph's was still more thoroughly administered. Father Leo began at once to distinguish his administration by greater labors for his parish than had been bestowed upon it before. He purchased additional lands, adjoining the site of St. Joseph's, with buildings thereon, which were converted into a school-house and residence for the sisters of the third order of St. Francis, by whom a school was organized, a large number of children being in attendance. In 1866, after further purchase of land for his order, the erection of a large brick building was commenced for the St. Francis Literary and Theological Seminary, the church itself being conveyed to the order by Bishop McFarland in November, 1866. In the same year lands to the north of the church, known as "the Grove," a beautiful wooded spot, was purchased, in order to erect thereon the now comely and artistic brick structure known as the Convent of St. Margaret of Cortona, in which an academy for females is now conducted by the Franciscan sisters. The convent, monastery, and church occupy a commanding position, and are seen from all portions of the town. The Rev. Fathers now (1881) in charge of the theological seminary and the church are Very Rev. Father Leo da Saracena, late Provincial Superior of the Franciscan order in the United States, and President of St. Bonaventure's College, in Allegany, N. Y.; Rev. Father Edward Agoudi, O.S.F., of the Roman States, Italy; and the Rev. Bernadine McCabe, O.S.F.

Since the advent to Winsted of the Franciscan order of Friars, a handsome Gothic church has been erected and a fine cemetery laid out in Litchfield; in Goshen a new church has been built, and the church in Norfolk rebuilt and enlarged; in Wolcottville the church has been enlarged and a parochial residence bought, and a cemetery laid out; in the same a new parish established. The mission work at Colebrook and elsewhere is still vigorously prosecuted.

THE WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

is a praiseworthy organization of leading ladies of Winsted, devoted to the temperance cause. Its present officers are as follows: President, Mrs. S. B. Forbes; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. Henry Gay, Mrs. Abel Snow, Mrs. Clarke Strong; Secretary, Miss Mary L. Catlin; Treasurer, Mrs. M. A. Abbott.

CHAPTER XIX.

WINCHESTER (Continued).

Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Officers Elected—Documentary History—List of Senators—Representatives—Judges of Probate—Town Clerks—Selectmen—Military Record.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.

THE town of Winchester, consisting of the societies of Winchester* and Winsted, was incorporated in May, 1771, and July 22, 1771, the first town-meeting was held, when the following officers were elected: Warham Gibbs, moderator; Eliphaz Alvord, town clerk; Jonathan Alvord, Seth Hills, and Samuel Wetmore, Jr., townsmen; Robert Mackune, treasurer; Warham Gibbs, constable; Abram Filley, grand juryman; Oliver Coe, Noah Gleason, and David Goff, surveyors of highways; Josiah Averit and Joseph Hoskin, fence-viewers; Beriah Hills, David Austin, and Jonathan Coe, listers; Robert Mackune, leather-sealer; Adam Mott and Benoni Hills, tything-men.

"Voted, That David Austin's cow-yard be a pound for the present.
Voted, That a Maple-tree near the Meeting-House shall be a sign-post.
David Austin chosen Key-keeper."

Names of settlers not a few appear on the land records who, after a short buffeting with hardships and discouragements, retired from the forbidding field, and large numbers of others fled to the rich lands of Western New York as soon as they became accessible. Among those who participated in the organization of the town, as far as it is possible to ascertain, were the following: Jonathan Alvord, Eliphaz Alvord, David Austin, Josiah Avered, Benjamin Benedict, John Bradley, Oliver Coe, Jonathan Coe, Aaron Cook, Nathaniel Dutton, Abram Filley, Noah Gleason, Warham Gibbs, David Goff, Thomas Hosmer, Jr., Seth Hills, Beriah Hills, Benoni Hills, Joseph Hoskin, John Hill, Simeon Loomis, Robert McEwen, Adam Mott, Adam Mott, Jr., Ebenezer Preston, Enoch Palmer, Daniel Platt, Lemuel Stannard, Reuben Tucker, Samuel Wetmore, Jr., John Wright, Jr., Jesse Wilkinson, Lewis Wilkinson.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY.

In 1774, "It was put to vote whether Lent Mott should be an inhabitant of this town, and it was voted in the negative."

"It was put to vote whether Widow Sarah Preston should be an inhabitant of this town, and it was voted in the negative."

"It was put to vote whether Benjamin Preston should be an inhabitant of this town, and it was voted in the negative."

"Winchester, October 9th, 1786. This may certify that I have received from the Society's Committee in full all that was due me from the Society, from the beginning of the world to the year 1782.

"Witness my hand, JOSHUA KNAPP."

1791 TO 1801.

"Voted, That the selectmen be directed to take charge of Remembrance Filley, and conduct with him as they shall think most for his comfort, and will be least expensive to the town, whilst he remains in his present state of delirium, either to set him up at vendue to the person who will keep him the cheapest, or dispose of him in any other way which may appear to the selectmen more convenient, and for such time as they may think reasonable, and on the cost of the town."

* Winchester Society was incorporated in 1768, and Winsted Society in February, 1778.

The record then states that "Ensign Bronson bid off Remembrance Filley at eight shillings per week, for two weeks, and at ten shillings for two weeks after," and "Samuel Wetmore (second) bid him off to keep him two weeks, at ten shillings per week." In this case the step may have been necessary and justifiable, by reason of the want of lunatic asylums at that early day. Another vote of the same meeting shows that the auctioning of paupers had not yet been fully adopted. It was voted "That Daniel Loomis take the oversight of building the house of Benjamin Preston, and inspect the labor done, and the stuff provided for said house, and make return to the selectmen."

As a specimen of the economical spirit of the town we extract the following:

"Voted, To sell the two Congress Laws and Kirby's Reports. Ensign Coe bid off one Congress Law, at ten shillings. Samuel Wetmore (second) bid off second Congress Law, at six and ninepence. Hewitt Hills bid off Kirby's Reports, at thirteen shillings."

"Voted, That not any person whatever, who shall do any service for the town the present year, shall be allowed to receive any reward therefor until he shall exhibit his account before the next annual town-meeting, and have his account allowed by said meeting."

Another,

"To examine into the debts due to and from the town, and make out an exact statement of accounts respecting the town's debts and credits, and lay the same before the next town-meeting."

The society this year voted a tax of threepence on the pound, to enable the meeting-house committee to procure glass and nails; to be paid in beef, cattle, or pork, or flaxseed, or one-quarter of it in butter or cheese, at the current market price, or in cash at a deduction of ten per cent.

The tax-list shows that there were four licensed taverns in the town in 1795, to wit: Samuel Hurlbut, in the house that stood at the Centre, on the site now occupied by the house of Samuel Hurlbut; John Miner, in the house, between Winsted and Winchester, lately owned by Mrs. Almira Coe; Zerah Doolittle, in the old Pease house, that stood where North Main Street now runs, nearly in front of the house of Isaac B. Woodruff, in Winsted; and Freedom Wright, in the Kelsey house, lately burned down, near the small pond on the old North country road.

The assessments of trades and professions this year (1797) were: Josiah Everitt and Joseph B. Elmore, physicians; Fyler & Marshall and Holmes & Riley, traders; Samuel Hurlbut, tavern-keeper; Lloyd Andrews and John McAlpine, joiners; Roger Barber, blacksmith; Amasa Wade and Daniel Wells, tanners and shoemakers,—in old society. Isaac Wheeler and Freedom Wright, taverners; Hine Clemmons and Wait Hills, blacksmiths; Jenkins & Loyd, scythemakers; Asher Loomis, tanner, John Sweet and Chauncey Mills, millers,—in Winsted.

"Voted, That every goose found in the highway, if any person shall take up such goose and drive the same to the owner, or to pound, shall be entitled to receive two cents for each goose or gander."

"Voted, That none that shall do business for the town, in the town the year ensuing, shall have any wages therefor, except one meal of victuals a day."

SENATORS.

Elliot Beardsley, 1853; James Beebe, 1836–37; John Boyd, 1854; Lucius Clarke, 1846; Samuel W. Coe, 1850; George Dudley, 1863; Gideon Hall, Jr., 1847; Harry B. Steele.

REPRESENTATIVES.*

Name.	First.	Last.	No.
Adams, Matthew	1818	1831	5
Adams, Normand	1851		1
Alvord, Charles	1861		1
Alvord, Eliphaz	1787	1811	11
Andrews, Daniel	1833		1
Andrews, Harvey	1858		1
Batcheller, Wheelock F	1880
Beardsley, Elliot	1863		1
Beebe, James	1819	1826	3
Beecher, Rollin L	1846	1864	2
Benedict, Benjamin	1787	1817	7
Bidwell, John W	1855		1
Bird, David	1852		1
Birdsall, James	1859		1
Bills, Henry A	1874
Blake, Jonathan	1851		1
Boyd, James	1804	1819	5
Boyd, John	1830	1835	2
Bronson, Isaac	1823	1832	3
Bronson, Isaac A	1866		1
Bronson, Theron	1849		1
Bronson, William B	1857		1
Brownson, Ozias	1783	1784	3
Brown, Francis	1867		1
Bull, Merrit	1817	1817	2
Camp, John	1844		1
Camp, Moses	1865		1
Case, Lyman	1839		1
Chase, Dudley	1854		1
Clarke, Thomas M	1857		1
Cleveland, George B	1867		1
Cleveland, James C	1834		1
Coe, Jonathan, Jr	1822	1828	4
Coe, James R	1845		1
Coe, Norris	1838	1839	2
Coe, Roger	1814	1815	3
Coe, William G	1859	1865	2
Cummings, J. T	1809		1
Drake, Rufus	1836	1837	2
Dudley, George	1847		1
Dudley, George	1881
Dutton, Mortimer E	1875
Fanning, John J	1863		1
Ford, Nelson D	1878
Fyler, Florimond D	1872		1
Gaylord, Nathaniel B	1816	1818	2
Gay, Henry	1875
Gay, Henry	1876
Gay, Henry	1877
Gay, Henry	1879
Gilbert, Alvin	1851		1
Gilbert, William L	1848	1868	2
Gilman, Elias E	1866		1
Greer, Samuel	1876
Hall, Gideon, Jr	1838	1860	4
Hatch, Washington	1844		1
Higley, Horace	1799	1806	7
Hills, Huet	1792	1794	4
Hills, Seth	1781	1793	6
Hinsdale, Bissell	1815	1815	2
Hinsdale, Hosea	1824		1
Hinsdale, Theodore	1837		1
Hoadley, Samuel	1841		1
Holmes, Joseph	1808	1814	6
Hubbard, Stephen A	1855		1
Hurlbut, Samuel	1791	1810	17
Hurlbut, Samuel	1835		1
Hurlbut, Stephen	1856		1
Hunt, Orlow D	1873
Jenkins, Benjamin	1803	1804	2
Loomis, Oliver	1834		1
Marsh, Joseph M	1871		1
McCune, David	1791		1
McCune, Robert	1781	1797	9
Miller, Joseph	1829		1
Miner, Phineas	1809	1816	6
Moore, Ralph H	1871		1
Moore, R. H	1870
Munsill, Marcus	1847		1
Nash, Alva	1829	1830	2
Nellis, Edward A	1881
Pettibone, Ira W	1868		1
Phelps, Daniel	1818	1828	2
Phelps, Warren	1862		1
Platt, Sylvester	1860		1
Roberts, Harvey L	1871		1
Clarke, Thos M	1874
Rockwell, Alpha	1807		1

* Previous to the adoption of the constitution of 1818, two sessions of the Legislature were held in each year,—in May and October.

Name.	First.	Last.	No.
Rockwell, John T.	1869		1
Rockwell, Solomon	1820		1
Rowley, Artemas	1853		1
Russell, Giles	1810	1816	3
Russell, Nathaniel	1801		1
Sheldon, Philo G.	1850		1
Smith, Asahel	1827	1831	2
Smith, Elisha	1856		1
Smith, Heman	1795	1800	3
Smith, Zebina	1798	1802	2
Spencer, Grinnell	1824		1
Strong, David	1872		1
Steele, Harvey B.	1873
Steele, Harvey B.	1879
Taylor, George	1853		1
Thayer, Wheelock	1833		1
Tolles, Amos	1812	1812	2
Wakefield, Luman	1826	1827	2
Waters, Alexander	1878
Watson, Thomas	1864		1
Welch, James	1852		1
Wetmore, Abel S.	1848		1
Wetmore, John G.	1862		1
Wetmore, Seth	1799	1802	4
Wheelock, Daniel B.	1849		1
White, George	1861		1
Whiting, Riley	1818	1832	2
Wilder, Seth L.	1858		1
Wilson, Abijah	1798	1802	2
Woodruff, Frederick	1870		1
York, Chas. J.	1869		1
York, Chas. J.	1877
York, Chas. J.	1880

COLLEGE GRADUATES.

Rev. Noble Everett, Yale, 1795; Abel McEwen, D.D., Yale, 1804; George Baldwin, Yale, 1811; John Boyd, Yale, 1821; Theodore Hinsdale, Yale, 1821; Edward Rockwell, Yale, 1821; Rev. Samuel Rockwell, Yale, 1825; Ira W. Pettibone, Yale, 1854; Edward R. Beardsley, Yale, 1859; Rev. John B. Doolittle, Yale, 1863; Rev. John W. Alvord, Oberlin; Rev. Harmon E. Burr, Oberlin; Rev. Orrin W. White, Oberlin; Hiram Wilson, Wesleyan University; John C. Holabird, Wesleyan University; Rev. Jonathan Coe, Wesleyan University; Seth Church, Wesleyan University; Charles F. Wetmore, Trinity; James B. Wakefield, Trinity; Rev. Leumas H. Pease, Williams, 1835; Rev. Henry B. Blake, Williams, 1841; George M. Carrington, Williams, 1861; Benjamin W. Pettibone, Amherst, 1860.

MILITARY RECORD, 1861–65.

The first person who enlisted in this town under President Lincoln's first call for troops during the late Rebellion was Samuel B. Horne. This is also said to have been the first regular enlistment in the State of Connecticut. He served out his three months' term, and in October of the same year enlisted as a private in Company E, Eleventh Infantry Volunteers; was chosen a sergeant, and rose by promotion to first lieutenant and captain; was in twenty-five battles and skirmishes, and was three times wounded, and at the end of his three years' term served as provost-marshal of the Eighteenth Army Corps to the end of the war.

The following other Winchester recruits enrolled themselves in the squad that formed the nucleus of Infantry Company B, first organized in this town:

Abram G. Kellogg, Caleb P. Newman, Francis T Brown, Mason Atkins, Daniel Bellows, George Bellows. Jr., Henry Bradley, Frederick W. Daniels, Edward E. Day, Charles O. Dennen, Robert Dempsey, Fernando Gale, Westley Gale, Dennis Glynn, Charles Harris, Samuel B. Horne, George L. Leonard, James McCauley, Charles C. Potter, Charles Presber, Henry Roberts, William H. Strong, Joel G. Thorpe, Charles Vogel, Hubert A. Warner, and Henry Williams.

Two other squads of recruits having been now enrolled in New Hartford and Canton, together with six individuals from Norfolk, two from Barkhamsted, and one each from Colebrook, Salisbury, Woodbury, and Harwinton, they were all united with the Winchester squad as Company B of the Second Infantry, under Abram G. Kellogg, of Winchester, as captain, and Charles W. Morse and Charles Warren, of New Hartford and Canton, as lieutenants.

The spirit of enlistment had hardly been aroused when Company B was transferred to New Haven. Simultaneous with its departure, the enrollment of another company was called for and opened, and was filled with the élite of the young men of the town in a single week. The company was organized as Rifle Company E, Second Connecticut Infantry, with the following rank and file from Winchester:

Captain, Sherman T. Cooke; first lieutenant, Wheelock T. Batcheller; second lieutenant, Charles E. Palmer; first sergeant, Jeffrey Skinner; sergeants, James N. Coe, Charles L. Hosford, Lucien B. Wheelock; corporals, George L. Andrews, Alanson D. Bunnell, Edward Didsbury, Jacob T. Brown; musician, Hicks Seaman (?); privates, Antoine Albert, Hyppolite Bluet, Albert M. Beach, Edwin Beach, Ira C. Bailey, Decius C. Bancroft, Gustave Bernhardt, James M. Burton, Victor Claudet, Chauncey D. Cleveland, Daniel S. Coe, David W. Coe, William S. Cooper, Samuel A. Cooper, William Couch, Chauncey S. Crittenden, John M. Dennan, James Dennan, Edgar V. Doughty, Burton B. Evitts, Philip D. Fisk, Daniel Fitzpatrick, Salmon A. Granger, Leonard S. Harris, William F. Hatch, Jr., Nelson Hodges, William S. Holabird, Benjamin F. Hosford, George Hoskin, Orson Howard, James N. Latham, Frank B. Marsh, Lorenzo Martin, Alexander McGuire, Milton T. Moore, Augustus Nevins, Leander Packard, George W. Pendleton, Charles H. Pond, Frederick H. Presber, James Price, Hiram C. Roberts, William E. Snediker, Orlo S. Smith, Charles H. Stewart, Platner S. Sweet, George M. Van Oustrom, Herbert L. Veber, Arthur Wadsworth, Joseph Watson, Thomas Welch, John P. Wilbur, Marcus J. Whitehead, John Wheeler, and James G. Woodruff.

Company E, on its departure for New Haven on the 25th of April, received an ovation in all respects similar to, but on a larger scale than, that given to Company B on the 21st. It was emphatically a town company, while Company B was a contribution of three towns. More than half of them were mechanics, about one-fourth were farmers, and the remainder, in about equal proportions, were clerks and laborers. Germany had six representatives, Ireland three, and England one. With the exception of Private James M. Burton, who died of diphtheria at New Haven hospital on the day after mustering in, not a death occurred in the company during its term of service.

A large portion of the officers and soldiers of these companies, from time to time, re-enlisted into other regiments, and were largely promoted to higher grades. Among them were the following:

George L. Andrews, corporal, Co. E, 2d Inf., to sergeant, Co. F, 28th Conn. Inf.

Mason Adkins, private, Co. B, 2d Inf., to first sergeant, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.

Antoine Albert, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to private and veteran, Co. G, 12th Inf.

Wheelock T. Batcheller, first lieutenant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to major, 28th Inf.

Jacob T. Brown, corporal, Co. E, 2d Inf., to corporal, Co. B, 12th Inf.; killed at Cedar Creek.

Francis T. Brown, sergeant, Co. B, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. E, 11th Inf.

Daniel Bellows, private, Co. B, 2d Inf., to corporal and veteran, Co. E, 7th Inf.

George Bellows, Jr., private, Co. B, 2d Inf., to private and veteran, Co. E, 7th Inf.; mortally wounded at Hampton, Va.

James N. Coe, sergeant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to first lieutenant, Co. I, and captain, Co. H, 2d Heavy Art.

Daniel S. Coe, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to second lieutenant, Co. E, 7th Inf.
David W. Coe, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., and detailed clerk to Gen. Tyler and Maj.-Gen. Keyes, U.S.A.; enl. on U. S. frigate "Sabine," and served as executive officer's clerk.
William S. Cooper, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to corporal, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.
Frederick W. Daniels, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to sergeant, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor, Va.
Robert Dempsey, private, Co. B, 2d Inf., to first lieutenant, Co. E, 7th Inf.; killed at Olustee, Fla.
Salmon A. Granger, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to first lieutenant, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.
Charles E. Hosford, sergeant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. D, 11th Inf.
Benjamin S. Hosford, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. D, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cedar Creek.
George Hoskins, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to private, Co. F, 28th Inf.
Orson Howard, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, 9th N. Y. Heavy Art.; killed at Petersburg, Va.
Samuel B. Horne, private, Co. B, 2d Infantry, to sergeant, lieutenant, and captain, Co. F, 11th Inf.
George L. Leonard, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.
Benjamin F. Marsh, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to corporal, Co. F, 28th Inf.; lost an arm at Port Hudson.
Milton T. Moore, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to sergeant, Co. F, 28th Inf.
Caleb P. Newman, first sergeant, Co. C, 2d Inf., to first lieutenant, Co. F, 28th Inf.
Frederick O. Peck, private, Co. D, 2d Inf., to private, 22d Mass. Inf.; twice wounded at Gaines' Mill, Va.
Charles E. Palmer, second lieutenant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. E, 7th Inf.; died at Hilton Head, S. C.
Leander Packard, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to private, Co. E, 11th Inf.
Hiram C. Roberts, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to sergeant, Co. E, 11th Inf.; killed at Sharpsburg, Md.
Henry L. Roberts, private, Co. B, 2d Inf., to sergeant, Co F, 28th Inf.
Jeffrey Skinner, first sergeant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; pro. to major and lieutenant-colonel, same regiment.
Orlo S. Smith, private, Co. E, 2d Inf., to first lieutenant, Co. I, 2d Heavy Art.
Lucien B. Wheelock, sergeant, Co. E, 2d Inf., to captain, Co. F, 28th Inf.
Marcus J. Whitehead, private, Co. E, 2d Infantry, to private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.
John Wheeler, private Co. E, 2d Infantry, to sergeant Co. F, first and second lieut. Co. G, 2d Heavy Art.

The first regiment of cavalry was originally a battalion consisting of four companies, recruited in the fall of 1861, and about a year after was increased to a full regiment of twelve companies. The following Winchester men are found on its rolls:

Company A, Frank Parkant and Geo. L. Leonard; Company D, Wm. C. Wakefield; Company E, James G. Ferris and Nelson Proper; Company F, Michael Finn and John Gloster; Company K, Burton B. Beach; Company M, John Rose.

Unassigned substitutes.—Wm. Chancey, Michael Calahan, James Flynn, James H. Gannon, Hugh Gray, Wm. Garson, Charles Hull, John Harris, Charles Earne, Richard Mooney, John Schmidt, Julius Thorne, Thomas Daley, Peter Dunn, James Taylor, and Augustus Weiss.

Of these, Julius Thorne alone died in the service.

The Fifth Regiment Infantry was organized in June, 1861, and went into service July 29 following; fought at Winchester, Cedar Mountain, and Chancellorsville, Va.; Gettysburg, Pa.; Resaca, Dallas, Marietta, Beach Tree Creek, and Atlanta, Ga.; Chesterfield Court-House, S. C.; and Silver Run, N. C.; and was mustered out with distinguished honor July 19, 1865. On the rolls of this regiment we find the following names of Winchester men:

Harlan P. Rugg, corporal in Co. I; wounded at Cedar Mountain; pro. to captain; must. out July 19, 1865.
Robert Arnold, killed at Cedar Mountain, Aug. 9, 1862.
Joseph Hermandy, must. out July 19, 1865.
William Murray, disch. Feb. 23, 1865.
Robert St. Clair, must. out July 19, 1865.

During the month of September, 1861, a quota of sixteen Winchester men and about twenty men from other towns in the county of Litchfield were recruited under the auspices of Second Lieut. Charles C. Palmer, late of Company E, and on the 7th of September, 1861, were mustered into Company E, Seventh Infantry, commanded successively by Col. Alfred H. Terry and Col. Joseph R. Hawley. Of this company Lieut. Palmer was appointed captain, and Robert Dempsey, late private of Company B, second lieutenant.

The Winchester men in this regiment were as follows:

Captain, Charles E. Palmer; first lieutenant, Robert Dempsey; second lieutenant, Daniel S. Coe; corporals, Daniel Bellows and John G. Rowley; privates, George E. Andrews, John Biederman, Albert Burdick, George W. Daniels, Charles Gilbert, Charles L. Hewitt, Sterling D. Milliman, James A. Pease, Patrick Quigley, Henry H. Rowley, James Tencellent, all of Company E.

Captain Palmer, an unassuming young man of delicate training, developed in his first campaign the highest soldierly qualities by strict and cheerful performance of duty, and kind attention to the wants and comforts of his men. But it was not until he came into command of Company E that his endurance and bravery were fully tested. In the siege and capture of Fort Pulaski he commanded Battery Lincoln; and in the report of the bloody battle of Secessionville he was highly complimented for bravery and coolness. Soon after this hard-fought but unsuccessful battle he died from exposure and exhaustion. From Colonel Terry's letter to his parents, now bereaved of their last child, we quote as follows:

"At the time of the action on James Island he was so ill that, under ordinary circumstances, he would not have been in command of his company; but prompted by the devotion to duty which always distinguished him, he led his company to the field, and gave to it and the regiment a splendid example of courage and firmness under most trying circumstances. The noble purity and uprightness of his nature and his eminently soldierly qualities had endeared him to us all, and had led us to look forward to a brilliant future for him; and we mourn his loss, not only as ours and yours, but as a loss to the country which he served so faithfully."

In answer to a letter to Gen. Hawley from Palmer Post inviting him to the decoration ceremonies at Winsted, dated May 11, 1872, he writes as follows:

"The name of your post awakens my recollections of that noble soldier and man, Capt. Palmer. Never shall I forget that it was his extreme fidelity to duty that cost him his life. He ought to have gone to the hospital, but would not leave the field. Well I remember his countenance as I walked by the stretcher that carried him dying on board the steamer."

Lieut. Dempsey was wounded in the shoulder June 1, 1862; returned home on furlough while disabled, rejoined his regiment in the fall, and was killed at Olustee, Fla., Feb. 24, 1864.

Private Charles Gilbert, noted on the muster-rolls as from Canton, had his home residence in Winchester, where he was born and raised. Conscientious as well as patriotic motives induced him to enlist. His brothers had families, and he was single, and he felt it his duty to represent them in the service. He was a most worthy man and a good soldier; was wounded in the head and leg at Secessionville, S. C., taken prisoner on the field, and carried to Charleston, where he died of his wounds in the hospital, July 9, 1862, aged twenty-nine. He was a son of Samuel D. Gilbert, deceased, late of Winchester.

Private George Bellows served in Company B, Second Infantry, and after honorable discharge at the end of the term, enlisted in Company E, Seventh Infantry, Sept. 7, 1861, re-enlisted a veteran, Dec. 22, 1863, and died of wounds received at Hampton, Va., Oct. 28, 1864. He was son of George Bellows, Sr., of Winchester, and died unmarried.

Private Albert Burdick, Company E, died of fever at Beaufort, S. C., July 29, 1862.

Private John Biederman, re-enlisted a veteran Dec. 22, 1863, and was killed Oct. 13, 1864.

All the other members of this company were honorably discharged or mustered out at the end of their terms.

In the Eighth Regiment, recruited at Camp Buckingham, Hartford, which fought at Newbern, N. C., Fort Macon, N. C., Antietam, Md., Fredericksburg, Fort Huger, Walthall Junction, Fort Darling, Petersburg, and Fort Harrison, Va., we find the names of two Winchester men,—Mathew Whifler, private, Company A, and John C. Cooley, corporal, Company C, re-enlisted veteran,—both mustered out at the end of their terms.

In the Ninth (Irish) Regiment we find the name of Chaplain Daniel Mullen, at the time of his appointment pastor of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Winsted, a young man of literary culture and earnest patriotism, who served at Baton Rouge and Chackaloo Station, La., and Deep Bottom, Va. He was compelled by ill health to resign on the 26th of August, 1862. He was succeeded as chaplain by Father Leo da Saracena, O.S.F., the present pastor of St. Joseph's Church, and President of St. Francis' Literary and Theological Seminary.

It is not to be inferred, from finding no other names of Winchester Irishmen on the rolls of this regiment, that the foreign citizens were wanting in patriotism, for the names of Winchester men in other regiments abundantly show that in proportion to our population Irishmen, Germans, and Englishmen are amply represented.

On the roll of the Tenth Regiment the only name of a Winchester man is that of Col. Ira W. Pettibone, who was commissioned as major; served in the battles of Roanoke Island and Newbern, N. C., and was successively promoted to lieutenant-colonel and colonel. The climate of North Carolina debilitated him to such a degree that he was compelled to resign, and he was honorably discharged in November, 1862.

The Twelfth Regiment of Volunteer Infantry was recruited at Camp Lyon, Hartford, under command of Col. Henry C. Deming; was attached to Butler's division, and sailed from New York for Ship Island, Mississippi Sound, Feb. 24, 1862. It followed the naval armament, under Farragut, up the Mississippi, and witnessed the bombardment of Forts Jackson and St. Philip; followed the armament up to New Orleans, where it landed and garrisoned the city on its forced surrender, Col. Deming assuming the office of provisional mayor. It was encamped for a time at Baton Rouge, and was afterwards engaged in active service in Louisiana. It bore a conspicuous part in the siege of Port Hudson, after which it returned to New Orleans, and in July, 1864, embarked for Fortress Monroe, and in August following joined Sheridan's army in the Shenandoah Valley, and participated in the battles of Opequan, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek, after which, it having been reduced to a skeleton by losses in battle and by disease, and by expiration of the term of service of a large portion of its men, it was reorganized under Lieut.-Col. Lewis, and continued to serve in Virginia until its muster out in August, 1865.

Only six Winchester men belonged to this regiment, as follows:

Dr. John B. Welch, second assistant surgeon, who died of scarlatina, on shipboard, at Ship Island, Feb. 13, 1862.

Dr. John R. Cumming, appointed second assistant surgeon in place of Assist. Surg. Welch, was promoted to surgeon, and was mustered out at Savannah, Ga., Aug. 12, 1865.

Private Solomon R. Hinsdale, Co. A, appointed quartermaster-sergeant; promoted to second lieutenant; resigned Aug. 9, 1862, on his appointment as assistant-paymaster in the navy, after which he served on the Mississippi flotilla above Vicksburg, until prostrated by fever, and compelled to resign by impaired health.

Sergt. Jacob T. Brown, Co. C, killed at Fisher's Hill, Va., Sept. 19, 1864. While giving water from his canteen to a wounded lieutenant of an Iowa regiment, on the battle-field, he was shot in the abdomen by a rebel sharpshooter, and died three hours after. He was a model of physical manhood; a kind-hearted, unassuming man, and a consistent member of the Methodist Church, esteemed by his comrades as a conscientious Christian soldier.

Private George W. Eggleston, Co. C, enlisted March 2, 1864, and was mustered out at Savannah, Aug. 12, 1865.

Private Wm. H. Pool, Co. C, enlisted Feb. 24, 1864; discharged at New Haven, April 29, 1865.

Private John W. Vaughn, Co. C, enlisted Feb. 24, 1864; mustered out at Savannah, Ga., Aug. 12, 1865.

Second Lieut. John W. Hurlbut, of Co. G, resigned June 6, 1862.

A squad of ten Winchester men composed a part of the rank and file of Company D, Eleventh Regiment Infantry, consisting of Charles L. Hosford, first lieutenant; Levi L. Dayton, corporal; privates, Frank S. Pease, Lewis Dayton, Edward S. Fleming, Charles Hull, George Kinney, Daniel Lotherington, William H. Slack, and Albert M. Tuttle.

Another squad of twelve men composed a part of Company E of the same regiment, consisting of Francis T. Brown, first sergeant; Samuel B. Horne and Hiram C. Roberts, sergeants; William T. Page, Jr., and John K. Twiss, corporals; privates, George Allen, William E. Cogswell, James Dudley, Erastus Eggleston and Rufus Eggleston (twins), Andrew M. Hurlbut, Leander Packard.

The following Winchester men of this regiment were killed or died in the service:

Private Lewis Dayton, Co. D; killed at Sharpsburg (Antietam), Md.

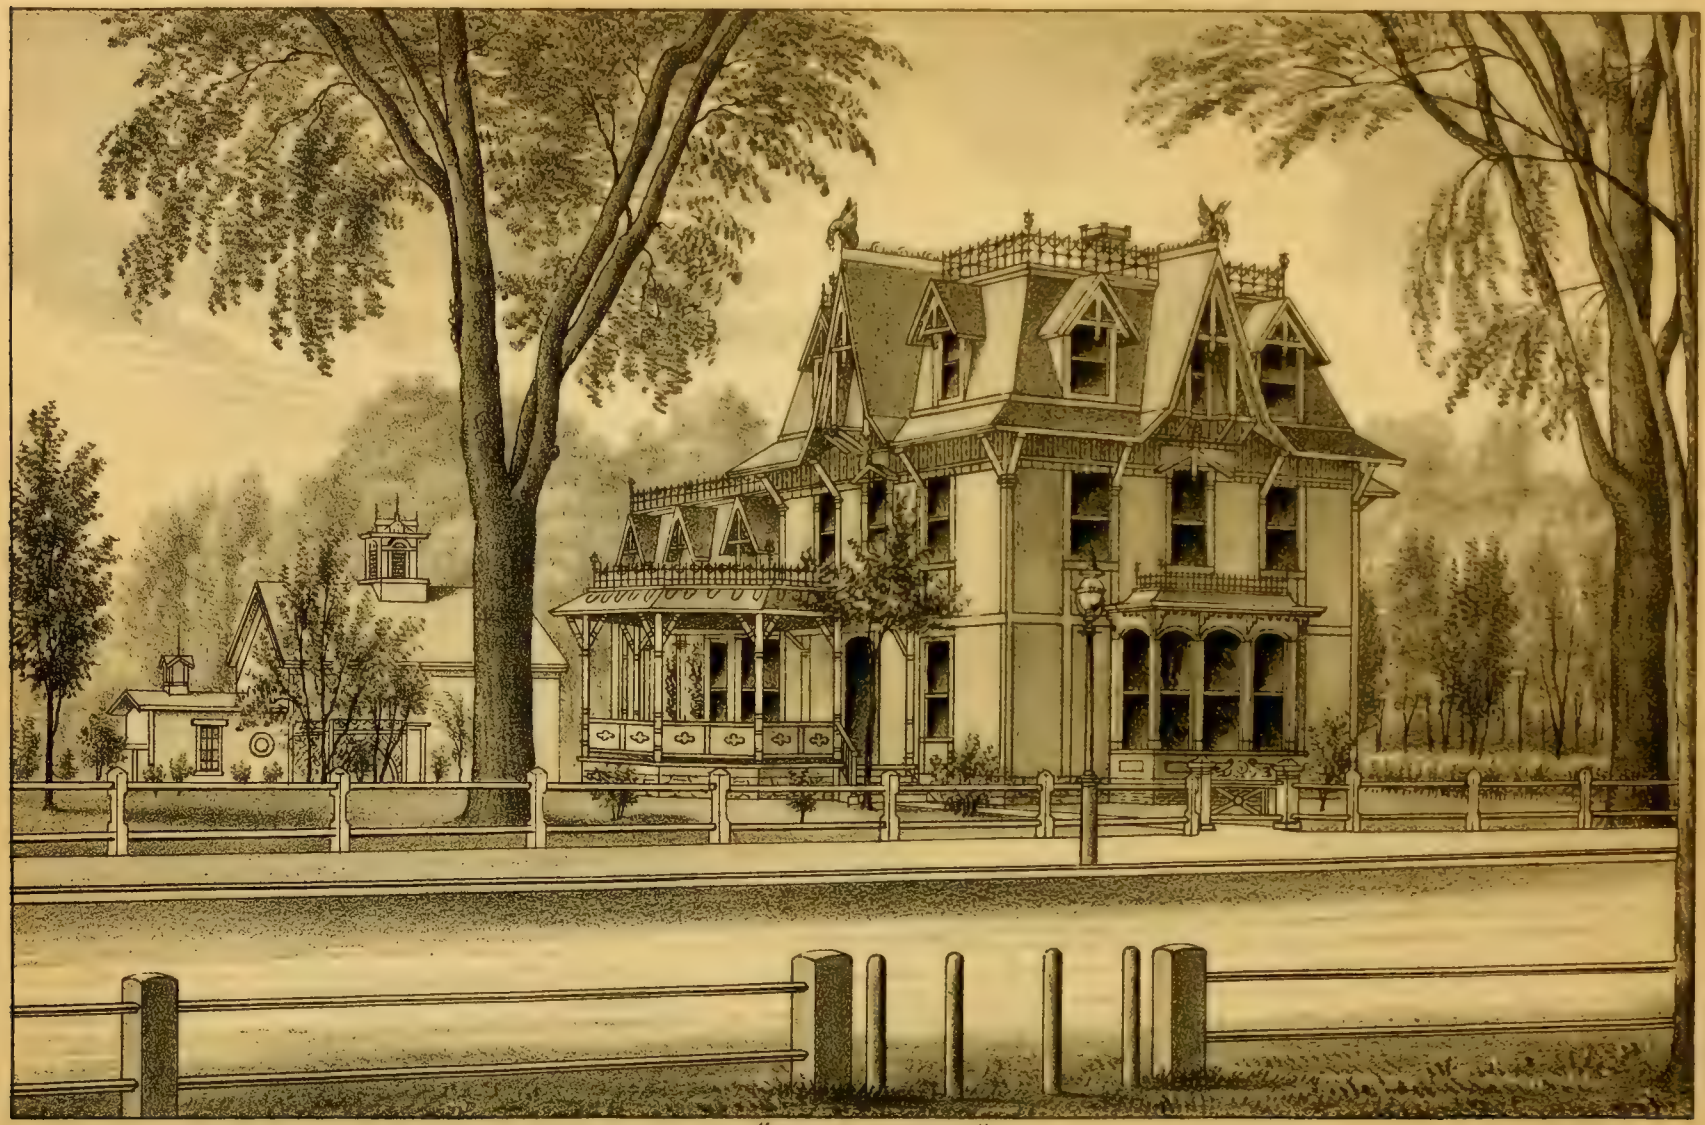
Private Wm. H. Slack, Co. D; died of wounds (loss of an arm) received at Newbern, March 22, 1862.

Private Albert M. Tuttle, Co. D; killed at Cold Harbor, Va., June 5, 1864.

Serg. Hiram C. Roberts, killed at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862.

Corp. William T. Page, Jr., wounded at Antietam, Sept. 17; disch. for disability Oct. 25, 1862.

Corp. John K. Twiss, Co. E; wounded and taken prisoner at Drury's Bluff; died of wounds at Richmond, May, 1864.



Private Wm. F. Cogswell, Co. E; killed at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862.

The promotions of Winchester men in this regiment were as follows:

Sergt. Francis T. Brown, Co. E, to captain.

Sergt. Samuel B. Horne, Co. E, to captain.

Lieut. Charles L. Hosford to captain, and in command as senior officer of the regiment at the termination of the battle of Antietam.

"PARK COTTAGE."

RESIDENCE OF GEORGE W. PHELPS, WINSTED CONN.

On the rolls of the Thirteenth Regiment, organized at New Haven, Nov. 25, 1861, which participated in the engagements of Georgia Landing, Irish Bend, Port Hudson, Cane River, and Mansara, in Louisiana, and Winchester, Fisher's Hill, and Cedar Creek, in Virginia, the names of four Winchester men are found, viz.:

Second Assist. Surg. Lucius W. Clark.
George Losaw, private, Co. D; re-enl. veteran; trans. to Co. B; must. out April 25, 1866.
Charles Daniels, private, Co. F; pro. to second lieutenant; res. Jan. 8, 1864.
Edward Skinner, private, Co. G; re-enl. veteran; trans. to Co. D; must. out April 25, 1866.

On the rolls of the Sixteenth Regiment is the name of Elliot Flemming, of Winchester, a private in Company G, killed at Antietam, Sept. 16, 1862.

The Nineteenth Infantry Regiment, afterwards reorganized as Second Regiment Heavy Artillery, was raised and organized as one of the five county regiments under the call of Lincoln, on the 1st of July, 1862, for three hundred thousand men.*

The names of Winchester men in this company originally enlisted, amounting to sixty-two, are as follows:

Captain, Jeffrey Skinner; first lieutenant, Benjamin F. Hosford; second lieutenant, Chester D. Cleveland (of Winsted Society); sergeants, Orlow J. Smith, Salmon A. Granger, George White, Henry Skinner, Wm. S. Cooper, Stephen W. Sage, Mason Adkins, Frederick W. Daniels, Charles A. Reynolds; musicians, Wilson B. White, Myron Ferris; wagoner, Alfred G. Bliss; privates, James R. Baldwin, Edward Beach, Patrick T. Birmingham, Almeron Bunnell, Edward F. Carrington, Philip D. Carroll, Frederick M. Cook, Alfred Comins, Robert A. Cutler, Henry A. Dayton, Adam I. N. Dilley, Edwin Downs, Lewis Downs, Bernard W. Doyle, Birdsey Gibbs, George N. Gibbs, James A. Green, Manwaring Green, William Hull, Luther W. Hart, Timothy A. Hart, Willard Hart, Geo. W. Hurlbut, William S. Hurlbut, William R. Hubbard, Asa Humiston, Alonzo J. Hull, Henry C. Kent, Walter Martin, Herman P. Moore, Henry Overton, Joseph Pettit, Charles Henry Pine, Jerome Preston, Theodore Robbins, Edmund B. Sage, William Seymour, Lucius S. Skinner, John Smith, Prosper W. Smith, Philip Stabell, Darwin S. Starks, John M. Teeter, Hubert A. Warner, Marcus A. Whitehead, Warren M. Wood, Julius Woodford, Wallace M. Woodruff.

To these were added, by subsequent enlistment, the following Winchester men who died in the service, or were honorably discharged or mustered out:

Ernest A. Basney, Robert J. Balcroft, Samuel U. Brew, Henry Clarke, Wells Clark, Benjamin G. Carman, David Durand, Jared P. Evarts, Mathew Fitzgerald, Patrick Keegan, Jacob Le Roy, Julius Rogers, Henry J. Reynolds, William H. Rowe, Edward Rugg, Edward E. Rowe, Philip Shelley, Henry Van Duesen, William Warner, Erastus Woodworth, Henry Wenzell.

The killed and mortally wounded were as follows:

At Cold Harbor: Col. Elisha S. Kellogg, Sergt. Frederick W. Daniels, Musician Myron Ferris, Privates James R. Baldwin,† Alfred Comins, Lewis Downs, Birdsey Gibbs, James A. Green, Willard Hart, Alonzo J. Hull, Henry C. Kent, Walter Martin, John M. Teeter, Jared P. Everts,—14 of Co. E; to these add Albert M. Tuttle, Co. D, Eleventh Regiment,—15.

At Cedar Creek: Capt. Benjamin F. Hosford, whose remains were brought home for interment.

The following members of the regiment were wounded, but not mortally, in the service:

At Cold Harbor: Privates Edward Beach, Philip D. Carrol, William Seymour, Marcus A. Whitehead, Ernest Busney, Samuel N. Brew, Jacob Le Roy, Julius Woodford, Henry Wenzell.

At Cedar Creek: Maj. Jeffrey Skinner, Corp. Wm. S. Cooper.

The following-named men (privates) died in the service:

Manwaring Green, Oct. 17, 1864, by railroad accident.
George W. Hurlbut, at Fort Worth, Va., March 27, 1863.
William S. Hurlbut, at regimental hospital, Oct. 25, 1863.
William R. Hubbard, at regimental hospital, Aug. 4, 1864.
Jerome Preston, at regimental hospital, Oct. 24, 1863.
Darwin S. Starks, at regimental hospital, Aug. 23, 1863.
Mathew Fitzgerald, prisoner of war at Salisbury, N. C., Jan. 6, 1865.
Julius Rogers, at regimental hospital, Sept. 21, 1864.
Edward E. Rowe, at Warren Station, Va., March 27, 1865.
Julius Woodford, at regimental hospital, Jan. 30, 1865.

The heroic Col. Elisha S. Kellogg, who commanded the regiment at Cold Harbor, and there fell at the head of his men, though a resident of Derby on entering the service, subsequently removed his family to the society of Winsted, and his remains lie buried in the South Cemetery under an appropriate monument.

The final contribution of Winchester men for the service was made to the Twenty-eighth Regiment of nine months' infantry, consisting of the major of the regiment, a captain, two lieutenants, and fifty-nine enlisted men. The regiment encamped at New Haven until Nov. 18, 1862, when it embarked for Pensacola, Fla., and there remained inactive until ordered to join Gen. Banks' army, and, after harassing marches in Louisiana, was actively engaged in the assault on Port Hudson, June 14, 1863, sustaining a loss of fifty-nine killed, wounded, and missing. The regiment was mustered out of service at New Haven, Conn., Aug. 28, 1863.

The names of the Winchester men in the regiment were:

Wheelock T. Batcheller, major; Lucien B. Wheelock, captain of Co. F; Caleb P. Newman, first lieutenant; Jabez Alvord, second lieutenant; sergeants, George L. Andrews, Silas H. McAlpine, Milton T. Moore, and Henry L. Roberts, corporals, B. Frank Marsh, Wm. A. Wadsworth, Wm Couch, Chas. H. Moore, and Joseph H. C Batchelder; privates, Columbus C. Wright, Saml. C. Barber, George Bulcroft, Chas. Baldwin, Edward Camsell, Henry P. Cook, Peter Coe, Jas. Dugan, Geo. N Dewey, Henry Detert, Cornelius Dayton, Chas. Decker, Lucius Eggleston, Geo. W. Elmore, Paul Forcier, Correll T. French, Edward Finn, Mathew M. Fitzgerald, Claudius W. S. Foster, John E. Garrett, Ward Grant, Saml. E. Griffin, Wm. Hague, Charles N. Hollister, George Hoskin, Edward B. Kinney, Ralph Lina, Charles Maddra, Harvey Moore, George R. Moore, Silas Moore, Elbert Manchester, Thomas Morris, James E. Maddra, James McDermott, William S. Pierce, George L. Pease, John Partridge, Elam E. Richardson, William H. Rowe, David R. Rankin, Stephen Scott, Frank S. Turner, Lyman Terrill, Cassius Watson, Howard S. Wheeler, William S. Woodford, Mark H. Wheeler, Henry C. White, and Michael Haggarty, of Company H.

* See Chapter V.

† Among the names on the foregoing list were James R. Baldwin and Henry C. Kent, who were in the assault at Cold Harbor, and were never seen afterwards. They were doubtless killed, and the remains buried during some of the following nights by fatigue-parties, who could carry no lights without drawing the fire of the rebel batteries in close vicinity of the battle-field. Private Baldwin was son of Mr. Ezra Baldwin, of Winsted; youthful and cheery, tenderly reared and religiously educated, beloved of his parents and comrades.

The following deaths occurred in the service:

Private Columbus C. Wright, died at Brashear City, La., May 23, 1863.
Private Samuel C. Barber, died on the Mississippi.
Private Charles Maddra, died at Great Barrington, Mass., Aug. 23, 1863.
Private Cassius Watson, died at Brashear City, La., May 23, 1863.
Private Mark H. Wheeler, killed at Port Hudson, La., June 14, 1863.
Private Howard S. Wheeler, died soon after reaching home, of disease contracted in the service.
Private Michael Haggarty, of Co. H, died of wounds received at Port Hudson, Aug. 12, 1863.

The following Winchester men served as officers of the First Regiment Louisiana Colored Engineers:

Willard S. Wetmore, first lieutenant and quartermaster.
Edward Hewitt, first lieutenant.

The following Winchester men served in the navy:

Marcus Baird, ensign and acting sailing-master, Gulf Squadron.
David W. Coe, executive officer's clerk, United States frigate "Sabine."
Solomon R. Hinsdale, assistant paymaster on the Mississippi flotilla, above Vicksburg.
Henry Overton, transferred from Second Heavy Artillery to the United States navy.
Ansel Rowley.

The following is a list of soldiers of the town who died in the service:

Robert Arnold, corporal, Co. I, 5th Inf.; killed at Cedar Mountain Aug. 9, 1862.
Jacob T. Brown, sergeant, Co. C, 12th Inf.; killed at Fisher's Hill Sept. 19, 1864.
James M. Burton, private, Co. E, 2d Inf.; died in hospital at New Haven May 13, 1861.
George Bellows, Jr., private, Co. E, 7th Inf.; mortally wounded at Hampton, Va., Oct. 19, 1864.
James R. Baldwin, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Samuel C. Barber, private, Co. F, 28th Inf.; died of fever on the Mississippi River.
Albert Burdick, private, Co. E, 7th Inf.; died at Beaufort, S. C., July 29, 1862.
John Biederman, private, Co. E, 7th Inf.; died Oct. 13, 1864.
Alfred Comins, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Wolcott Cook, private, Co. K, 2d Heavy Art.; died at City Point, Va., June 16, 1865.
William F. Cogswell, private, Co. E, 11th Inf.; killed at Sharpsburg, Md., Sept. 17, 1862.
Frederick W. Daniels, sergeant, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Robert Dempsey, lieutenant, Co. E, 7th Inf.; killed at Olustee, Fla., Feb. 20, 1865.
Lewis Downs, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
George C. Downs, private, Co. C, 13th Inf.; died on the Mississippi Sept. 13, 1863.
Lewis Dayton, private, Co. D, 11th Inf.; killed at Sharpsburg, Md., Sept. 17, 1862.
James Dolphin, private, Co. G, 14th Rhode Island Col. Art.; died at Plaquemine, La., Aug. 5, 1864.
Lucius B. Eggleston, private, Co. F, 28th Inf.; died at Memphis, Tenn.
Jared P. Evarts, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Myron Ferris, musician, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Elliott Fleming, private, Co. G, 16th Inf.; killed at Sharpsburg, Md., Sept. 16, 1862.
Mathew Fitzgerald, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; died a prisoner at Salisbury, N. C.
Birdsey Gibbs, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
James A. Green, quartermaster-sergeant, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; mortally wounded at Cold Harbor.
Manwaring Green, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed by railroad accident Oct. 17, 1864.
Charles Gilbert, private, Co. E, 7th Inf.; died of wounds in Charleston, S. C., July 9, 1862.
Benjamin F. Hosford, captain, Co. D, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cedar Creek Oct. 19, 1864.
Willard Hart, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
George W. Hurlbut, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; died at Alexandria, Va., March 27, 1863.
William S. Hurlbut, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; died at Fort Worth, Va., Oct. 25, 1863.
William R. Hubbard, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; died at Fort Worth Feb. 28, 1864.
Asa Humiston, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; mortally wounded at Opequan, Va., Sept. 19, 1864; died Sept. 21, 1864.
Alonzo J. Hull, private, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Lewis Hazzard, private, Co. G, 29th Col. Inf.; drowned at Plaquemine, La., Oct. 5, 1865.
Michael Haggarty, private, Co. H, 28th Inf.; mortally wounded at Port Hudson Aug. 12, 1863.
Davis Hart, private, Co. A, Mass. Inf.; killed at Fredericksburg, Va.
Henry C. Kent, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Walter Martin, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Charles E. Palmer, captain, Co. E, Seventh Inf.; died at James' Island, S. C., July 7, 1862.
Jerome Preston, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; died at Alexandria, Va., Oct. 24, 1863.
Hiram Roberts, private, Co. E, Eleventh Inf.; killed at Sharpsburg, Md., Sept 17, 1862.
Edward E. Rowe, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; died at Petersburg, Va., March, 1865.
Julius Rogers, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; died at Petersburg, Va., Sept. 21, 1864.
William H. Slack, private, Co. D, Eleventh Inf.; mortally wounded at Newbern, N. C., March 22, 1862.
Darwin S. Starks, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; died at Alexandria, Va., Aug. 23, 1863.
John M. Teeter, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; killed at Cold Harbor June 1, 1864.
Albert M. Tuttle, private, Co. D, Eleventh Inf.; killed at Cold Harbor June 3, 1864.
John K. Twiss, sergeant, Co. E, Eleventh Inf.; died at Richmond, Va., May 1, 1864.
Julius Thorne, private, Co. M, First Cav.; died at New Haven Dec. 14, 1864.
John B. Welch, assistant surgeon, Twelfth Inf.; died at Ship Island Feb. 13, 1862.
Howard S. Wheeler, private, Co. F, Twenty-eighth Inf.; died of scurvy at home after muster out.
Mark H. Wheeler, private, Co. F, Twenty-eighth Inf.; killed at Port Hudson, La., June 14, 1863.
Julius Woodford, private, Co. E, Second Heavy Art.; died at Alexandria, Va., Jan. 30, 1864.
William S. Watson, private, Co. K, Second Heavy Art.; died at Alexandria, Va., Aug. 28, 1863.
Columbus C. Wright, wagoner, Co. F, Twenty-eighth Inf.; died at Brashear City, La., May 23, 1863.
Cassius Watson, private, Co. F, Twenty-eighth Inf.; died at Brashear City, La., May 23, 1863.

From the foregoing data we gather, as the effective force of Winchester men, regularly mustered and engaged in the military and naval service, and honorably discharged therefrom, three hundred and fifty-two efficient men, thirty-four of whom re-enlisted for second terms of service early in the war, and twelve or more re-enlisted as veterans after three years of service. To these are to be added not less than seventy-five substitutes, purchased by the town authorities in the bounty-jumping shambles, who never resided in the town, and whose names it would be superfluous to give. Of this class full forty deserted,—most of them immediately after receiving their bounty; twenty were unassigned or not taken up on the rolls; and a small number were killed, or honorably discharged at the end of their terms of service, and are named among the effective men.

Geo. Peabody

SUMMARY.

Whole number of effective men	352
Men enlisting and serving second terms	46
Deserters, bounty-jumpers, and "dead beats"	75
	473

The pecuniary outlay of the town in bounties, expenses of filling quotas, and aid of soldiers' families, as appears by the accounts of the selectmen, was as follows:

1861.—Paid volunteers and their families		$851.63
1862.— " expenses of filling quotas		492.59
" bounties on enlistments		6,500.00
1863.— " bounties and expenses of filling quotas		16,110.00
1864.— " " " "		16,481.05
1865.— " " " "		14,233.45
1866.— " " " "		300.00
1867.— " " " "		8.53
		$54,977.25

The individual contributions, as far as ascertained, were as follows:

Balance of cash raised in 1861 by citizens for purchase of materials for soldiers' uniforms, and for support of their families, and not refunded by the State	$676.14
Cash paid by individuals for filling quota in 1864	664.42
Bounties of $10 each to 100 men by Elliot Beardsley	1,000.00
Bounties paid by other citizens (estimated)	2,000.00
	$4,340.56

A large amount of hospital stores, clothing, bedding, provisions, and cash were furnished by female societies, only a portion of which can be ascertained, by reason of the imperfect records made of the same. We compile from such records and memoranda as have been preserved the following items:

Making up 103 uniforms from materials paid for by the State	$412.00
" 112 shirts (cloth furnished)	84.00
200 linen havelocks	100.00
Sent to Christian Commission 16 boxes and barrels of clothing, bedding, and hospital stores, valued at	688.18
Cash, proceeds of tableau exhibition	252.50
To Sanitary Commission, hospital articles and stores	476.39
To Mrs. Harris, superintendent of hospitals, Philadelphia, hospital articles and stores	370.71
To Freedmen's and Refugee Aid Societies	1,550.50
To Soldiers' Aid Society	31.70
To soldiers in Connecticut regiments 96 barrels and 15 boxes vegetables, provisions, and stores	635.00
	$4,600.98

The above articles, estimated below their value, and comprising an infinite variety, were mainly furnished by one of our two female organizations. Of the number and value of articles supplied by the other society we have obtained no statement, but may safely estimate them at $2081.21; and so estimating them, we have the following summary of town expense:

Town expenses	$48,977.25
Cash items by citizens of the town	4,340.56
Clothing, bedding, hospital stores, provisions, and cash from West Winsted Soldiers' Aid Society	4,600.98
Similar articles furnished by other societies and individuals (estimated)	2,081.21
Grand total	$60,000.00

The contributions furnished by the female society above named are specified with great particularity and precision, and are largely made up of the most valuable and indispensable articles of clothing and bedding, the cost of materials worked up and paid for in cash making a large part of their estimated value.

One item of hospital stores, nowhere enumerated, was the product of ninety-five bushels of blackberries, which were gathered in one day, mostly by females, on a proposition of Gail Borden, Esq., that he would convert into jam all the blackberries so gathered in one day, at the condensed milk-factory owned in part by him, the sugar and cans being paid for.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

GEORGE DUDLEY.

George Dudley was born at Bloomfield, Conn., Sept. 17, 1803; married, at Winsted, April 28, 1831, Electa, daughter of Samuel and Mercy (Sheldon) Camp, and died at West Winsted, Sept. 11, 1880.

Mr. Dudley began life poor. A trivial incident fixed his residence in Winsted in 1822, where, after a few years as a shoemaker, he became a tanner, in the line of bookbinders' leather. From a small beginning his business grew until, at the time of his death, he was the owner of four tanneries in constant and successful operation. Without early advantages, he had a native executive ability, which, with his strict integrity, unquestioned honesty, and untiring industry, enabled him to build up and maintain a large business and accumulate a considerable property. His residence of fifty-eight years in Winsted covered much the larger part of its history, with which Mr. Dudley was closely identified, a large part of which he was, and no man commanded more universal respect.

He assisted new manufacturing enterprises not only by money subscriptions, but in the unpurchasable commodities of kind, hearty interest, words, and counsel.

As member of the board of directors, and for thirteen years president of the first bank in town, twice postmaster, member of both branches of the Legislature, Presidential elector, corporator of the Savings Bank, director of the Hurlbut National Bank, and director of the Connecticut Western Railroad Company, he both proved his willingness to share in the burdens of society and showed his hold on the confidence of those who had important interests to be cared for.

His wish not to have the particulars of his benefactions published shall be respected here, but it is due to his memory that it should be known that he was a frequent, open-handed, liberal giver. Being a man of large sympathies, he heartily enjoyed opportunities to do public or private good with his money.

The same characteristics appeared in reference to his relations with his employees, many of whom were unusually long in his service, frequently becoming independent in their circumstances; serving him faithfully and well, they were standing examples of the possibility of harmonious and satisfactory relations between employers and employed.

An ardent and impulsive man, Mr. Dudley was hearty and outspoken in his dislike of measures his judgment did not approve; but his opposition was always manly, never crafty or underhanded. No one could doubt his position on any current question of interest.

He was equally interested in the welfare of the church; was a constant attendant,—nothing but illness ever detaining him from the regular services of public worship, in support of which, during the later years of his life, he was always foremost.

His death left a large gap.

His name is honored, his memory cherished, at home and abroad by a wide circle of acquaintance, and it will be many years before his place in Winsted is made good.

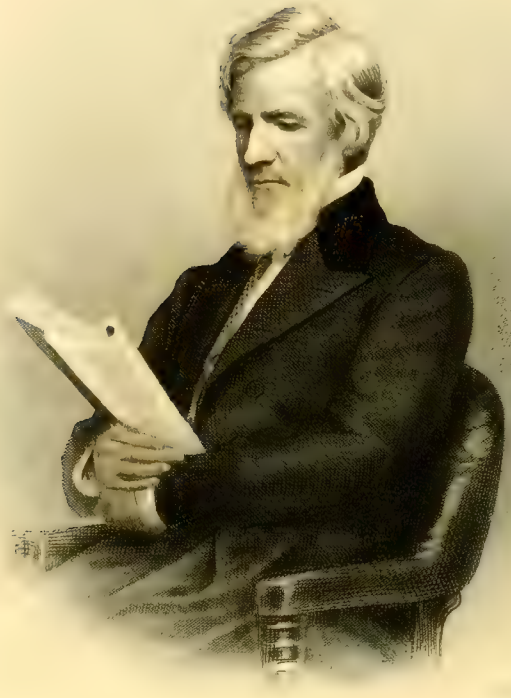
JOHN BOYD.

John Boyd was born in Winsted, Conn., in 1799. May 17, 1831, he united in marriage with Emily Webster Beers, daughter of Elias and Jerusha Fitch Beers. She was born in New Hampshire, in March, 1805, and died Nov. 25, 1842. He was married a second time Dec. 10, 1843, to Mrs. Jerusha Rockwell Hinsdale, widow of Theodore Hinsdale, and daughter of Solomon and Sarah McEwen Rockwell. Mr. Boyd graduated at Yale College in 1821, studied law, and was admitted to the bar of New Haven County in 1825. He has ever been an active and influential citizen, prominent in the councils of the county and State. He was a member of the General Assembly, Lower House, in 1830 and 1835, county commissioner in 1840, '49, and '50, town clerk 1829–33, 1837–41, and from 1855–77. He was judge of probate for fifteen years, until disqualified by age in 1869. In 1854 he was elected State senator, and from 1859 to 1861 was Secretary of State of Connecticut. He was an active business man, and from 1827 to 1850 was a member of the manufacturing firm of J. Boyd & Son. From 1850 to 1853 he conducted the business as sole proprietor. Although engrossed in the multifarious duties of an active business and public career, Mr. Boyd has found time to indulge his taste for literary and genealogical pursuits, and a few years since compiled and published an elaborate history of Winchester, which is an invaluable contribution to the historic literature of the State, and takes front rank among the standard local works of our times.* Mr. Boyd is a man of firmness, integrity, and marked strength of mind, and is now enjoying his otium cum dignitate within the limits of the beautiful village, which he has seen expand from a small hamlet to a thriving town of trade and manufacture.

* From his interesting work much of the history of Winchester contained in this volume was compiled, for which the author is under special obligations.

DR. JAMES WELCH.

Dr. Welch was born at Norfolk, Conn., Jan. 7, 1807, in the house now occupied by his brother, Hon. W. W. Welch, M.D. This house was built in 1800 by his father, the elder Dr. Benjamin Welch, and for more than eighty years has been the home of some Dr. Welch.

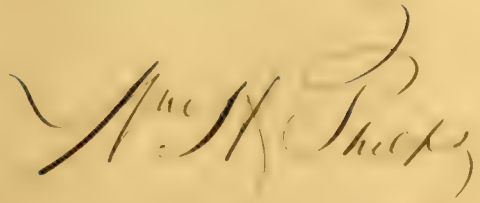


Trained up in an atmosphere of medical practice, educated by study with his father and older brothers, Hon. Asa G. Welch, M.D., of Lee, Mass., and Dr. Benjamin Welch, of Salisbury, he took the prescribed course at the Berkshire Medical Institute, at Pittsfield, Mass., and graduated there in 1830.

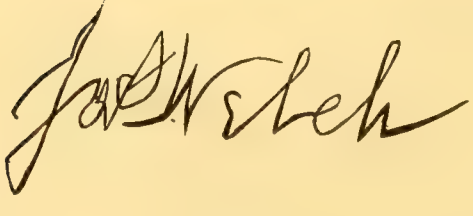
For a few months after receiving his diploma Dr. Welch was located, in the practice of his profession, at Sandisfield, Mass., but in 1831 removed to Winsted, and, except an absence of about five years, while associated in practice with his brother, Hon. Asa G. Welch, M.D., at Lee, Mass., he has been an active physician in this town until the present time, with a prospect of years of usefulness still before him. It should be said that his removal to Winsted resulted from a meeting of some prominent gentlemen of that place to consult in regard to a physician. After free conversation, it was decided to ask Dr. Welch to settle in the village. The next day Lucius Clarke, Esq., went to Sandisfield, and had an interview with Dr. Welch. The consequence was the doctor came to Winsted, and has been a leading physician for fifty years, having done an extensive consulting business in the county. It is worthy of note that the doctor, his four brothers, and their father were all practicing physicians within an area of thirty-five miles, and so often met in consultation.

In the winter of 1880–81, in recognition of half a century of hard work among them, and as an expression of good will to Dr. and Mrs. Welch, a few of his friends took occasion to present to the doctor an elegant Elgin watch, a gold hunting-case, with all the modern improvements, as a souvenir.

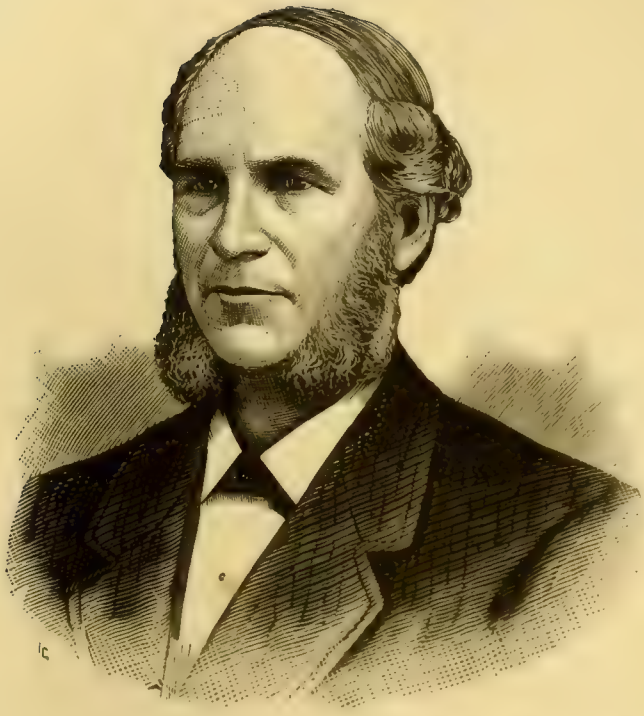
Dr. Welch was married, May 18, 1831, to Miss Lavinia M. Hubbard, of Salisbury, and the golden wedding anniversary was appropriately observed in 1881. Mrs. Welch has borne the burdens and perplexities of a country physician's wife with unwavering energy and cheerfulness, and her ready sympathy and tact have always been a help to her husband and his patients in difficult places.



Six children were born to them,—one promising daughter, who died in childhood, and five sons,—of whom but three survive, viz., James H., Esq., so long a druggist at Apothecaries' Hall; Dr. William C., of



Yours truly



John M. Boyd

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

J. W. Bradwell

Norfolk; and Dr. Edward H., associated with his father in practice. Another son, Dr. John B., a young man of sterling worth, was assistant surgeon of the Twelfth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and died at Ship Island, Feb. 13, 1862, aged twenty-four years, in circumstances peculiarly trying to his friends.

Dr. Welch has long been a consistent member of the Congregational Church, and has been unusually regular in his attendance upon its public service. With his wife, he was among the original members of the Second Church when organized in 1854.

The doctor was a Whig, and then a Republican, in his political sympathies, and, though not devoting much attention to politics, has always been influential in these matters. While decided in his sentiments and straightforward in his course, he has so tempered his utterances by his kindness of heart and good sense as to win the respect and affection of many of different views.

In a word, Dr. Welch is surely deserving of the title of the "beloved physician." Of unvarying cheerfulness, quick to discriminate in regard to character, of remarkable memory of names and incidents, of ready sympathy and special tact, slow to speak ill of any, thoroughly acquainted with so many families in this and adjoining towns through several generations, perfectly at home in his profession, and to an unusual degree keeping abreast with the times, he has given to the community a standard of attainments with which every coming physician for years must be compared.

JOHN WELCH BIDWELL.

John W. Bidwell, now a leading physician in the village of Winsted, was born in South Tyringham, Berkshire Co., Mass., Oct. 20, 1824. He was educated at the celebrated private school of the late Alexander Hyde at Lee, and at the Norfolk Academy. Having decided upon the medical profession as a life-work, he commenced his studies with his uncles, Drs. Asa and James Welch, then leading physicians and surgeons at Lee. For four years he continued his studies with diligence and attention at this place, and then passed some time with Dr. Benjamin Welch, of Lakeville, in this county, who was distinguished as a surgeon. He also studied for a brief period with Dr. William Welch, of Norfolk. He attended one course of lectures at Woodstock, Vt., and graduated at the Berkshire Medical College at Pittsfield.

Dr. Bidwell commenced practice in Lee, where he remained one year; and in 1849, during the mining furore, went to California as surgeon to a government train. He was in Portland, Oregon, when there were but twenty buildings on the site of that now flourishing city. He located on Feather River, Cal., and engaged in mining, which he continued with success three years, when he longed for his native New England hills, and in the spring of 1852 came to Winsted and formed a co-partnership with Dr. James Welch for the practice of his profession. After practicing with Dr. Welch a number of years he retired from the partnership, and has since continued the practice alone and with great success. His huge and lucrative practice and the present proud position he occupies among the physicians of this section have not been attained without a struggle. He is not only prompt in the discharge of his professional duties, but is a thorough student, keeping abreast with the marvelous progress which has characterized the realm of medicine for the past twenty years.

June 2, 1863, he married Alice J. Hart, of Barkhamsted, a granddaughter of Dr. Amos Beecher, a prominent physician in the town. They have one child, Alice Louise.

Dr. Bidwell is a Republican in politics, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1855. In religious matters he is a Congregationalist and a member of the Second Church of Winsted.

ELLIOT BEARDSLEY.

Deacon Elliot Beardsley was born in Monroe, Conn., Dec. 26, 1801, son of Elliot and Abigail (Patterson) Beardsley. He moved from South Britain to Winsted in 1840, and engaged in business, in company with Theodore Hinsdale, and after the death of the latter became sole owner of one of the largest manufacturing establishments in the society, and managed it with consummate ability during his remaining active life. Reticent and deliberate by nature and habit, he minded his own business entirely, yet had an eye on all that was going on around him, and participated influentially, though quietly, in public affairs. No man in the town was more looked to for advising and giving a direction to all measures for public interest, and none more respected for purity of life, religious example, and earnest patriotism. He was one of the first office-bearers of the Second Congregational Church, a director and president of the Winsted Bank, a representative of the town, and senator of the Fifteenth District, in the State Legislature, and held various other offices. The war of the Rebellion opened near the close of his active life, and no citizen of the town exceeded him in energetic and persistent efforts to aid the Union cause. He died Jan. 19, 1871.

WILLIAM H. PHELPS.

Prominent among the leading bankers of this State, and one of Winsted's most enterprising and honored citizens, was the late William H. Phelps, who was born in Colebrook, April 5, 1818. He married, May 28, 1840, Lucy C., daughter of Dr. Luman Wakefield. His first business transactions were at Riverton, in a country store, where he remained a short time and then removed to Winsted, and went into the mercantile business with Normand Adams at East Winsted. He continued there about three years and then removed to Chicago, and became a member of a large mercantile firm, and was eminently successful. After a number of years he returned to Winsted, and was the first president and organizer of the Hurlbut National Bank, and remained as such until his death, Aug. 27, 1864. Mr. Phelps manifested a lively interest in municipal affairs, and was the first warden of the borough of Winsted. He was a Democrat, and attended the Episcopal Church. He was in all respects a thorough business man, active, energetic, and upright. Two children survive him,—George W. Phelps, of this village, and Elizabeth N., wife of Edward L. Soule, of Boston, Mass.

Upon the death of Mr. Phelps, the directors of the bank, by vote on record,—

"Resolved, That we are fully sensible of the loss to this institution of an able financier, whose faithfulness and diligence in managing the affairs of the bank are fully apparent in its success, and the character it has sustained at home and abroad for its soundness and prosperity.

"We also feel deeply his loss in common with this community, as an honest and capable adviser, a genial companion, and highly-esteemed citizen."

The Winsted Herald under date Aug. 26, 1864, in speaking of Mr. Phelps, said,—

"Although made aware through these columns of the grave nature of his illness, it was with difficulty that our community could be made to believe, still more to realize, last Monday morning, that Mr. William H. Phelps was to be no more with us except as a sleeper in the churchyard.

"The Hurlbut Bank of this village was started some ten years ago, mainly through Mr. Phelps' instrumentality, and it has been under his sole management, and singularly successful to the present time.

"In this institution he rapidly added to a reputation already high as a financier; and he thus became by degrees a counselor to almost all who have had moneys to invest, throughout a wide region.

"In this relation he took pleasure and felt an honorable pride. To his credit, be it said, the relation was never abused.

"For his advice he asked nothing, and, however trivial the application, it was met with uniform kindness and attention.

"The woman, anxious for the security of her single hundred, was treated with patience and consideration no less than the affluent possessor of thousands, and his assistance was even more cheerfully bestowed.

"In his bank management, though oft quoting and generally adhering to the principle that 'a bank is not a benevolent institution,' he was uniformly liberal, and the Hurlbut Bank, while it has been richly productive to its stockholders, has always enjoyed the favor of the community as a public benefit.

"As a citizen, the deceased was a man of genuine public spirit, and had he found a co-operative disposition in other citizens equally affluent, he would have done much for Winsted.

"The beautiful park in our East village is a monument to his energy and liberality. He has made repeated (but vain) efforts to bring about the incorporation of a cemetery association suited to the necessities and reputation of the town.

"In the school project which came near success last winter, and fell through only in consequence of lamentable apathy and causeless hostility, he was a prime mover. And so we might mention many other public enterprises to which he lent a hearty sympathy; and that he did not go forward alone in them is a mark of good judgment, and not blamable. Had the usual term of life been allotted him, we know of our own private knowledge that the proofs of his public spirit would have been still more conspicuous. Socially, the subject of this inadequate notice had no vices,—not many were his faults. A varied reading, the cultivation of travel, happy facility at quotation, and ready wit, engrafted upon an exceedingly social nature, rendered him the choicest of companions.

"Success always attracts admirers; but the immense concourse which followed to their burial the remains of William H. Phelps on yesterday were not merely fascinated acquaintances,—they were friends, fastened by holy ties; and the blow which severed them plunges a large community in deep and abiding sorrow.

"Mr. Phelps was the son of Dr. Lancelot Phelps, of Colebrook, and brother to Judge Phelps, of Essex, in this State. He was born in Colebrook in April, 1818. He commenced life as a clerk with Alpha Sage in his native town, soon after went into mercantile business for himself in Hitchcockville, removed to Winsted, and from 1846 to 1848 carried on business with Normand Adams. In 1848 he went to Chicago as a partner in the extensive house of Corley, Wadsworth & Phelps. In 1851 returned to Winsted, and in 1854 assumed the position in the Hurlbut Bank which he continued to hold until his death."

JOHN G. WETMORE.

There is no prouder or more enduring personal record than the story of a self-reliant, manly, and successful career. It declares that the individual has not only understood his duty and mission, but fulfilled them. The following biography is highly suggestive of these facts.

John G. Wetmore, now a leading manufacturer and capitalist of Winsted, Conn., was born in this town April 27, 1817. He was educated at the common schools, and first embarked in business as a merchant with the late Lucius Clarke, on the site of the Clarke House. He was also at one time extensively engaged as a builder. He subsequently commenced the manufacture of woolen goods, and finally the manufacture of pins, which he has continued with great success to the present time.

The present flourishing New England Pin Company, of which he is the owner and manager, was organized in 1854 with Mr. Wetmore as general manager. It started with but few machines, and those of an old style and of but little value. At this time large quantities of pins were imported, and what was done in this country was monopolized by the American and Howe Pin Companies, for the reason principally that they held the only patent for sticking pins. Mr. Wetmore determined to invent a new machine for this purpose, and after two years of constant application, and an expense of twenty thousand dollars, he perfected a machine which would do the work of ten of those owned and operated by the old companies. From this time the New England Pin Company made rapid strides. It purchased from time to time various companies, among which were a New Jersey company, a Boston company, the Empire Pin Company of Cohoes, a Montreal company, the last purchase being the Pyramid Pin Company, a large establishment located at New Haven. The establishment is furnished with all the modern improvements, and has a capacity for the manufacture of ten million eight hundred thousand pins daily.

Mr. Wetmore is a public-spirited citizen of enlarged views, and has been untiring in his efforts to build up that portion of the town known as the "Flat," or what might more properly be called the "Centre Village," which is the northern terminus of the Naugatuck Railroad. In 1872 he erected the Winsted

J. Gilchrist

RESIDENCE OF J. G. WETMORE, WINSTED, CONN.

Wm L. Gilbert

Opera-House, one of the finest and most complete in all its appointments in the State. It has seven private boxes, and a seating capacity of twelve hundred. Mr. Wetmore also erected and owns the fine brick building west of the Clarke House, known as the Wetmore Block.

Politically Mr. Wetmore was formerly a Whig, and is now a Republican. He has held various offices when doing so would advance the interests of the town. Has been selectman, was one of the first officers of the borough, was warden of the borough in 1862, '63, '64, and '65, and was a member of the Legislature in 1861 and '62.

In 1878 he organized the Winsted National Bank, was chosen its president, and is the present incumbent. The bank is located in the Opera-House Block, in a portion built expressly for that purpose, and is in all respects a complete banking office.

Mr. Wetmore is descended from Thomas Wetmore, who came from the west of England to Boston, Mass., in 1635, in the eleventh year of the reign of Charles I., and was among the early settlers in the Connecticut Colony. His father, John Wetmore, was born in Winchester in October, 1780, and Dec. 20, 1802, united in marriage with Huldah, daughter of Thomas Spencer. He died in 1823.

Oct. 3, 1841, he united in marriage with Eliza Frisbe Rosseter, of Harwinton, Conn. She died March 9, 1847. Nov. 1, 1848, he married Eliza Phœbe, daughter of Col. Roswell Lee,* of Springfield, Mass. They have one child, Eliza R., wife of J. E. Spaulding.

Mr. Wetmore's life has been one of steady and active devotion to business, and his great success has been the natural result of his ability to examine and readily comprehend any subject presented to him, power to decide promptly, and courage to act with vigor and persistency in accordance with his convictions.

WILLIAM L. GILBERT.

William L. Gilbert was born in Litchfield, Conn., Dec. 30, 1806; son of James and Abigail (Kinney) Gilbert; the former a native of Woodbridge, the latter of Washington, Conn. Until he was twenty-two he spent his time mainly on the farm with his father, attending in the winter the district or select schools of the time. From that age he became actively engaged in business. Beginning absolutely without capital, and having no friends or wealthy relatives to fall back upon, his first venture was in company with a brother-in-law in Bristol, Conn., where they made parts of clocks for one of the heavy clock firms there. He ran in debt for the three hundred dollars he first put into the business. It goes without saying that his beginnings were humble. Not until three years had gone by did this young firm consider themselves competent to manufacture a whole clock. Then, with a new start in the adjoining town of Farmington, they became regular clockmakers, and bringing to this business industry and good management, of course prosperity followed.

In 1835 he returned to Bristol, where, with other partners, he did a large and increasingly successful business, until he took up his permanent residence in Winsted in 1841, at which time he with others purchased the Riley Whiting clock-factory.

With a number of different partners at one time and another, and with branches in other places from time to time, the business has been prosecuted at Winsted as headquarters with a constantly increasing vigor and energy until the present time. Through all the various changes in the style of the firm Mr. Gilbert has been the leading member, and more or less responsible in the management of the business. In 1866 a joint-stock corporation, The Gilbert Manufacturing Company, was organized, and carried on the business with largely increasing prosperity until, after fifty years of service, the works were burned, in 1871. Rebuilding in the most approved style was at once entered upon, and with a special charter from the State, the William L. Gilbert Clock Company now continues the business. Of both the latter organizations Mr. Gilbert was naturally the president, and to both he has given his best efforts. The present corporation is, and for years has been, much the largest single industrial establishment in the place. For it and its predecessors the subject of this sketch has never ceased to feel the special interest which one gives to his first love. While active and useful elsewhere, the clock company has yet been his pet and pride, and to its success he has always contributed a large measure of prudence and sagacity, although for some of the last years the more immediate management has fallen to others. In the course of between fifty and sixty years the business, like nearly all others, has become revolutionized. Brass wheels have succeeded wooden ones; division of labor has made it possible to produce the several parts with much greater exactness, cheapness, and variety; styles have changed from the long seven-foot instrument, whose solemn tick is now most eagerly sought by a host of collectors, through an infinite number of varieties to the little affair scarcely larger than a watch. Markets are no longer found by the traveling Yankee peddler selling directly to final purchasers, but from headquarters at New York and elsewhere the entire globe is supplied to a greater or less degree with Connecticut clocks. This revolution comes easily within the compass of Mr. Gilbert's lifetime, and to its progress he has given his share of aid, especially by two journeys to the Old World to promote markets there for the goods of his firm.

In 1867 the Winsted Bank at West Winsted closed its business, and was succeeded by the private banking firm of Gilbert & Gay, the partners being the subject of this sketch, and the former president of the bank. A large banking and Western loan business was built up by the new firm, which continued until the election, in 1874, of Mr. Gilbert as president (which position he still holds), and Mr. Gay as cashier of the Hurlbut National Bank. This closed their private banking business, but their Western loan business continues to be carried on at the Hurlbut National Bank, and has grown to large proportions.

* Col. Lee was superintendent of the United States armory at Springfield from June 1, 1815, to August 25, 1833.

Beside the banking and loan business, Mr. Gilbert has been interested in a number of enterprises having a greater or less connection with the growth and welfare of the place. He has lent his aid where it would do good to struggling enterprises having in them elements of promise for building up the place of his adoption, and perhaps a fair return for capital invested.

Mr. Gilbert was an earnest friend from the start of the Connecticut Western Railroad, from Hartford to Millerton, N. Y. While in the Legislature of 1868 he gave his best efforts to securing its charter, and on the organization of the company he became a director and its treasurer, which positions he has held through various changes in the company's organization. Although not a lucrative pecuniary investment, the road has been and is invaluable to the towns along the line, which are greatly indebted to the efforts and capital of Mr. Gilbert, and those like him, for the measure of prosperity they now enjoy.

Allusion has been made to Mr. Gilbert's presence in the State Legislature. This has twice occurred, in 1848 and 1868. He has not been an office-seeker, nor given his time to politics. Besides the position named he has been postmaster of Winsted. A Whig at first, he gave his adhesion to the Republican party when that organization was formed, and has been its steady supporter ever since.

In 1835, Mr. Gilbert became the husband of Clarinda K. Hine, of Washington, Conn., who died in 1874. None of their three children lived till 1860. In 1876 he married, as a second wife, Miss Anna E. Westcott, of New London, Conn.

Mr. Gilbert, at the age of seventy-four, holds his health and vigor to a remarkable degree. His habits are simple and regular, his wants few, his life frugal. He has always been a temperance man in principle and practice. In connection with strict, careful, and methodical attention to business he has developed a capacity for managing and controlling affairs and men that has secured him a large property, and fairly given him a place in the front ranks of the active business men of his native county.

ELIAS E. GILMAN.

Elias E. Gilman was born in West Hartland, Conn., Dec. 22, 1815. He remained on his father's farm until eighteen years of age, when he went to Torringford, Conn., and began an apprenticeship at the carriage-making business. After remaining here about five years he returned to his native town and established a carriage manufactory, which he conducted until 1854. In that year Mr. Gilman came to Winsted, and three years later, in 1857, became the agent of the Winsted Carriage Company. He managed this business until 1864, when it was closed out, and in 1867 a new carriage company was formed, called the Gilman Carriage Company, of which he was the agent until its property was destroyed by fire a few years later.

Mr. Gilman has ever been an active business man, and every interest looking to the welfare of the town receives his earnest support. He was one of the incorporators of the Mechanics' Savings Bank in 1875, was also its first treasurer, and has held that position since. He has also been president of the First National Bank of Winsted since its incorporation in 1879, and is a director in the Hurlbut National Bank at West Winsted.

He is a Republican in politics, and has been called to various official positions within the gift of his townsmen. He was appointed postmaster in his native town in 1847, and held that position six years. In Winsted he has officiated in the various town offices: assessor, board of relief, town treasurer, warden, and burgess of the borough, and in 1866 represented the town in the General Assembly. He was also elected judge of probate in 1871, and is the present incumbent. His popularity and the esteem in which he is held by the people generally was strikingly illustrated at the last election of judge of probate, where he was nominated by both parties. He is a consistent Christian; is a member of the Congregational Church, and has been over forty years. He is prominently identified with church matters; is a deacon in the First Congregational Church of Winsted, and also officiated in the same capacity in the church in his native town.

July 4, 1838, he united in marriage with Charlotte Hudson, a native of Torringford, Conn., who died in October, 1852. In January, 1854, he married Sarah Coe, of Wolcottville, Conn.

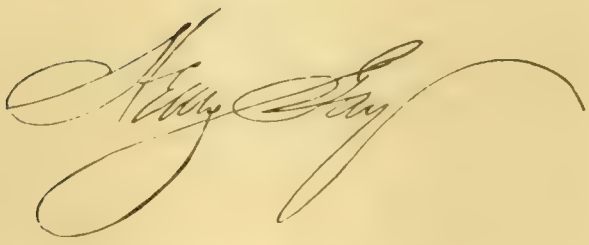
Although Mr. Gilman has been successful in the various walks of life, he has gained nothing by mere luck, but everything by well-digested plans and the intelligent appreciation of his energies to the end in view. In social life he is gentlemanly and affable; is a ruling spirit in the church, and one of Winsted's most honored citizens.

JOHN HINSDALE.

The subject of this sketch is a descendant in the seventh generation from Robert Hinsdale, who was one of the founders of the church at Dedham, Mass., in 1638. His father, Col. Hosea Hinsdale, was born at Berlin, Conn., Feb. 15, 1775, and March 2, 1798,

Elias E. Gilman

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.



Harvey B. Steele, M.D.

HARVEY B. STEELE, the subject of this sketch, is a noble representative of an honorable profession, which ranks among its devotees the leading and progressive spirits of the age. That man who devotes his life-work to the advancement of a noble profession or to the amelioration of the human race well deserves the pen of the chronicler of passing events; and such a one is Dr. Steele, who for over thirty years has practiced in Winsted, and is one of the leading physicians of the State. He was born in New Britain, Conn., Feb. 22, 1827. He studied his profession in Hartford, and in 1846 received his diploma and commenced practice in this village, where he has since remained.

Notwithstanding the multifarious duties incident to an active professional career, he has devoted much of his time to the public service, having been honored by his fellow-citizens with various official positions for which his qualifications so eminently fit him. He was postmaster at West Winsted under Presidents Pierce and Buchanan. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1873, of the Senate in 1874–75, and again of the Assembly in 1879–80. He took a prominent position in both the House and Senate, and in 1873 was chairman of the House committee on finance, in 1874 of the Senate committee on corporations, in 1875 of cities and boroughs, and in 1879 on humane institutions, and engrossed bills, the latter one of the most important and laborious in the House. His popularity was strikingly illustrated in 1874, when he received a large majority for senator in a district strongly Republican, his opponent being the Hon. John T. Rockwell, one of the leading Republicans of the State. Dr. Steele is a public-spirited citizen, ever alive to the best interests of the town. He has been warden of the borough; also interested in the organization of Company I, of the Fourth Regiment of Connecticut Militia, which was named in his honor the "Steele Guards." During the late Rebellion he was sent by the authorities of the town to the battle-field of Fredericksburg, and was indefatigable in his efforts in administering to the wants of the wounded in that sanguinary struggle. Ever ready to respond to the call of duty, he has won an enviable position in the hearts of the people of his adopted town as well as in that noble profession to which he has devoted his life-work. He has also taken a lively interest in Masonic matters, and is one of the best informed members of the fraternity in this section. He was initiated in St. Andrew's Lodge, July 2, 1851, and in 1854 was chosen its Master. He joined Meridian Chapter in 1859, and was High Priest of the chapter, 1860–61. Business outside of his profession has also claimed a portion of his time. He was a director in the Hurlbut National Bank, is a present trustee in the Mechanics' Savings-Bank, and was associated with Col. Batcheller in the manufacture of scythes at Winsted, and was also interested in the Eagle Scythe Works at Riverton for ten years. April 30, 1861, he united in marriage with Mary Mather, a native of this town, who died in 1872.

Dr. Steele is every ready in debate, being a fluent and forcible speaker. He is Democratic in politics, and an able exponent of the underlying principles of that ancient and honored organization. Possessed of a genial and kind nature, affable in his intercourse with his fellows, with a personal character above reproach, he is esteemed and honored as a private citizen no less than as an able physician and skillful surgeon.

HENRY GAY, cashier of the Hurlbut National Bank, was born at Salisbury, in this county, April 5, 1834. He entered as clerk the store of Robert B. Mitchell, in that town, in the year 1848, where he remained four years. He was then employed in the Iron Bank, at Falls Village, for two years. In 1854 he removed to Winsted, where he has been constantly connected with the banking institutions of the town. May 20, 1857, he married Charlotte E., daughter of the late Deacon Thomas Watson. They have one child, Mary W. Mr. Gay is now in the prime of life, and has held many offices of honor and trust, and is untiring in the performance of the duties which devolve upon him.

John Hinsdale

LYMAN BALDWIN.

united in marriage with Elizabeth Shepard, a native of Hartland, Conn., who died Jan. 25, 1861.

Col. Hinsdale came from Berlin to Winsted in 1802. He was a tanner by trade, and had made arrangements to begin the world in Western New York, but the discovery at that time made of the tanning properties of hemlock bark changed his plans, and he came here to avail himself of the abundance of this material found in our forests.

In addition to the tanning business, he was largely engaged in public affairs. He was for several years a deputy, under Sheriff Landon, who prided himself on his selection of a staff of not only able, but portly and fine-looking assistants, thereby sustaining the dignity of the county magistracy.

He closed his public life with the presidency of the Litchfield County Temperance Society, which he filled with punctuality and ardent zeal for seven or eight years.

His social qualities were of a high order. His acquaintance with men of the county and State was extensive, and his memory of events accurate in a remarkable degree. At ninety he could recall an acquaintance or event of early days with the readiness of a young man. He was a reading man, well posted in all current events. In person and manner dignified; fluent and attractive in conversation; he was the chronicler and patriarch of the village, the last of the generation of men who laid the foundations and controlled the destinies of our community. He died Oct. 21, 1866, aged nearly ninety-two years.

Johu Hinsdale was the seventh child of Col. Hosea and Elizabeth Hinsdale, and was born in Winsted, May 10, 1817. He was educated at the common schools, and at the New Britain High School, of which Elijah Burritt, brother of Elihu Burritt, the learned blacksmith, was principal. In about the year 1833 he went to Hartford as clerk in a mercantile establishment, but the memorable panic of 1837 threw him out of employment, when he came to Winsted and commenced the mercantile business on his own account. This proving unsuccessful, he went into the shop of the Winsted Foundry and Machine Company, and learned the trade of a machinist. He subsequently entered the employ of the old firm of Beardsley & Alvord, where for three years he remained as an efficient and trusted clerk. In 1848 he secured the agency for this section of a number of the leading fire insurance companies, and succeeded in building up one of the largest and most lucrative agencies in the State. He retired in 1871, and was chosen president of the Winsted Savings Bank in 1878, a position which he still holds. Though not seeking official distinction he has discharged faithfully the duties of many positions which have been literally thrust upon him by his fellow-townsmen, such as selectman, assessor, board of relief, water commissioner, clerk and treasurer of the borough, etc. He is a Republican in politics. He was a selectman during the trying times of the Rebellion, and the people still remember how faithfully and disinterestedly he served their interests. He is a man of first-class business ability and sound judgment, and has been called upon to settle various estates of deceased persons, bankruptcy estates, etc.

Mr. Hinsdale is a leading Congregationalist, and was one of the original members of the Second Congregational Church, and has been a deacon since its organization, in January, 1854. He has also been clerk and treasurer of the church since its organization, and has kept an invaluable statistical record. In 1877, Mr. Hinsdale was appointed by the Conference a delegate to the National Council of Congregationalists held in Detroit, Mich.

Aug. 31, 1841, he united in marriage with Amanda Malvina Alvord, daughter of Deacon James H. and Lucy Cook Alvord, who was born Aug. 20, 1821, and their family consists of two children,—Mary Elizabeth, wife of Robert R. Noble, of Williamstown, Mass., and John Alvord, who is a student at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. Mr. Hinsdale is a public-spirited man and one of Winsted's most honored citizens.

LYMAN BALDWIN.

Lyman Baldwin, the honored subject of this memoir, was born in Winsted, April 12, 1810. He learned the machinist's trade, and for many years was an employee in the Winsted Foundry and Machine Company shop, and subsequently became one of the owners and the manager of the establishment. He continued in this business until about the year 1852, when the Winsted Building Association was organized, and he was installed as its manager. The business of this association was subsequently closed, and Mr. Baldwin became the first treasurer of the Winsted Savings Bank, and officiated in that capacity with marked ability until his death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1874, aged sixty-four years. In addition to other positions which he held, he was also a director in the Hurlbut National Bank for about twelve years. He held various town offices, and was a pronounced Republican.

He married Rebecca C. Mather, who was born in Darien, Fairfield Co., Conn., April 16, 1814. Their children were Charles and Sarah G., both deceased. The former was born May 10, 1851, and died on the 9th of the following September. The latter was born July 14, 1852, and died Nov. 10, 1874.

Lyman Baldwin inspired all with whom he came in contact with unbounded confidence in his common sense and uncompromising integrity. He was a thoroughly practical man, possessing an indomitable will, and when once his plans were formed was diligent and resolute in their speedy and complete execution. He was an energetic, methodical, and faithful business man, and one of Winsted's most honored citizens.

DAVID STRONG.

David Strong was born in East Hampton, Conn., Aug. 17, 1825, and was educated at the common schools in his native town. He worked on his father's farm during the summer, while the winter seasons were spent at school. He was also more or less employed in the bell-factories in East Hampton, which village at that time was, and is now, the leading bell manufacturing centre in the United States. He spent two years with N. S. Markham, a hoe manufacturer, occasionally traveling for the sale of the goods. Subsequently he taught school several seasons, and during one winter traveled as a book salesman through Maryland, Virginia, and one winter in the West.

In 1856, Mr. Strong formed a copartnership with Alexander H. Markham, under the firm-name of Markham & Strong, in the business of silver-plating bells for the bell manufacturers at East Hampton. In the following year they commenced the manufacture of coffin tacks and screws of white metal, then much used by undertakers, and soon after added the manufacture, in a small way, of the most common kind of coffin-handles. At the opening of the war of the Rebellion, Clark Strong, only brother of David, returned from Fulton, Mo., and assumed the active management of the factory while David took the management of the farm.

In August, 1862, both David and Clark volunteered to serve nine months in the Twenty-fourth Connecticut Volunteers, and the factory interest was then left in care of A. H. Markham. David held commission of first lieutenant in Twenty-fourth Connecticut Volunteers, and Clark was adjutant of same regiment. David had command of his company (C) for about four months, covering the time of the siege and fall of Port Hudson. Clark received a severe wound at Port Hudson on the 3d day of the siege, the 27th of May, 1863, which unfitted him for service during the remainder of his term; were both mustered out of service at Middletown, Oct. 1, 1863, David returning to the farm and Clark to the factory.

In 1865, David Strong opened trade with undertakers by samples, buying the goods of Markham & Strong, which proved to be a growing business.

In January, 1866, arrangements were made for moving to Winsted. A joint-stock company was formed there, and D. Strong was authorized by that company to buy the Markham & Strong business, and it was done. The joint-stock company took the name of The Strong Manufacturing Company. The original stockholders were Wm. L. Gilbert, Normand Adams, A. L. Weirs, David Strong, Clark Strong, C. B. Hallett, J. H. Norton, Ezra Baldwin, and Theophilus Baird.

The stockholders met Feb. 1, 1866, and elected as directors William L. Gilbert, A. L. Weirs, C. B. Hallett, J. H. Norton, and Normand Adams, to hold until the second Monday of June following, and these directors elected William L. Gilbert president, C. Strong secretary, and A. L. Weirs treasurer.

Jan. 14, 1867, first annual meeting of stockholders re-elected board of directors without change. The directors re-elected William L. Gilbert president, and Clark Strong secretary and treasurer; only change being in treasurer. In 1868 and 1869 there was no change in officers.

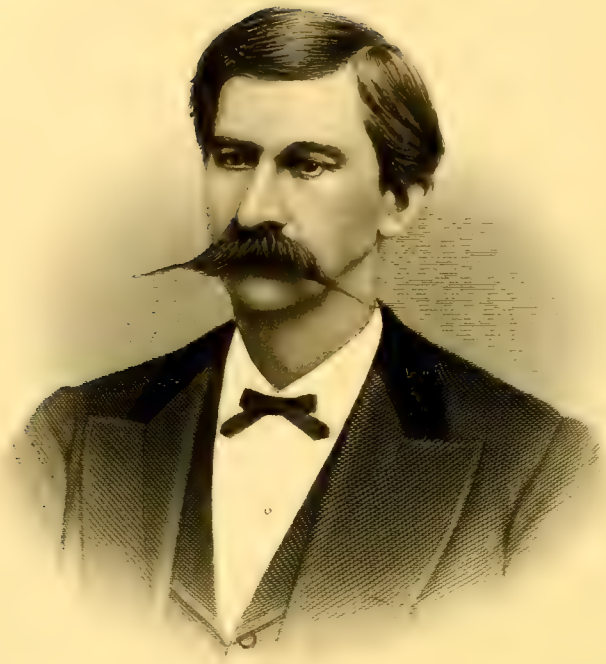
In 1870, N. Adams, J. H. Norton, Henry G. Colt, David Strong, and C. Strong were elected directors; N. Adams was elected president, C. Strong agent, and H. L. Roberts secretary and treasurer.

In 1871, D. Strong, C. Strong, H. G. Colt, H. L. Roberts, and J. T. Morgan were elected directors, and D. Strong was made president, C. Strong agent, and H. L. Roberts secretary and treasurer.

In 1872 no change in directors was made, but it was now voted by mutual understanding to consolidate D. Strong's business with that of the Strong Manufacturing Company, he having continued up to this time mailing his sales to undertakers, buying his hardware of the Strong Manufacturing Company, and making burial robes and shrouds, coffin-linings, etc., and employing traveling agents.

In 1873, L. C. Colt was made a director, and otherwise there was no change in the management. 1874 brought no change in directors or management, except the president. D. Strong was appointed acting agent to relieve C. Strong, on account of his failing health. In 1875, in consequence of impaired health, C. Strong resigned as agent, and D. Strong, acting agent for year previous, was elected agent, which was the only change for the year. There were no changes until 1877, when H. G. Colt was elected to succeed D. Strong. Mr. Colt is now agent, and has been since his first election in 1877, and he had for three years previously the full control and care of the traveling agents and of purchases of all material. H. L. Roberts has been secretary and treasurer since his election in 1870. L. C. Colt has had charge of orders received and shipping and invoicing goods since 1874. J. T. Morgan has had the superintendence of the manufacturing in the hardware department since 1874. Clark Strong continued to fail in health from the time he retired from business in 1873, and he died at Winsted, July 15, 1878, this being the only death of any one connected with the company. He leaves a son, Lester C. Strong, now twenty years old, and actively engaged at the factory, and a daughter, younger.

The subject of this sketch was married Nov. 4, 1852, to Frances A. Daniels, of Chatham, who died March 24, 1856. Sept. 14, 1857, he united in marriage with Maria C. Colt, of Torringford, Conn. She died Feb. 2, 1865. He subsequently married Emerette L. Colt, of Torringford, a sister of Maria C., Henry G., and Luman C. Colt, and their children living are Frederick C., Herbert G., and Homer D. Mr. Strong attends the Congregational Church, and, politically, is a Republican. He is a public-spirited citizen, and has done much to advance the interests of Winsted. He is a stockholder and director in the First National



Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

SAMUEL WARD COE.

Samuel Ward Coe was born in Winchester, Conn., June 10, 1805. He was a lineal descendant of, and eighth in line from, Robert Coe, born in Suffolkshire, England, in 1596, and who came to New England in 1634, settling successively at Watertown, Mass., Wethersfield and Stamford, Conn., and Hempstead, Newtown, and Jamaica, L. I.

Jonathan Coe, great-grandfather of Samuel W., purchased lands in Torrington in 1764, which remained in the family ninety-nine years. He was one of the first settlers of Torrington, and came to Winchester when old, dying there, aged eighty-four years. His son, Jonathan Coe, Jr., known as Ensign Jonathan Coe, moved with his parents, in 1768, to the farm until then occupied by Robert Coe, where Jonathan Coe, Sr., died. He came to Winsted in 1796, and resided there until his death. He married Eunice Cook, and died Aug. 1, 1824. Ensign Coe may be considered the father of Methodism in Winchester, being, perhaps, the very earliest convert, and its consistent and earnest supporter through life. David Coe, his son, was born Feb. 11, 1781, on the above-mentioned place, and married, March 15, 1804, Prudence Ward, who died Feb. 23, 1823, aged forty-two years. He afterwards married Esther Wright. He died June 12, 1834. He was also an earnest supporter of the doctrines of his church and an active worker in its cause. He had five children, of whom Samuel W. was oldest. About 1830, S. W. engaged in trade in Winsted, in company with Luman Hubbell and E. S. Woodford, and continued this business until his death. He married Abigail B. Sanford, Aug. 16, 1831; she died Dec. 23, 1838. He was married, May 10, 1841, to Julia M. Starks. Mr. Coe was an energetic, positive man, of strong convictions, and fine personal appearance, standing about six feet high. He was interested in public matters and always identified with the interests of Winchester, filling many and important positions of trust. He was justice of the peace from about 1830 until his death, and every one having a difference with another seemed to come to him: and as a peace-maker he was unexampled, and was the one above all others chosen in an arbitration. He was town clerk from 1833 to 1837, and from 1841 to 1851. He was judge of Probate from 1843 to 1850, and State senator. He was very popular with all classes; but it was not the popularity caused by subservience, for no man was more marked in his relentless opposition to all wrong. He was a fluent extemporaneous speaker, and did good service by his speeches in all good causes. He was an Abolitionist in those days when it demanded unusual courage and devotion to principle to be one. He was a temperance worker when temperance was comparatively a new thing, and in both of these, as well as in laboring for his church, he did good and faithful service. From early manhood he was a faithful member and office-holder of the Methodist Episcopal Church. In social relations and in his family he was kind, affectionate, and beloved, and never was a case of suffering brought to his notice that did not have his utmost efforts for relief. Possessing many good qualities and a winning magnetism, he wielded a powerful influence all through his life, and at his death, Sept. 20, 1868, he was universally mourned.

His children by his first wife were Charles Betts, cashier for the Rubber Clothing Company, of New York City; he married Carrie E. Alvord, and has one son. David Ward, a merchant in Winsted; married Phebe Brasie. His children by his second wife were Fanny Abby; married George D. Pitkin, of East New York Shoe Company; they have five children. Wilbur Fish, merchant in West Winsted; he has been warden of Winsted for the past two years, was two years aide-de-camp on the staff of Governor Andrews, is a prominent Freemason, member of lodge, chapter, and council of Winsted, and was Master of St. Andrew's Lodge in 1876 and 1877; he is also prominent in military matters. He married, in 1868, Gertrude M. Royce, of Waterbury, Vt.

Bank of Winsted, and also in the Winsted Real Estate Company; was a representative to the Legislature in 1872; has been selectman of the town, and was twice warden of the borough of Winsted.

FRANKLIN MOORE.

A record of the men conspicuous in Winsted affairs during the growing and lively period between 1860 and 1880 would be sadly incomplete with Franklin Moore omitted from it. His portrait is given herewith. Sharp-cut and angular in every feature, he was more so in every trait of his character. But, such as he was, Winsted was merrier while he lived and drearier when he died.

Mr. Moore was born, and rather roughly cradled, in Colebrook, Conn. Later, his father, Salvenus Moore, built and resided upon the Judge Lyman place, in Pine Meadow, Conn. Later still, when Frank was but a little fellow of six to seven years, the father sought to better the family fortunes by removal to the distant State of Alabama. The father was a mechanic of considerable skill, and should have been successful almost anywhere, but his inclinations were somewhat roving, and soon, with pocket empty and wife suffering from malarial disease, he was again on the slow journey—for this was before the railroad era—backward to Connecticut. The journey was full of hardship for the little family,—full indeed, for the mother died and was buried by the way. The father soon found solace in a second wife, but Frank, meanwhile, was turned over to such nurture as was afforded in the farm-house of Mr. Nelson Moses, a distant relative, on a bleak flank of Canaan Mountain, in the southern part of the town of Norfolk. We are told that "a contented mind is a continual feast." Lucky for Frank if this be so, for no other feasting had he. The tiller of these New England hills gets brave lessons in frugal and patient living, and these have their value; but they are lessons to which we rarely wish to go back, and which we graduate from with most fervent thanksgiving.

Some four or five winters at the south middle district school of Norfolk supplied Frank with his equipment of book-learning, and as many summers of plowing, and hoeing, and chopping, and digging, satisfied all his farming aspirations. They were enough, and one day he made out his own graduation papers, said no farewells, but disappeared from the social world of Goshen North and Norfolk South. His reappearance, now at fifteen to sixteen years of age, was in Plymouth, Conn., where he bettered his lot, to his notion, by an engagement of twelve to fourteen hours per day in a woolen-mill for the poor wages of board and clothes; and it is presumable that a single Saratoga trunk would have contained the whole wardrobe at the close of the engagement.

Later, controlled doubtless by natural but unconfessed yearnings toward the home of his boyhood, Frank sought and found employment in the then woolen-mill in Winsted, which he left at about the time of his majority to enter the employment of the Clifton Mill Company,—first in the manufacture of nuts and washers (of iron), a business subsequently enlarged to comprehend the carriage-bolt manufacture. Here Frank's tremendous energy and ready skill soon took him to the foremanship of the shop. Now his services began to be appreciated, now he began to earn a man's wages, and now those frugal principles, bred on the Norfolk farm, were put in practice. During those earlier years never man worked harder; never man lived more economically; never man bent soul and body to the task of earning and saving more wholly. There is an old saying, carved deep in a dead language, "laborare est orare," to labor is to pray. This was the young man's style of prayer. He dreamed of no luck, he waited for no dead men's shoes. He simply worked and saved. He had somehow conceived that money was a good thing to have,—no matter whether money was power, or honor, or content,—it was a good thing to have. And he wrought resolutely, and manfully, and honorably. He came to Winsted at twenty without a shilling; he died thirty years later sole owner of one of the largest industries in Western Connecticut, and left to his family a generous property.

And now, what further? Was Mr. Moore a philanthropist, benevolent, and one who sought to connect his name with multitudinous charities, small and great? Nothing of the sort. There was no mawkishness, no sentiment in him. He wanted no sympathy, but scorned it. And he gave none. But he did what was better than to squander thousands in undeserved charities. He showed just what a man, any man, may do in this blessed New England who has the will to work. Every dollar Franklin Moore died possessed of he fought for and won with his own toil-strengthened arm; and he left to the mewling crowd whose life is one long grumble at poor luck, a royal proof of the old saw, that "Heaven helps those who helps themselves."

We have remarked that Mr. Moore was an angular man. He was, and every angle and facet as bright and keen as the diamond's. The way of the world is to mass men into parties for political purposes, into churches for church purposes; the greater the mass the greater the momentum, when in motion, and the stronger the blow when an obstacle is met. But this massing of men takes off all their edges and angles and corners, and rubs and rounds and smooths them into mere cobblestones,—all alike, alike valueless. But Frank (there is something endearing in this "Frank," by which the world all called him) was no cobble. He was himself always, individual, clear, and distinct as a light-house on a level shore. The attritions of life sharpened his angles: they failed to obliterate.

Discrediting utterly the dogmas of the churches, he scoffed with a heartiness which, while it shocked, almost gained men's respect. A cheerless, unhelped, unfathered life like this, in youth, teaches, irresistibly, sometimes, a self-reliance which dethrones all other help or care. He enjoyed society, for he was the merriest of men; but he acquired no position by fawning or obsequiousness. Among his comrades and chosen associates he held his place by divine right at the front in every encounter of wit,—the readiest, and keenest, and shrewdest tongue among them all. His drollery was his own, inimitable; and when he gave it vent, no matter if a graveyard were his audience, it had to laugh. But beneath the fun was shrewd insight into the ways of men, the keenest dissection of motive, the profoundest analysis of character. Woe to the masquerader in honor, virtue, or religion when Frank Moore "went for his scalp"! But he had higher qualities than these. Oratorical powers he had, which, with his other gifts, and a different sphere, would have paved his way to eminence. He was masculine, rugged, strong, and keen withal, in every manifestation of intellect and character. Higher culture in those earlier years might have made for him a more public and eminent career, but without it his life was a success, which may encourage every young man, however orphaned, unfriended, unschooled, and poor.

Mr. Moore was born in Colebrook, Conn., in the year 1827, and was buried in the "New Burial-Ground" in Winsted in the spring of 1879. His wife, who survives him, was Maria Roberts, of North Colebrook; and she, with their only living son, Alfred E., who came to his majority a few weeks after his father's death, continues the business which the husband and father so prosperously and profitably built up and left to them.

CHARLES COOK.

The subject of this sketch, a leading manufacturer in Winsted, and one of the oldest in the State, was born in Winsted, Oct. 15, 1815. He was educated at the common schools, and began life as a member of the firm of R. Cook & Sons, iron and axle manufacturers, the firm being composed of Reuben Cook and his two sons, Charles and John R. This business was commenced in 1811, and the firm is the oldest in the country that is still doing business without change of name. (For detailed history of this establishment see history of Winsted, elsewhere in this work.)

At the beginning of business the firm employed about eight men, and at the present time forty are employed. They use in the manufacture from forty to fifty tons of iron per month, thirty to forty tons of which is bar iron. They have received various awards for the superior excellence of their goods, the last being from the International Exhibition at Sydney, Australia. Shipments are made throughout the country, and they have lately (February, 1881) received an order for axles from Henzada, British India.

Sept. 28, 1838, Charles Cook united in marriage with Mary Jane Lewis, of Suffield, Conn., and has one son living, Rollin Hillyer. Politically he was an Old-Line Whig, has lately voted the Republican ticket, and attends the First Congregational Church in Winsted. He was warden of the borough of Winsted in 1866–68. Mr. Cook is an enterprising, public-spirited man, and has been active in all measures tending to advance the interests of Winsted, or the locality in which he resides.

Charles Cook

EUGENE POTTER.

The subject of this sketch, who is now a leading manufacturer in the village of West Winsted, was born in the town of Washington, Litchfield Co., Conn., Aug. 7, 1838, where he remained until six years of age, when he removed with his parents to Millerton, Dutchess Co., N. Y. He was educated at the common schools, and at the age of eighteen came to this town as clerk for the old firm of Beardsley & Alvord. He remained with this firm until 1861, when he removed to Lexington, Mich., and entered the establishment of Woods, Nims & Co. as a clerk, in which capacity he officiated until 1869. He then established himself in the mercantile business in Lexington, under the firm-name of Potter & Wixson. Their store was destroyed

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

J. H. Norton

JOSEPH H. NORTON was born in Tolland, Mass., March 29, 1814. Like many of the leading business men of to-day, he was reared on a farm and educated at the common schools. At the age of fifteen years he engaged as a farm laborer, and worked six months, for the meagre compensation of six dollars per month, for his uncle. He subsequently, for four seasons, tended a carding-machine and made linseed oil, in East Otis village, with an uncle, Joseph Hunt. In 1835 he went as clerk in the store of Lucius Gibbs, at East Otis, where he remained but a short time, and then entered the employ of Isaac Miller, of West Granville, as a salesman throughout the country for silverware and jewelry, receiving as compensation one hundred and fifty dollars per year. The following year he was paid four hundred and eighty dollars. He subsequently traveled one year for another firm, and finally went into the same business for himself, which he conducted until December, 1841, when he purchased the mercantile establishment of Pomeroy & Norton, at New Boston. He conducted this business about sixteen years with marked success. While here he served as selectman, assessor, and for a number of years was postmaster. Having been solicited by a number of the leading business men of Winsted to come here and take the management of the Winsted Manufacturing Company, he finally accepted. Sept. 4, 1862, entered upon his duties as agent, secretary, and treasurer of the establishment, which positions he has held to the present time, except that of secretary, his son, Allen H., having been secretary for the past few years. This is one of the largest scythe manufactories in this country, and it is not too much to say that its present prosperity is largely due to the excellent management of Mr. Norton. He is a director in the Hurlbut National Bank, and has been for years; is also a director in the Mechanics' Savings-Bank, and president of the Winsted Real-Estate Company.

Politically he is a Republican, and was formerly a Whig. He attends the Congregational Church.

March 7, 1849, he united in marriage with Maria L. Hawley, a native of Sandisfield, Mass. They have had two children, one son and a daughter,—Allen H., secretary of the Winsted Manufacturing Company, and Mary A., deceased.

Mr. Norton is a public-spirited citizen, and has done much to build up and advance the interests of the village of Winsted.

Eugene Potter

W. F. Hatch

Wm J. Hubbert

by fire in 1871, whereupon Mr. Potter closed out the business and returned to Winsted, and in the year 1874 commenced the manufacture of sewing silk, under the name of the Winsted Silk Company, which is now in successful operation, and is the only industry of its kind in this manufacturing town. It employs fifty persons, and has capacity for the manufacture of about fifteen thousand six hundred pounds annually. Mr. Potter is one of the progressive young business men of the town, and, in addition to the manufacturing of silk, is also interested in the Empire Knife Company and the Beardsley Scythe Company.

Oct. 13, 1868, he united in marriage with Sarah H., daughter of the late Elliot Beardsley. A son, Lawrence W., was born April 4, 1871. Mrs. Potter died May 2, 1871.

Sept. 15, 1875, Mr. Potter married Florence Breckenridge, and they have a daughter, Louise E., born Feb. 17, 1877. Politically he is a Republican, and a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

WILLIAM FRANKLIN HATCH.

William Franklin Hatch, son of Capt. Moses Hatch of Revolutionary fame, was born March 4, 1801, at the south end of Long Lake. He received a common and academic school education, both at home and abroad. He had a decided musical talent, both vocal and instrumental. When quite a young man was the originator of the first band of music organized in town, consisting of seventeen pieces, he playing the most difficult instruments. Some twenty years

> "He boomed the big drum on training days
> And led the Sabbath song of praise."

He was also pupil in the first Sabbath-school organized in town, and in after-years an earnest superintendent, who first carried it successfully through the winter season.

Mr. Hatch married, Sept. 20, 1832, Miss Emeline Baldwin, of Winsted, when he purchased and settled on a farm in Winchester Centre, where he remained a few years, then sold and purchased the "Little Lake Place," near Winsted, where under his systematic and thorough cultivation he brought it to a condition to receive the first premium at the agricultural fair. He was long regarded a leading agriculturist of this region; was for many years secretary and treasurer of the Greenwoods Agricultural Society. In the best and most numerous varieties of choice fruit he took the lead. Cheese was also a specialty. He was the first to introduce the manufacture of English cheese in this country, which took high rank in the markets, selling twenty-seven cents per pound; when common, only ten cents. In every department of agriculture he endeavored to excel, thus elevating the standard of agricultural science. Mr. Hatch was the founder of the ice business in Winsted, which he successfully conducted as a wholesale and retail dealer for nearly thirty years, and still has an interest in it.

In politics he is a staunch Republican; never seeking office, still, he has been chosen to fill many offices of trust, and has discharged these duties with credit to himself and satisfaction to all. Mr. Hatch has been associated with all temperance movements from his youth to the present time, and has never used tobacco in any form. Mr. Hatch is a consistent Christian, ever foremost in all movements tending to advance the moral and religious interest of the town. He has been a member of the Second Church of Winsted since its organization; previously of the First Church. Married (2d) Miss Elizabeth Eells, of Clinton, N. Y., Sept. 20, 1871.

Kind and considerate in all his intercourse with his fellow-citizens, retiring in his disposition, punctual and accurate in all his dealings, possessed of a strong mind, mature judgment, and decided piety, these, combined with energy and great perseverance, gained for him a handsome competency, which now at even-tide, in the full enjoyment of all his faculties, blessed with the comforts of a happy home, where loving hands minister to him, and the universal esteem and respect by which he is held by the people of his native town, make his last days his best days.

TIMOTHY HULBERT.

Timothy Hulbert was born in Paulet, Vt., Nov. 2, 1817. Soon after his parents removed to Crown Point, N. Y., where they remained until young Hulbert was four years of age. From this time until he was fifteen years old he lived with an uncle, Mr. Benjamin Bateman, a resident of Rutland, Vt., receiving the advantages of a common-school education only.

While yet a mere lad—at the age of fifteen—he commenced working in the forge of Allen Panfield, at Crown Point, where he remained three years, and then went to Sutherland Falls, Vt., where he stayed about one year in the forge owned by Mr. Slawson, of Rutland. He then located in South Lee, Mass., where he remained about ten years, and then came to New Hartford, in this county, and two years later to Winsted, where he remained in active business until his death, which occurred June 15, 1873.

Upon his removal to Winsted he established himself in business in a forge standing on the present site of R. Cook & Sons' axle-works, and a year or two later in the forge now owned and operated by the Hulbert Iron Company.

In 1838, while residing at South Lee, he united in marriage with Ruth L. Kelley, of Brandon, Vt., and their family was as follows: Laura J., Sarah L., Lucinda S., Walter, and Robert S. Mr. Hulbert united with the Congregational Church in his eighteenth year, and remained a devoted member of the church until death. He was a man of scrupulous integrity, and was a consistent Christian. Politically he was a Republican.

He always labored to advance the moral and religious as well as the material interests of Winsted, and was one of the most active and earnest workers in the cause of temperance.

The following tribute to the memory of this worthy citizen appeared in the Winsted Herald: "Probably no man," says the Herald, "that ever lived in this town has commanded a larger or more justly deserved esteem than he whose death we are this week called on to record. A prominent business man among us for twenty years past, his name had come to be a synonym for honesty,—not that selfish honesty which contents itself with a mere compliance with human law, but that inward and real integrity which is enjoined by the doctrine of the Lord Jesus Christ, whose disciple he professes to be. Active in the cause of temperance, contributing not only of his money, but also of his labors and example, in every good work, his life has been a continual blessing to his fellowmen, and his record is on high."

EDWARD MANCHESTER.

The subject of this sketch was born in Tolland, Mass., Jan. 30, 1831. He was reared on the paternal acres in Tolland, and was educated in his native town and in Winsted. He was one of the first who attended the school in the basement of the Episcopal church, which was conducted by his uncle, the Rev. Jonathan Coe, then rector of the parish. This was a school of considerable celebrity at the time.

EDWARD MANCHESTER.

He was reared in the ennobling occupation of farming, and in 1857 came to Winsted and engaged his services to an aunt, Mrs. Col. N. D. Coe, who then occupied the home farm now owned by himself. In the following year, in company with his brother Elbert, he opened a grocery and meat market on the site of the present store of Mr. Barnes. These brothers continued here about one year, when they purchased the farm mentioned above, then in possession of their aunt, and soon after Elbert sold his interest to Edward, who has since remained there, gradually increasing his possessions, until now he is the owner of five hundred and forty acres of excellent land lying contiguous to the thriving village of Winsted. He became from the first a progressive agriculturist, and has kept abreast with the rapid strides made during the past twenty-five years in agricultural science. He makes a specialty of milk, and of the manufacture of a superior quality of butter.

Mr. Manchester has ever manifested a praiseworthy interest in all matters tending to elevate the religious, moral, and educational interests of the town, and all just measures for the advancement of the welfare of the people generally have found in him an earnest supporter. He is a leading member in the Methodist Church in Winsted, has been steward a long time, and is at present a trustee. A strong temperance man from youth, he has fought rum at every step. Politically he is a Republican.

March 16, 1859, he united in marriage with Mary Jennie Grant, a native of Norfolk, Conn., who was born July 1, 1839, and their family has consisted of four children, viz., Wilbur Grant, born July 29, 1860; George Elbert, born July 12, 1862; Harry Grant, born Jan. 21, 1868; Irving Edward, July 18, 1870; and Randall Coe, Oct. 7, 1876. He died Aug. 28, 1877.

PROSPECT HILL DAIRY AND CREAMERY FARM.

This celebrated farm includes five hundred and forty acres of land, and lies directly north of the village of West Winsted. It supports at present a herd of seventy-five milch-cows, besides horses and other stock. The cattle are chiefly Ayrshires, and it is the opinion of the proprietor, after a long and careful experience, that the Ayrshire for dairy purposes is best adapted to the hilly lands of Northwestern Connecticut; however, since the establishment of the creamery on the farm the number of Jerseys has been increasing. The soil is a rich gravelly loam, with clay subsoil, and is adapted to fruits, grass, and cereals. The apple yield in 1880 was over three thousand bushels.

The proprietor of the Prospect Hill farm is Edward Manchester, whose ancestors first purchased it in 1783, so that it has been in the family for nearly a century.

Mr. Manchester is a gentleman who unites scientific agriculture to practical experience and hard labor.

The history of this farm is a large and interesting chapter of the history of Winsted. At the beginning of the century it was owned by the great-grandfather

"PROSPECT HILL FARM."
RESIDENCE OF E. MANCHESTER, WEST WINSTED, CONN.

J. T. Boudoin

of the present owner, Ensign Jonathan Coe, known as the father of "Methodism" in Winchester, a man noted for the sturdiness and integrity of his character. That he refused to pay "the priest tax," as it was called, for the support of the Congregational Church pastors, and had his cows sold at auction as a penalty, and that he lodged and fed forty guests at "Quarterly Meeting of the Methodists," were events typical not only of the man but of customs and laws long since passed away. His home was the hotel of Methodists, and especially of Methodist preachers, in those early days. On one occasion, when an aged man, he gathered about him his descendants to the number of seventy-two, and, after having sumptuously fed them at the farm-house, they marched, two and two, old and young, to the Methodist church, where a sermon was preached to them by the celebrated and eccentric Billy Hibbard.

Daniel Coe, son of Ensign Coe, was the next owner of the farm, to whom succeeded his son, Col. N. D. Coe. On June 6, 1859, it was purchased by its present owner, Edward Manchester, who is grandson of Daniel Coe, and one of whose chief pleasures is that the old homestead, now looking younger and finer than ever before, is still a resort for Methodists and Methodist preachers.

Daniel Coe was a local preacher in his denomination, and was noted for the humor and pathos of his sermons and exhortations.

The Manchester family is of English origin, the surname being a local one, and derived from the city of Manchester, England. The first representative in this country was Thomas, who was an inhabitant of New Haven in 1639, the year following the "planting" of the colony. Thomas afterwards, in 1643, settled in Portsmouth, R. I. (on the island of Rhode Island), where he raised a family of four boys and two girls. Of the former was William, born 1654, who, before the breaking out of King Philip's war, or about 1676, had removed across the bay easterly into the present town of Tiverton, R. I., but at that time belonging to Massachusetts, and being within the jurisdiction of Plymouth Colony. In 1679–80 he was one of eight "proprietors" who purchased a tract of land containing some four hundred thousand acres of Plymouth Colony. William was a man of considerable prominence, having filled positions of responsibility and trust of civil and religious natures. His descendants settled in Fall River and Taunton, Mass., and in Little Compton, R. I., which adjoins Tiverton on the south. At Little Compton, March 23, 1757, was born John, sixth in descent from Thomas. While a young man he removed to Tolland, Mass. In 1780 he married Phœbe Steadman, of Newport, R. I. She was the daughter of Samuel Steadman, whose brother, Thomas, married Mary Perry, daughter of Benj. Perry, who was great-grandfather of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, of Lake Erie renown. Wm. Manchester (5), father of John (6), born 1734, married Mary Irish, of Little Compton. She was daughter of John Irish, who married a sister of Col. Benjamin Church, who was prominent in King Philip's war. John (6) raised a large family, boys and girls, and died at Tolland, 1838, aged eighty-one years. He was buried at Colebrook River, Conn., adjoining Tolland. His second son, Shadrach, the seventh in descent from Thomas (1), was born at Tolland, 1798, and is the father of Edward, of Winsted. He married Clarissa Coe, born 1807; she was daughter of Rev. Daniel Coe, born 1783, and is the eighth in descent from Robert Coe, who was born in Norfolk, England, 1596. He emigrated to America at the age of thirty-eight, and settled in Watertown, Mass., and later was a resident of Stamford, Conn., having also lived at Wethersfield. The line from him to Clarissa, mother of Edward, is as follows: Robert (1), John (2), John (3), Robert (4), Jonathan (5), Oliver (6), Jonathan (7), Daniel (8), Clarissa (9), Edward (10). The Manchesters are of tough, hardy stock, many of them having lived to be upwards of eighty years of age, and Edward, born 1695, was one hundred and two at time of death; his wife, Anna Williston, ninety-five.

THERON BRONSON.

Theron Bronson was born March 20, 1809, in Winchester, Conn., in the southwest part of the town, upon a farm which has belonged to the family for eighty years. His father, Isaac Bronson (still spoken of as "Esquire" Bronson by the older people), was a native of Winchester, and after a lifelong residence in the town died in 1849, in his seventy-fourth year. He was an influential citizen, and the largest landowner in the town. After he was seventy years of age he made a public profession of religion, and united with the Congregational Church. His grandfather, Col. Ozias Bronson (or Brownson, as then spelled), a native of Farmington, Conn., settled in this town in 1774, was eleven years selectman, and for three years represented the town in the General Assembly. "He served as a lieutenant and captain of militia in several tours of duty during the Revolution," and was often appointed to attend to public business in various ways. After a life of industry, energy, and thrift, he died in 1810, aged sixty-eight years. He had been a member of the Congregational Church in Winchester for thirty-five years, and it is worthy of remark that, of something over five hundred members of that church since he united with it, more than thirty have been his lineal descendants.

In politics Col. Bronson was a Federalist.

Mr. Bronson's maternal grandfather was Hewitt Hills, for more than twenty years a prominent farmer and trader in the community, and one of a family of peculiar excellence, specially valued in the early history of Winchester. Mr. Hills was an energetic man, of fine appearance, of unusual ability and shrewdness, a little given to change, but generally successful in his undertakings, and never yielding to discouragements.

Sprung from such sturdy stock, Theron Bronson seemed to inherit and personify the best traits of both families, and was, in the true sense of the word, a representative man. His educational advantages were such as the common schools of his time afforded, yet he was a successful teacher for many years. He was large-hearted, clear-headed, frank, and hospitable, a friend to be trusted, and an adviser to be depended on. Cheerful and sanguine always, it seemed to be a principle with him that if no way to success could be found one could be made, and he could make it.

In trade, in stock-dealing, and in the purchase and shipment of dairy products, he so managed as to benefit those who dealt with him as well as gain a competence for himself. In every work for the public good he was the first to enlist, and gave unsparingly of time and money for its accomplishment. To his energetic and judicious leadership was largely due the success of the Winchester centennial celebration in 1871.

In middle life he became personally interested in the subject of religion, and united with the Congregational Church in 1851. As was to be expected, he carried his whole-heartedness into his religion, was regularly at the prayer-meeting, consistent in his life, never aiming at publicity, and liberal in his benefactions, for many years paying one-fifth or more of the minister's salary in his own village. His religion bore the stamp of unswerving integrity.

He represented the town in the State Legislature in 1849, and was for twenty years a justice of the peace. With a mind of unusual acuteness and discrimination, and an early taste for the study of law, as well as from the experience gained in extensive and varied business operations, he became thoroughly versed in legal forms, and was in the habit of performing gratuitously a large amount of such work in the community, and was always the friend and trusted adviser of those in trouble.

He was a Democrat until Lincoln's administration, at which time, believing that the interests of the country demanded it, he voted with the Republican party, and afterwards until his death, Jan. 20, 1873.

He was married July 7, 1841, to Maria R. Munsill, of Torrington, Conn. Their children are Edward H., born July 31, 1842; Henry T., born Jan. 1, 1845, died Nov. 25, 1866; Wilbur M., born June 9, 1848; Maria Louisa, born Jan. 31, 1853, died Feb. 28, 1856; Elliot B., born Aug. 7, 1858; Carrie M., born Jan. 17, 1863.

Wilbur M. married Susan S. Nash, June 9, 1880.

Business of sons: dealers in lumber, dairy produce, stock, etc.

We copy from the Winsted Herald the following:

"Died at Winchester Centre, on the 20th of January, 1873, Theron Bronson, Esq., aged sixty-three years.

"Mr. Bronson, by birth, ancestry, lifelong residence, and active business, has been identified with all the interests of the town, and especially with those of the parish of his residence.

"With activity, energy, and endurance rarely equaled, he embarked in business at an early age, and prosecuted it in various forms, with increasing ardor, until the very close of his useful and exemplary life. As a farmer and stock-dealer he became by far the largest land-owner in the town, while as a trader and produce-dealer he contributed largely to the prosperity of the community around him. His manly form and cheerful visage are indelibly impressed on the memory of a wide-spread circle of friends and acquaintances.

"When to these characteristics are added a kind and generous heart and liberal hand, unquestioned integrity, large public spirit and private benevolence, and a pure Christian life, we have a man whose memory will be greatly cherished, and whose loss will be deplored long after his mortal remains shall have mingled with kindred dust."

HENRY HUNGERFORD DRAKE.

Henry Hungerford Drake was born Feb. 21, 1833. He studied medicine with Harvey B. Steele, M.D., of Winsted, in 1851, '52, and '53, attending lectures at the Eclectic Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1854; was with Dr. Steele from July, 1854, to October, 1858. Has been mail-messenger, assistant postmaster, book-keeper for various manufactories, insurance agent, clerk and treasurer of the borough of Winsted since May, 1869, and water commissioner since May, 1872, and elected in May, 1881, for the fourth successive term of three years. Had the entire charge of the water-works for more than six successive years to June, 1879. Has held the office of registrar of voters since the office was created in 1860, and was re-elected school visitor October, 1880, for three years, besides various other local positions of trust. May 18, 1862, he married Mariam Roberts, who was born in Colebrook, Conn., Sept. 7, 1840. They have two children,—George F. and Anna B.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

William Lawrence, son of Grove Lawrence, formerly of Litchfield County, was born in Paris, N. Y., Jan. 28, 1801. His father died when he was four years old; he was then adopted by an aunt, the wife of Joseph Battell, who lived at Norfolk, Conn., and was engaged in the mercantile business. His adopted father took him into the store when quite young, and he soon became a partner. On the 18th of August, 1830, Mr. Lawrence married Caroline Rockwell, of Winsted.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE.

RESIDENCE OF L.S. NASH, WINCHESTER, CONN.

He continued in the store until 1848, when, owing to ill health, he was obliged to give up his business, and removed to Northampton, Mass., where he remained until his death, which occurred Feb. 22, 1867. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence had brought into their family by adoption a nephew, William Lawrence Baker, aged one year, born at Amherst, Mass., Oct. 5, 1839. At a proper age he joined the regular army as second lieutenant, and soon became by promotion first lieutenant. He was in active service during the late war, and fell at the battle of Antietam, on the 17th of September, 1862.

CHAPTER XX.

BARKHAMSTED.*

EARLY HISTORY.

THE territory now embraced in Barkhamsted was included in the "Western grant," made by the colony of Connecticut in trust to the towns of Hartford and Windsor in 1686. After the division of these lands between the colony and the proprietors of Hartford and Windsor, in 1726, by a partition deed between the two towns, dated February, 1732, Barkhamsted, Torrington, West Harwinton, and Colebrook fell to the share of the Windsor patentees. Barkhamsted, which contained by estimation twenty thousand five hundred and thirty-one acres, was divided among one hundred and eight tax-payers of Windsor on the list of 1720. The town was named Barkhamsted by an act of the General Assembly in May, 1732,† and in January, 1733, the proprietors held their first meeting at "ye old society meeting-house in Windsor," when Henry Allyn was chosen proprietors' clerk.

During the summer of 1733 a committee of four was sent from Windsor to view the land, and to lay out the first division into home-lots. This division lay between the branches of the river, and eastward as far as Simsbury bounds, with one tier of lots west of the west branch of the river, the proprietors reserving two fifty-acre lots near the centre of the town and Mast Swamp. These lots were drawn by the proprietors in July, 1733, in the proportion of one acre to the pound on each man's list. At the same time highways were laid out, one, ten rods wide, between the branches of the river, beginning at the line between Barkhamsted and New Hartford, about one hundred and twenty rods eastward of the West Branch, running northward to the boundary of the township. From this highway several others were laid out east and west. There was also a highway four rods wide next to the Simsbury line, and reservations for highways along the banks of the river branches. The old North country road over Wallen's Hill was cleared through Barkhamsted in 1760, the Farmington River turnpike between 1780–90, and the Greenwoods turnpike in 1800.

The new township was a source of expense and trouble, and but little revenue, to its proprietors for forty years. Lands found few purchasers, and the country was too rugged and barren to invite settlers. The principal matters taken up in proprietors' meetings during this interval were the prosecution of trespassers convicted of cutting, felling, disposing of, or carrying away wood or timber, and the defense of the border line against encroachments from Simsbury, in which Barkhamsted made common cause with New Hartford. The committees who attended to these matters were paid by sales of timber or undivided lands of the proprietors, and the highways were cleared by sales of the timber growing thereon, funds in the treasury being low.

In 1753 the remainder of the lands in the township were divided, exclusive of the convenient mill-privileges, which were to be disposed of separately, and drawn by the original proprietors or their heirs, in the same proportion as the first division. Mast Swamp, and other spruce timber-land of equal value, was a division by itself, in which every proprietor had a share. The same year the proprietors appointed Stephen Chub agent to petition the General Assembly to annex Barkhamsted to Hartford County.

A tract of land remaining in the last division after every proprietor had drawn his proportion was divided into five lots of fifty acres each, and sold or leased for nine hundred and ninety-nine years to pay the committee and other charges.

In 1792 a committee was appointed to sell or lease for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, or a shorter term, all mill-places belonging to the proprietors, "after said sail hath been advertised in Hudson & Goodwin's newspaper three weeks."

EARLY SETTLERS.

It has been the received opinion that Pelatiah Allyn was the first white settler in Barkhamsted, and the date of his settlement has been fixed at 1746. Careful study of the records of Barkhamsted and New Hartford proves that this must be accepted with some modifications. Pelatiah Allyn, of Windsor, deeded to his son Pelatiah lands in Barkhamsted as early as 1739, but the first mention of Pelatiah Allyn as being "of Barkhamsted" is in 1751, when he is so designated in an appointment from the proprietors at Windsor. The records of New Hartford show that Pelatiah Allyn was a payer of poll and land taxes in that town from 1743 to 1755. He married, in 1750, Sarah Moody, of New Hartford, and his first child was born and baptized in that town. The probabilities seem to be that he came from Windsor to view his new estates soon after they were deeded him by his father, but,

* By Capt. Henry R. Jones, United States army, retired.

† There has been much question as to the origin of the name. The old spelling was "Berkhempsted," and the theory has been advanced that some of the Windsor proprietors may have come from the English town of that name.

thinking it a lonely outlook for a home, settled himself in New Hartford, and cleared his plantation in Barkhamsted, just across the line, at his leisure, building himself a hut for occasional shelter, not removing thither with his family until 1756, when his name disappears from the New Hartford lists. He owned several hundred acres, extending from the East to the West Branches of the Tunxis, much of which he received as compensation for attending to the Barkhamsted interests of the proprietors at Windsor. He lived just across the line from New Hartford, on the farm now owned by the heirs of John Cruess; he died in 1783, aged seventy. His son Pelatiah, born in New Hartford in 1755, died in 1815, and is buried in the Centre burying-ground.

Stephen Chub purchased lands in Barkhamsted in 1743, and soon after occupied them, as his name is mentioned in 1747 as being "of Barkhamsted," previous to that of Pelatiah Allyn. He removed to New Hartford in 1755, when he purchased lands on Town Hill, and worked at his trade of a blacksmith.

Israel Jones, from Enfield, is credited with having settled in the northeast part of the town in 1759, where his descendant, Deacon Edwin P. Jones, now lives. Stephen Chub having previously removed to New Hartford, the historic claim may with propriety be sustained,—that Israel Jones was the second permanent white settler.

There seems to have been some flaw in the early titles and leases given to settlers, as in 1788 a committee were especially appointed to adjust claims and proprietors' accounts. Israel Jones' earliest deed and lease on record bear date of 1771, twelve years after his accredited settlement in the town, where he must have made immediate purchases or lease of land, as he was a man of comfortable means, and an excellent citizen, identified with promoting the interests of the town until his death, in December, 1798. He was buried in the East Hartland graveyard.

Prominent among other early settlers were William Austin, Jonathan King, and John Norton, from Suffield; Amos Case, from Simsbury; John Ives, from Hamden; Daniel, William, and Gad Rexford, from New Haven; Joseph Shepherd, from Hartford; and Joseph Wilder, from East Haddam.

Most of these settled on Centre Hill; those who followed came from various places throughout the State, and were thinly scattered over the different portions of the town.

Much of the unhappy spirit of discord which prevailed in church and town affairs in after-years was doubtless due to this fact,—that the first settlers were linked together by no ties of blood or association.

Simon Baxter, who bought and sold large tracts of land in the town, was a resident of Barkhamsted for a few years; he was a Tory, and during the Revolutionary war joined the the army of Burgoyne.

Thomas Goss, who was executed at Litchfield for the murder of his wife in 1785, was a resident of Barkhamsted, where he purchased land as early as 1762.

In 1771 there were but twenty families in town. In 1774 the inhabitants, who had increased to about forty families, besides "sundry young men who were freeholders," petitioned the General Assembly that they might be incorporated and granted town privileges, that they might give better encouragement to the interests of religion, education, and good order, and have authority to suppress vice and immorality in their midst. This petition was negatived, and the town was not incorporated until 1779.

In 1780 the following memorial was presented to the General Assembly, which so graphically sets forth the poverty of the struggling town that it is given herewith, having been copied from the State archives at Hartford:

"To ye honorable General Assembly now sitting:

"The memorialists of ye inhabitants of Barkhampstead humbly showeth, That your memorialists have been called upon by order of your honors to make return of their lists,

"Whereas they beg leave to observe that said Town has been but lately and is now but thinly settled, that ye inhabitants are in general very poor and low, and many of them have neither land or stock of their own, but live entirely upon hire, both as to land and cattle, which yet they are obliged to put into ye list. That said land is very rough and heavy timbered; that ye whole amount of their list is but small, a very considerable part of which arises from wild land. That said town (with a small part of Winchester) is constituted into two distinct societies, in which, by reason of ye poverty of the inhabitants, there is neither minister, meeting-house, nor school-house. That they are now about to build meeting-houses, etc., and settling ministers. That they have been, and still are, at great expense in purchasing and making necessary highways. That most of said inhabitants are in ye younger part of life, and have numerous families of small children, which is as much as they can possibly do to support. That there is not more than one man in said Town who can be said with truth to be aforehand, and he is greatly burdened by liberally relieving ye necessities of ye needy and distressed. That the circumstances of said inhabitants are such that they are not only unable to bear a part of ye public taxes, but even to pay their own internal taxes, without distressing their families, and especially as there is not, nor ever has been, a sufficient quantity of grain raised in said Town for ye use of ye inhabitants. Wherefore they humbly pray your honors to excuse them from ye payment of any State taxes for ye present, or in some other way grant them relief, and they, as in duty bound, shall pray, etc.

"Dated at Hartford this 24th day of October, 1780.

"JOSEPH WILDER, Agent.

"In the Lower House—The prayer of this memorial is granted and liberty of a bill in form, etc.

"Test—W. WILLIAMS, Clerk.

"Concurred in the Upper House.

"Test—GEORGE WYLLYS, Sec."

Accompanying this was a true list of the polls and estate of the inhabitants of the town:

	£	s.	d.
Total of residents	3100	1	7
" " non-residents	250	2	0
Sum total of foregoing list	3351	0	7

"Test { JAMES WEED, JR., / ELI HOLCOMB, } Listers."

Resolution excusing them passed both houses, October, 1780.

DESCRIPTIVE.

Barkhamsted is bounded north by Hartland, east by Canton and Granby, south by New Hartford, and west by Winchester. It is five miles in extent from north to south, and about eight miles from east to west, as surveyed for Clark's map of Litchfield County in 1859. The surface of the town is rugged and mountainous, intersected by two high granite mountain ranges, some of the steeps and declivities of which are inaccessible. Much of the soil is stony and unfit for tillage, but along the streams are fertile meadows, and some excellent farms have been by enterprise cleared on plateaus and elevated ground. There are no mineral productions of any note; small quantities of iron ore and strata of limestone have been discovered within the town. The forests were the primeval wealth of the town.

Wild animals—wolves, bears, panthers, and catamounts—found coverts and lurking-places on the unfrequented mountain-sides. Rev. Osias Eels, the first minister in town, in a letter to Rev. Benjamin Trumbull, the historian (dated 1805), from which some valuable information has been gathered for this sketch, mentions a stone hunting-lodge in the northeast part of the town, built by huntsmen to protect them in the night from wolves and bears. Panthers and catamounts have been killed in the town at a comparatively recent date.

INDIANS.

There was never any permanent settlement of the Tunxis Indians in Barkhamsted, though there is no doubt that occasional raids were made upon the early settlers in the southern part of the town by those resident in New Hartford. Apocryphal stories have been told of Pelatiah Allyn's early adventures with Indians, and of bloody contests between hostile tribes within the town, which will not bear investigation, and have an extremely thin foundation even in tradition. About a mile south of the present village of Riverton was formerly a small settlement of the Narragansett Indians. They are said to have gone thither about 1779, and purchased two hundred acres of land. Here was the famous Barkhamsted light-house, concerning which much that is purely imaginary has been said and written. Perhaps the most authentic account of the origin of the "light-house" is found in the following extract from the centennial address of Mr. William Wallace Lee, a native of Barkhamsted, who has devoted much study to historical matters, and has had the best of opportunity for such study:

"James Chaugham was a Narragansett Indian, a native of Block Island. While yet a young man he adopted the manners and customs of the whites, and came to Wethersfield, where he married a white woman, Molly Barker by name, who had been disappointed by parental authority interfering to prevent a union with the man of her choice. She gave out that she would marry the first man that offered, white or black. . . . I suppose they were married about 1740; they left Wethersfield, came over to Farmington, followed up the Tunxis River until they found a resting-place on the flat about a mile south of Riverton, on the east, or rather northeast, side of the river, and there made a clearing and reared quite a family. . . . Chaugham died about 1800, and his wife in 1820, the latter being understood to be one hundred and five years old. Chaugham's children moved from this vicinity at an early age.* He was a good citizen, and lived an honest life. The talk about his being an Indian chief in paint, with plumes, tomahawk, and scalping-knife, is all bosh.

"A poor road, as were most of them then, led past Chaugham's dwelling; the river was forded below his house, at the south end of the plot, and again at the north end. When the Farmington River turnpike was laid out, it went past his log house. New Hartford was the end of the route, and the stopping-place for the night. Coming from the north, the stages would pass by his door along in the evening, especially in the fall of the year. The drivers would recognize it at once, and so, knowing how much farther they had to go, fell into the habit of using the terms, 'We are within four miles of port,—there is the light-house.' This phrase was taken up by the traveling public, as well as the townspeople, and carried far and wide."

* We do not think Mr. Lee meant that all of Chaugham's eight children removed, for their descendants, by the names of Wilson, Elwell, and Jacklin, were long residents of this vicinity.

From a letter of Mr. Lee is gathered an account of the Indian burying-ground in Barkhamsted:

"Just a little to the south of the old light-house site, where the turnpike makes a sharp bend, on the left hand above the road, is a small plateau or table-land, where is buried Chaugham, with some forty or fifty of what were known as the 'Light-house' tribe. There are no monuments, but a few rough stones to mark the graves. It was quite heavily overgrown with young pines, but within the past few years they have been cut off, and the Indian burying-ground now looks bare and desolate."

CHAPTER XXI.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued).

MANUFACTURING INTERESTS.

THE first mill-privilege utilized in Barkhamsted seems to have been on Morgan River, near Pleasant Valley. In the old proprietors' book it is recorded that a meeting was called in May, 1761, among other purposes, "To see if the Proprietors will give liberty to any of the Proprietors to set up a saw-mill upon Morgan River, either by sale of the place or by a lease for any certain number of years." At this meeting it was voted to lease out this mill-place "for the space of eleven years from the time of leasing, which must be accomplished within six weeks." Capt. Benjamin Griswold and Henry Allyn were appointed a committee to lease out said mill-place for said term. When this mill-place was actually leased and the mill built does not appear, but a saw-mill has been in operation there since the memory of man. Somewhat earlier than the year 1800 a saw-mill upon this site was owned by Pelatiah Allyn and Asa Gilbert, of Barkhamsted, and Jonathan Marsh, of New Hartford. Whether this was the mill built under the original lease is not certain. It is probable that it was a second mill. Years later it was rebuilt by Capt. Alanson Merrell, Uriel Spencer, and Edward Marsh, but it is said the wheel and power were never as good as the previous one. This mill was formerly used to a great extent by New Hartford people. To the above Elias Root succeeded in the ownership. The property is now owned and occupied by E. A. Rogers, who came from Tyringham, Mass., in 1877, purchased the property, and immediately commenced the manufacture of hay-rakes. This industry is carried on in addition to the general saw-mill business, which is continued. Mr. Rogers employs five hands, and turns off three thousand rakes per annum, which he exports to different portions of Europe and Australia. This is still considered an excellent water-power.

But a few rods below this establishment is Cannon's forge, the hammers of which are now kept tripping by the fourth generation from the original founder. About the year 1812, Elijah Cannon came from Southwick, Mass., and built the house that is now, with its surroundings, called the Cannon homestead. In 1814 he built a trip-hammer shop, located near the mouth of Morgan River, for the manufacturing of axes, scythes, and edge-tools of every description. In 1836 his son, Elijah C. Cannon, became interested in the business, which partnership continued until 1850, when they dissolved, the son purchasing the forge property, and continuing the business solely upon his own account. In 1843 he built himself the house now standing near the old site. This house is still owned and occupied by his widow.

At the time of the dissolution of partnership between Elijah Cannon and his son, Mr. Cannon the elder built another dam and shop about twenty rods above on the same stream, and near the house built by him in 1812. Here he continued the old business until he died.

At the lower forge Elijah C. Cannon was succeeded by his son, E. Dwight Cannon, who had been employed by his father in the trade. In 1869 the latter purchased the upper forge property and homestead, and now continues, assisted by his son, the manufacture of crow-bars, sleigh-shoes, light bar iron, and steel. The lower shop and privilege have been purchased by the Greenwoods Company of New Hartford. The property having been rendered nearly valueless as a water-power by the raising of the dam of the latter company, a mile and a quarter below, the shop has been abandoned, and has gone to ruin.

About a mile above the mouth of Morgan River, on the West Branch of the Farmington River, a saw-mill was built by Eben Woodruff in 1814. Mr. Woodruff, who came to Pleasant Valley about this time, was a religious man, and has been called the father of Methodism in that locality. He was a very long-bodied man, and people used to say he was taller when he sat down than when he stood up. He continued the saw-mill for many years, and then sold out to Julius C. Pratt.

This saw-mill and property was purchased by Albert Baker, of Canaan, in 1852. Mr. Baker immediately added to the saw-mill a large shop, and commenced the manufacture of doors, sash, and blinds. The old saw-mill was continued about three years after Mr. Baker purchased the property, when it was taken down, and in its place has been built another shop, rendered necessary by the continual increase of business. In 1867, Mr. Baker took into partnership his two sons, George A. and John I., and continued the business under the firm-name of A. Baker & Sons. They now employ from six to eight men. Nov. 29, 1880, in the shop, John I. Baker was instantly killed. While engaged in turning out an oval moulding, the rapidly-revolving block upon which he was at work flew into pieces, a section of it striking him in the face. His death was a sad blow to his family and the community.

About a mile farther up the river is situated the little hamlet of Youngsdale. In the year 1800, Joshua Youngs, of Farmington, purchased a tract of timber-land on both sides of the Farmington River, about midway between the north and south boundaries of the town; adjoining lands were bought by him and his heirs until the tract contained some six hundred and fifty acres. His three sons, Thomas, Constant, and John, came into possession upon the decease of their father, holding it in common and undivided, and receiving very little income from it, until 1836, at which time Daniel and Constant Youngs, sons of Constant, then deceased, and grandsons of the first-named purchaser, removed from Farmington and located upon the tract, about one mile north of the bridge at Pleasant Valley. Here they constructed a dam across the river, and built a saw-mill and shop, for the purpose of preparing the timber for market, making, among other things, shingles, bedsteads, chair stock, stock for plate-locks, clothes-pins, etc., employing several men. In 1848, their brother, Edward J., commenced the manufacture of saw-handles in a part of the shop, employing six to eight men. In 1851 Constant sold his interest in the business to his brother Daniel, and afterwards removed to Norfolk, where he died (drowned) in 1879. In 1858, Daniel and Edward J. Youngs put their businesses together under the firm-name of D. & E. J. Youngs, and have occupied the premises until the present time, having extended their business, using not only timber from their own land, but buying largely from others.

Seth H., Hart, and Cornwall Doolittle, natives of Wallingford, came to Pleasant Valley from Middletown in November, 1830, and built the carriage-factory in that village. They were mechanics themselves, one being a blacksmith, one a painter, and the other a wagon-maker, and knew how to do every branch of the business. At first they employed but five or six men, yet these, with themselves, and all working fifteen hours for a day's labor, were able to turn off a large amount of work.

April 6, 1860, the buildings of this establishment were destroyed by fire, but immediately rebuilt on a larger scale, and business continued. Business was now driving, and more than twenty men were employed. A large amount of the product of this manufactory was sent West and South. Seth H. having died in 1853, the remaining brothers continued the business thereafter, under the firm-name of H. & C. Doolittle, until early in 1869, when they sold out to John H. Markham, of New Hartford.

Mr. Markham continued the business three or four years, when he made an assignment, and the business has never been revived. The property is now owned by the Greenwoods Company of New Hartford, and remains unoccupied. By raising the dam of the latter company, in 1878, the power became very much impaired, and may be considered of no great value as a water privilege.

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

The village of Riverton until the year 1866 was known as Hitchcocksville, deriving the latter name from Lambert Hitchcock, who came from Cheshire in 1818. Before this time the locality had been known as "the forks of the river." Mr. Hitchcock first started a turning-lathe in a saw-mill where Ward's paper-mill now stands. At this latter he turned out chair materials, which he took to Charleston, S. C., put together, and sold them. The next year he returned, built a two-story shop twenty-five by thirty-six feet, and a dam about thirty rods above the present dam. Near the dam he built a small turning-shop, where he turned and sawed chair materials, which were put together, finished, and painted in a two-story shop which stood near the main street. He now employed from ten to fifteen hands, and the place began to be called "Hitchcock's Mill," the name by natural habit becoming Hitchcocksville. Business increased continually until 1825 and 1826, when he built the large brick shop now occupied by Stephens & Co., and employed from ninety to one hundred men, women, and children. In 1829, Mr. Hitchcock made an assignment of his property, but compromised with his creditors, and, with Arba Alford, continued the business under the firm-name of Hitchcock & Alford. Afterwards, Josiah H. Sage having taken an interest, "Co." was added to the firm-name.

April 1, 1843, Alfred Alford and Sage bought out the business, Mr. Sage selling out in 1845 to Mr. Alford, who continued as sole proprietor until 1848, when the whole establishment was destroyed by fire.

The brothers Arba and Alfred Alford immediately rebuilt, and formed a joint stock company known as "The Alford Company," and continued manufacturing chairs until Jan. 1, 1853, when the "Phœnix Company" was formed, and the property was converted into a plane manufactory. Oct. 23, 1861, Alfred Alford bought out the Phœnix Company, and continued the business alone until 1864, when he sold out the entire establishment to Stephens & Co., rule manufacturers, of New Hartford.

This business was started in 1854 by L. C. Stephens and his son, D. H. Stephens, at Pine Meadow, Conn. Five years later, in 1859, the business was removed to New Hartford, Conn., where it was conducted successfully until 1864, when it was taken to Riverton, Conn., where it has since been carried on and largely extended. The old firm of L. C. Stephens & Co. made first-class goods from the start. Both parties were thorough mechanics and inventors, and introduced a variety of labor-saving machines that displaced hand labor, and their goods took a leading position in the market at once, which they have since maintained.

For many years the senior Mr. Stephens divided his time between the factory and the markets, and, being an able man of pleasing address, as well as of strict integrity, influenced large sales, and made hosts of lifelong friends among the business men of the country. His death occurred in 1871.

L. C. Stephens was the inventor and patentee of the useful rule called the "Combination Rule," which embraces a substantial brass-bound foot-rule, a square, plumb, bevel, inclinometer, and drafting scale. This rule is necessarily costly, but has met with a good sale. An old man, now eighty-three years old, has derived from the sale of this instrument support for himself and wife for fifteen years. He was one of the old dry-goods jobbers of Boston forty years ago, but misfortune overtook him, and, having no relatives to aid him in his old age, he has, as he says, "been kept from suffering for the necessaries of life by the sale of this instrument, which he believed was designed by Providence to sustain him in his declining years."

The present proprietor, Mr. D. H. Stephens, became sole owner of the business in 1861, since which time he has designed a great number of labor-saving machines, many of which are models of elegance and utility. Much of his machinery is complicated and costly, and is, almost without an exception, the product of his brain. He has done what can hardly be said of any other manufacturer, for, in addition to managing the details of a constantly-increasing business at home and abroad, he has, as already said, not only designed but made all drafts and patterns for the fine machines that are at work in the various departments of the factory with his own hand, and had them constructed under his personal supervision on the premises. Many of them are patented.

Boxwood, of which rules are made, is imported from Turkey, Russia, Persia, and India.

It is a dense, fine-grained wood, and susceptible of a good finish. Brass, German silver, and ivory are used in the construction of rules.

The business is comparatively limited when compared with many branches of the hardware trade, and, in consequence of the introduction of so much labor-saving machinery, the market is frequently glutted and prices are low. Who would think that a well-made folding-rule, two feet long, one inch wide, and accurately graduated into inches and eighths and sixteenths, could be sold in quantities for ninety cents, and even less, per dozen? When this firm began business, in 1854, the price paid for making this rule, not including the cost of material, was as much as it now brings, and yet the workmen make as good wages now as then. It is impossible to go into the details of rule manufacturing in a short article. Every rule undergoes thirty or forty operations in course of construction, and must when finished be exactly United States standard, and in this establishment all goods that do not come up to a certain standard of excellence are condemned. The goods made by this firm are everywhere recognized as standard goods. They are sold in all parts of the country and Canada, and many are exported.

About the year 1827, Edwin Sturgiss, of Lee, Mass., came to the village and engaged in the marble-cutting business, which he carried on a number of years. The business has been continued by different ones in succession until the present time, Warren Alford being the present proprietor. In its best days this establishment has turned out as much as six thousand dollars in work per annum.

John Ward and his two sons came to Riverton in the year 1836 and built a large calico-print works. Although their factory was just over the Barkhamsted line in the town of Hartland, it was nevertheless within the village, and is identified with its interests. This concern manufactured from two hundred thousand to three hundred thousand dollars worth of goods per year, and employed a large number of hands. In 1851 the firm dissolved, and the business of calico-printing ceased, the property passing into the hands of Michael Ward. From 1851 very little was done with the property until 1878, when the sons of Michael Ward, under the name of Ward Brothers, commenced here the manufacture of paper, making at first about one ton of fine manilla paper daily, but, with increased facilities, are now able to make double that quantity. They receive and ship about two thousand tons of raw and manufactured material yearly.

The scythe-shop in the southern end of the village was built by Williams & Burbank, of Winsted, in 1849. They failed in 1851, when the property was bought by Ezra Doolittle, Michael Ward, Hiram Goodwin, and others. Soon after the purchase of the property a joint stock company was organized and called the "Eagle Company," the organization being perfected July 30, 1853, with a capital of fifteen thousand dollars, since increased to twenty-five thousand dollars. The capacity of the works in 1853 was two thousand dozen scythes annually. In 1869 the works were rebuilt and enlarged to their present capacity, which is eight thousand dozen scythes, corn-knives, hay-knives, and grass-hooks annually.

The officers of the company consist of a board of directors, viz., Hiram Goodwin, M. Ward, E. Bevins, J. Gould; Hon. Hiram Goodwin is president, and Lorin A. Cooke secretary, treasurer, and general agent. H. Goodwin and M. Ward have been in office continuously since the organization of the Eagle Company in 1853. The products of this company are sold to the jobbing trade throughout the country. The goods manufactured are of an excellent quality. The power used is chiefly water from Still River, but to provide against contingencies a steam-engine of about fifty horse-power has been put in, which, with an American turbine-wheel forty-eight inches in diameter, drives the works. The stock used is of Norway iron and English cast steel, imported expressly for the Eagle Company. The shipping-point is Winsted, four miles distant, and the annual tonnage of the company is about nine hundred tons.

The grist-mill directly opposite the Eagle Company's scythe-works was built by Whitfield G. Munson.

It proved unprofitable to him, and the property, after passing through several hands, was purchased by Joseph Gould, the present owner, who has conducted it successfully for about fifteen years. It is said to be one of the best grist-mills in all this section.

After a saw-mill, the next thing to be thought of by a pioneer settlement is a grist-mill. The first intimation of a grist-mill in Barkhamsted is a reference in the old proprietors' records to a grist- and saw-mill owned by Pelatiah Allyn, which stood adjacent to land leased to him by Capt. Israel Jones and Henry Allen, a committee appointed for this purpose in 1772. It is recorded, previous to this, that a committee was appointed to lease out fifty acres, upon which was located "a convenient mill-place." This was to be leased out to the highest bidder, who would give bond for one hundred pounds to oblige himself to set up a good grist-mill upon said lot within two years, providing "that if said mill shall not be kept in good repair for the space of one year at one time, the leased premises to revert back to the lessor again."

The latter offer does not appear to have been accepted, but the former lease to Pelatiah Allyn for nine hundred and ninety-nine years seems to have remained in force, and the saw-mill and grist-mill kept up. This was located at the old privilege, about one hundred rods below William Tiffany's present mill, on Beaver Brook. The old mill is said to have been standing forty years ago and used as a turning-shop.

Tiffany's present mill was built in 1840. It was carried off by a freshet some twelve years ago, and immediately rebuilt. This is one of the leading saw-mills in the town; to it is attached a grist-mill and a land plaster-mill.

One of the most important mill-places in the town is that on the East Branch, for many years known as "Munson's mill." Here a grist-mill was in operation for a long period, and connected with it a saw-mill. Its origin appears difficult to trace to a certainty, though in 1783, at a proprietors' meeting held in Windsor, Capt. Pelatiah Allyn, Capt. Israel Jones, and Henry Allyn were appointed a committee to lease out a mill-place on the East Branch of the river for a term not exceeding fifteen years. This was undoubtedly the Munson's mill site; both grist- and saw-mill are still in successful operation.

Another saw-mill is still running on Morgan River, about half-way from New Hartford to Winsted, on the Albany turnpike. This mill was originally built about 1819, and has passed through several hands.

Some eighteen years ago a saw-mill was built in Riverton, near the Eagle Scythe-Works, which is still in operation and known as Hart's mill. Several other small saw-mills are running in the town.

At different times there have been in the town several tanneries in active operation. Mallory's tannery, on Albany turnpike, near the Winchester line, was successfully carried on for a series of years. There was at one time a tannery in North Hollow, another on Centre Hill.

Bricks have also in former years been manufactured in town, but these enterprises, like the many saw-mills, have gone to decay.

In its early days Barkhamsted was heavily timbered with pine, spruce, oak, hemlock, maple, beech, and chestnut. Ship-builders came from Hartford, Windsor, and other port towns for masts for their vessels, and other ship timber. The many streams afforded abundant mill-privileges, and saw-mills were running night and day for years before the town was incorporated. In this way the forests have been stripped from the lands, which could be more profitably devoted to timber-raising than any other purpose. As the forests disappeared the saw-mills became useless, and, although there have been in the town some forty of these mills in active operation, but about half a dozen are now in existence.

CHAPTER XXII.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued).

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS AND CHURCHES.

WHEN a colony of pioneer settlers have succeeded in building houses, or dwelling-places of any description, they immediately set about organizing themselves into a religious society, and make preparations to build a house in which to meet for divine worship. Exactly when the early settlers of Barkhamsted first held religious meetings seems uncertain, but in a letter written by Rev. Ozias Eells, the first settled pastor in the town, to Rev. Benjamin Trumbull, D.D., the historian, dated Dec. 30, 1805, Mr. Eells says, "The first church that was formed in the town was in Barkhamsted. That was April 20, 1781." Undoubtedly religious meetings were held in the houses of the inhabitants earlier than this date; but how much earlier it seems Rev. Mr. Eells was unable, after careful inquiry, to find out.

This letter, just referred to, and which will be frequently quoted in the present sketch, was written by Rev. Mr. Eells at the request of Dr. Trumbull, who was then preparing his "History of Connecticut," and who, for information relative to the different towns of the State, wrote to clergymen and other intelligent citizens who would be likely to know and willing to give reliable information for the purpose. The original letter is now in Yale College library, among the Trumbull papers, and was copied by the writer through the courtesy of Mr. Addison Van Name, librarian.

In 1783 the proprietors in Windsor voted to give to the society of Barkhamsted the use and improvement of the proprietors' lot lying on or near Centre Hill, on which the stake for the meeting-house is now set, to be used and improved in such a manner as the society shall see fit for the use and benefit of the first minister that shall settle in the work of the ministry in said society, and his successors in the ministry, except so much as may be necessary to build the meeting-house upon, and a place for a burying-yard and parade-ground.

There was some controversy about the location of the first church. The stake was first pitched on the corner opposite the house then owned and occupied by Col. Israel Jones, and in this place, now the garden of W. E. Howd, the first graves were made, thinking, of course, the meeting-house would be erected there. As late as 1846 the graves were plainly traced, but now the plow has obliterated all trace of them, and truly "the dead forgotten lie." The spot upon the hillside west was, however, fixed upon, and the proprietors' lot donated in the vote already quoted was designated as the "meeting-house lot," and is so marked in the old chart of the town, now rapidly going to destruction in the town clerk's office.

The inhabitants of the northeastern portion of the town were dissatisfied with this change in the location of the meeting-house and withdrew, and, as Rev. Mr. Eells states, "about a mile and a half or two miles square was set off to East Hartland society."

In 1784 the work of building the meeting-house was commenced. It was an immense structure for so poor a town; there were not men enough in the society to raise it. Help came from Granby, Simsbury, New Hartford, and other towns to lift the massive timbers of white oak. As soon as it was covered, and for eight years thereafter, it was used in an unfinished condition for religious worship, loose boards placed upon rude benches being the only seats.

In 1792 a determined effort was made to complete the edifice, and to raise funds to accomplish this result a subscription-paper was circulated. This subscription-list is still in existence, and is a curiosity in its way. We herewith subjoin it:

"Whereas our meeting-house in Barkhamsted society, not being at this present time as yet not comfortable to meet in for Divine worship, and it being in the minds of some of the inhabitants to forward the furtherance towards the completion of the said house by subscription, Therefore we, whose names are hereunto set down, with the number, quantity, or measure of each particular specie annexed to his name,—weather-boards, clap-boards, window-frames, glass, nails, hinges. It is always to be understood the timber to be taken from the minister's lot, so called, on which the house standeth. And we, and each of us, as our names are set down with the specie annexed, there to do, upon the truth, fidelity, and trust of a faithful mind, promise to deliver the particular specie, as annexed to our names, at the said meeting-house, to the satisfaction of the committee appointed for that purpose, by the first day of July next coming.

"Dated at Barkhamsted, Nov. 12, A. D. 1792.

"Israel Jones, Jr., 4 pound 10 shillings; Solomon Newell, 4 pound 10 shillings; Pelatiah Allen, 2 pound 10 shillings (in boards); Ephraim Munson, 2 pound 10 shillings (in boards); Asa Jones, 2 pound; Josiah H. Hart, 2 pound 10 shillings (in sashes); Joel Rexford, 2 pound 10 shillings (in boards); James Rexford, 2 pound (in boards); Benjamin Jones, 2 pound (in boards); Aaron Hart, 1 pound 10 shillings (in boards); John Merrell, 2 pound (hooks, nails, etc.); Jonathan Wilder, 1 pound (in labor); Caleb Hough, 1 pound 10 shillings (in labor); Jehial Wilcox, 10 shillings (labor); Richard Adams, 10 shillings (labor); Amos Allen, 4 pound 10 shillings (labor); John Rockwell, 6 shillings (labor); Wait Munson, 3 pound (in team-work); Nathaniel Collins, 1 pound (in labor); Charles Preston, 3 pound (in sawing); Charles Tuttle, 1 pound (in labor); Jonathan Johnson, 1 pound (in labor); John Ives, 2 pound (in neat cattle); Levi Tiffany, 2 pound (in team-work); Ezra Case, 2 pound."

Then the house was completed, and finished in good shape. From the recollections of those who worshiped in the old meeting-house, the following description has been obtained. The house was square and plain, though the worshipers seem to have had aspirations towards a steeple, as in 1828, and again in 1835, unsuccessful efforts were made to raise money by subscription to affix such an appendage. A chimney was built about 1835, as is indicated by a vote appointing a committee to "secure the stove-pipe." This innovation received much opposition from the older members of the society.

The meeting-house fronted the south, and stood within what is now the extreme southern portion of the burying-ground, which was enlarged after the house was removed. There were three sets of double doors, which led into the audience-room, one set each on the south, east, and west sides. There were on the south side nine windows, two on each side of the door and five above. On the east and west sides were five windows, one on each side of the door and three above. On the north or pulpit side were three windows, a large one in the centre and a small one on each side. The pulpit was large and high, and was reached by steps from the west side; a plain board seat was back of the desk for the minister's accommodation. On each side of the pulpit were two pews; the one next the stairs was appropriated to the use of the minister's family. In front of the pulpit was the deacon's seat, with its hanging table. There were three aisles. On each side the broad aisle were six square pews, with seats on three sides. There were two pews on each side of the east and west doors, and two pews on each side of the south door. The stairs were in the southeast and southwest corners. Over each flight of stairs was a large square pew. These were appropriated to the use of colored worshipers. The galleries ran around three sides of the building. These were protected from the gaze of the congregation below by a "breastwork," into which were driven nails for the singers to hang their hats and bonnets on. Front seats in these accommodated the singers, who were all moved into the front gallery in 1823. About this time a bass viol was introduced into the choir to lead the singing, which greatly scandalized some of the older members of the congregation, who plainly inveighed against "fiddlin' in meetin'." Seats and pews in the rear of the galleries were occupied by boys and girls old enough to sit away from their parents.

After 1816 the experiment of selling the pews was several times tried, but the old custom of "seating the house according to age and property" was again adopted after each year's trial of the modern system, and the minister's salary was raised by levying taxes, which, judging from the church records, were extremely hard to collect.

Jan. 24, 1787, Rev. Ozias Eells was ordained minister over the church. He remained in this pastorate until his death, which took place, according to the inscription on his tombstone in the old Centre burying-ground, May 25, 1813, in the fifty-eighth year of his age, and twenty-ninth of his ministry.

Rev. Mr. Eells' successors were as follows: Rev. Elihu Mason, installed March 2, 1814, dismissed April 24, 1816; Rev. Saul Clark, installed Jan. 13, 1819, dismissed February, 1829; Rev. William R. Gould, installed Sept. 25, 1832; Rev. Reuben S. Hazen, installed May 17, 1843.

Very soon after the settlement of Rev. Mr. Hazen, the question of a new meeting-house began to be agitated, meetings were frequently called, and various resolutions were passed and rescinded. The society seemed to be divided into two factions, one in favor of repairing the old house or taking it down and rebuilding on the same spot, the other in favor of changing the location. The matter was hotly agitated for nearly two years. Subscriptions were circulated by both parties. Finally it was agreed that a committee from both parties should take two papers and circulate, allowing those interested to subscribe such amounts as they saw fit towards repairing the old house or rebuilding on the same ground, or towards building a new house upon the hill west of the old site. The latter scheme was the more successful, and finally it was agreed by certain members of the society that they would go forward and build a new meeting-house. This was done, and the present meeting-house on Centre Hill is the result. Those who were devoted to the old place, adjoining the ancient burial-place, resolved not to join in this movement, but continued to worship in the first meeting-house as long as it continued a shelter from the weather; but when the roof had gone to decay, and the entire house needed repairing, it was finally abandoned. Meetings were held for a while in the Universalist church in the Hollow, but the society, weak at best, could not keep up without the support of those who had seceded. The old edifice stood, a sacred landmark of the past, until October, 1865, when it was purchased by the agent of the Greenwoods Scythe Company, in New Hartford, taken down, and its old timbers now form the frame of the scythe-shop warehouse in that village, purchased for the purpose on account of their immense strength.

The new society was organized July 31, 1845, and named the "First Orthodox Congregational Society of Barkhamsted." Thirteen articles of association were adopted, and the roll consisted of thirty-three original members. The slips in the new meetinghouse were first sold Aug. 22, 1845, until the following March 1st. The house had been commenced the fall before, and completed about this time. The Rev. Reuben S. Hazen, who had come from the old into the new church, remained until 1849, when he was dismissed.

No regular pastor was settled over the church after Rev. Mr. Hazen until March, 1861, when Rev. John Elliott was ordained; he remained until January, 1863. Rev. H. N. Gates, from April, 1863, to Dec. 11, 1866; Rev. John R. Freeman, from Sept. 16, 1868, to Sept. 12, 1871. From the last date the pulpit has been supplied by Revs. Henry Gidman, P. T. Holley, and A. B. Peffers, until May 4, 1881, when Rev. J. B. Clarke was ordained.

As early as 1787 there was an Episcopal society well established in Barkhamsted, for on Christmas Day of that year Rev. Jonathan Marsh, of New Hartford, delivered a sermon in Barkhamsted "before the Episcopal society and others convened on that solemn occasion," which sermon was published at the request of his hearers. The society must have been in existence some time before that, probably as early as 1784.

The church in the Hollow, which is still in very good condition, was built by the Episcopalians about 1816. It was but partially finished at that time. The ground was deeded for the purpose by Robert Wilcox to the society. The society was at that time feeble, and unable to finish the building, or to support a minister; in fact, no rector was ever regularly settled over the church. The house being unfinished inside, the congregation for years sat on rude benches.

In 1834, by an agreement entered into at a meeting of the Episcopalians, the Universalists, of whom there were a considerable number in town, were permitted to repair and finish the church, and to own the building and property, in common with the Episcopal society, in proportion to the amount of expenses of repairs as compared with present valuation of church property, fixed upon by a committee of appraisal appointed at said meeting. The property was appraised at two hundred and seventy-five dollars. The Universalists added steeple, bell, and fitted the church into good shape for religious exercises.

The Episcopalians have continued to hold service in this building from time to time, but not regularly. The Universalists have held meetings more regularly, and have employed ministers, generally for a year at a time. Revs. R. O. Williams, James Shingley, W. A. Stickney, W. A. Loveland, and others have at intervals acted as pastors of the church.

The Episcopal Church at Riverton was founded March 2, 1829, with a membership of thirty. It was first called the "Union Church," which name was changed to "St. Paul's" in 1876. The first clergyman was Rev. Mr. Blaisdel, who remained four years. He was succeeded by Rev. W. H. Frisbie, who remained until 1849. Since the latter date there were no regular services in the church until 1872, when Rev. Carlos Linsley took charge, and remained until 1880. At the present time the rector at Winsted officiates at one service every Sunday. July 4, 1879, being the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the church, a semi-centennial celebration was held. This church, the old church at the Hollow, and a small society at Pleasant Valley now constitute a mission circuit, supported by the Litchfield archdeaconry.

Aug. 27, 1834, there was a Methodist Episcopal class organized at Riverton, with seventeen members. A church was built in 1840, and the society continued prosperously until about 1869; the house was torn down ten years later.

The First Congregational Church of Riverton was organized April 19, 1842, with fifty-three members. A meeting-house was built the following summer, and the Rev. Luther H. Barber, of Canton, was ordained Oct. 23, 1843, the new church being dedicated the same day. Rev. Mr. Barber remained as pastor of the church until March 26, 1861, when his resignation was accepted and he was dismissed. He was the only pastor ever regularly settled over the church. Several acting pastors have been employed by the society, among whom was Rev. Winthrop H. Phelps, of Monterey, Mass., who left the charge to accept the chaplaincy of the Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery during the war. The society has been self-supporting since the first few years of its existence, when it received aid from the Home Missionary Society. It now has about the same number of members as at its organization.

In 1845–46 a Baptist Church and ecclesiastical society was organized in Pleasant Valley, and a neat house of worship was erected. Rev. George B. Atwell became settled pastor in December, 1846, and Hart Doolittle was elected deacon. The church at this time numbered twenty-six. In 1847 the church gained accessions, and for several years continued to grow and prosper, although its membership never exceeded seventy-five. In 1858, Rev. J. J. Bronson succeeded Elder Atwell as pastor. In 1859 the members who resided in New Hartford formed a separate organization, known as a "Branch of the Pleasant Valley Baptist Church." The original church, although reduced in numbers and strength, still retained its vitality, and Rev. T. Wrinkle succeeded to the pastorate, and was ordained in June, 1861. He remained but a few months, and the church was left without a pastor until 1865–66, when the remaining members united with the New Hartford branch, the house of worship was removed to that place, and the Baptist Church of Pleasant Valley became merged in that of New Hartford.

The Methodist Episcopal church edifice of Pleasant Valley was built in the years 1847–48, the funds having been raised within the society. The first organization of the class and society is uncertain, but it must have been some years before the building was erected. There were about thirty original members. During the summer of 1880 the church was thoroughly renovated and repaired, about eight hundred dollars having been expended for this purpose. The society has been under the direction of a preacher, appointed by the Conference, or presiding elder since it was constituted. It belongs to the New York Eastern Conference. Its present membership is about forty. The present pastor of this church is Rev. —— Moffat.

The brick Methodist Episcopal church on Washington Hill was built about the year 1830. The society has been able to support preaching only at intervals. This church has at the present time a membership of about sixty.

From the letter of Rev. Mr. Eells the following in relation to ecclesiastical matters is quoted:

"There is in Barkhamsted society one hundred and fifty-five heads of families or ratable persons, as taken from the list, who are Congregationalists, thirty-seven Churchmen, ten Methodists, and five Baptists. There is but one meeting-house. In Winsted society there are the same denominations, but quite a few Churchmen, more Methodists and Baptists, the exact number I am unable to learn. There has been no sectaries ever ordained in this town. The Church of Christ in Winsted was formed in the winter of 1783. The Rev. Aaron Woodworth was ordained to the pastoral charge of that church Jan. 18, 1792, and in six years from that day he was dismissed and preached his farewell sermon. They were mutually agreed in the dismission, and the cause assigned was they were unable to support him."

The First Ecclesiastical Society of Winsted had its birth on Wallen's Hill, along the line of the old North country road. Many of the members of the society were residents in Barkhamsted, and the first parsonage and meeting-house were built just over the line in this town, the former in 1787, the latter, after much dissension and many "stake-pitchings," in 1793.

The Wallen's Hill meeting-house was sold and taken down in 1800, and one in East Winsted was built. Boyd's "Annals of Winchester" gives a graphic account of the early history of this society.

CHAPTER XXIII.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued).

CIVIL AND MILITARY.

THE town of Barkhamsted was incorporated in October, 1779. If records of the early proceedings of the inhabitants were ever kept, they must have been lost, as we can find no account of town votes previous to 1806. We cannot, therefore, give the names of all of the first officers of the town.

Joseph Wilder was the first justice of the peace, and for many years the only one. He came to the town from East Haddam about 1771. He was a man of extensive power and influence. One of his descendants, now living in the town, has a quantity of his private and public documents (cases tried, etc.), handsomely filed, in a good state of preservation. He died leaving a numerous posterity, many of whom have since filled positions of trust and honor in the town.

At the first meeting of the proprietors of Barkhamsted, held at Windsor, Jan. 1, 1732–33, Henry Allyn was chosen clerk, and we find no record of any change in the office until 1772, when, at a meeting of the proprietors, March 28th of that year, it was voted that it would be more advantageous to the proprietors to have a clerk residing in the town of Barkhamsted, and accordingly Pelatiah Allyn was chosen. In 1795 Matthew Allyn was chosen proprietors' clerk, and we find nothing on the subject subsequent to that time.

The first town clerk seems to have been chosen in 1790, when Israel Jones, Jr., took the office, and continued until 1811. The following have since held that position:

1811–24, John Merrill; 1824–30, Joseph Wilder; 1830–35, Amos Beecher; 1835–51, Merlin Merrill; 1851–53, E. N. Ransom; 1853–55, James Tiffany; 1855–60, E. N. Ransom; 1860–68, Sheldon Merrill; 1868–69, A. E. Merrill; 1869–72, Dwight S. Case; 1872–81, William E. Howd; 1881, Sheldon Merrill, the present incumbent.

Lambert Hitchcock, the founder of the village of Hitchcocksville, who was so actively connected with the business interests of the town from 1818 to 1843, was chosen senator of the Fifteenth District in 1840, and re-elected in 1841. He held other offices of trust. Hon. Hiram Goodwin, the only lawyer known to have settled in the town, was senator of this district in 1862, and again in 1864, in which year he was chosen president of the Senate pro tem. Judge Goodwin went to Riverton in the fall of 1830. He is a native of New Hartford, where he studied law with William G. Williams, Esq. He also studied at the law-school at Litchfield. Locating in this village at the age of twenty-two, he has remained until the present time. As a gentleman of the old school, as a citizen and lawyer, he is widely known, beloved, and honored by all who know him.

REPRESENTATIVES TO LEGISLATURE.

The town was first represented in the General Assembly, October session, 1796, by Israel Jones, Jr., and Pelatiah Allyn.

1797.—Israel Jones, Jr., Pelatiah Allyn, Joseph Wilder, Samuel Hayden.
1798.—Joseph Wilder, Pelatiah Allyn, Isaac Jones, Jr.
1799.—Israel Jones, Pelatiah Allyn.
1800.—Israel Jones, Ephraim Munson.
1801.—Ephraim Munson, Pelatiah Allyn, Calvin Cone.
1802.—Israel Jones, Pelatiah Allyn, Ephraim Munson.
1803–4.—Pelatiah Allyn, Israel Jones.
1805.—Pelatiah Allyn, Israel Jones, John Merrill.
1806.—Israel Jones, Pelatiah Allyn.
1807.—Pelatiah Allyn, Robert Willcox, Robert Whitford.
1808.—Pelatiah Allyn, Israel Jones.
1809.—Pelatiah Allyn, Medad Munson.
1810.—Robert Willcox, Pelatiah Allyn, Gideon Mills, Jr.
1811.—Robert Willcox, Gideon Mills, Jr., Samuel Munson.
1812.—John Merrill, Moses Hayden, Joseph Hayden.
1813.—John Merrill, Josiah M. Hart, Moses Hayden.
1814.—Pelatiah Allyn, Moses Hayden, John Merrill, William Taylor.
1815.—Luke Loomis, Moses Hayden, Oliver Mills, Samuel Hayden.

1816.—Josiah H. Hart, John Merrill, Moses Hayden, Oliver Mills.
1817.—Moses Hayden, Oliver Mills, Samuel Munson, Amos Beecher.
1818.—John Merrill, Oliver Mills, Zophar Case, Zalmon Howd.
1819.—Zophar Case, Salmon Howd.*
1820.—John Merrill, Josiah Smith.
1821.—John Merrill, Elijah Jones.
1822.—Salmon Howd, Samuel Munson.
1823.—Samuel Munson, Elijah Jones.
1824-25.—Jesse Ives, Elijah Jones.
1826.—Samuel Munson, Zophar Case.
1827.—Jesse Ives, Amos Beecher.
1828.—Henry Allen, Lester Loomis.
1829.—Elijah Jones, Mathew Allen.
1830-31.—Mathew Allen, George Merrill.
1832.—Lester Loomis, Joel Tiffany.
1833.—Mathew Allen, Joel Tiffany.
1834.—Mathew Allen, Lambert Hitchcock.
1835.—Elijah Jones, Chester Wentworth.
1836.—Hiram Goodwin, Elijah Jones.
1837.—Hiram Goodwin, Daniel Sanford.
1838.—Daniel Sanford, Merlin Merrill.
1839.—Merlin Merrill, Garry Upson.
1840.—Garry Upson, George Cornish.
1841.—Alexander Cleveland, Timothy Hayes.
1842.—Jehiel Case, Anson Wheeler.
1843.—Warren Phelps, Richard A. Doolittle.
1844.—Warren Phelps, Daniel Youngs.
1845.—Not represented.
1846.—Sanford Allen, Hiram Burnham.
1847.—Samuel W. Pine, Linus Bliss.
1848.—Edward Camp, Salmon Howd.
1849.—Alexander P. Cleveland, Abiel Case.
1850.—H. Case, Arba Alford.
1851.—Orville Jones, Ezekiel Hays.
1852.—Constant Youngs, Alfred Alford.
1853.—George Merrill, James Tiffany.
1854.—Lauren Smith, Emerson S. Cornish.
1855.—E. J. Youngs, G. Kellogg.
1856.—Cornwall Doolittle, Erasmus N. Ransom.
1857.—B. W. Johnson, Horace Case.
1858.—Abner Slade, G. W. Merrill.
1859.—Chester Dowd, Owen Case.
1860.—Hart Doolittle, Philamon Perry.
1861.—Ruel O. White, Watson Giddings.
1862.—Rufus Cleveland, M. Hoyt Hayes.
1863.—Jesse Dutton, Asa L. Demming.
1864.—George D. Demming, J. W. Atwater.
1865.—H. N. Gates, Lemuel Richardson.
1866.—Lauren Smith, Ruel S. Rice.
1867.—Charles B. Stevens, Edwin P. Jones.
1868.—Albert Baker, Sheldon Merrill.
1869.—Dr. A. E. Merrill, Calvin Aldrich.
1870.—Harvey B. Stannard, William H. Payne.
1871.—Lemuel Hurlbut, Hiram C. Brown.
1872.—Dwight S. Case, Abram Kilbourn.
1873.—Augustus Smith, Samuel H. Case.
1874.—Elisha Payne, Monroe Hart.
1875.—Delos H. Stephens, Frank A. Case.
1876.—Ruel S. Rice, Frank M. Butler.
1877.—William E. Howd, Edwin E. Case.
1878.—William Tiffany, Byron O. Hawley.
1879.—Arba Alford, Frank A. Case.
1880.—Cornell H. Tiffany, Henry P. Lane.
1881.—Leander Plant, George O. Clark.

In the year 1779 the town of Barkhamsted, then being a part of Farmington District, was annexed to the Probate District of Simsbury. In the year 1825 the towns of New Hartford and Barkhamsted were taken from Simsbury Probate District, and together constituted the Probate District of New Hartford, and so remained until 1833, when Barkhamsted was made a separate probate district. By direction of the General Assembly of 1834, the records of the New Hartford Probate District from 1825 to 1833 are to be kept in the probate office for the District of Barkhamsted. Since Barkhamsted became a distinct probate district the judgeship has been held by the following incumbents:

1833-36, Launcelot Phelps; 1836-38, Amos Beecher, Jr.; 1838-46, Jesse Ives; 1846, Amos Beecher, Jr.; 1847, Hiram Goodwin; 1848-50, Leister Loomis; 1850, Amos Beecher; 1851-54, James Eggleston; 1855-57, George Merrill; 1857-61, Daniel Youngs; 1861-63, James Tiffany; 1863, Daniel Youngs; 1864-66, Merlin Merrill; 1866-70, Edward J. Youngs; 1870, and now in office, Daniel Youngs.

Rev. Mr. Eells, in mentioning the names and condition of the early settlers of the town, says,—

"It was not before the year 1774 they had gained such a settlement as to be called upon for military duty. The first military company was formed Oct^{br}, 1774, and Mr. Pelatiah Allyn was chosen captain, and Israel Jones lieutenant."

The excitement which led to the Revolutionary war had now grown to great magnitude, and all able-bodied men were required to perform service in the army. The following extracts from Mr. William Wallace Lee's centennial address show the state of feeling at that time:

"After the sacking of Danbury by the British in 1777 the feeling against the Tories was so intense that many of them left their homes and settled in more remote localities, and six of these families came to Pleasant Valley, in Barkhamsted; they were Gregorys, Weeds, Taylors (two families), Wildmans, and Holcombs. A bitter feeling existed towards them by the soldiers and their children during and after the Revolutionary war, and no indignities were too great to be heaped upon them. They would find their corn cut while in silk, their potatoes pulled while in blossom, trees mutilated, fences torn down, etc. Of all their descendants, only a few, those of Abner Taylor, remain in Connecticut. After the surrender of Burgoyne at Saratoga a portion of his army was marched through this town en route for Boston, but many deserted along the route and remained in the country. Among them were three, Shaw, Thorne, and Miller, who settled on a by-road near West Hill Pond. After the incorporation of the town, in 1779, the prospect became more prosperous; it was evident that the colonies were not to be conquered, and many were the settlers who came to the town,—the Newells, Collins, Humphreys, Bakers, Pikes, Rices, Cases, Andrusses, Mosses, etc., among them being Lieut. Gideon Mills, from Simsbury, whose oldest daughter, Ruth, was the mother of John Brown, of Harper's Ferry fame."

Herewith is given a list of soldiers from Barkhamsted who fought during the war of the Revolution:

Lieut. Gideon Mills (grandfather of John Brown), Lieut. Abner Slade (served also in French and Indian war), Lieut. Abiel Hoskins, Abner Slade, Jr., Solomon Humphrey, Thomas Wilder, Solomon Newell, Asa Gilbert, Cyprian Barker, Nathaniel Collins, William Taylor (at battle of Monmouth), Daniel Burwell (was held prisoner in New York by British), John Frazier (at battle of Saratoga and surrender of Burgoyne), Martin Moses, Ashbel Moses, David Lee (stood guard over Maj. Andre the spy), Samuel Rice, Humphrey Case, Jude Roberts, Nehemiah Andruss, Amasa Malory (at defense of New Haven when captured by British in 1779), Samuel Pike, James Pike, John Pike, John Ives, Walt Munson, Medad Munson, David Squier, Walt Rice

WAR OF 1812.

Jesse Ives, Enoch Burwell, Joseph Burwell (served at New London), James Eggleston (played the fife at battle of Sackett's Harbor), Jesse Markham, Elijah Cannon, Stephen A. French, Newberry Merrills.

MEXICAN WAR.

Capt. Justin Hodge, Calvin Ford, Thomas Shaw.

For many years after the Revolutionary war the military spirit prevailed throughout the colonies,

* After the adoption of the constitution, in 1818, the regular October session was discontinued.

especially in Connecticut. The Twenty-fifth Militia Regiment was made up from this locality and flourished late in the last century and early in this. For a number of years Col. Israel Jones, of Barkhamsted, commanded this regiment, he having previously passed through the various other grades from captain up. He died in 1812, and was buried in the old Centre burying-ground.

As late as 1850 the militia law was very strict; every able-bodied man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five was required to perform military duty. The Rifle Company of Winsted and the Grenadiers of New Hartford were partially composed of Barkhamsted men. The Light Guard of Riverton, with its showy uniform, was one of the model companies of the State. It was made up almost entirely of men from that village, and commanded by Capt. Justin Hodge, who afterwards served in the Mexican war, and in the war of the Southern Rebellion from the outbreak until the disbandment of the volunteer forces after the surrender at Appomattox. Capt. Hodge entered the service as quartermaster of the First Connecticut Volunteers, April 23, 1861, immediately after Fort Sumter was fired upon, and from that position was promoted into the United States Quartermaster's Department, from which he was discharged as lieutenant-colonel at the close of the war. Other Barkhamsted men did brave service during this war, notably Capt. Edwin R. Lee, of the Eleventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, who was killed at the battle of Newbern, N. C.

The old artillery company of fifty years ago, which belonged to the Twenty-first Regiment, was made up in a great measure from Barkhamsted men, several of its captains being from this town. At "general training" this company, with its gay uniform, was greatly admired. After these independent companies came the regular militia, whose lack of drill and of uniformity of dress gave them a ridiculous appearance and the name of "rag-toes."

During the war of the Southern Rebellion Barkhamsted patriotism was aroused to its utmost intensity. Meetings were held frequently, and patriotic resolutions were passed. Bounties were voted to those who would enlist in the army or navy, and everything was done to aid the government in subduing its enemies. During the year 1862, when the government was greatly in need of troops, and some, whose sympathies for the Union cause were not so great as their instinct of self-preservation, were taking themselves off to Canada to avoid being called upon for service in the army, the inhabitants of the town, at a special meeting,

"Voted, Whereas a most dangerous and alarming epidemic, which, though manifesting itself in numerous and divers forms in different subjects, is still traceable in most cases to the protean cause of an enormous and rapid increase of the white liver, has recently broken out, and is rapidly spreading, not only through our own town, but over this entire section of the State, threatening, if not speedily checked or suppressed, the total extinction of our entire able-bodied white male population between the ages of eighteen and forty-five,

"And whereas it is believed that the adoption of prompt sanitary measures are necessary, and will speedily check, if not entirely suppress, the further progress of said distemper, be it therefore

"Resolved, That the selectmen be directed to publish in the Winsted Herald the names of all persons who have, or shall present to them, any certificate of exemption from liability to perform military duty, together with the specified cause for which such certificate was granted."

BARKHAMSTED VOLUNTEERS OF THE SOUTHERN REBELLION OF 1861.

Justin Hodge, lieutenant, regimental quartermaster, Co. F, 1st Regt.; enl. April 23, 1861; pro. to A. Q. M.
Alfred Alford, Co. B, 2d Regt.; enl. May 7, 1861.
John White, Co. B, 2d Regt.; enl. May 7, 1861.
George W. Burwell, Co. A, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Aug. 8, 1861.
Jerome Manchester, Co. A, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Aug. 12, 1861.
Albert E. Merrill, Co. A, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Aug. 8, 1861.
Lyman Doolittle, Co. K, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Dec. 29, 1863.
Charles Behr, Co. B, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Oct. 1, 1864.
Benjamin F. Chatfield, Co. E, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Oct. 7, 1864.
Peter Karr, Co. M, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Nov. 14, 1864.
William Allen, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Nov. 7, 1864; unassigned recruit.
Thomas O'Neil, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Nov. 16, 1864; not taken upon rolls.
William Stuart, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Nov. 1, 1864; not taken up on rolls.
Henry Smith, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Nov. 30, 1864; not taken up on rolls.
Thomas White, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl. Oct. 6, 1864; not taken up on rolls.
Robert Wilson, 1st Squad. Cav.; enl Nov. 23, 1864; not taken up on rolls.
John King, Co. A, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. Oct. 6, 1864.
George Illmenser, Co. B, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. Sept. 1, 1863.
Daniel McGrath, Co. D, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. Oct. 4, 1864.
James Marshall, Co. F, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. Oct. 4, 1864.
George A. Root, Co. K, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. May 23, 1861.
Shelden L. Rice, Co. K, 1st Heavy Art.; enl. May 23, 1861.
Bradley D. Lee, 1st lieutenant, regimental quartermaster, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 1, 1862; pro. to capt. A. C. S. March 22, 1864.
Winthrop H. Phelps, chaplain, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. May 4, 1863.
George C. Curtis, Co. C, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Dec. 19, 1863.
Chester D. Cleveland, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 1, 1862; second lieutenant; pro. to major.
Edwin S. Beecher, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 1, 1862.
Anthony B. Gurnsey, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. July 29, 1862
Charles A. Hart, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 9, 1862.
Henry A. Rexford, Co. E, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 21, 1862; killed at Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864.
Ruel S. Rice, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 14, 1862.
Walter H. Denning, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 13, 1862.
Henry H. Griffin, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 18, 1862.
Alfred C. Alford, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. July 28, 1862; killed in action, Sept. 19, 1864, at Winchester, Va.
Charles Burr, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 7, 1862.
William Burke, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Sept. 2, 1862.
Wayne B. Castle, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 15, 1862.
William H. Tiffany, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 9, 1862.
Orville B. Tiffany, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 20, 1862; pro. to second lieutenant.
Timothy B. Cannon, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Jan. 5, 1864.
Franklin Andress, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. July 30, 1862; killed at Cold Harbor, Va., June 1, 1864.
Noah Hart, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Jan. 21, 1864.
Jeremiah Jennings, Co. I, 5th Inf.; enl. July 22, 1861.
Franklin J. Atwater, Co. B, 6th Inf.; enl. Sept. 12, 1861; died Aug. 19, 1863, of wounds received at Fort Wagner.
James Dunn, Co. B, 7th Inf.; enl. Nov. 15, 1864.
Joel W. Oakes, Co. H, 7th Inf.; enl. Feb. 16, 1864.
Perlin F. Rust, Co. C, 8th Inf.; enl. Oct. 7, 1861.
James E. Pelton, Co. C, 8th Inf.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; wounded at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862.
Elijah White, Co. C, 8th Inf.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; killed at Antietam, Sept. 17, 1862.
William A. Smith, Co. E, 8th Inf.; enl. Sept. 1, 1863; killed at Chapin's Farm, Sept. 29, 1864.
George Baker, 8th Inf.; enl. Oct. 5, 1864.
Clayton H. Case, Band, 10th Inf.; enl. Oct. 26, 1861.
John Murphy, Co. E, 10th Inf.; enl. Sept. 30, 1861.
Henry B. F. Root, Co. E, 10th Inf.; enl. Sept. 30, 1861.
Edwin R. Lee, captain, Co. D, 11th Inf.; enl. Nov. 26, 1861; killed at New-bern, N. C., March 14, 1862. He was buried on the banks of the Neuse River, and afterwards brought North and buried at Pleasant Valley. He was a young man of talent and a gallant soldier.

Francis Roza, Co. E, 11th Inf.; enl. Nov. 14, 1864.

Isaac Elwell, Co. I, 12th Inf.; enl. Feb. 24, 1864.

Joseph Elwell, Co. I, 12th Inf.; enl. Feb. 24, 1864; died December, 1864.

Theron Barbour, Co. D, 13th Inf.; enl. Dec. 30, 1861.

Orville A. Root, Co. D, 13th Inf.; enl. Dec. 30, 1861.

William H. Tucker, Co. D, 13th Inf.; enl. Jan. 7, 1862; died Dec. 6, 1865.

Ellsworth Case, Co. E, 13th Inf.; enl. Feb. 27, 1862.

William Kinsella, Co. K, 13th Inf.; enl. Sept. 29, 1864.

Andrew Walter, Co. K, 13th Inf.; enl. Sept. 24, 1864.

Julius F. Searle, Co. E, 14th Inf.; enl. Aug. 26, 1863; died Feb. 23, 1864.

Elisha S. Booth, Co. F, 14th Inf.; enl. July 24, 1862; died Jan. 5, 1863, of wounds.

Franklin B. Davis, Co. A, 16th Inf.; enl. Aug. 14, 1862.

Thomas Murray, Co. I, 16th Inf.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864.

Abel P. Beers, Co. K, 25th Inf.; enl. Aug. 29, 1862.

Nathan Coe, Co. G, 27th Inf.; enl. Sept. 10, 1862.

Augustus Eggleston, Co. G, 27th Inf.; enl. Sept. 11, 1862.

Henry E. Cleveland, Co. F, 28th Inf.; enl. Aug. 23, 1862.

James W. Staunis, Co. F, 28th Inf.; enl. Aug. 28, 1862.

George H. Goodwin, Co. F, 28th Inf.; enl. Aug. 29, 1862.

Myron N. Hubbard, Co. F, 28th Inf.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; died May 6, 1863, at Fort Barrancas, Fla.

Warren Alford, Co. F, 2d Heavy Art.; enl. Aug. 13, 1862; pro. to first lieut.; wounded Sept. 19, 1864.

Henry B. Lee, Co. F, 7th Inf.; enl. Sept. 9, 1861; pro. to second lieut.; killed Aug. 16, 1864.

CHAPTER XXIV.

BARKHAMSTED (Continued).

MISCELLANEOUS.

Of schools Rev. Ozias Eells, in his letter to Dr. Trumbull, says,—

"There are ten school districts in the town and part of two more,—one in East Hartland part, two and two halves in Winsted part, and seven in Barkhamsted. There is no academy in the town."

There are at the present time (1881) ten school districts in Barkhamsted,—viz., 1, Centre; 2, Centre Hill; 3, Washington Hill; 4, Northeast; 5, South; 6, South Hollow; 7, North; 8, Green; 9, Riverton; 10, Pleasant Valley; 11, Mallory. Besides these, there are several part districts,—i.e., portions of this town set off to districts in other towns.

The Centre school-house, as it was originally built in 1821, was a two-story building. The lower room was finished immediately, and the first school was taught by Dr. Knapp, of Hartland. The school-room was filled to overflowing with scholars of all ages from four to twenty. It was decided to complete the upper room for a select school. The necessary funds were furnished by the principal men of the district, who were called "the proprietors of the upper room." This "upper room," as it was familiarly called, was also intended for religious meetings, singing-schools, and such other purposes as were deemed fit by those interested. The "upper room" was completed in 1824, and dedicated. Rev. Cyrus Yale, of New Hartford, preached the dedication sermon, an original hymn was composed for the occasion by Mrs. Deacon Sanford, of the northeast part of the town. The first school was taught in the "upper room" in the winter of 1824 by Rev. Saul Clark. For a number of years this select school was well supported, and students from Yale and Amherst Colleges were engaged as teachers. Some of those teachers are still spoken of by their former pupils in grateful remembrance, viz., Dunton, Stevens, Marsh, and Schneider. This school was called the "grammar school." In the autumn of 1875 the house needed repairs, and it was thought best to take away the lower room and convert the upper room into a district school-house, which was accordingly done, and the house as it now stands is neat and comfortable. For several years a select school was taught in Pleasant Valley by Rev. George B. Atwell. Of libraries Rev. Mr. Eells says,—

"There is a public library in Barkhamsted, consisting of seventy-five volumes, and formed in the year 1797. There is another in Winsted society."

About 1836 there was a public library established in the village of Riverton. It was well kept up for six years or more, but finally became scattered, and was sold off at auction.

Northern Star Lodge, No. 58, F. and A. M., now located in New Hartford (Pine Meadow), was organized in the town of Barkhamsted in the autumn of 1820. Its charter, which is signed by Oliver Wolcott, then Grand Master, as well as Governor, of the State of Connecticut, is dated May 10, 1820, and bears the names of twenty-seven (27) charter members. Its first W. M., or presiding officer, was Dr. Amos Beecher. Alvin Squier and Drayton Jones were its first Senior and Junior Wardens respectively. The lodge in its early days held its meetings at the public-house of George Merrills, at the Centre, near the old meeting-house. In those days the meetings were held in the daytime, usually in the afternoon. Sometimes the meetings were held in Riverton and New Hartford, for the convenience of its members who lived in those villages. The declaration of the Masons of Connecticut, which was issued in 1832, against the Anti-Masonic warfare was signed by sixty-six of the members of Northern Star Lodge. The lodge then had jurisdiction over Barkhamsted, Hartland, and New Hartford. It was removed to New Hartford in 1850. Its present presiding officer is Martin Wilcox. Application was made by the writer to the present secretary of the lodge for the date of its organization and the names of its charter members. The secretary replied that the lodge would not authorize him to give the desired data. The information was therefore obtained elsewhere. On the rolls of this lodge for the past sixty years are the names of some of the most honored men within the limits of its jurisdiction.

Dr. Amos Beecher, who was born in the town of Wolcott, Dec. 3, 1772, studied his profession in Southington, and from that place, where he married his wife, Mary Lewis, came to Barkhamsted in 1798. Here he remained in the practice of medicine until Jan. 4, 1849, when he died. He is buried in the old Centre burying-ground. Dr. Beecher was a prominent man in this town, aside from his prominence as the only physician. At one time he was tax collector for four towns. For a short time before Dr. Beecher settled in Barkhamsted there was a Dr. Kincade located there.

In Riverton the first physician was Dr. Thaddeus K. De Wolf. He was succeeded by Dr. F. B. Graham, from Canton. The latter died in 1854, since which time there was no physician in the village until 1878, when Dr. L. M. Crosier located there and has established a successful practice.

The two principal streams, which flow entirely through Barkhamsted, from north to south, are known as the East Branch and West Branch. They come together in New Hartford, something less than two miles south of its northern boundary near its eastern boundary, and form the Tunxis River, sometimes called the Farmington. Kettle Brook flows down Washington Hill, and empties into East Branch somewhat south of the middle of the town. This brook takes its name from a rock about half-way up the hill, which resembles a kettle. This rock is supposed to have been used by the Indians in pounding or pulverizing their corn. Roaring Brook, which empties into East Branch a little below Munson's mill, takes its name from the sound it makes coming down among the rocks. Morgan River finds its head at the outlet, at the extreme northern end, of Lake Wonksunkmunk, or West Hill Pond. How it obtained its name is unknown. The Centre and Centre Hill are so named from the fact of their being centrally located in the town. A line drawn from the northeast to the southwest and another from the northwest to the southeast corner of the town will cross each other at or very near the old Centre burying-ground.

Washington Hill was formerly known as Horse Hill. The name was changed, it is said, about the time the brick church (Methodist Episcopal) was built, at the suggestion of Rev. Mr. Coe of Winsted, who first preached in that church. Wallen's Hill was named after Daniel Wallen, of New Hartford, who owned a large tract of land in that locality. The Bourbon District comprised the southwest corner of the town, near Lake Wonksunkmunk. How it derived its name is not known. Ratlan comprises the southeastern corner of the town, and extends into North Canton. The roads in that locality are hilly and stony. The origin of its name is uncertain. Beach Rock is an imposing object some distance to the left or west of the South Hollow Road. Its peak appears inaccessible from the road, but it is said the early settlers of the town used its level, broad top as a threshing-floor, upon which, with horses and cattle, they trampled out their grain. Two brothers by the name of Beach are said to have settled near this rock, hence its name. The rocky ridge running north from Pleasant Valley to Riverton, on the east side of West Branch, is called Ragged Mountain.

Winsted was named from the first syllable of Winchester and the last syllable of Barkhamsted, the old Winsted ecclesiastical society being made up from portions of the two towns. The island in the upper portion of Pleasant Valley was formerly called Sugar Meadow, it being heavily timbered with sugar maples. The Connecticut Western Railroad, which has about three miles of track in Barkhamsted but no station, was built in 1871. No other railroad touches the town. There are at the present time four post-offices in Barkhamsted, viz., Barkhamsted, Riverton, Pleasant Valley, and Centre Hill.

In the earliest days of the town the freemen held their town-meetings in barns, houses, or other convenient places. After the meeting-house was built, for many years freemen's meetings and town-meetings were held within its sacred walls, until the Centre school-house was erected, when the "upper room" was used for such purposes. Not until 1867 did Barkhamsted have a town-house. In that year the small town building, a few feet west of the new Centre church, was erected.

In the year 1867 the General Assembly passed an act dividing Barkhamsted into three electoral districts, to accommodate the electors of the town in voting at electors' meetings. By this act the electors within the first district are required to vote at Barkhamsted Hollow or Centre, the electors within the limits of district number two to vote at Pleasant Valley, and those of district number three at Riverton.

This arrangement, of course, does not affect the voting at town-meetings, where the inhabitants all meet at the town-house, and choose officers and pass such votes as are deemed necessary to the welfare of the town for the ensuing year.

At the first census of the colony of Connecticut, which was taken in 1756, Barkhamsted is enumerated at 18. As this was the year in which the first white persons made permanent settlement, these 18 must have included either Indians or trespassers, probably both. In the census of 1774 the town is credited with a population of 250.

Emigration to the West from this town commenced years ago. As early as 1810, Barkhamsted had a population of 1500, and continued to increase until 1850, when there were more than 1700 inhabitants. The census of 1860 gives the town a population of 1272, and that of 1870, 1440. The enumeration of 1880 showed the following facts: Whole number of persons, 1300, of whom 26 were colored; 651 were males, and 649 females; 21 were over eighty years of age. The town had 7 ministers, and 1 lawyer and 1 doctor, 21 manufacturing establishments, 292 dwellings, 318 families; tilled land, 1287 acres; meadow and pasturing, 11,883 acres; woodland, 4868 acres; unimproved land, 1576 acres; hay cut previous year, 3442 tons; shelled corn raised, 6824 bushels; oats, 2064 bushels; rye, 1030 bushels; potatoes, 13,882 bushels; apples, 24,105 bushels; tobacco, 24,725 pounds; wood cut, 5252 cords; lumber sawed in the six saw-mills, 500,000 feet.

The first bridge across the West Branch was directly in the rear of the Henry Lee place, half a mile above Pleasant Valley. This bridge was carried off by a freshet about 1800. The site was then abandoned, and a new bridge was built just north of where the Pleasant Valley bridge now stands. The first bridge across East Branch was a few rods above the present one, near the Beecher dam. The iron bridge at Riverton was built in 1875, carried away by the great flood of Dec. 10, 1878, and rebuilt during the summer and fall of 1879. Bridges have always been a source of great expense to the inhabitants of Barkhamsted.

Sept. 10, 1879, the town of Barkhamsted celebrated its one hundredth anniversary. An immense throng of its sons and daughters and friends assembled to take part in this centennial. The services were held at the Centre meeting-house. Hon. Hiram Goodwin was president of the day. Mr. William Wallace Lee, of Meriden, a native of the town, delivered the historical address, and Judge Monroe E. Merrill, of Hartford (also a native), delivered the oration. Mrs. Emma C. (Carter) Lee wrote a poem, which was read by her husband, Prof. S. H. Lee, of Oberlin College, Ohio. A poem was also read by Elisha W. Jones, of Winsted (a native). Addresses were delivered by Revs. L. H. Barbour and Lemuel Richardson, and Walter S. Carter, Esq., of New York (a native). The opening address was delivered by Hiram C. Brown, Esq., of Riverton. A bountiful collation was spread under the trees between the church and town-house, at which the entire throng was regaled. The chief marshal of the occasion was Mr. Frank A. Case. A mounted escort of fifty men, commanded by George T. Carter, led the procession, which consisted of citizens on horseback, in carriages, carts, and every variety of vehicle, ancient and modern. Letters were read from many natives of the town who were in remote localities, among whom was Mr. Samuel Jones, a grandson of Capt. Israel, who was born in Barkhamsted, June 29, 1781. He was then living in Wayne, Ashtabula Co., Ohio. The celebration was admirably arranged, and successfully carried out in every particular. It was a day long to be remembered with pride by the citizens of Barkhamsted.

Before closing this sketch the author desires to express thanks to all who have so kindly aided him in procuring facts, among whom are the following, who have put themselves to a considerable trouble to help the work along: Hon. Hiram Goodwin and Hon. Daniel Youngs, of Barkhamsted; Mr. William Wallace Lee, of Meriden, to whom the people of the town owe so much for his unselfish, unremunerated labor in preparing the first connected record of the town's history, and from whose admirable historical address many of the facts and frequent quotations in this sketch are taken; Rev. J. B. Clark, and Messrs. Sheldon Merrill, William E. Howd, Alfred Alford, and John F. Simmons, Miss Harriet Atwell, Mrs. Lyman Hart and daughter, Miss Mary L. Hart, of Barkhamsted; Mr. Charles J. Hoadley, State librarian at Hartford, through whose courtesy much information has been obtained from the State archives; and to Mr. Addison Van Name, librarian of Yale College.

The writer is conscious that the sketch is imperfect and incomplete, and regrets that he could not have had more time and space in which to have prepared a more finished production.

CHAPTER XXV.

BETHLEHEM.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Grant—The Indian Purchase—The Survey—The First Settlements—The Pioneers—Petitions for "Winter Privileges"—Incidents—Prices of Provisions in 1747—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Christ Church—Methodist Episcopal Church—Bethlehem Library Associations—Physicians—The "Great Sickness" of 1760—Civil and Military History—Organization of Town—Officers Elected—Town Clerks—Selectmen from 1787 to 1881—Representatives from 1787 to 1881—Present (1881) Town Officers—Military Record.

THIS town is located in the southern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Morris, on the east by Watertown, on the south by Woodbury, and on the west by Washington. The town is hilly, but the soil is fertile and well adapted to agricultural pursuits.

The grant of lands in this town was made in 1703, purchased of the Indians in 1710, and surveyed in 1723, but was not divided among the proprietors until 1734. The pioneers of the town located on the road extending east and west, a short distance north of the present centre of the town.

Prominent among the first settlers was Capt. Hezekiah Hooker, of Kensington, Conn., a descendant of the celebrated Rev. Thomas Hooker, of Hartford. He was accompanied by his sons, Hezekiah, Jr., and James. From what is now the town of Woodbury came Reuben and Josiah Avered, Francis and Joshua Guiteau, Caleb and Ebenezer Lewis, Isaac Hill, Jr., Isaac Hotchkiss, Nathaniel Porter, and Samuel Steele. John Steck came from Farmington, and Thomas and Ebenezer Thompson from Litchfield, and Ephraim Tyler from New Cheshire.

The settlement of the town did not increase rapidly. Four years after the first settlement the number of families numbered only fourteen.

In October, 1738, the inhabitants petitioned for "winter privileges," and asked that they might be relieved from paying taxes for the repairing the meeting-house in the old town; in 1839, from parish taxes, and that they might be set off as a distinct society, etc. These petitions were signed by Hezekiah Hooker, John Steel, Nathaniel Porter, Francis Guiteau, Caleb Lewis, Joseph Clark, Josiah Avered, Ebenezer Lewis,

C. Gibbs, Jonathan Seley, Edmund Tomkins, Isaac Hill, John Parkis, Reuben Avered, Ephraim Tyler, Caleb Wheeler, Ebenezer Thompson, Beriah Dudley, and Seth Avered. The prayer of the petition was granted, and the town was incorporated and named Bethlehem.

The first settlers were hardy, enterprising, self-denying men, well qualified to endure the hardships of pioneer life. The women, as well as the men, went on foot, or on horseback, through a trackless wilderness, guided by marked trees. In the midst of the first dreary winter their provisions gave out, and the inhabitants were obliged to thread their way through the pathless forest to the old settlement (Woodbury) for food. It is related that Samuel and John Steele went to Farmington with a hand-sled for corn to sustain the little settlement. The prices of provisions in 1747 were twelve shillings per bushel for wheat, nine shillings for rye, and seven shillings for Indian corn.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

As stated above, "winter privileges" were granted in October, 1738. On the 2d of the following month Rev. Joseph Bellamy commenced his labors among this people, and he doubtless preached the first sermon ever delivered in this society. The society was organized in October, 1739, and March 27, 1740, the church was organized with the following members: Joseph Bellamy, Jonathan Filley and wife, John Steele and wife, Joseph Clark and wife, Jonathan Munger and wife, Ephraim Tyler and wife, Thomas Thompson and wife, Ebenezer Thompson, Caleb Lewis and wife, Nathaniel Porter and wife, Francis Guiteau and wife, Ebenezer Lewis and wife, Isaac Hotchkiss and wife, Josiah Avered and wife, Reuben Avered and wife, Hezekiah Hooker, Jr., and wife, James Hooker, Samuel Steele and wife, Isaac Hill and wife, Joshua Guiteau and wife, and five females.

In 1740 the society voted to build a meeting-house, which was completed in 1744. The first services held by Dr. Bellamy were in a barn. In 1764 the little settlement had increased to about one hundred taxpayers, and on the 4th of January of that year it was voted to build a new house of worship. February 28th it was voted "to begin, and go on moderately, and little by little." May 24th, Samuel Jackson, Archibald Kasson, and Lieut. John Steele were appointed a building committee. The church was to be "sixty by forty-three feet, and just as high as ye Meeting-House in ye old Society." Three years later the society voted "to have the meeting-house raised, and to give each man four shillings per day that shall raise ye Meeting-House, they find all but Rhum, and their wages shall go towards their Meeting-House Rates." Among the votes of the society we find one to "seat the new Meeting-House and dignify its Pues;" one to purchase a "good decent bell and a Lightning-rod;" also, "that the singers may sit up Gallery all day if they please, but to keep to their own seat, the men not to infringe on the women's pues."

The third and present church edifice was built in 1836.

List of Pastors.—Joseph Bellamy, from 1740–90; Azel Backus, 1791–1813; John Langdon, 1816–25; Benjamin F. Stanton, 1825–29; Paul Couch, 1829–34; Fosdic Harrison, 1835–50; Aretus G. Loomis, 1850–59; Ephraim Wright, 1861–65; George Banks, 1866–74; S. Fuller Palmer, 1875–79; William E. Bassett, 1879, present incumbent.

The present deacons are Joshua Bird, William R. Harrison, and Theodore Bird.

CHRIST CHURCH.

Christ Church parish, Bethlehem, was organized in 1806, at the house of Mr. George Bloss, Carmel Hill, by the Rev. Daniel Burham, D.D. The members were Christopher Prentis, Benjamin Hawley, John Speney, Leverett Judd, Abel Hard, Glover Skidmore, Ebenezer L. Thompson, Samuel Bloss, Reuben Tinker, Samuel Blackman, Daniel Skidmore, Henry Jackson, Amos Lake, David Polford, and B. T. Lake. Services were holden in the district school-house in Bethlehem Centre until the erection of the present church edifice, which was built in 1829, and consecrated by the Right Rev. Bishop Brownell, Sept. 23, 1835.

List of Rectors.—Revs. Russell Wheeler, J. D. Welton, Isaac Jones, Joseph Scott, John Dowdney, William Watson, F. W. Snow, Isaac H. Tuttle, Jonathan Coe, William H. Frisbie, J. S. Covell, J. D. Berry, N. W. Munroe, James R. Coe, John N. Marvin, F. D. Holcomb, D.D., A. N. Lewis, J. A. Welton, J. B. Robinson, present pastor.

The present officers (1880) are as follows: Wardens, G. G. Smith, George S. Guild; Vestrymen, Samuel L. Bloss, James Allen, Amos C. Lake; Clerk, Leman A. Guild.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The first act to permanently establish Methodism in Bethlehem was the forming of a class of thirteen persons, Sept. 1, 1858, at the house of James Rudman, by L. W. Abbott, then preaching at Watertown, Conn. L. W. Abbott was appointed to Bethlehem at the Conference of 1859, holding services at the town-house. Over ninety children were gathered into the Sunday-school, and the membership increased to thirty-eight in full and twenty probationers. July 4, 1859, the first meeting for the appointment of a board of trustees was held, and Ralph Munson, George Guernsey, Harlow Judson, and Bernard Brisie were appointed. Sept. 19, 1859, it was voted to build a house of worship and provide a parsonage property. May 15, 1860, the church was raised, and was dedicated November 14th of the same year.

The following is a list of the pastors: S. W. Abbott, D. Osborn, Spencer Bray, W. Goodsell, E. L.

RESIDENCE OF JAMES ALLEN, BETHLEHEM CONN.

Bray, Ira Abbott, J. H. Crofoot, C. S. Dikeman, A. McNichol, J. S. Haugh, and S. Kristeller.

The present officers are as follows: Pastor, S. Kristeller; Trustees, James Wheeler, John D. Waldron, Ralph Munson, David Doolittle, Jonathan Wooten, W. H. Taylor; Superintendent of the Sabbath-school, Samuel Allen.

Present church membership, 87 in full; probationers, 13.

THE BETHLEHEM LIBRARY ASSOCIATION*

was organized March 16, 1857, with fifty-four members, each of whom paid the sum of two dollars as a condition of membership. Upon the subsequent payment by others of a like sum, it has now a membership of one hundred and thirty-two. Its meetings are held in the town-hall monthly, for the drawing of books, the reading of which, for one month, is offered at auction at two cents each volume, subject to higher bids.

At the first meeting for drawing books it had eighty-six volumes; at the close of its first year, one hundred and forty; at the close of its twenty-third year, —March, 1880,—it had on its catalogue eleven hundred and seven volumes. Since its organization it has received for membership, biddings, fines, and lectures the sum of fourteen hundred and thirty dollars and three cents. All moneys received are devoted to the purchase of new books, and the biddings at the monthly meetings—which have averaged about fifty dollars per year—are its main reliance.

The only compensation given any official is to the secretary, who during his term of office has his books free, if not bid for above two cents.

The first officers of the association were Theodore Bird, President; Joshua Bird, Secretary and Librarian, Henry W. Peck, Treasurer; Rev. A. G. Loomis, John C. Ambler, Abraham Beecher, Executive Committee. The first members were Arvil Morris, Maria T. Humphrey, Henry W. Peck, George S. Guild, Lewis U. Guild, John Towne, Jerome B. Strong, Henry Davis, Rev. A. G. Loomis, Theodore Bird, Abraham Beecher, E. O. Hubbard, George M. Karson, Joshua Bird, D. B. Jackson, Samuel L. Blois, F. D. Prentice, John C. Ambler, Leman A. Guild, Benjamin T. Lake, Frederick Jackson, P. M. Crane, H. C. Hill, M. S. Todd, Martha P. Karson, Adam C. Karson, Samuel Wellman, W. R. Harrison, Samuel Allen, D. L. Thompson, Stephen Hayes, William B. Ames, Gideon Allen, Emily Bloss, C. C. Parmelee, James W. Thomas, James Allen, Jr., Leverett P. Judd, William Munson, W. F. Carpenter, A. S. Judson, H. N. Lake, Norman Lake, Edward Cowles, Ralph Munson, Harry Jackson, E. E. Prentice, Hermon Skidmore, Sheldon Jackson, Sidney Peck, D. E. Doolittle, Henry C. Spencer, Francis E. Judson, and Horace Fenn.

By the sale and transfer of rights, nearly every family in the town is now supplied, at small cost, with good reading of every kind, and in such abundance as may be desired, from the Bethlehem Library Association, and it is believed that the plan is the best ever devised for the use of small communities.

PHYSICIANS.

Probably the first physician in this town was Dr. Zephaniah Hull, a native of Cheshire, Conn. He came here about the year 1750, and died in 1760, the same day with his wife, during the "great sickness."

Titus Hull, son of the above, was also a practicing physician in this town for a time. In 1805 he removed to Danbury, and subsequently to New York State.

Benjamin Hawley commenced the practice of his profession in this town some time prior to the Revolution. He died in 1813.

Physicians since Dr. Hawley have been as follows: Parlemon Fowler, Conant Catlin, Lyman Catlin, Algernon S. Lewis, Loomis North, Gaylord Bissell, Henry Davis, Seth Hill, M. V. B. Dunham, Franklin Booth, Henry Kurrmann, S. H. Huntington, and Edward Kurrmann.

Dr. D. B. Hurd, a native of this town, a former practitioner in Montgomery, Ala., who for the past thirty years has resided here, died in 1881.

Dr. E. Osborn, a botanical physician, located here in 1860, and continued until 1879.

THE "GREAT SICKNESS."

During the month of November, 1760, a fatal sickness prevailed in this town. Thirty-four persons died. They were first taken with a cold, and then a malignant pleurisy set in and carried them off. Among others who died were Dr. Hull, his wife, and two children, and a young man,—all out of the same house. The doctor and his wife were buried in one grave. Soon after these deaths, and while others were sick in the house, one Deacon Strong, going by, raised a flock of eleven quail, which flew over the house and dropped in the garden. Immediately after three rose and flew into the bushes, but the other eight were picked up dead, and in one hour after became putrid, and were buried. The air in the parish was said by doctors and others of judgment to have been different from the air in towns and parishes round about it. Some were inclined to call it the plague, or something of that kind.

Bethlehem is a small town, with an average length of four and one-half miles, and a breadth of four miles. Its inhabitants are mostly engaged in agricultural pursuits. There is one carriage manufactory, one woolen-mill, one store, and blacksmith-shops and saw-mills to accommodate the public. The land is rolling but fertile, being very suitable for fruit-growing. There is a library in the town of nearly twelve hundred volumes, which is well patronized, making an intelligent community. In the southeast part of the town is Nonneway Falls, a beautiful cascade in a romantic glen, deriving its name from an Indian chief of that name whom tradition claims had his wigwam on the banks of the stream below the falls. It is now quite a place of resort. A female boarding-school has recently been established there, which bids fair to become a success. There have been in times past schools which have gained quite a notoriety. At one time John C. Calhoun, of South Carolina, was a pupil in this town. Rev. Benjamin Meigs, a native of this town, was a missionary to Ceylon for forty years. Mr. Burton, for many years connected with the mission in Liberia, was also a native.

* Contributed by Henry W. Peck.

"Resolved by this Assembly, Those Inhabitance of the Town of Woodbury that live within the limits of said society of Bethlehem, be and they are hereby incorporated into a separate and distinct Town by the name of the Town of Bethlehem and that the bounds and limits, shall be the same as the present bounds of the Society of Bethlehem with the same rights Powers, privileges and franchises of every kind in other towns in this State by law now have and enjoy. Excepting only that they, be restricted to One Representative only in the General Assembly. And that said Town of Bethlehem shall hold their first Town Meeting at the Public Meeting house in said town on the 20 day of June next at two O'Clock in the Afternoon and that Oliver Parmlee Esq of said Bethlehem, be and he is hereby authorized and empowered to cause said meeting warned and shall receive the votes of the inhabitance for Moderator and shall preside as moderator until a moderator shall be chosen at which meeting said town of Bethlehem, shall have liberty to choose all their town Officers who shall be invested with the same powers as similar Officers in other towns by law have, and shall continue in Office until others be chosen in their stead.

"A true copy of Record Examined by George Wyllys, Secretary of State."

THE FIRST TOWN-MEETING.

The first town-meeting assembled June 20, 1787. Daniel Everett was chosen Moderator; Moses Hawley, Town Clerk; Robert Crane, Capt. Enos Hawley, and John Wheeler, Selectmen; Ebenezer Bird, Town Treasurer; Gideon Atwood, Constable and Collector of Taxes; and Nathan Ranney, Constable. The meeting then adjourned to June 26, 1787.

TOWN CLERKS.

Homer Skidmore, 1853–54; Henry W. Peck, 1855–61; Homer Skidmore, 1862; George C. Stone, 1863; Henry Davis, 1864–66; George C. Stone, 1867; Abraham Beecher, 1868–72; Henry W. Peck, 1873; Franklin Booth, 1874; George C. Stone, 1875–81.

TOWN-HOUSE.

Land was purchased for the site of a town-hall in 1838. Jerial Hayes contracted to build the same, but, failing to complete it in the time specified, a building committee was directed to cause the same to be completed by June 1, 1840.

SELECTMEN FROM 1787 TO 1881.

1787.—Robert Crane, Capt. Enos Hawley, John Wheeler, Ebenezer Bird.
1788.—Robert Crane, David Camp, Ebenezer Perkins.
1790–91.—Ebenezer Perkins, David Leavit, Jr., James Kasson, Jr.
1791–92.—Same as 1790–91, with the addition of M. Hawley.
1793.—D. Leavit, Jr., J. Kasson, M. Hawley.
1794.—David Leavit, Jr., David Ambler, David Bellamy.
1795.—No record.
1796–1800.—Robert Crane, Friend Clark, George D. Kasson.
1801–3.—Friend Clark, George D. Kasson, John Steel (2d).
1804–8.—Friend Clark, George D. Kasson, Nehemiah Lambert.
1809.—George D. Kasson, Nehemiah Lambert, Nathaniel Hawley.
1810.—Same, with the addition of Jonathan Smith.
1811–12.—Nehemiah Lambert, Nathan Hawley, Jonathan Smith.
1813–15.—Nehemiah Lambert, Nathan Hawley, Nathan Burton.
1816.—Nathan Hawley, George D. Kasson, Samuel Bloss.
1817–18.—Nathan Hawley, George D. Kasson, William Kasson.
1819–20.—George D. Kasson, William Kasson, Benjamin T. Lake.
1821–22.—Sheldon C. Leavit, Joseph H. Bellamy, Phineas Crane.
1823–24.—Sheldon C. Leavit, Joseph H. Bellamy, Samuel Bloss.
1825.—Joseph H. Bellamy, Samuel Bloss, Levi Thompson.
1826–28.—Levi Thompson, Joseph Ambler, Adam C. Kasson.
1829.—Sheldon C. Leavit, Joseph Ambler, Adam C. Kasson.
1830.—Minot Smith, James Allen, Phineas Crane.
1831–32.—Minot Smith, James Allen, Jerial Hayes.
1833.—Minot Smith, Nathan Jackson, James Allen.
1834.—James Allen, Levi Thompson.
1835.—Levi Thompson, Noble Allen.
1836–37.*—Noble Allen, Jerial Hayes.
1838.—Noble Allen, Jerial Hayes, B. T. Lake.
1839–42.—Minot Smith, James Allen, Bennett Warner.
1843–44.—Minot Smith, Nicholas Moss, George L. Bloss.
1845.—Abraham Beecher, George L. Bloss, David M. Cowles.
1846.—Abraham Beecher, George M. Kasson, E. L. Thompson.
1847.—Abraham Beecher, Edwin L. Thompson, George L. Bloss.
1848.—Abraham Beecher, George L. Bloss, Abner Allen.
1849–50.—Abraham Beecher, Marvin S. Todd, H. W. Peck.
1851.—Marvin S. Todd, Henry W. Peck, John C. Ambler.
1852.—Marvin S. Todd, Homer Skidmore, George M. Kasson.
1853–54.—Marvin S. Todd, Sidney Peck, Joshua Bird.
1855.—Marvin S. Todd, Sidney Peck, Clark C. Guild.
1856–58.—Marvin S. Todd, Sidney Peck, Henry Catlin.
1859.—Marvin S. Todd, Henry Catlin, Phineas Crane.
1860.—Henry Catlin, Phineas Crane, Samuel L. Bloss.
1861.—Henry Catlin, Phineas Crane, Walter B. Lake.
1862.—Henry Catlin, James Allen, Abraham Beecher.
1863–64.—Abraham Beecher, James Allen, Edwin L. Thompson.
1865.—Abraham Beecher, Edwin L Thompson, Samuel L. Bloss.
1866.—Samuel L. Bloss, Edwin L. Thompson, David W. Ames.
1867–68.—Samuel L. Bloss, Benjamin T. Lake, Allen Smith.
1869–70.—Samuel L. Bloss, Benjamin T. Lake, George C. Guild.
1871.—Henry Catlin, Warren N. Taylor, Theodore Bird.
1872.—Theodore Bird, Ralph Munson, John Trowbridge.
1873.—Nehemiah L. Bloss, Lewis G. Sherman, Jonathan Wooten.
1874–75.—Nehemiah L. Bloss, Jonathan Wooten, George S. Guild.
1876.—Amzi D. Bacon, Henry C. Hill, David W. Ames.
1877.—Amzi D. Bacon, Theodore Bird, George S. Guild.
1878.—Amzi D. Bacon, Henry Catlin, Theodore Bird.
1879.—Henry Catlin, Warren H. Taylor, Marvin S. Todd.
1880.—Henry Catlin, Marvin S. Todd, Theodore Bird.

Grand list, 1880, $453,152.

The present town officers are G. C. Stone, Town Clerk; Henry Catlin, Marvin S. Todd, and Warren H. Taylor, Selectmen; Jonathan Wooten, Town Treasurer; Benjamin T. Lake, Town Deposit Fund Treasurer.

LIST OF REPRESENTATIVES.

1787, David Ambler; 1788, David Ambler, David Camp; 1789, David Camp, Capt. Jonathan Smith; 1790–91, David Ambler; 1792, David Ambler, Oliver Parmelee; 1793, David Ambler; 1794–96, David Bellamy; 1797, Oliver Parmelee, David Bellamy; 1798, David Leavitt, Jr., David Bellamy; 1799, David Leavitt, Jr.; 1800, David Leavitt, Jr., David Bellamy; 1801, David Leavitt, Jr., Alexandria Kasson; 1802, David Bellamy, David Leavitt, Jr.; 1803, David Bellamy, Nehemiah Lambert; 1804–5, David Bellamy; 1806, Nehemiah Lambert, David Bellamy; 1807, David Bellamy; 1808, Nehemiah Lambert, David Bellamy; 1809, David Bellamy; 1810, Samuel Church, Jr., David Bellamy; 1811, George D. Kasson, Samuel Church, Jr.; 1812, Nehemiah Lambert; 1813, George D. Kasson, Leveritt Judd; 1814, Samuel Church, Jr., Leveritt Judd; 1815, Nehemiah Lambert, Sheldon C. Leavitt; 1816, Nathan Hawley; 1817, Sheldon C. Leavitt,

* In 1837 the election was held upon the 26th of September, and not the fore-part of December, as heretofore.

Nehemiah Lambert; 1818, Nehemiah Lambert, Joseph H. Bellamy; 1819,* Joseph H. Bellamy; 1820, Sheldon C. Leavitt; 1821, Joseph H. Bellamy; 1822, Sheldon C. Leavitt; 1823, Nathan Barton, Jr.; 1824–25, Sheldon C. Leavitt; 1826–27, Joseph H. Bellamy; 1828, Sheldon C. Leavitt; 1829–31, Nathan Jackson; 1832, Minot Smith; 1833, Nathan Jackson; 1834, Nathan Hawley; 1835, Isaac S. Wadsworth; 1836, James Allen; 1837, Jerial Hayes; 1838, Noble Allen; 1839, Nathan Hawley; 1840, no choice; 1841, Charles A. Bloss; 1842, Abraham Beecher; 1843, Gideon Allen; 1844, Nicholas Moss; 1845, George T. Bloss; 1846, Bennett Warner; 1847, Nicholas Moss; 1848, Marvin S. Todd; 1849, Edwin L. Thompson; 1850, Sidney Peck; 1851, James Allen, Jr.; 1852, James Allen; 1853, Henry W. Peck; 1854, Benjamin T. Lake; 1855, William A. Hayes; 1856, Henry Catlin; 1857, Leonard L. Hotchkiss; 1858, L. H. Guild; 1859, Sidney Peck; 1860, Samuel L. Bloss; 1861, Marvin S. Todd; 1862, Henry W. Peck; 1863, Marvin S. Todd; 1864, Abraham Beecher; 1865, Edwin L. Thompson; 1866, Henry Davis; 1867, Henry J. Martin; 1868, Henry Catlin; 1869, Marshall E. Beecher; 1870, Warren H. Taylor; 1871, Gideon D. Crane; 1872, George S. Guild; 1873, Marshall E. Beecher; 1874, Richard W. Bacon; 1875, Henry C. Hill; 1876, David W. Thompson; 1877, Herbert S. Jackson; 1878, David W. Thompson; 1879, George C. Stone; 1880, David H. Judd; 1881, Francis E. Judson.

THE REVOLUTION.

The following vote of the society of Bethlehem illustrates the spirit of the people in 1776:

"We the subscribers in Bethlehem, Considering the great Danger we are in from our unnatural Enemies do voluntarily Ingage to Equip ourselves as soon as we can with a good Gun, Sword or Bayonet, and Caterage Box for any Especial Emergency, for the Defense of our Invaluable Rights and Privileges and Promise to support the same with our Lives and fortunes as witness our hands the 18th day of July A.D. 1776."

This agreement was signed by Capt. Andrew Martin and forty-four others.

MILITARY RECORD.

The following is the list of those who entered the late Rebellion credited to this town:

Charles and Levi Baldwin, E. Burke, A. W. Burr, Joseph Boyce, Felix Clary, William B. Crane, Francis Dugan, John Duffee, William Flynn, John Ferry, Isaac Foot, Michael Garrey, James H. Gilbert, John Hogan, Henry J. Hubbard, John Hayden, Patrick Howard, Daniel Hunt, John Jorie, Oliver Johnson, Alexander D. and E. N. Kasson, Louis Le Blanc, A. J. Lownsbury, Peter Monagher, Richard McGee, Jr., Thomas McBride, Olin Nash, Dexter A. Harson, B. and John K. Northrup, James Oswald, Patrick Rourke, Theodore Stewart, Abram B. Polles, George Williams, Philip L. Waldron.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.

JAMES ALLEN.

The Allen family have been identified with the history of Bethlehem for more than a hundred years. Amos Allen, the pioneer, came from Woodbridge and settled in the southwest part of the town, where he raised a family of six children, five sons and one daughter. He was a large land-owner, and gave to each of his sons land, upon which they settled, in the immediate neighborhood. James Allen was the oldest son by a second wife. His land was adjoining the old home on the south. His father died when he was nineteen years of age. When twenty-one he was married to Clarissa Way. Their children were Abner, Amos, James, George P., and Jabez. Mr. Allen was a man of good judgment and strict integrity, and he enjoyed in a large degree the confidence and esteem of his neighbors; was a Democrat in politics, and often called to fill town offices, and was a selectman for many years, and frequently chosen administrator of estates and guardian of minor children. He represented the town in the Legislature in 1836 and in 1852. He was also a soldier in the war of 1812, for which his widow received a pension. He died in 1858, in his sixty-fourth year. His wife died March 10, 1881, at the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Mr. Allen received but a small farm from his father, to which he made additions until he had two hundred and eighty acres, upon which he built a good and substantial house, now the home of his third son, James, Jr., who received the home-farm from his father, and, like him, has added other lands until he has some four hundred acres of land, with large improvements and fine buildings (a view of which may be seen in this work). He is one of the most substantial and successful farmers in his town, and has held several town offices, and represented the town in the Legislature in 1851. He married Betsy L., daughter of George W. Peck, and granddaughter of Deacon Calvin Peck, who came to Sharon when a young man, where the family still reside. Their children are Frank P., who is in the lumber business in Georgia; Charles M., is a hardware merchant in Waterbury; J. Edward, is a farmer in Bethlehem; and Henry M., lives at home.

* Under the constitution.

CHAPTER XXVI.

BRIDGEWATER.

Geographical — Topographical — Incorporation of Town — First Town-Meeting — Officers Elected — List of Town Clerks — Representatives from 1857 to 1881 — Ecclesiastical History — Congregational Church — St. Mark's Church — Methodist Episcopal Church — Baptist Church — Roman Catholic Church — Grand List, 1881 — Military Record.

THIS town lies in the southwestern part of Litchfield County, and is bounded as follows: on the north by New Milford, on the east by the town of Roxbury and New Haven County, on the south by Fairfield County, and on the west by Fairfield County and the town of New Milford. Its surface is hilly, but is well adapted to agricultural pursuits. Tobacco raising forms a leading occupation of the inhabitants.

The early history of this town is interwoven with that of the mother-town, New Milford, and will be found detailed in the history of that town elsewhere in this work.

INCORPORATION OF BRIDGEWATER.

Bridgewater formed a portion of New Milford until May, 1856, when it was set off as a separate town. It was known as the "Neck."

The first town-meeting was held July 14, 1856, with Charles H. Sanford as moderator. The following officers were chosen: Sherman Peck, Glover Sanford, and Roswell Morris, Selectmen; Charles H. Sanford, Town Clerk; Peter Wooster, Treasurer; Eli Sturdevant, Constable and Collector; Burr Glover, Burr Mallet, Samuel F. Clark, and John Keeler, Constables; Nelson D. Trobridge and Addison Beardsley, Grand Jurors; Samuel R. Clark, Henry C. Knight, and J. G. Randal, Tithingmen; Charles Leavenworth and Alva Warner, Haywards; David Wooster, Gauger; Harley Sanford, Sealer of Weights and Measures; James M. Phippeney, Packer; William P. Bennett, Sexton; J. Platt, Burying-ground Commissioner; Henry B. Young, Pound-Keeper; Peter Phippeney and S. W. Treat, Fence-Viewers; Horace Judson, Register.

TOWN CLERKS.

The following is a list of town clerks from the organization of the town to 1881:

Charles H. Sanford, 1857–59; G. R. Warner,* 1860–62; Austin H. Gillett, 1862–69; Henry H. Du Bois, M.D., 1870–74; G. R. Warner,† 1875–81.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM 1857 TO 1881.

1857, Hiram Keeler; 1858, Homer B. Sanford; 1859, N. D. Trowbridge; 1860, John Peck; 1861, R. J. Livingston; 1862, F. S. Sanford; 1863, Smith R. Weeks; 1864, George Beardsley; 1865, Eli Sturdevant; 1866, Glover Sanford; 1867, Alonzo Barnum; 1868, G. R. Warner; 1869, Austin H. Gillett; 1870, Daniel Keeler; 1871, Sherman Peck; 1872, Burr Mallett; 1873, Edgar L. Peck; 1874, Darwin Keeler; 1875, Bence B. Beach; 1876, Marcus B. Mallett; 1877, John Keeler; 1878, Jeremiah G. Randall; 1879, James H. Keeler; 1880, George W. Morris; 1881, Amos Northrop.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.‡

Inasmuch as the history of the Congregational Church and Society was for a long time almost the history of this section of the old town, it will be given in extenso:

The first ecclesiastical society in Bridgewater was organized in the year 1803. Up to that year it was a part of the first society in New Milford. At the session of the General Assembly in said year action was taken upon the petition of Truman Minor et al., to be set off as a district society, on "account of the inconveniences which they suffer by continuing a part of the New Milford Society." The petition bears date "April 30, 1803," and was granted. The limits of the society, as specified in the act of the Legislature, were the same as those of the present town of Bridgewater. Those seem to have been based originally upon what—as to its northern boundary—was known as the "established military lines in said Neck" (probably the limit of a company of the militia.)

Simultaneously with the organization there was pledged by a subscription a fund amounting to two thousand five hundred and seventy-seven dollars, "the interest of which shall be paid annually, and carefully applied to the support of an able and discreet minister of the gospel in said society." Much of the fund subscribed was never paid, and during the first thirty years the interest was but partially collected. Legacies have from time to time been added, but considerable sums seem to have also been lost. The last legacy—one thousand dollars—was from the estate of the late Lyman Smith.

The first meeting of the society was on Nov. 17, 1803, at the house of John Canfield. At a meeting held Feb. 1, 1804, it was voted "that we will lay a tax of five mills on the dollar for the benefit of the society, to be payable by April 1st." Jeremiah Canfield was appointed collector of said tax. At the same meeting it was voted "that the society committee be empowered to hire a minister, and lay out as much of the money to be raised by the tax as they think for the good of the society." Also "that we will purchase pine lumber for the purpose of building a meeting-house." Also "that Eli Smith and Benjamin Mead be appointed a committee to purchase said lumber." By a vote passed Dec. 27, 1804, their purchase was rejected, and no advance seems to have been made until the end of 1806, December 16th, at which time a committee of nine, of which Benjamin Mead was chairman, was appointed to pitch a stake at the cranberry pond "for the meeting-house." They were requested to attend to the business "on Thursday next at two P.M." This seems to have been done satisfactorily, for on Jan. 8, 1807, they voted that "we will build a meeting-house in this society with a steeple, this present year, on or near the place where the stake is now pitched, south of the cranberry pond, on James W. and Sally Smith's land. Said house to be raised and closed." The building committee were Eli Smith, David Merwin (2d), and Andrew Miner." The same committee was to set a price on the lumber bought, and also upon "all kinds of labor by the day." The price fixed upon for the first three months of that year was three shillings and sixpence per day (about sixty-two cents), and seven shillings for a four-cattle team."

The frame of the present edifice is the one which was put up at that time, but the house has been remodeled twice. It seems to have been built in the plainest manner. The first covering was of shingles and not painted. This we infer from the fact that on Oct. 10, 1807, they voted "to paint the steeple, all above the deck floor, and the trimmings of the house." The building does not seem to have been completed before 1810.

The pioneers seem to have been fruitful in expedients for meeting and conquering financial difficulties, for, near the close of 1807, they appointed Andrew Miner, as agent of the society, to petition the Legislature for a lottery to finish the house.

In the early part of 1817 the meeting-house was

* Mr. Warner resigned, and Levi M. Warner was appointed.

† Vice Gillett, resigned.

‡ Condensed from a historical discourse delivered in Bridgewater, July 9, 1876, by Rev. J. B. Doolittle.

struck by lightning. This was soon repaired. It underwent no further extensive repairs until 1842.

It is a matter of interest to the young to know that in those early days it would have been considered by many a positive sin to have a fire in the meeting-house. Our grandfathers tell us that they used to sit patiently through two long sermons; and if their feet became intolerably cold they would knock them together to stimulate circulation. The ladies have always in this country been privileged characters. They used to carry foot-stoves; some of which, of more recent pattern, may still be found in the slips, contesting the ground with the modern soapstone. I find no record of the first introduction of stoves. It was probably, however, not far from the year 1825. And probably for some years the stove-pipes formed a junction in front of the pulpit and thence out through the roof. The first substitute for a bell was a large triangle. This in time was replaced by a bell.

The church was organized Aug. 10, 1809. Its records were burned in 1830. It was organized with twenty-nine members,—nine male and twenty female. Rev. Reuben Taylor, the first pastor, was ordained Jan. 24, 1810, and was dismissed April 5, 1815.

From the time of his dismission until Feb. 15, 1824, the church remained destitute of a preached gospel and its blessed ordinances, except occasional supplies, for a few weeks at a time, by itinerant preachers.

For five years succeeding 1824 the church enjoyed the regular preaching of the gospel for one-third part of the time by Rev. Fosdic Harrison, pastor of the church in Roxbury.

Mr. Taylor was settled upon a salary of four hundred dollars. But at the outset he was also given five hundred dollars as a "settlement." This was in accordance with the usual custom of the churches in the settlement of pastors. This money was given him upon the condition that, "Provided he leaves the society within the term of ten years, and the fault shall be his, he shall refund to the society in proportion as he has not tarried that length of time." On March 6, 1815, he was notified that his "resignation would be accepted." He therefore saved his two hundred and fifty dollars.

Mr. Taylor built and occupied the house which is known as the Lyman Smith place. The magnificent shade-trees around it, set out by him, are his most enduring material monument. He also set out the orchard east of the house. He purchased the trees of a Mr. Sturdevant, who was to take his pay in sermons upon the "doctrine of Election." Mr. Taylor gave them a pretty strong one on the following Sunday, and at the close of it Mr. Sturdevant said: "Mr. Taylor, we will call the tree account square."

The period of the early history of this church was characterized extensively in New England by the breaking up of the old denominational monopoly; a reaction against the "high Calvinism" which had so prominently characterized the "standing order" during the last half of the last century.

In 1820 one Mr. Burritt preached here. The only allusion to him upon the records is the fact that "sixteen united with the church under him."

The second settled pastor here was Rev. Albert Camp. He was probably Dr. Camp's son, of Northfield. He was ordained and installed Dec. 9, 1834. The Consociation met at that time at the house of Stephen Treat,—Mr. Camp's boarding-place. His salary, as voted by the society, was three hundred and sixty-five dollars per year, and three Sundays vacation. During this pastorate the meeting-house was rebuilt.

March 10, 1842, the society voted to repair the underpinning and steeple, put slips in the place of pews, and cover the building on three sides with pine siding; also to "paint the outside and inside," if sufficient funds can be raised by subscription. J. L. Miner was appointed a committee to circulate the same, and Lyman Smith, John Wooster, and Harmon Treat were appointed a committee to superintend the work.

During Mr. Camp's pastorate the parsonage was built upon land donated by Stephen Treat, but for interest upon which he was during his lifetime to be paid thirty dollars annually. The parsonage was first owned as a joint stock "affair," but was afterwards bought in and owned by the society. Beach Sanford and Daniel Miner were the building committee. The cost was twelve hundred and thirty-two dollars and two cents.

A vote of the society, bearing the date of 1830, is as follows:

"That if Homer Treat will be accountable to the society for seventy-five dollars, the said H. T. shall have the privilege to solicit subscriptions from individuals to help him pay the said seventy-five dollars, and he shall have the privilege of boarding the minister through the year, and no member of the society shall be allowed the privilege of having a scholar or scholars to study and recite to the minister during the year, either directly or indirectly."

Mr. Camp was dismissed June 6, 1843.

Rev. James Kilbourn supplied the pulpit from Aug. 13, 1843. He was ordained and installed Feb. 21, 1844, upon a salary of four hundred and fifty dollars, including aid from the Domestic Missionary Society. He was dismissed July 1, 1850.

Rev. Dillon Williams was acting pastor during the two years following,—that is, until September, 1852.

The interval between September, 1852, and 1860 found Rev. F. Harrison acting as reserve, while unsuccessful efforts seem to have been made to secure a pastor. There were nine added to the church, of whom three were by profession; sixteen were dismissed.

Among those who occupied the pulpit at times are the names of H. H. McFarland and Lester Dorman.

Rev. L. S. Potwin was ordained and installed Oct. 2, 1860, and was dismissed in 1863.

Rev. Henry E. Hart was acting pastor from July,

1863, to July, 1866. Rev. Wm. H. Dean commenced his labors here Nov. 21, 1866, and was installed Aug. 28, 1867. His dismission occurred June 21, 1871. Simultaneously with his coming there was developed a revival of considerable power, which resulted in the largest numerical accession which the church has ever experienced. During his pastorate a new pipe organ was put into the church. It cost eleven hundred dollars, and was the gift of Lyman Smith.

Rev. John B. Doolittle commenced his labors here July 1, 1872, and was installed on the 16th of October following.

Mr. Harrison, of Roxbury, from his long familiarity with Bridgewater, and his frequent official connection with this church, is remembered with sincere affection by all of the older people.

Seven of the sons of this church have entered the Christian ministry, viz.: Joseph Treat, Wm. A. Hawley, Levi Smith, Isaac C. Beach, Julius O. Beardsley (foreign missionary), Philo R. Hurd, and Albert E. Dunning. The following legacies have been received by the society: in 1847, estate of Abijah Beach, $300; in 1849, estate of Stephen Treat, $500; in 1850, estate of Mrs. David Young, $50; in 1873, estate of Lyman Smith, $1000. Mr. Smith's legacy was in addition to his gift to the society of the organ, before alluded to, at a cost of $1100.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH.*

The first record of any organization of St. Mark's Episcopal Society is of a meeting held at the dwelling-house of Jonas Sanford, on Easter Monday, April 23, 1810, at which meeting William Gillett and Julius Camp were chosen wardens, Daniel Booth, Jeremiah Platt, and James Jesup vestrymen, William Gillet reading clerk, Samuel Lockwood, treasurer; also David Merwin, Joseph Wheeler, Blackman Jesup, Jeremiah Canfield, Treat Canfield, Jehiel Summers, and John Treat were chosen choristers, and Joel Sanford elected to attend the State convention within the year.

It appears that no steps were taken at this time towards the erection of a church edifice, but the people received such ministrations as the ministers of neighboring parishes were able to offer, meeting for worship at the dwellings of the several church-members, but more frequently at the house of Jonas Sanford. The society continued its existence in this way until the year 1835, when it had so far increased in numbers and strength as to warrant the undertaking of the building of a church edifice, which was accordingly erected in this same year, being located about one-half mile south of the present village, and afterwards a public road was laid by the town, past the church, which led to Southville. This edifice was used for worship until the year 1859, when the erection of a second church building, located in the centre of the village, was commenced and completed in the following year, and was consecrated March 14, 1860, by the Right Rev. John Williams, and continues in use as the place of public worship by the members of St. Mark's Society.

No complete list of ministers can be given from the first organization to the erection of a church, but among those officiating are the names of Revs. B. Northrop, Benjamin Benham, and Joseph S. Covell.

Since 1835 the church has been in charge of the following named clergymen: Revs. Joseph S. Covell, Abel Nichols, George H. Nichols, William Atwill, Abel Ogden, William O. Jarvis, H. F. M. Whitesides, Abel Nichols, Merritt H. Wellman, William H. Cook, James Morton, H. D. Noble, X. Alanson Welton, W. B. Colburn, D.D., and G. V. C. Eastman, D.D., under whose charge the church is at the present time.

The present officers of the parish are as follows: Jeremiah G. Randall, Eli Sturdevant, Wardens; Arza C. Morris, Albert B. Mallett, Amos Northrop, Vestrymen; Henry S. Frost, Collector; Arza C. Morris, Treasurer; Jeremiah G. Randall, Delegate to Convention; Eli Sturdevant, Clerk.

THE METHODIST CHURCH.

In his historical address delivered in 1876, Rev. Mr. Doolittle said,—

"The Methodists also commenced among us, and they, too, have had their privileged share in promoting the religious work. A large number of those who originally worshiped with us afterward withdrew, principally, I think, on account of doctrinal differences, and united with them. I think they never had a meeting-house here. They met in different places. But more recently they have had a flourishing church in Southville, where they now have a neat place of worship."

The Baptists at one time had a church here, but it long ago became extinct. The Roman Catholics also at one time had a flourishing organization here.

GRAND LIST, 1881.

180¾ dwelling houses	$71,115
9187¾ acres of land	211,328
Mills, stores, and manufactories	3,170
200 horses	8,870
987 neat cattle	20,512
Sheep, swine, and poultry	482
Carriages and wagons	3,849
Timepieces and jewelry	415
Musical instruments	1,165
Libraries	100
Bank, insurance, and manufacturing stock	43,511
Railroad, city, and other corporation bonds	500
Amount employed in merchandising	3,225
Investments in mechanical and manufacturing operations	1,120
Money at interest	19,847
Money on hand	100
All other taxable property	27,360
Ten per cent. additional	8,337
Added by board relief	10,263
	$435,269
Deductions	17,335
Grand list	$417,934
Grand list, 1879	422,175
Loss	$4,241

Polls, 65; military, 90.

MILITARY RECORD.†

A. Lecor, 8th Regt.; enl. Nov. 18, 1864.
P. Harvey, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 16, 1864; disch. Aug. 25, 1865.
George Peters, enl. Dec. 12, 1864.

* Contributed by E. Sturdevant.

† For list of 19th Regiment, see Chapter V.

Glover Sanford

Lyman Smith

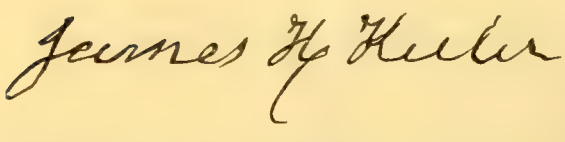
D. W. Peck, sergeant, 10th Regt.; enl. Aug. 1, 1861; disch. July 22, 1862.
E. C. Beardsley, 10th Regt.; enl. Aug. 1, 1861; died April 25, 1862.
L. Foulon, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 1864; disch. June 13, 1865.
G. Schneeweiss, 10th Regt.; enl. Nov. 23, 1864; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
J. O. Beers, 12th Regt.; enl. Nov. 23, 1861; disch. Dec. 2, 1864.
R. A. Canfield, 12th Regt.; enl. Nov. 22, 1861.
H. M. Payne, 12th Regt.; enl. Nov. 22, 1861; disch. June 27, 1862.
J. Collins, 15th Regt.; enl. March 3, 1864; ordered to navy.
William Doyle, 20th Regt.; enl. March 3, 1864; disch. July 19, 1865.
Henry Hinton, 20th Regt.; enl. March 3, 1864; disch. July 19, 1865.
A. E. Hamlin, 23d Regt.; enl. Aug. 8, 1862; died June 2, 1863.
William Wilson, 1st Art.; enl. Nov. 24, 1864.
Eugene H. Duffy, 5th Regt.; enl. Aug. 14, 1863; killed July 20, 1864.
William Kamstler, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. Sept. 1, 1861.
W. H. Armitage, 5th Regt.; enl. Aug. 14, 1863.
Charles Alexander, 5th Regt.; enl. March 3, 1864; must. out July 19, 1865.
John Carr, 5th Regt.; enl. Aug. 14, 1863; killed July 20, 1864.
J. H. Guy, 5th Regt.; enl. Aug. 15, 1863; must. out July 19, 1865.
John Youngs, 5th Regt.; enl. Aug. 15, 1863; must. out May 27, 1865.
George Harvey, 6th Regt.; enl. Nov. 12, 1864; must. out Aug. 21, 1865.
John Dupires, 11th Regt.; enl. March 4, 1864; pro. first lieutenant.
B. Divine, 11th Regt.; enl. Dec. 1, 1864; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
S. R. Thomson, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 4, 1862; died of wounds Dec. 30, 1862
George Clawson, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 15, 1862; disch. July 27, 1863.
Henry Mabie, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 15, 1862; disch. July 27, 1863.
James H. Mabie, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 15, 1862; disch. July 27, 1863.
George Paulscraft, 27th Regt.; enl. Sept. 15, 1862; disch. July 27, 1863.
George D. Cummings, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 10, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
David Dovoo, 28th Regt.; enl. Oct. 2, 1862.
James McLaughlin, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 2, 1862.
John Wixon, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 23, 1862.
W. H. Gregory, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 23, 1862; killed Oct. 27, 1864.
Benjamin Thompson, 28th Regt.; enl. Dec. 23, 1862.
A. G. Dixon, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 23, 1862; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
H. Storms, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 21, 1863; disch. June 19, 1865.
S. Wright, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 22, 1863; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
T. Francis, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 22, 1863; disch. Oct. 24, 1865.
J. L. Weller, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; died July 29, 1863.
Charles M. Booth, first lieutenant, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
H. F. Erwin, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 6, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
Herman Beers, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862.
N. S. Chapin, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 6, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
H. Cole, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 15, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
J. Garlich, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
M. Langdon, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 30, 1862.
Frederick Mead, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 30, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
Henry Smith, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 23, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
C. E. Woodin, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; died July 17, 1863.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

GLOVER SANFORD.

The Sanford family date their ancestry back to Thomas Sanford, a descendant of Thomas de Sanford, a follower of William, Duke of Normandy, who is mentioned on the roll of Battle Abbey, Oct. 14, 1066. Another descendant, Thomas Sanford, came to Boston in the year 1631, and settled in Milford, Conn., in the year 1639; died there in 1681. From him the Connecticut Sanfords date their ancestry. The subject of this sketch, Glover Sanford, was the third son of Liffe and Huldah Blackman Sanford; was born in that part of the town of New Milford now the town of Bridgewater, March 3, 1797. His father served seven years in the Revolutionary war, and was present at the execution of Maj. Andre. He died Dec. 3, 1815. After the death of his father he apprenticed himself to his brother, John B. Sanford, in the adjoining town of Brookfield, to learn the trade of a hatter, being then eighteen years of age. In 1820 he commenced business in the town of Salisbury, Conn. In February, 1821, he married Betsy Lake, daughter of Benjamin and Mabel Lake, of Brookfield. In 1823 he returned to his native town, where for a period of forty-seven years he was engaged in the manufacturing of hats, having associated with him in the business his four sons, Charles H., Homer B., Frederick S., and Edwin G., upon their arriving at legal age, which composed the well-known firm of Glover Sanford & Sons. In 1870 the firm, for want of facilities, removed their business to Bridgeport, Conn., and in which he continued until his death, and the business is still continued under the same firm-name. He experienced in his business career difficulties that would have disheartened a man of less resolution and power of will; but with him to encounter a difficulty was to overcome. He was self-reliant, persevering, of keen business foresight, a public-spirited, honorable, and upright man, ever ready to lend a helping hand to others. In the affairs of his native town he always had a lively interest; was twice a representative to the State Legislature. In politics he was a staunch Democrat. He was the first postmaster upon the establishment of a post-office in the town, and held the same for many years, his first commission being issued during the administration of Andrew Jackson. He was one of the original corporators of the Bank of Litchfield County, of New Milford, now the First National Bank of New Milford, and a director in the same up to within a few weeks of his death. He was also one of the corporators of the town of Bridgewater, upon its being incorporated a town, in 1856, and one of its first board of selectmen. His habits of activity kept him from the infirmities of age, and his mental faculties were in full vigor at the close of his life. He died May 30, 1878, at the age of eighty-one.

LYMAN SMITH.



Lyman Smith, son of Eli and Huldah Merwin Smith, was born in New Milford, Bridgewater Society, now the town of Bridgewater, Oct. 14, 1795, and died Feb. 8, 1873, aged seventy-eight. He was the eighth of a family of nine children. His father died when he was fourteen years of age. He received his education from the common schools and the seminary at Cheshire, Conn. Upon completion of his education he went to New Haven, and entered the wholesale grocery store of Elias Hotchkiss, remaining there for four years. Returning to his native town, he married Susanna Wooster, daughter of Peter and Betsey Canfield Wooster, and purchased the house built by the Rev. Reuben Taylor, the first Congregational minister settled in the society, and entered into the business of farming. In 1825 he went into the mercantile business, in which he continued for about thirty years. He was a director of the First National Bank of New Milford for many years, and was at the time of his death. He represented the town of New Milford in the State Legislature. In politics he was a Republican, having previously been a Whig. He was an active member and promoter of the Congregational Church and society, having donated to the same a fine organ, and in his will bequeathed to the society a liberal sum. He had two daughters,—Betsey Ann Smith, who married Smith R. Weeks, and Susan Adeline Smith, who married Charles H. Sanford.

JAMES H. KEELER.*

James Harvey Keeler, third son of Stephen B. Keeler, was born Dec. 23, 1807, in the town of Ridgefield, Fairfield Co., Conn. His father removed in 1813 to that part of New Milford then known as Bridgewater parish, and which was incorporated as a separate town in 1856. At the age of eleven years Mr. Keeler left home to enter upon a life of active and arduous labor. He received a common-school education, and at the age of seventeen years was apprenticed to a carpenter, at which trade he worked for some ten years. He was married to Miss Harriet Skidmore April 20, 1836. He then purchased and cultivated a farm for some years, after which he erected a store, and engaged in the mercantile business for about seven years, dividing his time between that and agricultural pursuits. He then engaged in the cattle trade, which he successfully united with farming for a period of more than thirty years. He now cultivates his estate, and, in connection with this, devotes much attention to the business of buying and packing tobacco.

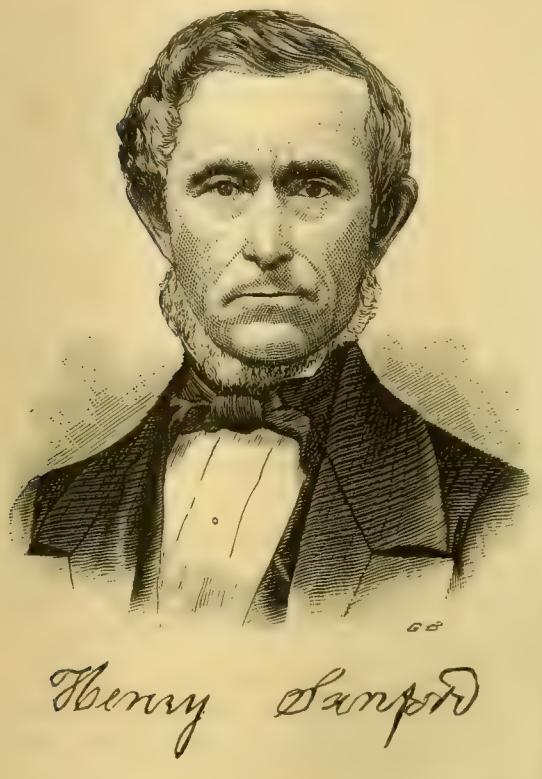
Mr. and Mrs. Keeler have been the parents of six children, of whom three sons died in early life. The survivors are as follows: Robert, born March 8, 1841, who married Martha Randall, Dec. 31, 1862 (their only child is Hattie E., born Oct. 15, 1866); James H., Jr., born Feb. 4, 1843, who married Rebecca M. Sanford, Dec. 31, 1863; she died in April, 1872. Mr. Keeler was married a second time to Kate Erwin, of New Milford, Jan. 7, 1874. His children are, by his first wife, Rebecca M., born Nov. 6, 1871, and by his second, Alice E., born Aug. 6, 1875. The third survivor is Harriet S., born Sept. 3, 1849, and married to Mr. Frederick A. Peck, Oct. 14, 1867. Their children are Lois S., born Dec. 15, 1868; De Witt K., born Oct. 25, 1870; Frederick A., born Sept. 16, 1873; and Sherman, born Oct. 19, 1877.

Mr. Keeler represented the town of New Milford in the Legislature of 1856, when Bridgewater was incorporated as a separate town. He was elected for the express purpose of securing the act of incorporation, and after much laborious effort the desired object was accomplished, as we have before stated. He also represented Bridgewater in the Legislature of 1879. He held a magistrate's commission for many years; was for several years in succession a selectman; has also been assessor and member of the board of relief, and has, in fact, filled nearly all the town offices. He has ever been generous, and personally active in urging and sustaining every measure promotive of the public welfare. Every scheme for the moral, religious, educational, and general welfare of the community has found in him an ardent and persevering friend. He has long been a communicant and prominent parishioner of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church, and his name, wherever known, is a synonym for integrity and worth.

It may be interesting to state, in connection with the above, that Mr. Keeler's father was born in Ridgefield, Fairfield Co., May 3, 1773, married Sally Paddock in 1802, and died in Bridgewater, May 9, 1850. He was the eldest son of Daniel Keeler, who married Elizabeth Burr, a cousin of the celebrated Aaron Burr, and who died in 1806.



* By Rev. W. B. Colburn, D.D., who was for many years rector of St. Mark's Church, Bridgewater.

MARCUS B. MALLETT.

HENRY SANFORD.

The subject of this sketch is descended in this country from Thomas Sanford, who settled in Milford in 1639. The descent is as follows: Thomas, Ezekiel, Sr., Ezekiel, Jr., Joseph, Nehemiah, Sr., and Nehemiah, Jr.

Henry Sanford

Nehemiah Sanford, Jr., father of Henry Sanford, was born in 1762, at Redding, Conn. (local name Umpawang Hill), and with his parents (Nehemiah, Sr., and Elizabeth) removed to New Milford in 1773, and located in what was known as New Milford Neck, since incorporated as the town of Bridgewater. He was the youngest son of Nehemiah, Sr. Enlisted into the Revolutionary war at the age of nineteen; served three months, at which time the war closed. He was an earnest supporter of the institutions of the gospel, regular in attendance, etc. April 6, 1786, he married Hannah Beach, daughter of David Beach, of Bridgewater. To them were born Robert W., May 10, 1787; Anna, May 31, 1792; Electa, Sept. 11, 1795; Garry, Aug. 28, 1797; Beach, Aug. 16, 1804; Henry, Oct. 14, 1806.

Robert W. married Mabel Squires, June 3, 1806; moved to Rootstown, Ohio, 1819; had nine children; lived to be ninety-two; wife still living.

Anna died, unmarried, at the age of forty-nine; resided in Bridgewater.

Electa married Philo Carter, in Ohio, April 27, 1823; had five children; died at forty-one.

Garry moved to Ohio, 1819; married Emily Richardson, 1822; had nine children; died at the age of forty-seven.

Beach married Lucy Smith, Nov. 15, 1825; moved to Rootstown, Ohio, 1842; had a family of five sons; moved to Warren, Wis., 1860; died at sixty-one.

Henry Sanford, the youngest son and child of Nehemiah Sanford, Jr., was born Oct. 14, 1806. Educational advantages were the district school. He was reared a farmer, and occupies, owns, and tills the farm once owned by his father and grandfather, Nehemiah, Sr.

At the age of twenty-one he identified himself with the Congregational society, to which he has ever been a strong supporter, and held many offices. Ever ready to do his part in anything that would promote its welfare and sustain the institutions of the gospel.

At the age of twenty-two he married Anna J. Canfield, daughter of Daniel and Rebecca Canfield, of Bridgewater, Dec. 4, 1828. Mrs. Sanford died March 10, 1844. Nov. 12, 1845, he married a second wife, Polly B. Platt, daughter of Simeon Platt, of South Britain.

By his former wife, Anna J., he had two sons,—Canfield H., born July 22, 1839, who died in infancy; Horace N., born Jan. 4, 1841, who follows the business of farming. His educational advantages were district school, select school, and two years at the Normal School, New Britain, Conn. During the late Rebellion he joined the Nineteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, Company H, Sept. 11, 1862, and continued with it three years, until date of muster out, July, 1865. Received three slight wounds, one at Cold Harbor, June 1, 1864, under Gen. Grant, two at Strasburg, Oct. 19, 1864, under Gen. Sheridan. He was a sergeant. Nov. 28, 1867, he married Dora M. Kasson, daughter of George M. Kasson, of Bethlehem, Conn., to whom were born three children,—Genevieve T., March 18, 1872; Henry C., April 16, 1875; Mabelle F., April 29, 1879. United with the Congregational Church, Nov. 4, 1860, and has since been identified in its interest; has been for a number of years one of its deacons.

MARCUS B. MALLETT.

Marcus B. Mallett, son of Daniel and Eunice B. Mallett, was born in Trumbull, Conn., March 5, 1809. He was the eldest of twelve children. He enjoyed the limited advantages for an education afforded the children of the New England farmer of those days. At the age of fifteen years he was apprenticed to his maternal uncle, Benjamin B. Beach, of Bridgewater, Conn. At the end of the first year, his uncle's health having failed, he hired Marcus to Hiram Keeler, his brother-in-law, who was a carpenter. He remained with Mr. Keeler until the October before he was twenty-one years of age, working the next year for Amos Williams, of Brookfield, Conn., at the close of which he purchased a farm of Hiram Keeler, paying eleven hundred dollars in cash and agreeing to pay a balance of nine hundred dollars at the expiration of four years. On the 8th of March, 1831, he married Sarah, daughter of Stephen B. and Sally Keeler. This union was blessed with three children,—Sarah E., Burr, and Alvira. By industry and economy the farm was paid for in four years, and he had four hundred dollars besides. He subsequently sold this place, and bought a farm containing seventy acres of Joseph Bennett, which he sold to Oren Young in 1842. He is now living on the farm he purchased of his grandson, B. Warner. Mr. Mallett's daughter, Sarah E., married Arza Morris; to them were born three children,—Gertrude E., Mary A., and S. Eugenia. His son Burr married Mary E., daughter of Grandison R. Warner, Sept. 28, 1856, and she died, four days after marriage, of typhoid fever, at Earle's Hotel, New York. On Jan. 1, 1861, he married, for his second wife, Emelia C., daughter of Frederick Boland; their children are Mary E., Marcus B., Montiville, and Sarah J. He represented his town in the General Assembly in 1876, and has held a number of other offices of trust. Alvira married Levi, son of G. R. Warner, on Nov. 4, 1861; their children are Reuben M. and S. Eugenia.

ROSWELL MORRIS.

Roswell Morris was born in Newtown, Fairfield Co., Conn., May 27, 1795. His father, Amos Morris, was one of six children, and was born in Bridgeport, Sept. 28, 1762, and married Eunice Clark.

Roswell Morris was the second of four children, having two brothers, Levi and Curtis, and a sister, Martha, all born in Newtown. His parents moved from Newtown to Bridgewater (then New Milford) in the spring of 1800, he being then five years of age. There they lived until 1833, when they moved to Great Barrington, Mass., where they spent the last eight years of their lives, only four days intervening between their deaths. Roswell's elder brother, Levi, married Polly H. Smith. His brother Curtis married Abigail Curtis for his first wife, and Cynthia J. Frink for his second wife. His sister Martha married Orange Smith. Roswell Morris married Laura Canfield, daughter of John and Phebe Canfield, Nov. 26, 1818; their children were Cornelia, Caroline, Mary, and Arza C. Cornelia married Henry B. Young; their children were Stanley M., Mary C., Calvert H., Frederick A., and Martha C. Stanley M. married Mary L. Morrell; they had seven children. Frederick A. married Urania E. Buck. Caroline married Peter Wooster; their children were Laura J., J. Morris, Charles M., and Edward R. Laura J. married Richard G. Randall; they had one child, Jennie. Mary, unmarried. Arza C. married Sarah E. Mallett; their children were Gertrude E., Mary A., and S. Eugenia.

The Morrises are of Scotch descent.

Roswell Morris, like many of New England's sons, started in life with a capital consisting only of strong arms, a stout heart, and a good common-school education. He set out from his home in Bridgewater (then New Milford) to seek employment, and journeyed as far as New Jersey, walking much of the way. He taught school in that State one or two years, then returned to Bridgewater, and engaged in farming, working for a time with his older brother, Levi. Afterwards he succeeded by degrees in obtaining a farm a little west of Bridgewater Centre, on which he remained until his death. After locating as described he did not relinquish teaching, but worked his farm and taught the Centre school for many winters, doing most of his farm-work at the same time.

Often after school-hours he would go into the woods with his team, and draw wood by the light of the moon.

As a teacher he had the rare faculty of being a boy with the boys when at play, and master as soon as inside the school-house. When hardly able to repress his mirth he could put on a stern look, and, although inwardly amused at the pranks of a boy, would give him a look that would seem to pierce through his jacket.

He was for many years constable in the town (then New Milford), and often did sheriff's work, for which he was well qualified, being strong of frame, prompt, fearless, of quick perception, and sound judgment.

An anecdote of his youth will serve to illustrate his character. During the war of 1812 he was plowing in the field, when his father came to him and represented that he had been drafted, and was wanted immediately. He replied that he was ready, and quickly unhitched his team from the plow. His father, seeing he was likely to get the worst of the joke, told him he was not drafted, and asked him to hitch up his team and go on with his work. He said to his father, "If you have been trying that game you will get no more work from me to-day."

He was always ready to do a neighborly kindness, either to watch at the bedside of the sick or to perform any other personal service. Politically, he acted with the Whig party as long as it existed, and afterwards with the Democratic. He held at different times most of the offices in the gift of the town (then New Milford), and was often employed in the settlement of estates.

He was one of the first selectmen elected in the town of Bridgewater when it was incorporated, and rendered efficient service in making an amicable settlement between New Milford and Bridgewater.

He celebrated his golden wedding Nov. 26, 1868, and a large company of his neighbors and friends were present, with children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. On that occasion he was presented with a beautiful gold-headed cane by his friends and neighbors. Decided in his opinions, he was not uncharitable to others. He was for many years a member of the Episcopal Church, to which he was warmly attached. He was warden of St. Mark's for many years, and held that office at the time of his death, Sept. 22, 1874.

Roswell Hoag

John Wooster

During the last years of his life he was greatly afflicted with rheumatism, and suffered almost constant pain, yet as long as crutches could help him to the church he was in his seat.

In the prime of life he was characterized by promptness, energy, and a will to carry through whatever he undertook. To such a man it was hard to find himself reduced to a state of helplessness, but he bore it with a Christian spirit worthy of imitation.

JOHN WOOSTER.

The ancestors of the subject of this sketch were among the early settlers of New England. His great-grandfather, Timothy Wooster, settled in New Haven colony, in what is now the town of Oxford.

As early as 1774 his grandfather, Jabez Wooster, purchased land in the town of Bridgewater (then New Milford), and is described in the records as Lieut. Jabez Wooster, in the fourteenth year of the reign of George III., King of Great Britain. He seemed to be searching for mineral lands, and laid out several tracts on Rocky Mountain, Falls Mountain, and Wolfpit Mountain, where he dug in several places for iron ore, but without success. He purchased a homestead a little east of the Housatonic River, and about a mile south of the Great Falls (so called), which he leased to a company for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, with the privilege of digging for minerals, reserving a certain portion to himself if any were found. He built a house, and followed farming, as did two generations of the same family after him at the same place. The house is still standing as it was originally built, with the back roof extending nearly to the ground, one of the few left to show the ancient style of architecture.

Jabez Wooster had two sons, Peter and Isaac. Peter Wooster, the father of John Wooster, was born in 1762. He married Betsy Canfield, Jan. 16, 1787. He followed farming, as his father had before him at the same place. He died Sept. 12, 1798, leaving two children, John and Susannah.

John was born March 27, 1790. He passed his youth like most country boys, going to district school and helping on the farm. He nearly lost his life when a boy, a log rolling on him and making an indentation in his skull, which affected the brain. A piece of the skull was taken out, and a silver shilling placed under the skin to protect the brain, which always remained there; so it can truly be said that in after-life he was never without a shilling. He acquired a good common-school education, and early commenced teaching school in winter. He soon came to be considered one of the best teachers of his day. As soon as he became of age he applied all his energies to redeem his father's farm, and to buy out his sisters' claims, farming in summer and teaching school in winter for many years. He married Jerusha Lockwood, daughter of David and Sarah Lockwood, by whom he had four children,—Mary E., Peter, David, and Susan.

Mary E. married Harmon Treat, living in Bridgewater; has six children, viz., Helen J., Julia A., Emily A., D. Allen, Susan C., and H. Wooster. Julia A. married Charles Sanford, living in Roxbury, Conn. D. Allen married P. Belle Meeker, and resides in Bridgeport, Conn. The other children are living with their parents in Bridgewater.

Peter married Caroline Morris, by whom he had four children,—Laura J., John Morris, Charles M., and Edward R. John Morris died Jan. 14, 1856, aged five years. Laura J. married Richard J. Randall; died Aug. 29, 1880, and left one child, Jennie C. Charles M. is a practicing physician in Tariffville, Conn. Edward R. is in Bridgewater.

David married Emily C. Sherman, by whom he had three children,—Edward S., Edith E., and John S. Edward S. died at the age of two years and nine months. Edith E. married Rev. George A. Graves, now at New Canaan, Conn.; has two children, Carleton A. and Bertha E. John S. married Katie A. Kelley; has one child, Emily S.; resides in Bridgeport, Conn.

David Wooster's wife, Emily C. Wooster, died April 17, 1875. He married, for his second wife, Mrs. Angie W. Boland, with whom and her son, Frank W., he is now living, in Bridgeport, Conn.

Susan married Lorenzo D. Sanford; had three children,—Martha, Mary E., and John W. Martha died in infancy. Mary E. married Cornelius Blakesley; resides in Brooklyn, N. Y., and has two children, Raymond I. and Jennie M. John W. resides with his father in Bridgeport, Conn.

John Wooster was one who thought much of his home, and seemed most happy when surrounded by his family, to which he was strongly attached, and when enjoying the society of his friends and neighbors, with whom he always lived on the best of terms. Politically, he identified himself with the Whig party, and was somewhat active in the councils of that party in the town of New Milford. He once represented that town in the State Legislature. In the prime of life he met with an accident which incapacitated him for hard labor on the farm, being thrown from a wagon and injuring one knee; but he almost constantly held some public office in the town which occupied his time, and in some measure compensated for his inability to labor. He was correct and methodical in business, prompt and punctual to fulfill all his engagements, and perhaps it is not too much to say that, in respect to honesty of purpose, correctness and fidelity in the discharge of public duties intrusted to him, no one in the town of New Milford had the confidence of the people to a greater extent than he.

He was assessor many years, and visited every taxpayer, and wrote out every item of taxable property. At his decease bushels of lists written with his own hand were found carefully filed and preserved. He held the office of constable, and was for many years justice of the peace. He was selectman for many years, and was often called the "Old Selectman." He often kept the books and accounts of the town, although living three and a half miles from the village, and there was no item of account that could not be found in its proper place. He was often intrusted with the settlement of estates. When Bridgewater was incorporated as a town he had become advanced in years, and retired from active politics.

The old Whig party being dissolved, his sympathies were with the Republican party. He was a firm believer in the doctrines of Christianity, but, for reasons best known to himself, never united with any church. He was a regular attendant of the Congregational Church, of which his wife was a member, and paid of his substance for its support.

A year or two before his death he left his farm and went to live with his daughter Susan, at the centre of Bridgewater, where he died, as he had loved to live, with his children all around him, May 29, 1858, aged sixty-eight years.

CHAPTER XXVII.

CANAAN.

Geographical—Topographical—The Housatonic Falls—Sale of the Town—First Meeting of Proprietors—Held at Wethersfield—Name of the Town—First Settlement of the Town—Names of Pioneers and Grantees—Early Births and Marriages—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church, South Canaan—Congregational Church, Falls Village—Methodist Episcopal Church, Falls Village—The Iron Bank—The Falls Village Savings Bank.

THIS town is located in the northwestern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by North Canaan, on the east by Norfolk, on the south by Cornwall, and on the west by the Housatonic River, which separates it from Salisbury. The surface of this town is broken and mountainous. The town is watered by the Housatonic River and its tributaries.

THE HOUSATONIC FALLS.

On this river, below Salisbury, are located the Housatonic Falls. "The falls are formed by a ledge of limestone rocks crossing the Housatonic River obliquely from northwest to southeast; the length of the ledge is about thirty rods, its perpendicular height perhaps sixty feet, and its front irregular and broken. Here in a formidable mass on the western side, and on the eastern, the water rushes from the rapid torrent above, and descending in every variety of form, with the mass of foam at the bottom rising in a misty cloud, and the surrounding scenery, presents a scene of remarkable picturesque beauty. There are falls and rapids both above and below the river cataract, but of much smaller size. 'The whole descent,' says Dr. Dwight, 'is about one hundred and thirty feet, nobly arranged and distributed, and comprehending a remarkable variety of beauty and grandeur.'"*

FIRST MEETING OF PROPRIETORS.

The tract of land embraced within the present towns of Canaan and North Canaan was sold at public vendue at the court-house in New London, Jan. 3, 1737–38. The first meeting of these towns was held at Wethersfield, Feb. 22, 1737–38, with Capt. David Whitney, of Plainfield, moderator, and Humphrey Avey, of Groton, clerk. At this meeting it was "Voted, That said Humphrey Avey, said Capt. Whitney, and John Bebee of Litchfield, Samuel Bryant of Stanford, and Silas Belding of said Wethersfield, are a committee who are hereby fully Impowered to Lay out Such part of the Land in said Townships, sold as afore Said, as they Shall judge Best for the Interest of Said proprietors in Gineral, and to Lay out to Each proprietor in Equal part for Quantity and Quality and Give Surveys of the same under the hands of the major part of said committee and to Lay out Nessary High ways in Said Town. Not Less to be Laid out to Each Proprietor than Thirty acres and be Laid out in one or two parts or parcels for Each Proprietor as said Committee Shall Think fit and the Avey to have Twelve shillings per Day for his wages Serving as Committee man and surveyor and the rest of said Committee to have Eight Shilling per Day for their wages to be paid by said Proprietors according to their Interest in said Town."

Also

"Voted, That if any of said Committee Should be Hindered from Attending Said Service that in that case those of Said Committee who Do Attend Shall appoint and employ other persons to Serve in y^e^ room of Such as Shall be absent in Every thing but Signing the Survey."

It was also

"Voted, That Said proprietor shall Draw their Lots by number."

"Voted, That Said Committee Shall make Such agreement with all Those Persons who have Trespassed unto Lands in Said Town as they shall think Best for the Interest of said proprietor in Generall, and hire a pilot."

"Voted, That the Name of Said Town Shall be Canaan."

"Voted, That this meeting is adjourned to the Second Wednesday of April next at the New Dwelling house of Mr. Peter Hogobourn in said Town at one of y^e^ clock after Noon; and said proprietors to appear by themselves or Agent to Draw their Lots and pay Said Committee for y^e^ Service aforesaid.

"Attest: HUMPHREY AVEY, Proprietors' Clerk."

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE TOWN.

The settlement of the town commenced in June, 1738. Among the first settlers were Daniel and Isaac Lawrence, John Franklin, and others.

The following names appear in Book I of the town as grantees of lands: Daniel and Amos Andrus, James Adams, Charles Burrall, Augustin Bryan, James Beebe, Silas Belding, Samuel Bryan, Charles Bulkley, Abigail Belding, John Brower, Elizabeth Burrows, Timothy Brown, John Beebe, Jonathan

* Barber.

Bates, Jacob Bunce, Nathaniel Butler, David Bicknell, Joseph Beckley, Joshua Belding, Caleb Case, John Carrier, Benjamin, Samuel, Joseph, Daniel, and Isaac Cowles, Elijah Cleveland, John Coon, Josiah Cleveland, John Camp, Simon Cook, Moses Copley, Josiah Dean, Zachariah Dibble, Zebulon Deming, Benjamin Douglass, Jonathan Dearcox, Asa Douglass, Elizur Dickinson, H. Deming, Christopher Dutcher, Joseph Eaton, James Egleston, William Edminster, James Evens, Ephraim, William, and Thomas Fellows, John Franklin, E. Freeman, John Forbes, Jacob and Elijah Griswold, John Gillett, David Holly, Abraham Holenbeck, Samuel Hall, John Hart, Timothy Horsford, Abraham Harris, Gibson Harris, Peter Hogeboon, Joseph Hinsdale, David Horsford, Josiah Hurlburt, Nathaniel Howe, Ebenezer Hanchet, Samuel Halloway, Isaac Hinsdale, Charles Hewitt, Jonathan Hinsdale, Daniel Hancox, David Holcomb, Joseph Holabut, John Horsford, C. Hinman, B. Hogeboom, P. Holcomb, Gideon Hunn, Samuel Jones, Isaac Johnson, Jacob Johnson (heirs), Joseph, Bey, Martin, and Timothy Kellogg, Isaac, Daniel, Jeremiah, and Daniel Lawrence, Jr., E. Mayo, Anthony D. Mills, Jonas March, John Morton, Jacob, Asa, and Elisha Merrills, Jonathan and Samuel North, Ebenezer Norton, James Nichols, Thomas Orton, John, Abraham, and Isaac Peck, Joseph Prindle, Thomas Pierce, Daniel Phelps, Amis Pierce, Joseph Phelps, Daniel Porter, Joel Prindle, Samuel Prindle, John Palmer, William Patison, Isaac and James Pattison, I. Palmer, George Palmer, Thomas Pattison, Benjamin Phelps, Edward Pattison, Samuel Robbins, Lemuel, William, and Samuel Robbards, M. Rood, Jonathan Russel, Z. Robbins, Samuel Robbins, Josiah Stodder, Andrew, Uriah, Thomas, Samuel, Simeon, Zebulon, Benjamin Stevens, Isaac Sheldon, James Slauson, John Sutliff, James Stymson, Z. Scott, Z. Seymour, P. Smith, Giles Slawter, Nathaniel Spaulding, Elias Slanter, Benjamin Sedgwick, E. Thomas, Samuel Priscott, Josiah and Eleazur Whittlesey, Josiah Walker, Elisha Webster, Elizur Wright, David Whitney, William Warner, William Whitney, Aaron Webster, Joshua Whitney, Thomas Weeks, David Waterbury, Joseph Wooster, Thomas Youngs.

EARLY BIRTHS AND MARRIAGES.

The following is a record of a number of the early births and marriages:

"Noah Holcomb, son to David Holcomb and Sarah, his wife, was Born Aug. y^e^ 12, 1750. And. Stevens, Register."

"Sarah Holcomb, daughter to David Holcomb and Sarah, his wife, was Born July y^e^ 26, 1747. Entered pr. And^r^. Stevens, Register."

"Ann Horsford, Daughter To Timothy Horsford and Nanicy, his Wife, was Born June y^e^ 25, A.D. 1747."

"Sam^l^. Hide, of Norwich, Married To Azubeh Lawrence, of Canaan, Oct. the 25, 1750."

"Ephraim Fellows, Jr., Married to Anne Palmer, of Sheffield, May y^e^ 11, 1749."

"John Stevens, Son to And^r^. Stevens and Esther, his wife, was Born Wednesday, y^e^ 19th of October, 1737."

'Gideon Lawrence, of Canaan, married to Jerusha Richards, of Norfolk, the 12th day of Oct., 1749."

"Nehemiah Kellogg, son to Benjamin Kellogg and Elizabeth, his wife, was born March 4, 1747."

The first deed of lands in this town was made to Daniel Lawrence, under date Jan. 4, 1737.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

In Canaan, as well as in nearly all other towns in Connecticut, almost the first vote of the inhabitants was in regard to church matters. In December, 1739, "Josiah Walker, Benjamin Kellogg, and Daniel Lawrence are chosen a committee to agree with John Hart to fit his house convenient to meet in on the Lord's day." Under date of April 29, 1740, it was voted as follows:

"Voted, That y^e^ town will Build a meting Hows for y^e^ worship of god."

"Voted, That y^e^ said meting Hows shall be Built forty fots in Length and thirty-five fots in width and twenty fots post."

"At y^e^ same meting, voted, that s^d^ meting Howse shall Be Built at y^e^ East End of y^e^ first ministry Lot by y^e^ Sixth Rod High way that gose throw y^e^ town."

"Voted, At y^e^ same meting, Sam^l^ Prindel, Daniel Lavinia, and James Beeby and P. Hogoboom, and Silas Belding are Chosen a Comity to See that s^d^ Hows Be built and finished."

In the following May a vote was passed to request the General Assembly to send a committee to "stake a place for a meeting-house for ye worship of God."

Jan. 2, 1744, it was

"Voted, That y^e^ town will finish our Meeting-House So far as To Build a Pulpit, to finish y^e^ Body of Seats, leaving a space for Pews to be Built."

The church was organized in March, 1741, with Jacob Bacon and wife, and Isaac Lawrence and wife.

The proprietors of the town of Canaan made provisions for preaching the gospel to the first settlers. From that time down to 1818 ministers were supported by a tax levied on the town, as for other purposes. Persons were allowed to pay such ministers as they preferred. Rev. Elisha Webster was the first minister settled in Canaan. He was settled Oct. 1, 1740, and dismissed Oct. 14, 1752. It is stated that Rev. Daniel Farrand was ordained two months previous to the dismission of Mr. Webster. Mr. Farrand continued in the pastorate of the church till his death, March 28, 1803, a period of more than fifty years.

The following is a list of the pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Elisha Webster, 1740–52; Daniel Farrand, 1752, died March, 1803; Charles Prentice, 1804, died May, 1838; Edward B. Emerson, 1841–43; Harley Goodwin, 1845–54; Isaac De Voe, 1855–56. Rev. Henry Snyder supplied from May 1, 1858, to May 1, 1860; Rev. Mr. Dickerman from May, 1860, to May, 1861; E. Froule Howe, supply from June 9, 1861, to Dec. 17, 1862, when he was ordained and installed pastor, dismissed Nov. 12, 1865; E. N. Andrews, supply, December, 1865, to September, 1867; W. H. Teel, from September, 1867, to December, 1869; Rev. Joseph E. Swallow, from June 5, 1870, to April, 1873; Edwin Hall, Jr., from Aug. 3, 1873, to October, 1874; N. G. Bonney, from January, 1875, to June, 1876; Joseph A. Tomlinson, from July 1, 1876, to May 1, 1877; D. M. Moore, from May 12, 1878, to present time.

About the year 1769 the old house of worship was moved nearly a mile from the old site. It was occupied till 1804, when the present house was built, which has been several times repaired.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, FALLS VILLAGE.*

The Congregational Church at Falls Village was organized Oct. 27, 1858, by the L. N. Consociation, with the following members: Dr. Lemuel H. Aiken, Deacon Charles Beebe, Mrs. Mary Ann Brewster, Mr. Oramel King Brinton, Mrs. Elizabeth Brown, Mr. Elisha Holabird Dean and Mrs. Cherry Ann Dean (his wife), Mrs. Ann M. Miner, Mr. Uriel Holmes Miner and Mrs. Caroline Eliza Miner (his wife), Mr. Warren Walker and Mrs. Philena Walker (his wife). The first named of these was received from the church in Norfolk, the others from the church in South Canaan.

The deacons of the church have been as follows: Charles Beebe and Lemuel H. Aiken were chosen Nov. 5, 1858; Willis Gibbs, in place of Lemuel Aiken (resigned), Jan. 4, 1861; W. H. Dean and U. H. Miner (resigned July 13th), Jan. 12, 1873; O. K. Brinton, Aug. 31, 1873; J. S. Lane, Dec. 31, 1875 (resigned in 1880); J. D. Egleston, Jan. 6, 1881.

The list of pastors, acting pastors, or stated supplies is as follows: Rev. Henry S. Russel, stated supply from Oct. 27, 1858, to Sept. 1, 1859; Rev. John Edgar, stated supply from Nov. 1, 1859, to June 9, 1863 (was ordained as an evangelist by L. N. Consociation Oct. 20, 1860, and installed pastor by the same consociation June 9, 1863, and served till Oct. 31, 1865); Rev. L. N. Woodruff, stated supply from November 1, 1865, to March, 1867. The church had no preaching from March, 1867, to May 2, 1869. From May to September it was supplied by different ministers. Rev. Henry B. Mead, stated supply from Sept. 1, 1869, to May 1, 1870; Rev. Joseph E. Swallow, stated supply from June 5, 1870, to April, 1873. From April to July supplied by students from Yale Seminary. Rev. N. G. Bonney began labors July 1, 1873; he was installed pastor Sept. 17, 1873, and served till May 1, 1876. Rev. Joseph A. Tomlinson, acting pastor from July 1, 1876, to May 1, 1877; Rev. F. J. Grimes, stated supply from May, 1877, to May 5, 1878; Rev. D. M. Moore, stated supply from May 12, 1878, to Jan. 6, 1880; he was ordained to the work of the ministry January 6th; acting pastor from Jan. 6, 1880.

The church building was erected in 1859. The present officers are: Acting Pastor, Rev. D. M. Moore; Church Committee, U. H. Miner, O. K. Brinton, J. D. Egleston; Deacons, O. K. Brinton, J. D. Egleston.

THE IRON BANK

was chartered in May, 1847. William H. Walton, Esq., the first president, was chosen in 1847. His successors have been Lee Canfield, in 1854; A. H. Holley, in 1860; W. P. Burrall, in July, 1862; Leonard Richardson, in January, 1863; Augustus Miles, in July, 1863; Geo. W. Peet, in July, 1864. Mr. Randall, the present cashier, has held that office about twenty-nine of the thirty-four years of the bank's existence.

THE FALLS VILLAGE SAVINGS BANK

was chartered in May, 1854. The charter members were John Adam, Geo. W. Peet, Wm. S. Marsh, Daniel Brewster, Uriel H. Miner, Jabez Brewster, David M. Hunt, Horatio N. Wetherell, Chauncey S. Foster, and Henry E. Wetherell. The following have been the officers:

Presidents.—John Adam, 1854–56; Wm. M. Burrall, 1856–57; Daniel Brewster, 1857, present incumbent.

Secretaries.—Uriel H. Miner, 1854–76; O. M. Brinton, 1876, present incumbent.

Treasurers.— R. M. S. Pease, 1854–57; A. C. Randall, 1857–70; Wm. H. Barnum, 1870–76; M. A. Dean, 1876–78; U. H. Miner, 1878, present incumbent.

The first deposit was made by Samuel Adams, of Cornwall, May 12, 1855, of fifty-five dollars. The amount of deposits Oct. 1, 1880, was three hundred and forty-three thousand dollars.

RELEASE FROM PARISH RATES.

In the early history of Connecticut the Congregational was the "State Church,"—that is, the church and town were identical, and all the inhabitants generally were taxed to support the church, and could only be released from said tax upon certifying their attendance upon some other form of worship or at another church. The following are specimens of the certificates of inhabitants of this town:

"CANAAN, Dec. 4, 1787.

"To the Collector of ministers' rate or Town treasurer, or whom it may concern: this may certify that Joseph Kellogg is a professor of the Baptist Faith and order, and doth attend to worship God in that order, and hath contributed for the support of the Gospel. This is, therefore, according to law to clear him from paying taxes to support the Gospel in any other order.

"Signed in behalf of the Church,

"JEDATHAN GRAY, Elder.

"A true copy of the original certificate.

"Test: ELIZUR WRIGHT, Society Clerk."

Dec. 3, 1788, Oliver, Benajah, Uriah, David, and Isaac Dean certified that they also attended "Baptist meeting."

"CANAAN, Jan. 9, 1790.

"This may certify that Jacob Brown, Jr., belongs to the Episcopal Church.

"ISAAC JOHNSON, C. Clerk.

"A true copy of the original received for record Jan. 9, 1790."

"This is to certify that William Trafford, of the State of Connecticut and Town of Canaan, is a standing hearer of the ministers and preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and contributes towards their support agreeable to their order. Given from under my hand this 3d day of February, 1790.

"FREEBORN GARRETTSON, presiding minister in said Church.

"Test: ELIZUR WRIGHT, Society Clerk.

"A true copy of the original received for record August 23, A.D. 1790."

* Contributed by Rev. D. M. Moore.

"CANAAN, July 22, 1793.

"This may certify whom it may concern, that I, Ruloff Dutcher, have annexed myself to the Episcopal Society in Canaan, and consider myself a member of the same.

"RULOFF DUTCHER."

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

This church was organized in about the year 1792 with the following members: Elisha Horton and wife, Rufus Landon and wife, Aaron Mills and wife, and Nathaniel Church.

The first church edifice was erected at Battle Hill in 1793, and present edifice in 1854.

The present stewards are Edward Ward, P. C. Stevens, P. M. Jaqua, O. M. Brinton, S. Brigner, E. B. Gillett, Chas. Preston, N. C. White, and J. B. Owen; Trustees, P. C. Stevens, O. M. Brinton, P. M. Jaqua, E. Ward, Lee French, E. W. Spurr, G. W. Hall, and W. G. Kellogg.

The first pastor (1790) was Jno. Bloodgood. The present pastor is J. Lee Gamble.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

CANAAN (Continued).

Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meetings—Bounty on Rattlesnake Tails—Religious Service—The Ringing of Swine—Pounds—Church Service—Extracts from Town Records—Unwholesome Inhabitants—Fire-Locks—Grist-mill—New County—Petition for Bank—Trouble with Proprietors—Inhabitants Admitted—Bounty on "Squirralls," etc.—List of Representatives from 1757 to 1881—Military Record.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.

THIS town was incorporated in 1739. The following is a copy of a portion of the proceedings of a town-meeting convened in the early part of December, 1739, which doubtless was the first meeting held in the town. The record begins by offering a reward for rattlesnakes' tails:

BOUNTY ON RATTLESNAKES' TAILS.

"At the same meeting, for the In Coridgment of destroying of Ratelsnakes, that If any person shall kill any Ratelsnake with in the Bounds of the town of Canaan in the months of March, April, and May, and bring their tails to ye Select men, shall have twelve pence per tail. Voted.

"At the same meting David Whitney was Chosen town Clark. Voted."

RELIGIOUS SERVICE.

"At ye same meting Josiah Walker, B. Kellogg, and Daniel Lawrence are Chosen a Comity to a gree with John hart to fit his house Convenient to met in on the Lord's day. Voted.

"This meting is adjornd to the house of Mr. Christopher Ducher's dwelling-house on ye nineteenth day of this Instant Desembour, at twelve of the Clock on sd day. Voted.

"Recorded by

"EPHRON FELLOWS, town Clark.

"At a town meting Adjorned to ye Houss of Christifer Dutcher one ye 19 of this Instant Decembour, at twelve of ye Clok on sd Day."

THE RINGING OF SWINE.

"Voted, That all swine shall be well Ringed that goeth at Large on ye Comons. Voted."

POUNDS.

"At ye same meting voted, that their shall be two pounds Bult for ye use of ye town, the one to be Bulded betwen the River south of holinbick's and ye swamp, and the other to be by the Road that goeth a Crost ye River one the North side, North of Isaac Larence's, betwen ye River and the road that goeth East by David Whitney's. Voted."

CHURCH SERVICE.

"At ye same meting voted, that for ye futer, till may Next, that ye meting on ye Lord's day shall be one day at ye hows of Isaac Lawrence's, and the other day at ye hows of Abraham Holinbick's or Jacob Bacon's, as the peopel shall agree with them.

"This meting Is disolved.

"Recorded by

"EPHRON FELLOWS, town Clark."

EXTRACTS FROM TOWN RECORDS.

The following interesting extracts are from the town records:

UNWHOLESOME INHABITANTS.

"At ye same meting voted, that Josiah Walker shall request to ye general asembly that they will take some spedy Care to prevent unholsom In Habitence being sent Into ye town of Canaan as agents. Voted."

FIRE-LOCKS.

"And that also ye Honorabel asembly would Consider our surcomstances, Being frontears, and grant to us a Considabel quantity of ye fire Locks which are at New london, If it be your honers' pleshur. Voted.

"Recorded by

"DAVID WHITNEY, town Clark."

GRIST-MILL.

"Canaan, Desember 10, 1740, at a Town meating Lawfully held by adiournment, & is now opened.

"And it is now voated & agreed that Inasmuch as their is a Conueniant place for a Grist mill at a place Called ye grate falls, yt ye Inhabitants of Canaan Do Give & Grante unto Josiah Walker ye Liberty of building a grist mill at said falls, & ye priuiledg of ye Stream, & ye priuiledg of ye 14 acres of Land adioyning theirto, all Excepting what ye owners of ye saw mil hath nead of, sd Walker haueing ye Commanding part of sd Stream in a Scarce time of water, pronided that sd Walker Shall Build a good grist mill & Bolting mill at or before ye 10 day of October next Ensuing ye date hearof, & keep sd mils in good order, fit for grinding & Bolting. These priviledges are granted to sd Walker so Long as he shall keep sd mills in good repare & wait on his Custimers to grind for them.

"Allso then voated, that ye Select men, with Jeams Beele, shall be as a Comity to take obligation of Josiah Walker to build a Grist mill with a sufficient bonds man.

"Allso then voated, that Jeams Beele, & Augustian Bryan, & Silas Belding Shall be a Commity to alter ye Drift way to ye saw mill at ye Grate Falls."

NEW COUNTY.

"Allso Then voated, that Capt. Dauid Whitney Shall be an agent to Represent said Town of Canaan at the Generall assembly in may next Ensuing, to Request the Corte to Lay Sum penalty on the Nonrezident proprietors of sd tound that may be Sum Benifit to those proprietors that Do Rezide in Said Tound; and allso Request a New County.

"Allso Then voated, that their Shall be a Toun Book Bought to Record Deeds in sd Toun.

"Entered by me,

"SILAS BELDING, Toun Clark."

PETITION FOR BANK.

"At a Town Meeting in Canaan, held at ye house of Jonas Marshee, on ye first Tusday of April, 1742, Being Lawfully Warned & Conveynd.

"Voted, That Capt. David Whitney Shall be Moderator for ye sd Meeting.

"Voted, That we will Joyn with the other New Towns in Petitioning to ye Generall Assembly to Grant us Norfolk, & that they will grant us a Bank of Money upon Loane.

"Voted, That Capt David Whitney Shall be agent in ye Town's Behalfe To act In ye affaire aboves'd, To Confer with ye other Towns or their Agents, and Appear in ye Assembly as need may Require.

"Entred by me,

"ANDW. STEVENS, Town Clark."

TROUBLE WITH PROPRIETORS.

"Att a Town Meeting in Canaan, Leagally warn'd and Conveln'd April ye 11th, 1743.

"Voted, That Mr. Ephraim Fellows Shall Be Moderator for sd Meeting.

"Voted, That we will act in ye first Article or Clause in ye Warning which is Conserning addressing ourselves To ye Generall assembly in May next Ensuing, for Relief upon ye Difficulty we Labour under by Reason that the Proprietors of this Town Do not Settle their Rights According to ye Generall Court's Act in that Respect.

"Voted, That we will Chuse an Agent To Appear in ye Generall Assembly in May Next, To Address ourselves in ye Consern aforesd.

"Voted, That Mr. James Bebee Shall be our Agent To Represent our Difficulty aforesd To ye Generall assembly in May Next.

"Voted, That we will act In Disposeing of our School Lands By Leasing them out Nine hundred & Ninety-Nine Years.

"Voted, That Capt. David Whitney, John Bebee, & Uriah Stevens Shall Be a Committee To Dispose of sd School Lands in ye following order.

"Voted, That Each Lot or Division that are allready Laid out Shall be leased Single by themselves & ye Undivided Right by Whole Sale.

"Voted, That ye Comtt that are Appointed To lease out our School Lands, Capt. David Whitney, John Bebee, & Uriah Stevens, are hereby Authorized To Lease out the aforesd School Lands 999 years To ye Person Persons that Shall Appear with Sufficiant Suerty or Suertys To ye Acceptance of the aforesd Committee, And will Give ye Most for sd Lands, which Shall be Disposed of by way of vandue, at ye Time and Place ye aforesd Committee shall Appoint for ye Disposing of ye sd Lands, and ye Person or Persons that Shall Bid of sd Lands Shall have ye Privilledge of ye use of ye Principal Sum of Money he Shall Be Indebted To ye Town for sd Lands from ye Day of ye Sale of sd Lands Five years, Paying Yearly Lawfull Intrest for ye Sum he owes to ye Town.

"Voted, That this Meeting Be adjourned Till Monday ye 2d Day of May next To the house of Ensign Dutchers, in Canaan, at four of ye Clock in ye After Noon.

"Entred pr me,
"ANDW. STEVENS, Town Clark.

"At a Town Meeting Held by Adjournment May ye 2d, at 4 of ye Clock in the after Noon, the Meeting being opened According To sd ajournment, Mr. Fellows, Moder.

"Voted, That this Meeting shall be adjourned To ye Barn of sd Ensign Dutchers.

"Said Meeting is opened at ye Place appointed by ye Moderator, Mr. Fellows.

"Voted, That we will Chuse a Committee To Draw up an Accoumpt, as Near as they Can, of the Charges of ye Inhabitants of this Town have In Clearing highways, Building Bridges, and all other Charges and Burdens which we have Born. In Convening the Town, which Propriators which have not Settled their Rights According to ye Court's act have not Born their Part of, whereby the Burden of It we have bin obliged to beare throw their Neglect.

"Voted, That Mr. Samuel Prindle, Augustian Bryan, & Isaac Lawrence Shall be a Committee To act in ye affair abovesd, & make their Return To Mr. James Bebee, who is Appointed our agent to Appear In ye Assembly in May Instant, To act in ye Town's Behalfe in ye affair abovesd.

"This Meeting is Desolved.

"Entred pr me,
"ANDW. STEVENS, Town Clark."

INHABITANTS ADMITTED.

"Voted, That Joseph Kellegg, Lemuel Robards, Zebulum Stevens, William Whitney, Jonathan North, Abraham Harris, William Warner, Josiah Hurlbutt, Joshua Whitney, and Samuel Jones are admitted Inhabitants in this Town, To voat and Act in Town Affairs."

BOUNTY ON "SQUIRRALLS," ETC.

"Voted, That Any Inhabitant of this Town Killing of Squirralls this year, and Bringing in their heads To any of ye Select Men of this Town, Shall have allowed them 4 Pence Per head from ye Town.

"Voted, That any Inhabitant of this Town Killing and Bringing in their heads by ye Last of may Next To Either of ye Sellect Men of this Town, of Black Birds, Jays, or Wood Peckers, Shall have 3 Pence Per head allowed them from ye Town."

REPRESENTATIVES FROM 1757 TO 1881.

1757.—Col. David Whitney, James Beebe.
1758.—Capt. John Beebe, Capt. Daniel Lawrence, Col. David Whitney.
1759.—Capt. Benjamin Cole, Andrew Stevens, Col. David Whitney, James Beebe.
1760.—Col. David Whitney, Charles Burrill.
1761.—Andrew Stevens, Charles Burrill, Col. David Whitney.
1762–63.—Col. David Whitney, Charles Burrill.
1764.—Capt. John Beebe, Benjamin Stevens, Col. David Whitney, James Beebe.
1765.—Benjamin Stevens, Timothy Hurlburt, James Bebee, Capt. Isaac Lawrence.
1766.—Col. David Whitney, Charles Burrill, Samuel Forbes.
1767.—Benjamin Stevens, Timothy Hurlburt, Samuel Forbes.
1768.—Benjamin Stevens, Oliver Belding.
1769.—Capt. Charles Burrall, Elisha Baker, Capt. Samuel Forbes.
1770.—John Whitney, Capt. Tarball Whitney, Maj. Charles Burrall, Capt. Samuel Forbes.
1771.—Maj. Charles Burrall, Elisha Baker, Capt. Samuel Forbes.
1772.—Maj. Charles Burrall, Elisha Baker, Capt. John Ensign.
1773.—Capt. John Ensign, Capt. Samuel Forbes, Maj. Charles Burrell.
1774.—Maj. Charles Burrell, Capt. Samuel Forbes, John Watson.
1775.—Asahel Beebe, Capt. Samuel Forbes.
1776.—Capt. John Ensign, Capt. John Watson, Asahel Bebee.
1777.—Timothy Hurlburt, Capt. John Watson, Capt. Samuel Forbes, Asahel Bebee.
1778.—Timothy Hurlburt, Capt. John Watson, Capt. John Stevens, Col. Charles Burrall.
1779.—Timothy Hurlburt, Capt. Samuel Forbes, Col. Charles Burrall.
1780.—Timothy Hurlburt, Thomas Fellowes, Jonas Lawrence, Nathan Hale.
1781.—Capt. Samuel Forbes, Nathan Hale, Col. Charles Burrall, Timothy Hurlburt.
1782.—Capt. John Watson, Timothy Hurlburt, Col. Charles Burrall, Nathan Hale.
1783.—Capt. Thomas Hosmer, Capt. Samuel Forbes, Col. Charles Burrall, Timothy Hurlburt.
1784.—Capt. Thomas Hosmer, Capt. Lemuel Kingsbury, Nathan Hale.
1785–86.—Timothy Hurlburt, Col. Charles Burrall, Nathan Hale.
1787.—Col. Charles Burrall, Nathan Hale.
1788.—Col. Charles Burrall, Nathan Hale, Samuel Forbes, Capt. Charles Burrall, Jr.
1789.—Capt. Samuel Forbes, Capt. Charles Burrall, Jr., Nathan Hale.
1790.—Nathan Hale, Capt. Samuel Forbes, Charles Burrall.
1791.—Nathan Hale, John Adam, Samuel Forbes.
1792.—Charles Burrall, Nathaniel Stevens, Charles Burrall, Jr., John Adam.
1793.—Charles Burrall, Jr., Nathaniel Stevens, John Watson, Nathan Hale.
1794.—John Watson, Charles Burrall, Jr.
1795.—John Watson, Charles Burrall, Jr., John Adam, Jonathan Burrall.
1796.—Nathaniel Stevens, Jonathan Burrall.
1797.—Nathaniel Stevens, Jonathan Burrall, Samuel Forbes, Nathan Hale.
1798.—Samuel Forbes, Nathan Hale, Jonathan Burrall.
1799.—Nathaniel Stevens, Jonathan Burrall, Samuel Forbes, Elizur Wright.
1800.—Samuel Forbes, Elizur Wright.
1801.—Samuel Forbes, Elizur Wright, John Hurlbut.
1802.—Samuel Forbes, Elizur Wright, John Elmore.
1803–4.—John Elmore, Jonathan Burrall.
1805.—John Elmore, Elizur Wright, John Adams, Russell Hunt.
1806.—John Adams, John Hurlbut, Seth Andruss, John Webb.
1807.—Azariah Smith, Mariner Rood, John Adam, John Webb.
1808.—John Adam, Azariah Smith, John Webb, Mariner Rood.
1809.—Amos Hunt, John Elmore, John Adam, John Webb.
1810.—John Holabird, Alban Rose, John Hurlbut.
1811.—Samuel Robbins, Calvin Pease, Azariah Smith.
1812.—John Holabird, Calvin Pease, John Elmore, Amos Hunt.
1813.—John Holabird, John Elmore.
1814.—Samuel Robbins, John Elmore.
1815.—Samuel Robbins, John Elmore, Alban Rose, Joshua Cornwall.
1816.—Samuel F. Adam, Joshua Cornwall, Samuel Beckley, Jr., John Holabird.
1817.—Jabez Brewster, Benajah Douglass, Seth Andrews, Joshua Cornwall.
1818.—Jabez Brewster, Nathaniel Stevens, Seth Andrews, Joshua Cornwall.
1819.—Samuel Robbins, Ovid Plumb.
1820.—James Fenn, Jabez Brewster.
1821–24.—Asa S. Brewster, Benajah Douglass.
1825.—Asa S. Brewster, Samuel F. Adam.
1826.—Asa S. Brewster, Nathaniel Stevens, Jr.
1827.—William M. Burrall, Samuel F. Adams.

JOEL MINER.

1828.—Reuben Hunt, Samuel F. Adams.
1829.—William M. Burrall, Nathaniel Stevens, Jr.
1830.—William M. Burrall, Benajah Douglass.
1831.—Eli Ensign, Marvin Tanner.
1832.—Henry Post, Marvin Tanner.
1833.—William M. Burrall, Nathaniel Stevens.
1834.—Leman Church, Henry Post.
1835.—William P. Burrall, Leman Church.
1836.—William P. Burrall, Nathaniel Stevens.
1837.—Chauncey Hosford, John Elmore, Jr.
1838.—Chauncey Hosford, Fitch Ferris.
1839.—William S. Marsh, Fitch Ferris.
1840.—Miles Minor, Ruleff Dutcher.
1841.—Sidney Ensign, George Hawes.
1842.—Sanford P. Stevens, Jesse Dean.
1843.—John A. Gillette, John Watson.
1844.—Charles Lewis, Chauncey Reed, Jr.
1845.—Hiram Holcomb, John Watson.
1846.—Frederick Watson, William P. Burrall.
1847.—Frederick Watson, William S. Marsh.
1848.—Ithami H. Smith, Milo Holabird.
1849.—William Douglass, Milo Holabird.
1850.—William Douglass, George W. Peet.
1851.—Sidney Ensign, William Watson.
1852.—Ensign Church, William Watson.
1853.—Ensign Church, Daniel Brewster.
1854.—G. W. Peet, George Church.
1855.—Jesse F. Millspaugh, E. D. Lawrence.
1856.—Charles Kellogg, Kneeland J. Monson.
1857.—E. S. Haskin, M. T. Granger.
1858.—William Douglass, George W. Peet.
1859.—Henry E. Wetherell.
1860.—Daniel Brewster.
1861.—Russell H. Wilcox.
1862.—G. W. Peet.
1863.—Hiram Holcomb.
1864.—Daniel Brewster.
1865.—George K. Peck.
1866.—Nelson M. Brown.
1867.—L. P. Dean.
1868.—S. Brigner.
1869.—Lorenzo H. Hakes.
1870.—Henry Sturges.
1871.—Lee P. Dean.
1872.—Robert Wilcox.
1873.—Daniel Brewster.
1874.—Henry Yale.
1875.—Myron M. Dean.
1876.—Jerry D. Clemons.
1877.—Cephas B. Cook.
1878.—Stephen Brigner.
1879.—Samuel W. Bradley.
1880.—Henry Brinton.
1881.—George V. Capron.

Falls Village is pleasantly located on the Housatonic Railroad; it contains two churches, two banks, and numerous stores.

MILITARY RECORD.*

C. F. Ormsby, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 2, 1864.
Jos. Smith, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 2, 1864.
John Miller, 1st Bat.; enl. Nov. 23; re-enl. as veteran Dec. 19, 1863; disch. June 11, 1865.
B. Potter, 2d Bat.; enl. Dec. 15, 1863; disch. Aug. 9, 1865.
James Murphy, 5th Regt.; enl. March 5, 1864.
William D. Ellsworth, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; died June 10, 1862.
William H. Field, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; must. out July 14, 1865.
C. B. Mattson, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; must. out July 14, 1865.
Jas. Richards, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; died March 15, 1862.
J. A. Belden, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. Jan. 6, 1863.
George Howe, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. July 22, 1864.
John Johnson, 6th Regt.; enl. March 4, 1864; disch. Aug. 21, 1865.
Joseph Perkins, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 30, 1864.
Charles Rosedale, 7th Regt.; disch. July 20, 1865.
E. J. Barker, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 12, 1864.
F. J. Brintin, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; died Sept. 17, 1862.
Henry Brintin, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 12, 1864.
R. J. Hunter, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 17, 1864.
J. Doherty, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 30, 1864; disch. July 2, 1865.
P. Hamilton, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 29, 1864; disch. July 2, 1865.
S. Cogswell, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; killed July 11, 1863.
George Ashmead, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; must. out July 20, 1865.
George Davidson, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861.
S. Deane, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; enl. United States army Nov. 14, 1862.
E. Nodine, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; killed May 16, 1864.
M. R. Victory, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; disch. Sept. 19, 1864.
Patrick Warner, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 2, 1863; disch. Dec. 12, 1865.
George A. Caul, 9th Regt.; enl. Oct. 1, 1861; disch. July 26, 1862.
J. Keller, 9th Regt.; enl. Dec. 2, 1864; disch. Dec. 24, 1864.
George Taylor, 9th Regt.; enl. March 7, 1864.
R. Moran, 11th Regt.; enl. Dec. 17, 1864; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
Thomas Harvey, 11th Regt.; enl. Dec. 10, 1861.
E. Matson, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
John Murray, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; killed Sept. 17, 1862.
O. Parmelee, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. March 21, 1866.
A. Scofield, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. Nov. 26, 1862.
A. Todd, 11th Regt.; enl. Dec. 13, 1861; killed Sept. 17, 1862.
D. Wickwire, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
L. Hart, 13th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; died July 9, 1864.
A. G. Williams, 13th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; died Nov. 11, 1862.
Peter Billings, 13th Regt.
M. Dean, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 30, 1861; disch. Aug. 5, 1862.
J. M. De Marshy, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 30, 1861; disch. April 25, 1865.
S. W. Erwin, 13th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. Jan. 6, 1865.
E. A. Fuller, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 30, 1861; disch. April 25, 1865.
J. S. Judd, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 17, 1861; disch. Feb. 14, 1863.
Jos. Parks, 29th Regt.; enl. Aug. 18, 1864; died Nov. 6, 1864.
W. White, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 13, 1861; disch. Sept. 19, 1864.
J. McNerny, 8th Regt.; enl. March 8, 1864; disch. Oct. 9, 1865.
David Jones, 8th Regt.; enl. Aug. 12, 1864; disch. Dec. 12, 1865.
William Ellison, 8th Regt.; enl. Aug. 10, 1864.
Nelson Hart, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 21, 1861; disch. Dec. 12, 1865.
A. Didier, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; killed May 16, 1864.
J. Ford, 11th Regt; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. Nov. 24, 1862.

* For list of 19th Regiment, see Chapter V.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

URIEL H. MINER.

Uriel H. Miner, youngest son of Joel Miner and Anna Kellogg, of Canaan, Columbia Co., N. Y., was born in the town of Canaan, Conn., Feb. 10, 1819. His educational advantages were such as the common schools of his native town afforded till he was fourteen years of age. During the summer of 1834 and 1835 he taught in the family of Joseph Goddard, in Goshen, Conn., and during the winters attended the Askley Academy, at Canaan, Columbia Co., N. Y. The winter following his seventeenth year he taught the district school, adjoining the academy, at Canaan, N. Y. In the spring of 1836 he went to Brookfield, Trumbull Co., Ohio, and entered the employ of Miner & Norton as clerk, remained that summer, taught school at Andover, Ashtabula Co., Ohio, the following winter, returned to the employ of Messrs. Miner & Norton the following spring, and remained with them till 1840, teaching school during the winters at Hartford, Trumbull Co., Ohio. At the age of twenty-one, in the spring of 1840, he returned to his native town and entered the employ of Charles Hunt, a prominent merchant and iron manufacturer, who resided at Huntsville, Canaan, Conn. Mr. Miner took charge of Mr. Hunt's interest in the firm of Belden & Hunt, merchants at Huntsville at that time. He remained there three years, till the firm of Belden & Hunt was dissolved, when he formed a copartnership with Edmund Belden, under the firm-name of Belden & Miner, and began business at Falls Village, where he continued to do business till the spring of 1853, when they dissolved partnership. In 1845, Mr. Miner became the agent for the Housatonic Railroad at this place, and held that position until 1855. In the spring of 1855 he formed a copartnership with Edwin W. Spurr, of Falls Village, under the firm-name of Miner & Spurr, and were engaged in general merchandise and lumber business. At the end of three years they dissolved partnership, and Mr. Miner continued in the mercantile trade till the spring of 1880, when he sold his interest to George W. Hall. In the spring of 1869 he was appointed administrator on the estate of Charles Hunt (the man for whom he worked as clerk many years before), and was thus engaged for nine years.

The Falls Village Savings Bank was organized in 1854, and Mr. Miner was one of the charter members, and has ever since been a trustee. He was secretary of the same till he was chosen vice-president, which position he continues to hold. In September, 1878, he was elected treasurer, and holds that position now (1881). In the spring of 1880 he retired from the mercantile business. In the spring of 1871 he purchased the farm formerly owned by Deacon Charles Beebe, and has been engaged in raising some fine Jersey stock. The northwest corner of his farm was laid out in building lots, which now form a large part of Falls Village, including the depot. In politics he has ever been a staunch Republican, but not an office-seeker, preferring the quiet of home to any political honors. He has been twice married, first to Caroline E., daughter of Lee Canfield, of Falls Village, Oct. 9, 1843. Of their five children one only is living, Ellen C., wife of Milo B. Richardson, of Lime Rock, Conn. She has two living children, viz., Lucy and Milo. Mrs. Miner died June 4, 1870, and Mr. Miner married his second wife, Helen M. Nickerson, of Cornwall, Conn., May 24, 1871. Mr. and Mrs. Miner are members of the Congregational Church at Falls Village, Conn., and he is one of its principal supporters. He was one of the moving spirits in getting a new church built at Falls Village about 1858, and a new society was then formed.

His father, Joel Miner (2), was a son of Joel Miner, who was born in Granby, Conn., and died in Hartland, Conn., May 11, 1805, aged fifty-five years. Joel Miner (2) was born in Hartland, Hartford Co., Conn.; resided there till 1814, when he came to Canaan, Conn., and purchased a farm two miles north of Falls Village, where he continued to reside till his death, Jan. 10, 1869, aged ninety years. During a long and temperate Christian life he endeared himself to a large circle of friends, and in the full maturity of a life well ripened the Master has gathered him from earth to His home in heaven.

His children are Nancy K. (deceased), Joel, Whiting G., and Uriel H.

ALMON C. RANDALL.

Almon C. Randall, son of John Randall and Laura Beach, was born in Bridgewater, Litchfield Co., Conn., Sept. 21, 1817. His grandfather, Timothy Randall, was a native of Greenwich, Fairfield Co., Conn., and settled in Bridgewater at an early day, where he followed the occupation of a farmer. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary war. He lived to the ripe old age of about eighty-seven years, leaving a family of nine children, viz., Polly, John, Sally, Samuel, Smith, Ezra, Allen, Epinetus, and Betsy, all married and had children except Epinetus, who never married.

John Randall, eldest son of Timothy, was born in Greenwich, Conn., and settled in Bridgewater with his parents. He was a farmer and brick-maker. He lived an honest, industrious, unassuming life in Bridgewater. In politics he was a Democrat. He married Laura, daughter of Caleb Beach, of Bridgewater, Conn., and had five children, viz., Caroline (Mrs. Daniel Bradshaw), of Brookfield, Conn.; Almira (Mrs. Oliver W. Phippenny), of Bridgewater, Conn.; Almon C., the immediate subject of this sketch; Flora (Mrs. Alonzo Barnum), of Bridgewater, Conn.; Amelia E. (Mrs. Walter B. Peck), of Bridgewater, Conn. John Randall died at the age of seventy-five years, and his wife survived him till August, 1878, aged eighty-six years.

Almon C. Randall received a common-school education. He worked on a farm summers and attended the district school winters till he was fifteen, and during the two following summers worked out by the month on a farm, receiving six dollars a month the first summer and seven dollars a month the second summer. In the spring of 1835 he entered the employ, as clerk, of Lyman Smith, a prominent merchant at Bridgewater, Conn., receiving thirty, forty, and fifty dollars a year respectively. He remained with Mr. Smith till the spring of 1838, when he became a clerk for William B. Glover, of Newtown, Conn., and remained a year, when he became a partner, receiving a certain per cent. of the profits for his services. After a few months they took in Charles A. Peck as partner, under the firm-name of William B. Glover & Co. Here Mr. Randall remained but a short time, and after a few weeks entered the employ of Dunning Babbitt, of Bridgewater, and remained there as clerk some two or three years, or until his failing health compelled him to resign. During the following year he was out of business, on account of his health.

Daniel S. Main

W. G. Kellogg

In February, 1845, he entered the Bridgeport Bank, at Bridgeport, Conn., as book-keeper and teller. Sylvanus Sterling was president, and George Burroughs was cashier. Here Mr. Randall remained till August, 1849, when he came to Falls Village, Conn., and became the cashier of the Iron Bank. William H. Walton was president.

Mr. Randall remained till 1853, when he went to Meriden, Conn., and was there employed as cashier in the Meriden Bank till the fall of 1856, when he again engaged in the mercantile business at Meriden, having Harrison Curtis as partner, under the firm-name of Curtis & Randall. In February, 1857, he returned to Falls Village, and became cashier of the Iron Bank (now known as the National Iron Bank), and continued as such till Oct. 2, 1880, when he was elected its president. In politics he is a Republican.

He married Minerva C., daughter of Wait S. Northrop, of Brookfield, Conn., Jan. 26, 1845. Of this union three children have been born, viz., Carrie M., wife of George W. Hall, an enterprising merchant in Falls Village, Lucy C., and George A. Mrs. Randall was a lady much beloved by all, of remarkable memory, and esteemed for her many excellent virtues. She died Oct. 17, 1878.

Mr. Randall is a member of the Episcopal Church at Brookfield, Conn., but an attendant at Lime Rock, Conn.

WHITING G. KELLOGG.

Whiting G. Kellogg, son of Whiting G. and Fanny (Dean) Kellogg, was born in Canaan, Conn., Aug. 31, 1824. His father was a son of Asahel Kellogg, and was born in Canaan, Columbia Co., N. Y., and at twelve years of age settled in Canaan, Conn., with his parents, where some of the descendants of the family continue to reside.

Whiting G. Kellogg, Sr., was a farmer by occupation, a man of no small means for one of his day, beloved and respected by all. He was twice married, first to Clarissa Belden, and had two children, Asahel and Betsy Ann. His second wife was Fanny, daughter of Roswell Dean, and to them were born two children, Emeline and Whiting G. Mr. Kellogg was a Whig and Republican in politics. He and his wife were members of the Congregational Church at South Canaan, Conn. He died Oct. 10, 1865, and Mrs. Kellogg died Dec. 20, 1875, aged eighty-six years.

The immediate subject of our sketch received a common-school education. He was a successful farmer till 1876, when he settled at Falls Village, where he has ever since resided.

On the 19th of August, 1850, he married Laura, daughter of Samuel Beckley, of North Canaan, Conn. In 1856 he purchased some land near South Canaan church, and soon afterwards his father bought a farm adjoining, and to-day Mr. Kellogg owns an interest in both farms. In 1880, Mr. Kellogg was made agent for Hon. Walter A. Wood's Mowing and Reaping Machine Company, of Hoosic Falls, N. Y.

In politics he is a Republican. Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg are members of the Congregational Church at Falls Village. He takes a deep interest in the temperance movement, and in all matters pertaining to the moral interest of his town. He has one daughter, Abbie T., born June 1, 1856, adopted into the Kellogg family, April 5, 1869.

CHARLES HUNT.

Among the prominent men of Litchfield Co., Conn., none are more justly entitled to a place on the pages of our history than he of whom we write. He was a son of Amos and Mary (Lowrey) Hunt, and was born at Huntsville, Litchfield Co., Conn., Aug. 19, 1803. He received a common-school and academic education. His father was an iron manufacturer at Huntsville, and young Charles was trained in all the details of the business. Early in life he began business for himself, and by his strict attention to the same became one of the most successful business men in Canaan. He was in mercantile trade in Huntsville for many years, besides, he had extensive interests in various iron companies, among others that of Hunt's Lyman Iron Co., at Huntsville, Conn.; also an interest in Washburn & Hunt's Iron Co., at Jersey City. He took a deep interest in the Housatonic Railroad, and had considerable stock in it. He was president of the same for nearly fifteen years, and resigned some two years before his death. In politics he was an uncompromising Republican, but never was an aspirant for political honors.

He was three times married, first to Lucy Beebe, and had two children, viz., George B. and Lucy C. His second wife was Pamela Sedgwick Bates, by whom he had one son, Charles Sedgwick. His third wife was Charlotte Russell, daughter of Ely Russell, of Canaan, Conn.; married Oct. 4, 1849, and to them was born one daughter, Mary.

Mr. Hunt died Jan. 15, 1869. A friend speaks of him thus:

"Generosity was a marked trait in his character. To this all his intimate personal friends bear testimony, and many of his relatives and friends have had abundant occasions to test it, and none ever found it to fail, and what he did was done cheerfully, and without the least ostentation. He was a man of almost womanly tenderness of heart, of a generosity which cheerfully met the claims of all persons and causes which won his confidence, and often led him to do more than was consistent with his own proper interest, and, joined in singular contrast with this, a carefulness in the management of public trust such as few public men exercise in these days, and, above all else, of an humble, devout, and earnest consecration to the service of his Master."

NATHAN MILLARD.

Ensign Nathan Millard, father of Joel Millard, settled on Cream Hill, in Cornwall, Conn. Joel married Azubah Sherwood, and had the following children, viz., Ebenezer Sherwood; Submit, married Henry Baldwin, and lived in Cornwall; Electa, married Ithamar Baldwin, and resided in Cornwall; Amanda, married —— Kilbourn, or Kilborn, a hatter, and lived in Litchfield; Melissa; John Walker, went to New Marlboro', Mass., and thence to Illinois; Azubah, married —— Rood, of Sheffield. Mr. Millard's second wife was Mrs. Theodore Norton, and had two children, viz., Clarissa and Franklin.

He removed with his son, John Walker, to New Marlboro' about 1835, having sold his farm to E. D. Pratt.

Ebenezer Millard was born in Cornwall, Conn., on what is known as Cream Hill, June 6, 1791. His life was spent on the farm. He married Mary Bradford, daughter of James Bradford, of Cornwall, Oct. 14, 1813. Of this union ten children were born, viz., Mary Ann (deceased), Mary Azubah (deceased), Joel (deceased), William W., the subject of this sketch, Walker S., James F., Sarah M., Nathan W. (deceased), Emeline, and John B. (deceased), all born in the town of Canaan, Conn., except the first.

Ebenezer Millard settled in Canaan, on the under mountain road, southeast of Huntsville, soon after his marriage, and here he continued to reside till his death, April 22, 1873. He was considered one of the best farmers of his day, as his son, William Wallace, is now justly so considered. In politics he was a Whig. Mr. and Mrs. Millard were members of the Congregational Church of South Canaan, Conn. He was a man esteemed by all, and when he passed away Canaan lost one of her best citizens. Mrs. Millard is still living, at the ripe old age of eighty-seven years, and retains her faculties remarkably well for one so old.

William Wallace was born in Canaan, Conn., Sept. 23, 1819. He had such advantages for an education as the common schools of his day afforded. He taught school several times, commencing when he was seventeen years of age.

He was reared on the farm, which business he has continued to follow successfully till the present time. He owns the old Millard homestead, in Canaan, where his father first settled, and another good farm besides. Oct. 13, 1846, he married Olive J., daughter of Lyman Howe, of Goshen, Conn., and to them have been born three children,—viz., Sherwood F., a resident of Nichols, Iowa; Mary J., wife of William E. Marsh, and resides at Cleveland, Ohio; William L., married, and resides on the old homestead in Canaan. In politics Mr. Millard is a staunch Republican, and as such has held the office of selectman. Mr. and Mrs. Millard are members of the Congregational Church of South Canaan, Conn., and he is one of its liberal supporters.

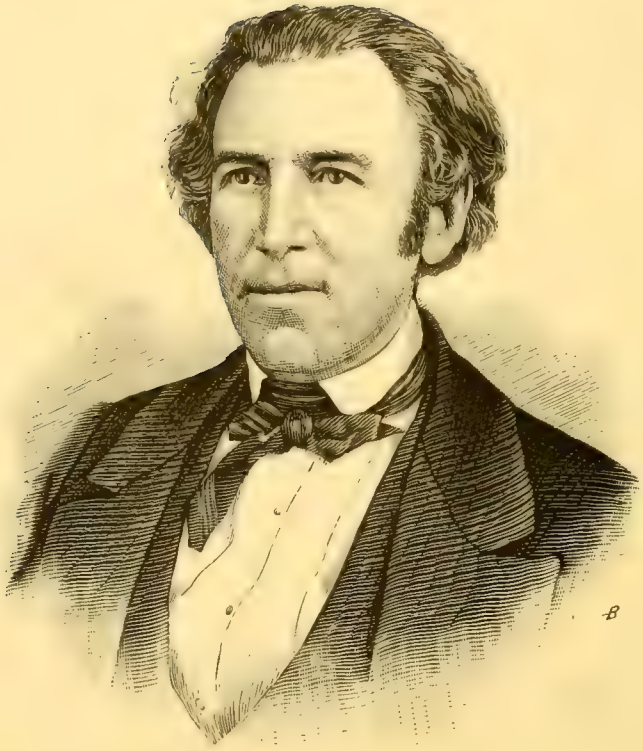
MILO HOLABIRD.

Milo Holabird was born, April 9, 1810, on the place where he now resides, in Canaan, Conn. His grandfather, Timothy Holabird, born in 1716, a native of Brimfield, Mass., married Abigail Charles. They had six children. At an early day he moved to Canaan with his family, and settled near the present site of Falls Village. He was a large man, of great physical strength, and had much influence in the community. He was a tanner as well as farmer, and a Federalist in politics. He died in 1810, aged ninety-four years.

William Holabird was the sixth child of Timothy and Abigail Holabird, and was born Feb. 9, 1764, in Canaan. He remained with his father until he became of age, became a farmer, and married, at the age of twenty-five, Dorcas, daughter of Amos and Hannah (Swift) Bird, of Salisbury. Their children were Amos B., William S., Julia M. (she married Chester Monson, and had three children), Harlow C., Horatio N., Harriet E. (she married Garrett Kellogg, of Cornwall, and had two children), Milo, Sophia A., and Lucius H., who died in infancy. Milo and Sophia are the only ones now living. William Holabird was selectman, justice of the peace, assessor, and held other minor offices. He was a Democrat in politics, and was a staunch supporter of those principles. Soon after his marriage he moved to the farm where he made his home for life, and where he died, Dec. 14, 1850. His wife, born Nov. 10, 1771, died May 30, 1849.

Milo was reared on the farm; had such advantages for education as were given by the common schools of his youth, supplemented by two terms of academic instruction, at one of which he studied surveying. As he was the youngest son, he stayed with his father, and after his death purchased the interests of all the other heirs but his sister Sophia, who resides with him.

Mr. Holabird has always been a Democrat, and had much influence in Canaan before the division of the town, and was very prominent in local politics. He was selectman for seven years, member of the State Legislature for 1848–49, justice of the peace for several years, and assessor two years. He strongly opposed the division of the town, and since that was done has not taken so active a part in town matters. He is now hale and hearty, at the age of seventy-two years, enjoying the fruits of a well-spent life, and enjoys the confidence and high esteem of numerous friends.



Chas H Count

W. W. Millard

Milo Holabird

JONATHAN BATES.

Jonathan Bates, son of Jonathan Bates, was born in New Haven, Conn., Feb. 17, 1794. His father was a very successful Baptist minister, and was born in East Haddam, Conn.; married Mary Morse, and had eight children, of whom Jonathan, the subject of this sketch, was the second son. His father lived to be eighty-two years of age, and his mother was about ninety-three years of age.

Mr. Bates had very limited advantages for an education, but by close application to good books, papers, magazines, etc., has become one of the best-informed men in Canaan, Conn. Very early in life he was compelled to work out to aid in maintaining the family. At eighteen years of age he left home to seek his own fortune. He worked by the month on the farm, by the day, by the job laying stone wall,—any way, every way to earn an honest penny. May 9, 1821, he settled in Canaan, Conn., on the farm where he now (April, 1881) resides. When he settled in Canaan he kept public-house for some seventeen years, in connection with farming, since which time he has been a farmer. He has been a very large and successful farmer, and to-day, although so very old in years, sees to his own business. He has cared for more than six head of cattle himself the past winter, besides attending to many other farm duties.

In politics he was a Democrat, but of late years has been a Republican. He has held various offices of his town. He is very methodical in whatever he does, and has kept a diary since 1838. His memory is remarkable for one so old, and it is a pleasure to talk with one so well informed. Besides being well posted on various subjects, he has taken a deep interest in the study of astronomy, and is considered quite well informed on that subject. He has been three times married, first to Pamela Sedgwick, by whom he had one daughter, Pamela, who married Charles Hunt, of Huntsville; they had one son, Charles S., who was educated by Mr. Bates, and who became a prominent literary gentleman, residing in New York City, and died there in early manhood. Mr. Bates' second wife was Eunice Dean, and his present wife is Maria, widow of William Pendleton, and daughter of Luther Emmons, of Cornwall, Conn. They were married March 8, 1869. While he is not a member of any church, he has ever been very liberal towards all charitable institutions, and the poor have in him a good friend.

REV. PITKIN COWLES.

Pitkin Cowles was born at Farmington (now Southington), Conn., on April 7, 1777. He was a direct descendant, in the seventh generation, of John Cowles, at one time a member of the General Court of Connecticut, who came to Hartford from England in 1640. He was a man of much influence, and one of the largest land-holders of the colony. Pitkin Cowles was graduated at Yale College in the class of 1800. He had a strong bent towards the legal profession, but before taking any steps in that direction it was the earnest wish of his father that he should pursue a course of reading for one year, under the supervision of the noted Rev. Dr. Smalley. To this he deferentially assented, and at the end of that period, after due consideration, decided to commence the study of theology, under the same reverend preceptor, as also partly under the Rev. Dr. Charles Backus.

Having accomplished the requisitions to that end, he was ordained pastor over the Second Congregational Church of Canaan, Litchfield Co., in August, 1805, an office to which he devoted himself with all the ardor of his strong, devout, and reverent nature. To the end of his life no interruption occurred in his calling, with the exception of a short period during the war of 1812, when he became chaplain of a brigade under Gen. Elisha Sterling, then stationed at New London.

While in New Haven, on a visit to his eldest son, then a student at Yale College, he was seized with alarming symptoms of illness, and, wending his weary way to his old home at Southington, surrounded by several members of his family, who had been hurriedly summoned to his bedside, he soon breathed his last in the room where he drew his first breath. His death took place on Sunday morning, at sunrise, on Feb. 8, 1833, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. His remains repose in a secluded nook at the "Grove," the home to which he brought his bride in the month of May, 1808. It is not difficult to delineate his character: frank, open, crystal waters were not purer. His mind was vigorous and comprehensive. He possessed remarkable personal and moral courage. His sympathies were very tender, with a lofty sense of honor, true and faithful in his friendships, not seldom practically shown, and his hospitalities unbounded. His favorite studies were the classics, natural sciences, and history, in which last, few of his day were so thoroughly read. In person he was about six feet in height, of fine physique,—a noble presence; in conversation graceful, and, inclined to discussion, a strong debater in council. In manner he was dignified, and to all he was courteous. Perhaps no truer example of the representative New England pastor of the period could be named. The father of his people, the shepherd of his flock, under his spiritual guid ance rich and poor, young and old took upon them the impress of his instruction, and the spirit of his unpretentious piety.

CHAPTER XXIX.*

COLEBROOK.

Geographical—Topographical—Towns Patented to Hartford and Windsor—The Controversy—Survey of the Town—Ministerial and School Lots—Initial Events—Incorporation of the Town—First Town-Meeting—Highways—Early Settlers and their Locations—The First Death—The First Birth—The Church Controversy—Ecclesiastical History—Congregational Church—Representatives from 1796 to 1882—Military Record.

COLEBROOK is located in the northeastern part of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Massachusetts, on the east by Hartford County, on the south by Winchester, and on the west by Norfolk. The surface of the town is hilly. The soil is generally fertile and well adapted to agriculture.

HISTORICAL RECORDS OF THE TOWN OF COLEBROOK.

The town of Colebrook is one of the seven towns patented to the towns of Hartford and Windsor by the colony of Connecticut in A.D. 1729. The means by which these seven townships came into the hands of the two towns of Hartford and Windsor may be known by examining Trumbull's "History of Connecticut," vol. ii. p. 95. By this it appears that when, in the reign of James II., Sir Edmund Andruss was sent over by that tyrant to demand the charter of the several New England colonies, and Connecticut expected to lose their charter, the General Assembly made a grant to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, in the words following:

"This Court Grant to the Plantations of Hartford and Windsor those Lands on the north of Woodbury and Mattatuck, and on the west of Farmington and Simsbury to the Massachusetts line north, to run west to Husatonic or Stratford River. Provided it be not a part of it formerly granted to any particular person to make a Plantation or village on."

This grant was made Jan. 26, 1686. Hartford and Windsor subsequently claimed that this grant was good and valid, while the colony on their part regarded the grant as nothing but a plan devised and adopted at the time to save the lands of the colony from the grasp of Sir Edmund Andruss, and prevent his enriching himself and his followers by the sale of them; that the grant was made in a hasty and inconsiderate manner, and at a time when the colony was threatened with the loss of its most valuable rights and privileges, and paid no regard to the claims of the towns of Hartford and Windsor. The controversy respecting these lands between the contending claimants was long and violent, continuing until 1729. In 1724, Governor Talcott, Matthew Allen, and Roger Wolcott prepared a petition to the Assembly praying that the controversy might be amicably settled, and that a committee might be appointed by the Assembly for that object. Upon this application, James Wadsworth, John Brainard, and Hezekiah Brainard were appointed a committee to examine the claims of Hartford and Windsor, to receive such propositions as should be made to them, and report to the Assembly, that the difficulties might be settled. The committee, after laboring on the business for nearly two years, made their report, upon which the Assembly resolved that the lands in controversy should be divided between the colony and the two towns, the colony to retain the western and the two towns the eastern division. In pursuance of this resolve the Governor and company, on the 22d of May, 1729, gave a patent to the towns of Hartford and Windsor of one-half of said lands, and about three years after, in May, 1732, an act was passed empowering Matthew Allen, Roger Wolcott, Samuel Mather, and other inhabitants of Windsor to make a partition of the moiety of lands then patented to the said towns, bounded north on the line of Massachusetts, west partly on lands belonging to the Governor and company and partly on the town of Litchfield, south partly on the town of Waterbury and partly on the town of Farmington, east partly on Farmington and partly on Simsbury and partly on lands belonging to the Governor and company. One-half of this tract was granted to Hartford. The proprietors of the towns of Hartford and Windsor made a partition by a deed executed Feb. 11, 1732, the townships granted to Hartford in the division being New Hartford, Hartland, Winchester, and the eastern half of Harwinton; to Windsor, Torrington, Barkhamsted, Colebrook, and the western half of Harwinton. On the 7th of April, 1732, the inhabitants of Windsor made a division of the three and a half towns among themselves to a certain number of patentees or proprietors, to have and to hold the same in severalty to them and their heirs forever. These preparatory measures having been adopted by the proprietors, the General Assembly passed an act of incorporation vesting them with all powers necessary for the disposing of said lands and securing them forever to those who should purchase. The first tract of land mentioned in the patent is Torrington, said to contain twenty thousand nine hundred and twenty-four acres, granted to Matthew Allen, Roger Wolcott, Esqs., and to the rest of the proprietors of said Torrington. The second parcel of land is Barkhamsted, containing twenty thousand five hundred and thirty-one acres, to Capt. Thomas Moor, Lieut. Jonathan Elsworth, and the rest of the proprietors of Barkhamsted. Colebrook was granted to Capt. Samuel Wheeler, Mr. Henry Wolcott, and the rest of the proprietors of Colebrook, said to contain eighteen thousand one hundred and ninety-nine acres. The fourth parcel is the western half of Harwinton, containing nine thousand five hundred and sixty acres, granted to Samuel Allen, Daniel Berrill, and the rest of the proprietors of Harwinton. It is probable, though it does not appear on the proprietors' records, that the whole of the three and a half towns were divided to the inhabitants of Windsor on the same list, as the names of the original proprietors of the different townships are not the same. The amount of the list on which the township was divided was £3987 4*s.* 8*d.*, the quantity of land divided eighteen thousand one hundred and ninety-nine acres, being about four and three-fourths acres on one pound, or twenty shillings on the list. The first meeting of the proprietors was held at the meeting-house in the first society in Windsor, Jan. 30, 1732. At this meeting Capt. Joseph Phelps, Roger Newberry, and Thomas Allen were appointed a committee to preambulate with the neighboring towns the town line of Colebrook, to view and see the land lying in said Colebrook and the form thereof; and it does not appear that another meeting of the proprietors was held until May 22, 1756, a period of twenty-four years. There was a meeting Feb. 22, 1743.

* This chapter embraces the unpublished manuscript of the late Reuben Rockwell, contributed by his son, Reuben Rockwell, Esq.

The township was surveyed and laid out in 1760 into twenty-nine rights, that being the number of the original proprietors. Sixty acres was laid out as a ministerial lot, to be the property of the first orthodox minister who should be settled or ordained in the town; one hundred acres as a parsonage for the use of the ministry; one hundred acres as a school-lot for the benefit of common schools, and ten acres as a parcel to build a meeting-house on.

The township was laid out in three divisions and eight tiers. Each proprietor's number was drawn by lot, No. 1 beginning at the southwest corner of the town, then running northward on the first or west tier to the Massachusetts line,—No. 52 being the north lot on the first tier,—then turning eastward and beginning the next number at the north end of the second tier, and running down on said second tier, and pursuing that course through the town, the tiers being two hundred and forty rods in width, except the east tier, which does not hold that width, especially at the south end. Ten-rod highways were laid between each tier, and a number of four-rod highways across the several tiers. The committee who laid out the town were Pelatiah Mills, Josiah Phelps (2d), James Rockwell, Ephraim Wolcott, and Nathaniel Tilley. The meeting at which this survey was accepted was held July 16, 1760.

The first settler in the town was Benjamin Horton, in December, 1765; Joseph Rockwell, from East Windsor, who arrived with his family Jan. 16, 1766; Joseph Simons, in February or March following; Nathan Bass, in April or May of the same year; and Samuel Rockwell, in February, 1767, the two latter also from East Windsor. After these, among the early settlers, were Gideon Horton, Francis and Aaron Griswold, David Viets, Samuel Mills, Joseph and Eleazar Bidwell, Hezekiah and William Simons, John Porter, and David Pinney.

As the inhabitants were not experienced in the most approved mode of clearing lands and bringing them into cultivation, and generally poor, and the whole town one entire forest covered with heavy timber, its transformation into fruitful fields and well-cultivated farms was slow and protracted, though a few individuals who had property at command advanced the clearing and improvement of their lands with considerable activity. The usual mode of clearing land was to girdle the timber, and on the third year after girdling to clear off the fallen timber, sow it to rye, seed it with herd-grass and white clover. The average crop when well burned over was twenty or twenty-five bushels per acre. The land when thus partially cleared produced good pasturage, and, when moist, good crops of grass for mowing for seven or eight years, when, the remaining timber being principally fallen and briers, and other bushes beginning to overspread the lands, it became necessary to clear and fallow it, which, when well performed, produced good crops of wheat and rye. New lands also produced good oats, potatoes, and turnips, but Indian corn did not usually succeed and was not a profitable crop. Though peach-trees flourished, and in favorable situations soon came to maturity, apple- and other fruit-trees did not succeed, but generally appeared stinted and slow in their growth.

Various causes conspired to retard the advancement of the population of the town; among these were the high price of land compared with its real value, and the general inclination of the proprietors to keep their lands until the prices were advanced, and the heavy expense of clearing and improving land covered with timber. It appears by an enumeration or census taken Sept. 1, 1776, about ten years from the commencement of the settlement of the town, that the number of its inhabitants amounted to two hundred and seven; another census was made in 1782, when the number was two hundred and seventy-two, and forty-eight families. The period between these two enumerations being that of the Revolutionary war accounts for the slow advance of population in that period.

The town was incorporated and invested with town privileges at the October session of the General Assembly, 1779. The first town-meeting was held on the 13th of December of the same year. Though the town had not arrived to that stage of wealth and population which had generally been considered requisite to entitle new towns to a representation in the General Assembly, and to subject them to the payment of State taxes, yet the evils and calamities of the war of the Revolution fell on them, in common with their fellow-citizens through the country generally.

Portions of their militia were frequently called into the field. Several of their young men served in the Continental army, and some of their valuable citizens lost their lives in the war. Those who were opposed to the Revolution in those times were called Tories; not a single individual in the town was of that character. The civil and prudential concerns of the town were generally managed with discretion and economy.

The original ten-rod and four-rod highways, where not wanted for travel, were exchanged for necessary roads. The expense for paupers was trifling, so that the principal town expenses for a number of years were for building and supporting bridges.

The early settlers deserve much commendation for their exertions to establish and support schools. Neighborhood schools were kept up at an early period, and in 1781 the town was organized into two school districts. All the inhabitants within two miles of the south line of the town (except Mr. John Porter, who was connected with a district in Norfolk) were to constitute the south district, the remainder the north district, and for several years ten pounds per year were paid out of the town treasury to each of these districts for the support of schools. As the population of the town increased other districts were formed, and at the organization of school societies in this State, in 1796, the society was divided into six districts, of the following names, viz., North, South, Southwest, Beach Hill, River, and Forge. Three additional districts have since been formed, viz., Centre, West, and North districts. The lot of one hundred acres situated on the Farmington River, laid out by the proprietors as a school-lot, was sold or leased in 1795, the interest of which is annually applied for the support of schools.

When the township was laid out, in 1760, the proprietors' committee, not knowing exactly where the colony line ran, made a line which was called the northern line of the town, to which they laid the lots. About the year 1795 some of the ancient monuments made by the committee who ran the line between Massachusetts and Connecticut in 1717 were discovered, the line from one monument to another against the town of Colebrook was run, and it was found that between the northern lots in each tier and the State line there was unlocated land. Though it had not been previously known exactly where the State line ran, yet it was known from the first settlement of the town that there was unlocated land on the north side of the town, which was called undivided land. The proprietors, before the town was settled, granted to Erastus Wolcott, Esq., the undivided land on the eighth tier, estimated at sixty acres, for building the first saw-mill in the town, that in the first and second tiers was also granted to him for some other consideration. At a proprietors' meeting held at Colebrook in 1795, it was voted that the undivided lands at the north end of the town be ceded over to the town, be sold, and the principal kept forever entire, and the interest annually arising applied for the support of common schools in the town. The sum total of the principal for which these lands sold, together with the school-lot before mentioned, amounts to $1712.84, the amount of interest arising on which annually is $102.77, which, together with the amount received from the State treasury, has, on an average, amounted to $375.69 per year. The number of persons between the ages of four and sixteen, as returned to the controller of the State in 1820, was 396. In 1829 the number was 363.

In resuming the history of the town as such, it may be observed that nothing worthy of special note transpired for several years. The town gradually advanced in wealth and population until at the session of the General Assembly, 1794, a resolve was passed requiring the town of Colebrook to transmit to said Assembly at their next session a list of their polls and ratable estate. The object of this order was to ascertain whether the town had arrived to that stage of advancement in wealth and population that it would be reasonable to call on them for State taxes. The people did not wish any longer to enjoy this exemption, as in consequence they had no representation in the Legislature, and were subject to laws they had no voice in enacting. They, therefore, chose representatives to the Assembly, and were first represented in that body in the October session, 1795.

The number of inhabitants in 1800 was 1004; of families, 192. In 1810 the population was 1243; in 1820, 1276; and in 1830, 1333.

CIVIL AUTHORITY IN THE TOWN OF COLEBROOK FROM ITS INCORPORATION IN 1779 TO 1830.

Elijah Rockwell, 1782-1817; Samuel Mills, 1796 to his death in 1814; Reuben Rockwell, 1809-35; Nathan Bass, 1815-20; Seth Marshall, 1816-35; Grove Pinney, 1823-25; Lancelot Phelps, 1818-32; Samuel Whitford, 1823; William S. Holabird, 1821-24.

SELECTMEN FROM DECEMBER, 1779.

1779.—Samuel Mills, David Pinney, John Porter.
1780-81.—Samuel Rockwell, David Pinney, Samuel Mills.
1782.—Samuel Mills, Samuel Rockwell, David Pinney, John Porter, Edmund Howell.
1783.—Samuel Mills, Samuel Rockwell, John Porter, John Rockwell, Edmund Howell.
1784.—Samuel Mills, John Porter, Edmund Howell.
1785.—Samuel Rockwell, Samuel Mills, John Porter, Edmund Howell, David Pinney.
1786.—Samuel Rockwell, Samuel Mills, John Porter, Daniel Eno, Edmund Howell.
1787.—Joseph Bidwell, Daniel Eno, Isaac Kneeland.
1788.—Samuel Mills, Daniel Eno, Elijah Rockwell, John Porter, Isaac Kneeland.
1789.—Edmund Howell, Daniel Eno, Avah Phelps.
1790.—Samuel Mills, Samuel Rockwell, Elijah Rockwell.
1791.—Samuel Mills, Elijah Rockwell, Avah Phelps.
1792.—Samuel Mills, Samuel Blakeslee, Avah Phelps, Elijah Rockwell, Ephraim Bidwell.
1793.—David Pinney, Stephen Skinner, Samuel Blakeslee.
1794.—David Pinney, Edmund Howell, Reuben Rockwell.
1795.—Samuel Mills, Reuben Rockwell, Grove Pinney.
1796.—Samuel Mills, Reuben Rockwell, Grove Pinney.
1797.—David Pinney, Stephen Skinner, Reuben Rockwell.
1798.—Reuben Rockwell, Nathan Bass, Asa Bishop.
1799.—Nathan Bass, Reuben Rockwell, Moses Wright, Jr.
1800-1.—Grove Pinney, Avah Phelps, Eleazar Bidwell.
1802.—Eleazar Bidwell, Abraham Pinney, Jacob Chamberlain.
1803.—Reuben Rockwell, Frederic Brown, Samuel Blakeslee.
1804.—Reuben Rockwell, Frederic Brown, Asa Bishop.
1805.—Asa Bishop, Nathan Bass, Moses Wright, Jr.
1806.—Nathan Bass, Moses Wright, Jr., Joshua Osburn.
1807.—Asaph Pinney, John Whiting, Samuel Whitford.
1808.—Reuben Rockwell, Seth Marshall, Roger Stillman
1809.—Roger Stillman, Seth Marshall, Ammi R. Robbins.
1810.—Seth Marshall, Selah Trent, John Tyler.
1811.—Reuben Rockwell, Roswell Marshall, Selah Trent.
1812.—John Tyler, Selah Trent, Samuel Cowles.
1813.—John Tyler, Selah Trent, Samuel Cowles.

1814.—Samuel Cowles, Robert Stillman, Rufus Holmes.
1815.—Rufus Holmes, Elijah Grant, Daniel Stillman.
1816.—Elijah Grant, Daniel Stillman, Grove Pinney.
1817.—Grove Pinney, Samuel Whitford, Reuben Rockwell.
1818.—Grove Pinney, Timothy Babcock, Sheron Rockwell.
1819.—Grove Pinney, Theron Rockwell, Samuel Whitford.
1820.—Grove Pinney, Theron Rockwell, Samuel Whitford.
1821.—Grove Pinney, Theron Rockwell, Henry Bass.
1822.—Theron Rockwell, Henry Bass, Thomas Concklin.

John Wright removed from Goshen to the Bellow's place, below Rufus Holmes', in 1769. He was the father of John, Charles, Freedom, and Lucy, the wife of Elijah Rockwell, Esq.

The following is a list of the inhabitants who resided in Colebrook previous and at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, and the time they removed into the town:

1765.—Benjamin Horton and wife: died here.
1766.—Joseph Rockwell, Joseph Seymour, Nathan Bass.
1767.—Samuel Rockwell, Gideon Horton.
1768.—Francis Griswold, Aaron Griswold.
1769.—Samuel Mills, Moses Wright, Hezekiah Simons, William Simons, David Rockwell.
1770.—David Viets, Samuel Phillips, John Porter, Jacob Ogden, Ebenezer Shepard.
1771.—Joseph Bidwell, Eleazar Bidwell, Daniel Hall, David Goodhue, Joseph Langworthy, Joseph Tainter, Daniel and David Hoskins, William Denison, John and James Mead, John Seymour, Dr. Asa Hillyer and James Hillyer.
1772.—Henry White, David Pinney, Thomas Feax.
1773.—Pelatiah Mills, Andrew Buckingham, Stephen Russell.
1774.—Aaron Simons.

Benjamin Horton, the first inhabitant, removed into the town in December, 1765, and built a house on the north side of the road, about forty rods east of J. E. Hoyt's (now owned by Joseph Twinge*). Joseph Rockwell, the second settler, moved into the town Jan. 16, 1766, and built a house about ten rods southeast of Rufus Holmes' (Horace White's) present dwelling. With him came his sons, John and Elijah Rockwell, who were both over twenty-one years of age, and were considered as among the earliest settlers, although at that time unmarried. The two houses above mentioned were the only ones on the road from New Hartford to Norfolk. Joseph Seymour, the third, came in February or March, 1766. He lived on the bank of Sandy Brook, about ten rods below the house of Gen. Phelps. Nathan Bass, the fourth, removed into the town in April or May in the same year. He lived on or near where his son, Nathan Bass, Esq., lived (now Eugene Marvin). He died at New York in 1776, while in the army of the Revolution. Samuel Rockwell was the fifth, and moved into the town in February, 1767. The house he first built and occupied is the back part of the house where his son Reuben lived, and is the only house remaining which was occupied by the first settlers (now occupied by the family of the late Reuben Rockwell, and the oldest house in the town). Of the above, Benjamin Horton was from Springfield, Joseph and Samuel Rockwell and Nathan Bass were from East Windsor, Joseph Seymour from Windsor. After these were Gideon Horton, who lived some thirty rods northeast of J. E. Hoyt's (Joseph Twinge). Dr. Asa Hillyer and James, his brother, lived on the same ground now occupied by the brick house built by Alpha Sage (now owned by John S. Wheeler). Asa stayed there but a short time, but his brother, James Hillyer, remained until 1773 or 1774. Aaron Griswold lived near the house where Lucius Holmes now lives (Eugene Barber). Francis Griswold lived on the north side of the road, about half-way from L. Holmes' to the road that leads to Erastus Seymour's (cross-road). Samuel Mills lived near or on the same ground where the house lately occupied by Arthur Howell stood (now occupied by Edwin Simons). Moses Wright lived in a log house near where his son Alvin now lives (Jordan Smith). Hezekiah Simons lived forty rods north of Abel Bunnell's house (Elder Thomas Benedict); William Simons where A. Bunnell now lives (owned by Benedict). David Rockwell lived about thirty rods south of A. Bunnell, where Bildad Seymour afterwards lived (Mr. Mahanna). Samuel Phillips first lived on the Farmington River, where Henry White since lived (family of Reuben White), eighty rods southeast of Samuel Whitford's. David Viets lived about one hundred rods west of Nathaniel Coble's, in the north part of the town, on the road leading from the Baptist meeting-house to Beach Hill (Lewis Loveland). John Porter lived on the Norfolk road, in a log house, a little east of Remas Coy's (Harvey Coy). Eleazar Bidwell's was the seventeenth family that removed into the town, and lived on the ground now occupied by the Baptist meeting-house in the north part of the town. Joseph Bidwell lived near the North Baptist meeting-house, on the ground now occupied as a parsonage. Jacob Ogden lived on the place now occupied by Clark Roberts (Mr. Lawton). In 1770, Richard Smith, from England, who had previous to this time bought and carried on the old furnace in Salisbury,—which was the only one in the State,—built a forge in this town, now known as the "Old Forge place" (Robertsville), which he carried on until the commencement of the Revolutionary war, when he, favoring the cause of Great Britain, returned to England, and never came back. He left this forge and the furnace at Salisbury without any agent to take care of them. The furnace was through the war carried on by the State of Connecticut, and was used extensively for casting cannon and ball for the defense of the country. Mr. Jacob Ogden, from New Jersey, was employed by Smith as agent to carry on this forge from 1770 till he left the country, after which Mr. Ogden carried it on on his own account, and received the whole avails during the war. At the close of the war Mr. Jared Zane, an agent of Smith's, took possession of it, and soon after sold it to Joseph and Elisha Buell. The workmen who lived at this place were William Dennison, John and James Mead, John

* The names in parenthesis denote present occupants.

Seymour (who was drowned by the breaking of a flume), Thomas Keax, and probably some others. Ebenezer Shepard lived where Erastus Seymour now lives (George Dolittle). Daniel Hall lived in a log house a little north of the old burying-ground. David Goodhue lived on the ground where Linus Bidwell lately lived, west of Osborn Stillman's (heirs of O. Stillman). Joseph Langworthy lived on the road leading from the saw-mill near Charles Phelps' to Norfolk, on the east side of the pond, on land now owned by C. Phelps, where Thomas Miner afterwards lived (Horace Phelps). Joseph Tainter first lived on the old road leading over the hill from Arthur Howell's to Andrew Bailey's, and twenty rods south of where he afterwards lived. David and Daniel Hoskins lived in the west part of the town, near the house of Nathan Allen. David Pinney lived about fifty rods southeast of Ira Whiting's (premises now owned by E. S. Preston); Aaron Simons where Samuel Simons now lives (H. D. Smith). Pelatiah Mills lived where Samuel Mills, Esq., afterwards lived (Wesley Root), about one hundred rods north of Samuel E. Mills. Andrew Buckingham lived opposite Rufus Holmes', in the house owned and afterwards occupied by John Rockwell; Elijah Rockwell, Esq., where his son Theron now lives.

The first person buried in the old burying-ground, and, it is believed, the first that was buried in the town, was Lydia Mason Wright, wife of Mr. John Wright, who lived in the north part of Winchester, where Samuel Rowley now lives (Rowley family).

Removals.—Gideon Norton removed to near Rutland, Vt. (he was the son of Benjamin Francis), and Aaron Griswold and Nathaniel Burn, in 1784, to Johnstown, N. Y.; Jacob Ogden to Hartford (died in New Haven); Daniel Hall to Black River in 1800; William Denison to Goshen; Pelatiah Mills to Johnstown, N. Y., in 1784; Stephen Russel to Neversink about 1800.

The quantity of land in the town of Colebrook is not very accurately known. It was estimated in the original patent to contain eighteen thousand one hundred and ninety-nine acres. Its leng'h from north to south on the west tier, taking for a data the width of the lots as originally laid, is five miles one hundred rods, on the east tier four miles two hundred and sixty rods, and the average would be five miles and ten rods. Provided the tiers will hold out two hundred and forty rods in width, the town would be six miles and seventy rods east and west. The west line of the town, and the tier lines, of course, which run parallel with that line, when the town was laid out in 1760, was called to run north nineteen degrees east. The east line, adjoining Hartland, runs south twenty degrees west, which would make the south line of the town shorter than the north line. The east tier is said to fall short in width most at the south end. The northern line, to which the lots were laid, was not the colony line. It appears that the committee who laid out the town did not know where the colony line—which was run in 1717 by commissioners from the two colonies—ran. They made a line which ran east ten degrees fifteen minutes south, which was called the northern line of the town, to which the lots were laid. Calling the town five miles by six, it would contain thirty square miles, which, at six hundred and forty acres per square mile, would make nineteen thousand two hundred acres; but, as the lots do not run square but are diamonding, unless they were overlaid in width on the tier line, they would fall considerably short of the quantity of land as contained in the original survey.

There are in the town the following roads, originally turnpike roads: Waterbury River road, six miles; Greenwoods, or Hartford, road, two miles; Hartland turnpike, six miles; Farmington River road, four miles; Still River road, three miles; Sandy Brook, five miles, making in all twenty-six miles.

The traveling highways in the town contain probably about 420 acres of land. The amount of the assessment-list for 1829 was $17,100; a tax of five cents, the usual highway tax, amounts to $855. The tax for defraying town charges has for several years been six cents on the dollar, amounting to $1026. From this sum ought probably to be deducted, for abatements, etc., $100, leaving $926, which, together with the annual State tax of one cent on the dollar,—which after the abatements amounts to $150,—will make $1076, which will make the sum total of town, State, and highway taxes $1931, besides society and school expenses. The number of cows contained in the assessment-list of 1829 is 981. Of these probably 50 were not milking cows, leaving 931 milch-cows. The number of sheep was 3007; of horses, 160; oxen, 221; and 440 young cattle.

CHURCH CONTROVERSY.

The town was not organized as an ecclesiastical society until 1786, at which time a tract of one mile square, taken from Winchester, on which were several inhabitants, was annexed to the society. Previous to this period all society business was transacted in town-meetings. In September, 1780, the town voted to apply to the County Court for a committee to set a stake for a meeting-house. Capt. Uriah Holmes, of Hartland, Col. Seth Smith, of New Hartford, and Giles Pettibone, Esq., of Norfork, composed the committee. This committee, after viewing the town, fixed on a place near the dwelling-house lately owned by the Rev. Chauncey Lee, now owned and occupied by Mr. Allen Seymour, which was established by the court according to law. But when the question of building was brought forward, the people belonging to the southern part of the town began to manifest a considerable degree of dissatisfaction with respect to the location, and a desire for another committee and another trial; and as, after the plan, as before stated, was legally established, it became necessary to apply to the General Assembly to get the doings of the court set aside and a new committee appointed, the southern people were about to press their petition to the Assembly for effecting this object, when the northern people, to give them satisfaction and maintain the peace of the society, agreed to join in the application for another committee, which was accordingly voted in town-meeting. This committee were Daniel Humphrey, of Simsbury, Hezekiah Fitch, of Salisbury, and John Watson, of Canaan. This committee, after viewing the town and attending to the representations of the people, set their stake near the place where Calvin Sager's dwelling-house now stands. Perceiving that the Mill Brook, so called, was the Rubicon or parting-point which neither party were willing to pass, it seemed to be their object to set their stake as near as practicable to the line of demarkation. The southern people were dissatisfied for two reasons: first, because it was set north of the brook; second, because the ground was very unsuitable for a meeting-house, several declaring they had much rather go thirty rods farther north to the place where the first stake was set than build on a place so unfavorable. The northern people, though not pleased with the ground, yet, as they had again obtained one point considered important in having the stake set north of the brook, made no objection to the place, and a committee was appointed and preparations made for building the house. As a considerable part of the lands still belonged to non-resident proprietors, and as the value of lands would be considerably increased by building a meeting-house, it was considered just and reasonable that the owners of lands should be taxed to a greater amount than would fall to their share by a tax raised on the list, in the usual mode of taxing for other objects. Application was accordingly made to the Legislature for a land-tax, to be applied towards building the house, a privilege which had been usually granted to new towns, and the grant of sixpence on the one obtained.

The committee proceeded to prepare the foundation and frame the house, when an opposition on the part of the southern people was manifested, a meeting called, and, after much altercation and mutual crimination, it was voted to postpone for the present raising the house. The timber was piled, and secured from injury. The prospects at this time were gloomy; every appearance seemed to indicate a people ruined by contention, the termination of which seemed more remote than ever. While these difficulties were prevailing, sectarian teachers made inroads into the town and gained proselytes, especially in the northern part, and from this unhappy controversy may be dated the rise of the Baptist society in the northern part of the town. Things remained in this situation for a considerable time, when, the excitement having in some measure subsided, and the evils resulting from the present state of the society become more and more realized, some person, perhaps some one inclined to speculating and hazardous enterprises, suggested a plan which soon became a subject of general conversation, and, as the people were heartily tired of the controversy, they were prepared to listen to any expedient which appeared calculated to terminate their difficulties. The plan was this, and proposed in terms like the following:

"We are none of us pleased with the place now established,—there are handsome and convenient sites not far distant, both north and south,—and we and our posterity shall forever regret a result so unwise as to build the house on a place so unsuitable and improper when good places are so near; therefore let us affix on two places, one north and the other south of the brook, the line of separation, and cast a fair lot to decide on which of the two places the house shall be built, and then forever decide the controversy."

Strange as it may seem, a project so novel met with almost universal approbation, was adopted, and soon carried into effect. The plans agreed on were, on the north part, the place near where the first stake was set, and on the south part, on the place were Mr. Martin Rockwell's house now stands. The lot was drawn, and fell in favor of the southern place, and measures were immediately taken to remove the timber and raise the house. This was accomplished, the house covered and lighted, the floors laid, and apparent tranquillity and acquiescence on the part of the northern people appeared for a while to prevail. But it was not long before it became apparent that the wound, though in appearance healed, was still festering, and would soon break out and become more alarming in its symptoms than ever. The northern people refused to join in procuring preaching, or in any measure to build up the society, and, though there was now a meeting-house, nearly one-half of the people would not enter the doors. Things continued in this situation for a considerable time, and the prospects of union seemed as remote as ever. The northern people were called on for the reasons of their conduct, and for what would satisfy them. The lot they considered an unfortunate thing, which, in their desire to have something done to remove the difficulties, they had inadvertently agreed to. The direction of two committees was in their favor, and nothing but chance against them, and nothing less would satisfy them than the removal of the house north of the brook.

New actors were coming on to the stage; some of the southern people began to express their wishes that the meeting-house was north of the brook, and some were ready to join in efforts to remove it. The principal actors among the southern people, tired and worn out with a fruitless controversy, seemed inclined to withdraw and let others manage the business as they pleased. A vote was obtained, in the spring or summer of 1793, to remove the house north of the brook, the expense to be defrayed by tax on the society. Preparations were accordingly made to accomplish this object. The plan adopted, after due consultation and advice, was to remove the house, standing, during the winter season with oxen. Preparations were accordingly made to perform this Quixotic enterprise, and in the month of February, 1794, the attempt was made. About one hundred and fifty pair of oxen were collected, and after the necessary preparation were fastened to the house, and it began to move majestically forward; but, there being a small descent soon to pass, it was found, contrary to the confident expectations of Capt. Watson, the man employed to direct and superintend the moving, that it would move forward with rapidity without being drawn, and as, in order to proceed, the descent necessary to pass was much greater, it was judged utterly impracticable to proceed, and after two days' labor, the house having been removed about thirty rods, the project was for the present abandoned. In the autumn following another attempt was made, at the expense of subscribers, to remove the house with vessel machinery, —pulleys and ropes; but after a trial this plan was also found to be attended with insuperable difficulties. Tired, worn out, and frustrated with these fruitless projects, the actors in this business seemed disposed to sit down and count the cost. The delusions of party feeling and obstinacy seemed in a measure to vanish, and sober reason and consideration to resume their influence, and they were led to inquire whether the object they were with so much perplexity and expense pursuing could be accomplished, and, provided it could, whether the southern people generally would unite with them in building up the society. Neither of these questions could be affirmatively answered with correctness. It was therefore, after due consultation, agreed to open a negotiation with the southern people, in order to effect a settlement of the controversy. The overtures submitted were that the house should be placed on the nearest suitable place to where it then was, and the expense incurred in the attempt to move defrayed by the society. A meeting was called, the agreement consummated, and the house removed to the place where it now stands, and then, after an unhappy controversy of fourteen years, peace and union were restored, and all seemed disposed to join their efforts and aid in building up the society. Measures were immediately adopted to procure preaching. Dr. Jonathan Edwards, who had been recently dismissed from a parish in New Haven, was applied to, and commenced preaching here about the 1st of September, 1795. After he had been with the people a while they unanimously gave him a call to settle, and voted him a salary of one hundred pounds per annum. He accepted the call, and was installed Dec. 30, 1795. Previous to his settlement a fund was raised by subscription sufficient to pay the salary for three years. The ministerial lot of sixty acres granted by the proprietors to the first orthodox minister would by the terms of the grant have become the property of Dr. Edwards, but he agreed to acquit his right to said lot to the society, which was accordingly done. In the year 1797 the society agreed to sell this lot and lease the parsonage-lot of one hundred acres on a long lease, the principal sum for which said lands sold to be a perpetual fund towards the payment of the yearly ministerial salary. These lots were disposed of at auction. The parsonage-lot sold for $15.57 per acre, amounting to $1553.57; the ministerial lot for $12.21 per acre, amounting to $732.60; total, $2286.17, the annual interest of which is $137.17.

The proprietors, at the time they ceded the undivided land to the town, as previously stated, for the support of schools, also ceded such part of the original ten-rod highways as had not been previously exchanged for roads to the town; and at a town-meeting held Sept. 21, 1795, the town voted to sell such part of said highways as should not be wanted to exchange for roads then laid out, together with that part of the parade-lot, so called, which was not wanted for a burying-place, and that the principal sum for which said lands sold constitute a fund for the support of the gospel ministry, the annual interest of which to be divided annually to the several denominations according to their respective lists. The amount for which these lands sold was $1678, the annual interest of which is $100.68. Of this sum the Congregational society, on an average, draws about $54, which, added to the avails of the public lands, as before stated,—viz., $137.17,—amounts to $191.17. In addition to this amount, the society have $100 in the Phœnix Bank, Hartford, which was a grant from the State to the various religious societies for the support of the gospel; so that the permanent funds amount annually to $197.17. For a more particular account of the ecclesiastical society, church, etc., reference may be had to the society and church records.

During the unhappy and protracted controversy respecting the location of the meeting-house, a considerable number of the people, principally in the northern and eastern sections of the town, embraced the Baptist persuasion. When they first began to hold meetings, one Mr. Dunlap, who then resided in Massachusetts, contiguous to Colebrook, was their preacher, other elders of that denomination occasionally supplying them, and in 1795 Elder Rufus Babcock was ordained their pastor, his church and congregation being composed of people in Colebrook, Norfolk, and Sandisfield, making a respectable congregation. Soon after Mr. Babcock's settlement a meeting-house was built. In 1828, Mr. Babcock, having arrived to the age of seventy years, resigned his pastoral office, and was succeeded by Elder Thomas Larkum.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.

Colebrook, the last settled town in the State of Connecticut, was surveyed and laid out by the seventy-nine original proprietors, inhabitants of the town of Windsor, Conn., in 1760; and the first permanent settlements were made in 1765 and 1766.

Sixty acres were reserved and laid out as a ministerial lot, to be the property of the first orthodox minister settled or ordained in the town; and one hundred acres as a parsonage for the use of the ministry. The first minister, Rev. Dr. Edwards, relinquished his right in the sixty acres, and this with the hundred acres were sold for two thousand two hundred and eighty-six dollars; this sum to constitute a perpetual fund, the annual interest to be applied towards the payment of the yearly ministerial salary. This fund has been increased by the avails of other lands, granted by the town to the several denominations, according to their respective lists. Also by the grant of one hundred dollars from the State to the various religious societies, for the support of the gospel. In addition to this, gifts and bequests have been received from Mr. Luman Barber, Mrs. Lucretia Hotchkiss, and Mrs. Lucia B. Mitchell, amounting to two hundred and ninety dollars.

The first ecclesiastical society was organized in 1786. Previous to this the society business had been transacted in town-meeting. In 1780 the town voted to apply to the County Court for a committee to set a stake for a meeting-house. The location designated was not satisfactory, and after repeated attempts to effect a compromise, it was not until 1794 that it found a permanent resting-place and was dedicated to the worship of God. It was placed on the ground where Reuben Rockwell's house now stands, and remained there until 1842, when the church building now occupied was erected.

The Congregational Church was organized in 1795, with the following members: Daniel and Elizabeth Alcox, Anna Rockwell Bass, Epaphras and Margaret Bidwell, Samuel and Wealthy Allen, John Burr, Isaac and Elizabeth Carrier, Margaret Chamberlain, Margaret Eno, Hannah Mather, Elijah Rockwell, Lucy Wright Rockwell, Hepzibah Pratt Rockwell, Nathan and Elizabeth Russell, Roger Stillman, Mehitabel Hurd Stillman, and Moses and Thankful Norton Wright.

The following were received in 1798: Huldah Filly, Hepzibah Merrill, Jemima Seymour, and Mrs. Sarah Wakefield.

In 1799 the following were admitted: Lucy Hart, Roger Mather, Mary Mather, Samuel Mills, Kezia (Filly) Mills, Ebenezer North, Jerusha (Cowles) North, Abijah Northaway, Olive (Cowles) Northaway, Hezekiah Owen, Mrs. Hezekiah Owen, Elijah Pettibone, Mrs. Elijah Pettibone, Reuben Rockwell, Alpha Rockwell, Lucy Rockwell, Jr., Martin Rockwell, Mary (Burrell) Rockwell, Betsey Russell, Elisha Sage, Mrs. Elizabeth (Chamberlain) Sage, Bildad Seymour, Truman Seymour, Mehitabel (Chamberlain) Seymour, Appleton Stillman, Sarah (Chappel) Stillman, Clarissa Stillman, Amos Tolles, Mrs. Amos Tolles, Susan Tuttle, Chloe Alcox, Polly Norton, Noah Merrill, Abigail Phillips, Elizabeth Phelps, Polly Taylor, Abigail (Stanton) Lee.

Many of the early settlers of the town had been trained under the ministry of Rev. Timothy Edwards, and his grandson, Rev. Jonathan Edwards, was installed as their first pastor in December, 1795. He remained until 1799, when he was dismissed to become president of Union College.

He was succeeded by Rev. Chauncey Lee, a native of Salisbury, Conn. The first twenty-eight years of the present century, the period of Dr. Lee's ministry, was probably the most prosperous in the history of the town. There were large families of the Puritan stock, and many accessions to the church. One hundred and five was the result of a powerful religious revival which occurred in 1815. Dr. Lee was dismissed in 1828, and became pastor of the church in Marlborough, Conn. He spent the last years of his life with his daughter, in Guilford, N. Y.

Rev. Azariah Clark was installed in 1830. He was a native of Southampton, Mass., and had been pastor of a church in Canaan, N. Y. His ministry in Colebrook was terminated by his death in October, 1832.

In March, 1833, Rev. Edward R. Tyler assumed the pastoral care of the church. He was dismissed in 1836 to engage in the anti-slavery cause, in which he labored earnestly for several years; after which he removed to New Haven, Conn., and became editor of the New Englander. He died not far from 1850.

Rev. Alfred E. Ives, of New Haven, was installed in 1838. He remained ten years, was dismissed in 1848, and has since that time been pastor in Deerfield, Mass., and Castine, Me.

Rev. Archibald Geikie was engaged in 1854, and, though not installed, performed all the duties devolving upon a pastor. He was a native of Edinburgh, Scotland, and settled in Toronto, Canada, before his engagement in Colebrook. He left in 1863, and was for a time in East Granville, Mass. He died in 1869, at the home of his daughter, in Canaan, Conn.

Rev. Henry A. Russell became stated supply in 1868, and remained until May 1, 1877, when he removed to Mooers, N. Y.

Rev. Ira Pettibone, of Winchester, supplied the pulpit the remainder of the year 1877.

Rev. Joseph B. Clarke, of New Haven, became acting pastor in June, 1878.

The present pastor, Rev. J. W. Hartshorn, was installed in June, 1880.

The list of officers is as follows:

Pastors.—Jonathan Edwards, D.D., Dec. 30, 1795, to Jan. 11, 1799; Chauncey Lee, D.D., Feb. 12, 1800, to Jan. 29, 1828; Azariah Clark, March 10, 1830 (died Oct. 16, 1832); Edward R. Tyler, March 16, 1833, to January, 1836; Alfred E. Ives, Sept. 25, 1838, to May 2, 1848.

Acting Pastors, not installed.—Archibald Geikie, July, 1854, to 1863; Henry A. Russell, 1868 to 1877; Joseph B. Clarke, June, 1878; J. W. Hartshorn, June, 1880, present pastor.

Deacons.—Moses Wright, 1796–1811; Epaphras Bidwell, 1796–1801; Samuel Cowles, 1801–11; Reuben Rockwell, 1811–30; Daniel Stillman, 1811–30; William Swift, 1830–45; Elijah Grant, 1830–62; Chester Stillman, 1845–62; Munson Cole, 1862–69; William F. Grant, 1862–68; George M. Carrington, 1867–69; James M. Grant, 1868; Lorin A. Cook, 1869–73; Eugene H. Barber, 1873; of the branch church at Colebrook River (now extinct), A. Chamberlain, 1834–57.

A Baptist Church was organized in the southeast part of the town by persons of that denomination residing in Colebrook, Barkhamsted, and Winchester, about 1805, and a meeting-house built about the same year.

Elder Erastus Doty, who resided in the neighborhood, was pastor for a long time. A new church was built about 1844, and in 1848 the church reorganized under the name of the South Colebrook Baptist Church.

The following pastors have been settled: Elders A. D. Waters, 1848; Solomon Gale, 1852; J. M. Mace, 1857; Edwin Bromley, 1861; George D. Letton, 1866; Wallace Crocker, 1874; R. H. Maine, 1875; William Goodwin, 1879, present pastor.

The deacons have been Daniel Deming, 1848–74; Allen Barnes, 1848–61; Joseph H. Bass, 1861–81; Giles M. Latuon, 1874–81.

THE NORTH COLEBROOK BAPTIST CHURCH.

The North Colebrook Baptist Church was organized Feb. 12, 1795. Elder Rufus Babcock was ordained at that time. The house of worship was built about 1800, near the cemetery. The present house was built in 1845.

The following pastors have been settled over the church: Elders Rufus Babcock, Thomas Larcomb, Josiah M. Graves, —— McCarthy, —— Doolittle, —— Hawley, father of Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, Zalmon Tobey, —— Miller, —— Wheeler, Dorin Wright, J. F. Temple, T. P. Briggs, Thomas Benedict, William Goodwin, D. F. Beebe, R. H. Maine, Rufus Babcock, D.D., William Goodwin, present pastor.

The deacons have been Ellrazer Bidwell, —— Richards, Abel Bunnell, Joseph Taintor, Philo Hawley, Luman Bidwell, Homer Gleason, Amasa Campbell, Jason F. Hitchcock.

METHODIST CHURCH, COLEBROOK CENTRE.

The Methodist Church at Colebrook River was organized about 1834, and has been supplied with preachers by the Methodist Conference. Previous to the organization of the Methodist Church there had been a branch of the Congregational Church established, and preaching four Sabbaths each year was furnished by the church at Colebrook. A meeting-house was built about 1810 by Congregationalists, Baptists, and Methodists, and called the Union Meeting-House, and occupied by each as they supplied preaching. The Methodists built a church about 1833, and have a flourishing society at the present time.

NATIVES OF COLEBROOK WHO HAVE BEEN EDUCATED AT COLLEGES.

Cyrus Babcock graduated at Brown University, Rhode Island; studied for the ministry; died soon after being prepared to preach.

Rufus Babcock, D.D., graduated at Brown University; studied for the ministry; president of a Baptist college in Rhode Island, and also of an institution at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Chauncey G. Lee graduated at Middlebury College, Vermont; preached several years in Vermont and Connecticut; died at New Haven a few years since.

John Jason Owen graduated at Middlebury, Vt.; studied theology at Andover, Mass.; was appointed secretary of the Presbyterian Education Society, which office he resigned to take the presidency of the Cornelius Institute, in New York City, designed to prepare young men for the ministry. He acquired the title of D.D. from the University of the City of New York.

Selah B. Treat graduated at Yale College, class of 1824; studied for the ministry; was elected to succeed the Rev. Dr. Anderson as secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, which office he filled with singular efficiency till his death, in 1877.

James Watson Robbins graduated at Yale, class of 1822, and from the Medical Department in 1828; located at Uxbridge, Mass. He was an expert in botany, and contributed valuable papers to science; died at Uxbridge in 1879.

Samuel Rockwell graduated at Yale, class of 1825; studied theology at New Haven; settled at Plainfield, Conn., afterwards at New Britain; retired from the ministry; was elected to the State Senate, and to the Legislature several terms.

Henry Cowles graduated at Yale, class of 1826; studied theology at New Haven; settled in Austinburg, Ohio, in 1828; was appointed Professor of Greek and Latin at Oberlin College, Ohio, in 1835, and of Biblical Literature in 1840; editor of the Oberlin Evangelist several years, and published a series of commentaries on the Prophets and other books of the Bible, and still lives at Oberlin, preparing other commentaries.

John Phelps Cowles graduated at Yale, class of 1826; was the valedictorian of his class; studied theology at New Haven; settled at Princeton, Mass.; appointed Professor of Biblical Literature at Oberlin College in 1836, and in 1841 accepted the principalship of the Ladies' Seminary at Ipswich, Mass.

Julius Rockwell graduated at Yale, class of 1826; studied law at New Haven, and established himself at Pittsfield, Mass.; was elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of Massachusetts in 1834; elected to Congress six successive terms; appointed United States senator to succeed Edward Everett, and is now judge of the Superior Court of Massachusetts.

Charles Rockwell graduated at Yale, class of 1826; studied theology at Andover, Mass.; was appointed chaplain on the United States frigate "Potomac"; afterwards was settled at Chatham, Mass., where he now resides.

Elijah Phelps Grant graduated at Yale, class of 1830; studied law at New Haven; began practice at Winsted, Conn.; afterwards removed to Canton, Ohio; died in 1874.

James Cowles graduated at Yale, class of 1837; chose the profession of teaching, and has been a successful teacher, and has taught his pupils to have ideas of their own and do their own thinking.

Joel Grant graduated at Yale, class of 1838; was appointed professor of a class of midshipmen on board a government ship on a cruise to Rio Janeiro; afterwards studied theology at New Haven; was settled at Lockport, Ill. He served as chaplain of an Illinois regiment in the war of the Rebellion; was appointed superintendent of colored schools for the State of Arkansas; died in 1873.

William H. Gilbert graduated at Yale, class of 1841; studied theology at New Haven; was settled in Vermont; afterwards in Granby, Conn.; and subsequently appointed secretary of the Connecticut Bible Society, which position he holds at the present time.

John Grant graduated at Yale, class of 1845; was tutor at Yale, and afterwards teacher of a private school in New York City, which was quite successful; died in 1878, and buried at Colebrook.

Edward Currington graduated at Yale, class of 1859; studied law in New York City; enlisted in the army in 1862; was appointed major, and served in Virginia; was ordered to Texas, where he took the colonelcy of a colored regiment, and was killed, March, 1865, and was brought to Colebrook for interment.

Alfred Ives graduated at Amherst College, and is now superintendent of public schools in Brooklyn, N. Y.

RESIDENCE OF GEN. E. A. PHELPS, NORTH COLEBROOK, CONN.

Joel S. Ives graduated at Amherst College; studied theology, and is now settled at East Hampton, Conn.

Carrington Phelps graduated at Yale, class of 1870; studied law at New Haven Law-School; commenced practice at Madison, Wis., and is now located at St. Paul, Minn.

Besides the above-mentioned graduates, several others have taken a part of the academical studies at college:

Frederick A. Brown.

George Tuttle, lawyer at Warren, Ohio; judge of Circuit Court.

Valentine Chamberlain, lawyer, New Britain, Conn.; judge of City Court.

Rufus B. Smith, lawyer, Madison, Wis.

Volney M. Simons, Methodist preacher, located at Woburn, Mass.

Henry G. Rockwell, secretary Fish Commission, Washington, D. C.

William T. Smith, teacher.

Lorenzo M. Whiting, M.D., located at Canton, Ohio.

REPRESENTATIVES FROM 1796 TO 1881.

1796.—Elijah Rockwell, Samuel Mills.
1797.—Elijah Rockwell, David Pinney.
1798.—Elijah Rockwell, David Pinney, Samuel Mills.
1799.—Elijah Rockwell, Samuel Mills, Reuben Rockwell.
1800.—Arah Phelps, Grove Pinney, Samuel Mills.
1801.—Grove Pinney, Elijah Rockwell, Arah Phelps.
1802.—Grove Pinney, Arah Phelps, Isaac Benedict.
1803.—Grove Pinney, Elijah Rockwell, Arah Phelps, Eleazer Bidwell.
1804.—Grove Pinney, Edmond Howell, Arah Phelps, Elijah Rockwell.
1805.—Asa Bishop, Abijah Rockwell, Samuel Mills, Samuel Blakesley.
1806.—Moses Wright, Jr., Samuel Blakesley, Elijah Rockwell, Reuben Rockwell.
1807.—Grove Pinney, Asa Phelps, Enos North.
1808.—Asaph Pinney, Enos North, Nathan Bass, Martin Rockwell.
1809.—Nathan Bass, Martin Rockwell, Samuel Mills, Seth Marshall.
1810.—Elijah Rockwell, Seth Marshall, Reuben Rockwell.
1811.—Asaph Pinney, John Whiting, Reuben Rockwell, Seth Marshall.
1812.—Reuben Rockwell, Seth Marshall, Martin Rockwell, Frederick Brown.
1813.—Martin Rockwell, Samuel Mills, Nathan Bass, Seth Marshall.
1814.—Nathan Bass, Elijah Rockwell, Martin Rockwell, Frederick Brown.
1815.—Roger Stillman, Reuben Rockwell, Nathan Bass.
1816.—Seth Marshall, Nathan Bass, Martin Rockwell.
1817.—Grove Pinney, Lancelot Phelps.
1818.—Asaph Pinney, Rufus North, Timothy Babcock.
1819.—Lancelot Phelps, Enos North.
1820.—Lancelot Phelps, Samuel Whitford.
1821.—Lancelot Phelps, Henry Bass.
1822.—Timothy Babcock, Arah Phelps.
1823.—Thomas Concklin, Asaph Pinney.
1824.—Enos North, Lancelot Phelps.
1825.—Nathan Bass, Arah Phelps.
1826.—Arthur Howell, Rufus North.
1827.—Arthur Howell, Lancelot Phelps.
1828.—Samuel Whitford, Lancelot Phelps.
1829.—Samuel Whitford, Arthur Howell.
1830.—Lancelot Phelps, Enos North.
1831.—Sylvester Smith, Abiram Chamberlain.
1832.—Sylvester Smith, Arthur Howell.
1833.—Loren Percival, Arthur Howell.
1834.—Loren Percival, Samuel Whitford.
1835.—Arthur Howell, Charles P. Phelps.
1836.—Samuel Simons, Jr., Gilbert Baxter.
1837.—Samuel Simons, Jr., Dorrance Barber.
1838.—John Manchester, Theron Rockwell.
1839.—Arthur Howell, Clark H. Roberts.
1840.—Edward A. Phelps, Clark H. Roberts.
1841.—Edward A. Phelps, William Manchester.
1842.—Dorrance Barber, William Manchester.
1843.—Dorrance Barber, Milton Smith.
1844.—Rupell Frisbie, Milton Smith.
1845.—Rupell Frisbie, Erastus Doty, Jr.
1846.—Enos North, Erastus Doty, Jr.
1847.—James Cobb, Huntington Persons.
1848.—Job Spencer, L. B. Benham.
1849.—George Austin, Rufus Seymour.
1850.—L. L. Loveland, D. E. Manchester.
1851.—E. A. Phelps, H. W. Pinney.
1852.—Henry L. Lincoln, Silas Ives.
1853.—T. R. Wolcott, Milton Smith.
1854.—John Spencer, D. C. Y. Moore.
1855.—Richard Slocum, Ralzemon Phelps.
1856.—Milton Smith, Loren A. Cook.
1857.—Reuben Rockwell, Joseph H. Bass.
1858.—Oliver P. Loomis, Horace Skinner.
1859.—Wolcott Deming, Timothy Persons.
1860.—H. S. Sawyer, Lewis M. Terrell.
1861.—Sterling C. Newton, Harvey Deming.
1862.—Alanson D. Bunnell, O. J. Hodge.
1863.—Albert Kelsey, George S. Ives.
1864.—H. S. Hamilton, P. Corbin.
1865.—Asa White, Clement Thompson.
1866.—W. S. Bunnell, Hiram Baldwin.
1867.—Reuben Scovel, Harvey Deming.
1868.—Henry S. Sawyer, William M. Yale.
1869.—W. G. Kinney, John S. Wheeler.
1870.—Solomon Sackett, John P. Norton.
1871.—Levi Cooke, S. G. Hitchcock.
1872.—Lucien O. Bass, Giles M. Lawton.
1873.—Timothy Persons, Hiram Sage.
1874.—Timothy Persons, Hiram Sage.
1875.—Harvey L. Coy, Flavell J. Bushnell.
1876.—Leonard D. Benham, Henry Terrell.
1877.—Timothy Hart, James McCaffrey.
1878.—William G. Kinney, Buritt Roberts.
1879.—John S. Wheeler, Alanson Mead.
1880.—Roswell B. Brooks, John A. Moore.
1881.—William N. Vining, Edwin T. Griffin.

MILITARY RECORD.*

Samuel E. Gibbs, Co. B, 2d Regt; enl. May 7, 1861; disch. Aug. 7, 1861.

Joseph W. Donnelly, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 16, 1864; must. out Aug. 2, 1865.

Edgar C. Lewis, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 16, 1864; must. out June 13, 1865.

S. Till, Co. A, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 16, 1864.

John Kline, Co. C, 1st Regt.; enl. Dec. 8, 1864.

Charles Johnson, Co. K, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 9, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.

Henry Hamilton, Co. M, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 8, 1864; disch. Aug. 2, 1865.

James Kinney, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 14, 1864.

John W. Wing, 1st Cav.; enl. Dec. 9, 1864.

J. L. Ingraham, 1st Art.; enl. Dec. 7, 1863; must. out April 21, 1865.

F. Smith, 1st Art.; enl. Aug. 17, 1864; disch. Sept. 25, 1865.

B. B. Beach, 1st Art.; enl. April 12, 1862; must. out Feb. 4, 1864.

H. Britan, 5th Regt.

William Hoffman, 5th Regt.

H. McAddin, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. July 22, 1864.

H. M. Gibbs, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861; disch. July 19, 1865.

William Kerr, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861.

E. Langan, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1861.

Charles Mercheau, 5th Regt.; enl. July 22, 1864.

Edward Higgins, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 11, 1863; must. out July 20, 1865.

C. Dewey, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; must. out July 20, 1865.

Thomas Dobbyn, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 12, 1864.

S. Simons, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 12, 1864.

M. E. Terrill, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. Sept. 12, 1864.

George Williams, 7th Regt.; enl. Sept. 7, 1861; disch. July 20, 1865.

John E. Gillett, enl. Feb. 23, 1864; disch. Dec. 8, 1864.

David Allen.

R. S. Craig, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 10, 1863; trans. to navy.

C. E. Taylor, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 9, 1863; trans. to navy.

Joseph Vogt, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 11, 1863; disch. July 20, 1865.

A. Collect, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 6, 1863; must. out July 20, 1865.

P. Hyppolite, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 6, 1863; trans. to navy.

P. Larrire, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 9, 1863.

J. Phyretese, 7th Regt.; enl. Nov. 5, 1863.

L. L. Parker, 11th Regt.; enl. June 23, 1862; died Nov. 12, 1862.

George Weaver, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 7, 1864; disch. April 25, 1864.

Benjamin Bradley, 13th Regt.; enl. Dec. 22, 1861.

M. Cary, 13th Regt.; enl. Feb. 1, 1862; disch. April 25, 1866.

E. J. Bidwell, Co. C, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; must. out Dec. 12, 1865.

* For list of 19th Regiment, see Chapter V.

John T. Bidwell, Co. C, 8th Regt.; enl. Sept. 25, 1861; disch. June 2, 1862.
John Gaunier.
O. M. Mitchell, Co. C, 8th Regt.; enl. Oct. 5, 1861; disch. Jan. 14, 1862.
G. H. Mitchell, Co. C, 8th Regt.; enl. Oct. 5, 1861; disch. June 2, 1862.
J. Parker, 9th Regt.; enl. Dec. 15, 1864.
A. J. Balcom, 11th Regt.; enl. Feb. 24, 1864; died 1864; prisoner.
M. Roach, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 28, 1864; disch. Dec. 21, 1865.
R. E. Corper, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 25, 1861; disch. Dec. 31, 1864.
J. Gloster, 11th Regt.; enl. Dec. 4, 1861; disch. Feb. 28, 1863.
J. North, 11th Regt.; enl. Nov. 27, 1861; disch. July 2, 1862.
H. A. Smith, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
Leman Pease, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 8, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
J. E. Ormsbee, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 10, 1862; died Aug. 10, 1863.
H. L. Allen, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
Joseph Brown, 20th Regt.; enl. Dec. 14, 1864; disch. July 19, 1865.
H. L. Allen, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
A. Bote, 28th Regt.; enl. Nov. 14, 1862.
G. W. Cook, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862; died June 24, 1863.
O. S. Canfield, 28th Regt.; enl. Nov. 14, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
T. D. Lincoln, 28th Regt.; enl. Sept. 9, 1862; disch. Aug. 28, 1863.
E. Terrill, 28th Regt.; enl. Aug. 25, 1862.
M. O'Connor, 28th Regt.; enl. Nov. 14, 1862; disch. Nov. 25, 1863.
W. A. Armun, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 7, 1862; died July 26, 1864.
E. Hickox, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 7, 1863; killed Oct. 27, 1864.
S. Hickox, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 7, 1863; died May 13, 1864.
C. St. John, 29th Regt.; enl. Dec. 15, 1863; died Nov. 3, 1864.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

GEN. EDWARD A. PHELPS.

Gen. Edward A. Phelps, only son of Avah Phelps, a soldier in the Revolutionary war, was born in the town of Colebrook, Litchfield Co., Conn., March 26, 1808. His father was a native of Harwinton, Conn., and settled in Colebrook at an early day. (See history of Colebrook, by R. Rockwell.) Avah Phelps married Welthan, daughter of Samuel Mills, of Colebrook, and to them were born one son and eight daughters, all of whom are now (1881) dead except their son, Edward A., and Catharine, wife of Dr. William Carrington (deceased), of Colebrook. Mr. Phelps was a large and successful farmer. In politics he was a Democrat, and as such was a leading man in his town, and held various town offices, among others that of member of the State Legislature. He was a captain of the State militia for several years. He died in 1844, aged eighty-four years.

Gen. E. A. Phelps received a common-school education, supplemented by four years of hard study at Capt. Alden Partridge's military academy, at Middletown, Conn. Immediately after his graduation at Capt. Partridge's academy, he spent the following winter at Litchfield, Conn., studying law under the well-known eminent judge and lawyer, Judge Gould. In the spring of 1830, being an only son, he returned to his native town and took charge of the "old farm" of some five hundred acres, which is considered the best in the town, and one of the best in the county. Gen. Phelps has been the leading farmer of the town for more than fifty years. His buildings are substantial, a view of which can be seen elsewhere in this work.

Like his honored father, he is a Democrat. He has held all the offices in the town to the general satisfaction of his constituents. He was a member of the State Legislature in 1841, again in 1851. In 1853 he was a bank commissioner. For several years he was a director in the Hurlbut National Bank of Winsted. He has often been a delegate to county, State, and national conventions. In his younger days he took a deep interest in military affairs, and held the various positions from ensign of a company to brigadier-general of the Sixth Connecticut Brigade, several times refusing to be promoted above his superiors. He has been twice married, first to Elizabeth S., daughter of Henry Carrington, by whom he had three children, viz., (1) Elizabeth, died young; (2) Edward A., Jr., a successful wholesale grocer in New York City; and (3) Carrington, a lawyer by profession, and a farmer by choice, in Morris, Stephens Co., Minn.

His second wife was Charlotte G., daughter of John Swasey or Sueaswey, and sister of Capt. Partridge's wife. They were married at Capt. Alden Partridge's, Feb. 6, 1851. She is a member of the Baptist Church, and he is a regular attendant and very liberal supporter of the same.

REUBEN ROCKWELL.

Reuben Rockwell was born at Colebrook in August, 1818, and has always resided in the town; was elected to the Legislature in 1857, and to the State Senate in 1858; was appointed by President Lincoln, in 1862, assessor of internal revenue for the Fourth District of Connecticut.

TIMOTHY PERSONS.

Timothy Persons, youngest son of Elihu Persons, was born in Sandisfield, Mass., Dec. 8, 1820. He remained in his native town until April 9, 1849, when he removed to Colebrook, where he has since resided. He has always been an active business man, and until within a few years has carried on the business of tanning. Mr. Persons has been selected by his townsmen for various positions of trust and responsibility, and he justly merits the high esteem in which he is held by all. He represented his town in the Legislature in 1859 and 1873, and again in 1874; has also been a selectman, and is a present justice of the peace, having been elected in 1876. On Sept. 10, 1851, he married Calista Baxter, of Colebrook, and had two children,—Dwight B., born May 9, 1853, and Jane C., born Dec. 2, 1860,—both deceased. Mr. Gilbert Baxter, father of Mrs. Persons, was an active man in the town; he held various town offices, and was a member of the Legislature in 1836. He died April 12, 1876, aged eighty-four years. Mrs. Baxter is still living at the advanced age of eighty-three.

E. A. Phelps.

Timothy Pearsons

John S. Wheeler

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

REUBEN ROCKWELL.

A. O. PINNEY.

JOHN S. WHEELER.

John S. Wheeler, youngest son of Philander Wheeler, Esq., was born in Salisbury, March 5, 1830. His father practiced law at the Litchfield County bar for a period of thirty years or thereabouts, when he abandoned this profession to give his attention to mercantile pursuits, landed interests, and other business operations. John S. was educated in the common and more advanced schools of his native town, and subsequently enjoyed the benefit, for a term of years, of private instructions from Rev. Jonathan Lee, of Salisbury, since deceased, and still later, for a more brief period, from Rev. George H. Nicholls, then of Salisbury, now of Hoosic Falls, N. Y. He had two brothers,—Daniel P., who now resides in the village of Washington Hollow, Dutchess County, N. Y., and Benjamin H., who died in Salisbury in April, 1858. He has two sisters,—Sally A., now residing in Salisbury, and Irene J., widow of Ensign Church, Esq., late of North Canaan, whose home is in New York City, but who spends most of her time in foreign and domestic travel. His mother died when he was about two years old. A second marriage on the part of his father secured to him one of the best of step-mothers, and the faithful, gentle, and affectionate ministrations of his eldest sister in his extreme youth are the basis of a debt of gratitude to her which he can never repay. He took sole charge of his father's store in Salisbury in 1845, and remained in this position till the spring of 1850, when he removed to Cornwall Bridge, to care for and manage certain property owned by his father in and near that village, and, in connection with other affairs, he opened a store, which was conducted, in the name and style of "P. Wheeler & Son," during a term of nearly six years. His father's death occuring in December, 1855, he was associated one year with his brother, Benjamin H., in closing the estate, and in October, 1857, he located in Colebrook, where he now resides. His business in this latter location has been that of general merchandising, at the stand long known as "the Alpha Sage place," situated midway between the villages of Colebrook Centre and North Colebrook. He continued in this occupation till 1875, when poor health forced him to withdraw. A murderous assault, made on him one October evening in 1869 by a Southern negro for purposes of robbery, and from which Mr. Wheeler barely escaped with life, was a severe shock to a naturally frail organization, and no doubt contributed materially, in its ultimate results, to bring about a serious and long-continued attack of nervous prostration, the severity of which could only be mitigated by absolute quiet and rest. Happily, he is now in much improved health, and anticipates, with no small degree of satisfaction, a renewed lease of strength, which may be devoted, at a day not far distant, to the prosecution of some pleasant, fairly remunerative, and enjoyable business avocation. Mr. Wheeler never seeks official station. A man of a fair measure of intelligence and ability, he has received from the good people of his adopted town repeated expressions of confidence and good-will, always without solicitation on his part, and he has endeavored to discharge the trusts confided to him conscientiously. He represented Colebrook in the Legislature in the year 1869, and again in 1879. He is now serving as town treasurer for his seventh year, and as town clerk for his fifth year. He holds other minor offices, and served for a long term of years as a justice of the peace, till he peremptorily declined to serve in this capacity longer. As town clerk and town treasurer he is the successor of Hon. Reuben Rockwell, a gentleman of opposite political affiliations, a very superior man, and an exceptionally good officer. This result Mr. Wheeler does not ascribe to his personal popularity, nor to any special merit of his own, but rather to changes in the relative strength of the political parties in the town,—changes which he acknowledges he has helped to foster and promote, in his feeble way, as best he could. Once freed from the cares belonging to this town, he will try to find what virtue there may be in otium cum dignitate. In politics he is a Democrat without alloy. When electoral commissions are under consideration, he is a firm believer in the gospel of "glorious old Bill Eaton." He condemns unsparingly the GREAT FRAUD of 1876, and the unwarrantable, inexcusable defections and disaffections among Democrats in the State of New York which culminated in the defeat of Gen. Hancock in 1880; but, possessing a buoyant, elastic temperament, he looks forward to coming years and coming general elections, and remembers that "truth crushed to earth will rise again."

Mr. Wheeler married, May 5, 1855, Elizabeth, daughter of Philo Kellogg, Esq., of Cornwall. They have no children.

ASAPH O. PINNEY.

Humphrey Pinney, born in Somerset County, England, came to America with Rev. John Wareham, on board the ship "Mary and John," which sailed from Plymouth, England, March 30, 1630, and settled in Dorchester, Mass. His son, Asaph Pinney, was born in Simsbury, Conn., and married Betty Willcocks; they had four children,—Eliza, Emma, Asaph O., and Harvey W. He was a farmer and school-teacher.

Asaph O. Pinney, the subject of this sketch, was born in Colebrook, Conn., March 9, 1805. He received a common-school education. On May 17, 1840, he married Elizabeth M. Phelps; taught school a number of years, and acted as school-visitor some years after. He and his wife are at present living on the old farm where he was born, in Colebrook.

SOLOMON SACKETT.

Solomon Sackett, second son of Solomon Sackett, was born in Sandisfield, Mass., May 24, 1823. He was reared on his father's farm, and educated at the common school. In about the year 1853 he commenced traveling as a salesman for Winsted manufacturers, which business he continued until about three years ago. In November, 1847, he united in marriage with Melissa Fargo, and they have three children, as follows: Grove, who resides in Chicago, in the interest of the William L. Gilbert Clock Company; George, who has been in the Winsted Savings Bank for seven years; and Frank, who is employed by the William L. Gilbert Clock Company. Mr. Sackett has led an active life, and is one of the substantial citizens of the town. He is a present selectman of the town, and was a representative in 1870.

Solomon Sackett

LUCIEN O. BASS.

Among the pioneers of Colebrook we find the name of Bass, the first of that name, Nathan, having settled here in 1766. Lucien O., the subject of this sketch, is the youngest of the following family, children of Henry and Jerusha Bass: Sidney H., Belario, Elvira, Lucia L., Jerusha, Joseph H., Warren A., and Lucien O. Lucien O. was educated at the common schools, and remained on the farm with his father until 1849, when he went to Summit Co., Ohio, and served as an apprentice in the machinist business. In 1866 he returned to Colebrook, where he has since resided. Mr. Bass has held various town offices, and was a representative in the Legislature in 1872. He and his sisters, Elvira and Jerusha, reside on the old homestead. Mr. Bass' father, Henry Bass, died in 1856, aged eighty, and his mother in the year 1869, aged eighty-six.

WILLIAM P. LAWRENCE.

William P. Lawrence, second son of Pennel and Laura B. Lawrence, was born in Colebrook, Oct. 31, 1833. He received the advantages of a common-school education, and his occupation has been that of farming and lumbering. Nov. 21, 1860, he united in marriage with Eveline S., daughter of John Hewitt, of Winsted, and their family consists of the following children: Charles D., Robert W., and Russell J. Mr. Lawrence is a useful man in the church and community, having been for a number of years superintendent of the Sunday-school connected with the Congregational Church, and is also the postmaster at Colebrook Centre. His father, Pennel Lawrence, died Dec. 8, 1864, but his mother is still living, at the advanced age of seventy-five years.

LOREN DEWOLF.

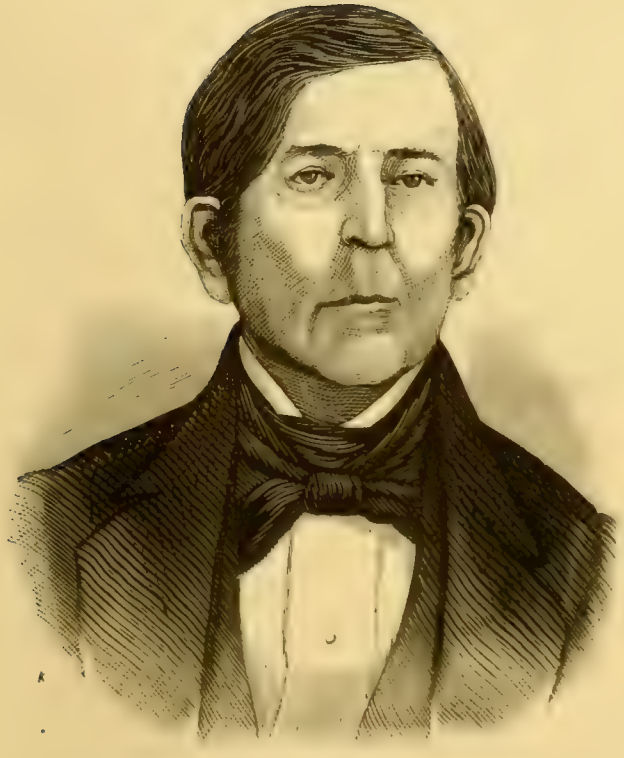
Loren DeWolf, the eldest son of Daniel DeWolf, was born in Winsted, Conn., on Dec. 23, 1792. He was reared on a farm, and educated at the common schools. At the age of twenty-five, in 1817, he removed to Hartland, Conn., where he remained nineteen years, and then came to Colebrook, where he has since resided. Mr. DeWolf has ever been an active and energetic man, ever willing to assist all measures tending to advance the interests of his adopted town and county. He figured somewhat conspicuously in military matters, having been ensign, lieutenant, and captain in the old militia. He is a consistent Christian, and for over twenty years has been a steward in the Methodist Episcopal Church. March 11, 1817, he united in marriage with Miranda Osborn, and their family consisted of the following children: Harriet A., born June 10, 1818, and Rocelia A., born Feb. 28, 1839. Harriet A. died in 1836, and Rocelia A. is living with her father in Colebrook.

LUTHER PHELPS.

Capt. Luther Phelps, son of Daniel Phelps, was born in Windsor, Conn., May 22, 1781. Soon after his parents removed to Colebrook, where his father for a number of years kept a hotel. He was reared a farmer, and educated at a common school. March 19, 1816, he united in marriage with Maria Hoskins, of Winsted, Conn.; their family consisted of two children, Elizabeth M. and Martin Luther. Mr. Phelps

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

WILLIAM P. LAWRENCE.



L. O. BASS.

RESIDENCE OF LUCIEN O. BASS COLEBROOK CONN.

Lorin Sweet

LUTHER PHELPS.

RESIDENCE OF HARVEY W. PINNEY, MILL BROOK, CONN. (FORMERLY MILL BROOK POST OFFICE.)

died Oct. 11, 1851, and Mrs. Phelps died March 4, 1862. Having been captain of a military company in Colebrook, he was popularly known as Capt. Phelps.

HARVEY W. PINNEY.

Harvey W. Pinney, the youngest of four children of Aseph and Betty Pinney, was born in Colebrook, Dec. 16, 1811. His father was one of the early settlers in the town, a farmer, and somewhat noted as a school-teacher, and particularly as teacher of the higher branches of mathematics, which at that time were not a part of common-school education in country places. His son, Harvey W., the subject of this sketch, passed his boyhood days on the home-farm, with the usual experiences of a country lad of the time, receiving a common-school education. The father died in the spring of 1835, leaving a moderate property, mostly in the farm, the care of which devolved upon Mr. Pinney and an older brother; but he was not destined to long follow the farmer's occupation exclusively. Infatuated as a boy with the violin, he had by great perseverance, and under much opposition from a father who, though a musician and teacher of singing, entertained a poor opinion of "fiddlers" in general, become quite proficient as a player, and eventually abandoned the farm and took up the profession of dancing-master, furnishing with his violin music for balls and parties, and traversing the country in a circuit of thirty miles to attend his numerous engagements. Traveling his rounds in a gig drawn by a white-faced horse (almost as well known as the driver), with fiddle-box strapped on behind, Mr. Pinney was one of the best-known men and most familiar sight of that region. He followed this business profitably for twenty successive years, and meantime composed many pieces of music, some of which were published. He was married, Oct. 23, 1850, to Harriet A. Wakefield, daughter of Hezekiah and Harriet B. Wakefield, of Colebrook, the fruits of which union were two sons, Victor Hugo, who died Feb. 12, 1854, at the age of two and one-half years, and Lucien Vernette, born in 1853, who at the present writing (1881) is editor and publisher of the Winsted Press. In 1851, Mr. Pinney was sent to the State Legislature by the Democratic party as representative from the town of Colebrook, and at various times was elected justice of the peace. He was also postmaster at Mill Brook (an office in the town of Colebrook) for about thirty years. Of late years he has lived in retirement on the accumulations of a prudent, temperate, and industrious life, devoting his time mainly to such religious studies and meditations as are enjoyed by modern infidels, of which class he is one of the most outspoken, as his occasional contributions to the public press too plainly indicate. He was one of the early converts to modern Spiritualism, and is still its sincere advocate. In illustration of his peculiar independence of character, it may not be out of place to say that he cast the first "Greenback" vote in Colebrook, voting alone, though for perhaps forty years he had voted with the Democratic party at every election. He lives in Mill Brook, in the southwestern part of the town of Colebrook. An engraving of his residence (which during the thirty years that he was postmaster was also the Mill Brook post-office) will be found on another page.

CHAPTER XXX.

CORNWALL.

Geographical—Topographical—The Indians—"Tom Warrups"—Sale of the Town—Its Bounds—The First Meeting of Proprietors—Early Regulations—The First Settlers and their Locations—Grand List of 1742—Family Sketches—The old Emmons Tavern—The Whipping-Post and Stocks.

CORNWALL lies northwest of the centre of the county, and is bounded as follows: on the north by Canaan, on the east by Goshen, on the south by Warren and Kent, and on the west by the Housatonic River, which separates it from Sharon. The surface consists mainly of deep valleys and high hills or mountains. Although one of the most mountainous sections in the State, its soil is very fertile and productive.

The high elevation in the northwest portion of the town is known as Hough Mountain. South of this is Rugg Hill, farther south Wallen Hill, and still farther Power Dale, familiarly known as "Tary-diddle." Buck Mountain is still below this, the northeastern part of which is known as the "Cobble." The first hill below West Cornwall, nearer the river, was called the Green Mountain. South and east of this lies Mine Mountain, called so from the minerals it was supposed to contain. Cream Hill, one of the most beautiful localities in the State, lies in the north middle part of the town, and receives its name from the fertility of its soil and its picturesque scenery. A charming sheet of water, known as Cream Hill Lake, lies at its foot.

"North from this lake is a high range called Pine Hill. East of this is the Great Hollow, extending over four miles nearly north and south; called in the northern part Sedgwick Hollow, and Johnson Hollow in the southern. A high and steep mountain range lies on the northwest of Sedgwick Hollow, called Titus Mountain.

"The hill up which the road from Cornwall to Goshen winds is named Bunker Hill, from the residence on it of Rufus Bunker, an Indian of the Schaghticoke tribe, an old and honest man, whose name is associated with a more enduring monument than the pyramids of Egypt. North and easterly of this hill is situated Red Mountain, so named from the color of the oak-leaves in the autumn when touched by the frosts. Southerly is Clark Hill, so called from a family of that name who removed nearly one hundred years since from Hartford to that locality. Southeasterly from Clark Hill is the most elevated land in the State, lying mostly in Goshen, from the apex of which is a view of Long Island Sound. This elevation is called Mohawk Mountain. Southeast of Cornwall Plain, forming a part of the same range as Clark Hill and Mohawk Mountain, lies Great Hill. Three hundred acres of land given by the General Assembly to Yale College is located here, and goes by the name of College land. Bloody Mountain, so named from a bloody tragedy not enacted there, lies north of the Old Goshen and Sharon turnpike, northwest from the centre of the town.

"In the southeast part of Cornwall is a high range called Woodbury Mountain. West of this, and separated from it by a deep gorge, is Dudley Town Hill, so called from a family of that name among its early settlers, late the residence of Caleb Jones. North of this elevated neighborhood is Colt's-Foot Mountain, which rises boldly from the beautiful valley, formerly called Pine Street, then the Plain, where is the pleasant village of Cornwall.

"From the summits of many of these hills extensive and magnificent views are presented, extending west of the Hudson River, and over a large share of Berkshire County, in Massachusetts. There are many other minor hills, the beauty and picturesque appearance of which, to be fully appreciated, must be seen.

"Cream Hill Lake, in the north part of the town, and Mohawk Pond, in the southeast, and the Housatonic River,—River of the Mountains,—forming the western boundary, give life and character to the scenery, which is never perfect without water views. Small streams are numerous, the most important of which are the North Mill Brook, having its source in Cream Hill Lake, and flowing southwesterly three miles to the Housatonic, with a descent of several hundred feet; the South Mill Brook, rising in the hills about Cornwall Plain, and flowing southwest into the Housatonic; the Hallenbeck, rising in the Great Hollow, and flowing northwesterly through Canaan to the Housatonic. These are good mill-streams, furnishing permanent water-power, but the Housatonic, in its whole course by the side of the town, flows rapidly, and might form the basis of active industry. But a very small part of the power of this river is yet utilized in any part of its course. These streams are all fed by abundant, never-failing springs, so that the name of 'the sweet water country' may more aptly be applied to this township."

Various mines—gold, silver, plumbago, nickel, iron, etc.—at different periods have been opened, but have never been found sufficiently rich to warrant working. The town is watered by eight streams, tributaries to the Housatonic.

THE INDIANS.

There is nothing of particular interest to record concerning the aboriginal lore of this section, as there is no record or tradition that the Indians ever permanently occupied this town, although arrow-heads and other relics have been found. There was a trail across the town, and a palisade fort erected for the protection of the pioneers. Mr. T. S. Gold, in his "History of Cornwall," says,—

"One evening as James Douglass was on his way to the fort from Cream Hill, having remained at work later than usual, his family having gone before, as he was passing through the low land,—Pratt's meadow,—then covered with a dense growth of timber, in a narrow foot-path, he discovered two Indians, one on either side of the path, awaiting his approach. As Mr. Douglass had advanced too near to retreat before he saw them, he assumed a bold and daring manner and walked coolly between the two savages, who remained without motion, being overawed by his fearless manner, or out of respect to the courage displayed, and offered him no molestation.

"They kept constant guard when at work in the fields, and when James Douglass and his sons were at work his daughters (one my great-grandmother—T. S. G.) often sat by the loaded guns to give the alarm.

"As a race they have passed away. The older inhabitants still remember several families of them, and the bravery of one gains him a place elsewhere in these records."

The following incident was contributed to that volume by Gen. Charles F. Sedgwick:

TOM WARRUPS.

"This noble old Indian warrior died in Cornwall early in the present century, and was well known throughout the township. In his old age his hair became perfectly white, and his visits to all parts of the town were frequent and acceptable, while his witty pleasantries were long remembered. He was of the Schaghticoke tribe, but he became a resident of Cornwall in his early life. In the Revolutionary war he enlisted into a company commanded by Edward Rogers, Esq., as captain, of which Loyal Tanner was lieutenant; this company was in the battle of Long Island, and shared in all the disastrous results in that conflict, and in the perils attending the retreat of the army from New York. Tom was always spoken of by his surviving comrades as a brave and daring soldier, ready for every duty and danger required by the service.

"The following anecdote used to be told as illustrating his Indian character: After the retreat from New York, the company was stationed on the shore of the East River, and one morning a party of British went up the river in boats on a foraging expedition, and landed not far from the Cornwall company. Capt. Rogers proposed that the company should attempt their capture, as the party was small and could probably be easily taken prisoners, and submitting the proposal to the company, some favored and others disapproved of it. When the question was asked Tom, he said, 'I guess we had better kill what prisoners we now have before we try to get any more.' He was celebrated for his ready wit, and stories of it were often related in the early years of this century.

"Like the generality of his race, he was addicted to intoxication, and even in the army he was sentenced for that offense to a ride on the wooden horse in front of the regiment. While being thus transported on the shoulders of his comrades, Lieut. Tanner asked him if he did not feel ashamed to be presented to the regiment in that way. 'Yes,' said Tom, 'I am ashamed to think that our lieutenant must go on foot while a poor old Indian can ride.'

"Here is another anecdote: Capt. Jeffers once, meeting him, said, 'Why, Tom, I was in hopes you were dead.' 'Why,' said Tom, 'do you want the widow?'

"Very few among the living can remember him, but his Revolutionary services, and the universal kindness with which he was regarded, render it proper that his memory should be preserved."

SALE OF THE TOWN.

This town was sold at public auction at Fairfield, Conn., Feb. 8, 1738, by the committee appointed by the Assembly, consisting of John Burr, Edmund Lewis, and Ebenezer Silliman. It was laid out into fifty-three shares, one of which was for the first minister, one for the support of the gospel ministry as a perpetual fund, and one for the support of schools. The State also gave three hundred acres in the southeastern part of the town to Yale College. The average price per acre of these lands in the town was about twenty cents.

Its bounds were as follows:

"WHEREAS, the said Governor and Company assembled at Hartford, May, Anno. 1731, Did Order that the Western County Lands on the east side of the Ousatunnoc River, should be laid out into Townships, and appointed Messrs. Edmond Lewis, William Judd, and John Buel a Committee to lay out the same; and whereas, in Pursuance of said Order, the said Committee laid out the same into Two Townships, one of which in this survey is called the township of B, now called Cornwall, bounded as followeth: Running from the southwest corner bounds of A, now called Goshen, West ninety-two Degrees North, five miles and Seventy-two Rods, to the Ousatunnoc River, where is marked a white Oak tree, and set the letters, E. L. W. J. J. B., on said tree, and laid many stones to it for a monument, at the Southwest Corner of the Township of B. Then beginning at the White Oak Pole at the Northwest corner of the Township of A, and run west ninety-two Degrees north, four miles and a half to the Ousatunnoc River, and made a monument for the Northwest corner of the Township of B, and the Southwest corner of the township of C, now called Canaan, it being Three Black Oak trees growing from one root marked, and many stones laid to them with the letters E. L. W. J. J. B., set on them, thus the Township of B is surveyed and laid out, and the lines thereof are set forth by marked Trees and monuments, and is bounded south on the Township of E, now called Kent, north on the town of C, east on the Township of A, and west on the Ousatunnoc River."

THE FIRST MEETING OF PROPRIETORS.

The first meeting of proprietors was held at Hartford, Sept. 6, 1738. John Hall, of Fairfield, was chosen moderator, and Timothy Collins, of Litchfield, clerk.

"One of the conditions required by the proprietors of Cornwall was that the owner of each right should erect a house sixteen feet square and seven feet in the clear, and occupy the same for three years, except in case of death of the owner. These were built of logs.

"The first meeting of the proprietors of Cornwall was held at Hartford, in the State-house, on the 6th day of September, A.D. 1738. Mr. John Hall, of Fairfield, was chosen moderator, and Timothy Collins, of Litchfield, clerk, of said meeting. He was sworn into office as proprietors' clerk before Capt. Samuel Chapman, a justice of the peace. The meeting was adjourned to the house of Mr. Ebenezer Williamson for a quarter of an hour, where the proprietors met according to adjournment.

"At that meeting they voted to lay out fifty acres of land to each proprietor. Messrs. Benajah Douglass, Joseph Waller, Joseph Kilborn, Joseph Allen, and Samuel Roberts were appointed a committee to lay out said lots, also to lay out the highways in Cornwall. Each proprietor was to be at the cost of the survey of his piece of land, and in making the survey bill.

"At the same meeting it was voted to divide off another fifty acres to each proprietor by the same committee.

"Ten shillings per day was voted to each of said committee from the time they set out from Litchfield, they boarding themselves. At this meeting it was voted to give to Mr. Benajah Douglass twelve pounds ten shillings for warning the same. The privilege was granted to Mr. Timothy Collins, and such partners as he should take with him, of the exclusive right to any streams on undivided lands for mill or mills, provided that he shall set up a saw-mill by the 1st of November, 1739, and he was to have the privilege so long as he kept a saw-mill upon the stream in good repair.

"This first meeting was adjourned to the house of Ensign Ebenezer Marsh, in Litchfield, on the second Tuesday of the following November, at 9 A.M.

"At this adjourned meeting Samuel Messenger was appointed surveyor of the lands of Cornwall, and a tax of twenty-six shillings was levied on each proprietor to defray expenses of laying out, for the collection of which tax Joseph Allen was appointed. The lots were laid out and numbered; they were then divided by drawing for them, in the way of a lottery. Permission was granted that such as were dissatisfied with their lots could change them before the next meeting of the proprietors by paying the expense of the survey. Messrs. Osborn, Joseph Kilborn, and Daniel Allen were appointed a committee to make out the rate-bill on the proprietors for the tax of twenty-six shillings, before named.

"The highways were to be six rods wide (many of which, although they may be as long in our day as our fathers made them, have shrunk wonderfully in breadth).

"At this meeting it was voted to lay out a highway from Litchfield to Cornwall, also from Kent to Cornwall. Mr. Messenger was empowered to expend twenty-five pounds in surveying and opening said highways, and Messrs. Waller, John Dibble, John Hall, Samuel Messenger, Daniel Allen, and Joseph Allen were appointed a committee to lay out and clear up highways from Litchfield and Kent, as far as they could for the twenty-five pounds, one-half of said sum to be expended on each highway.

"This meeting was adjourned to the third Wednesday of September, 1739, at twelve o'clock, at the house of Peter Eastman, in Cornwall.

"These meetings of the proprietors were adjourned from time to time, and a division to the amount of three hundred acres set to each. The one who drew by lot the first choice was required to take the last in the following division; this plan was adopted to equalize the division of property, in which all were equally interested.

"The names of those who drew in the first and second divisions were Nathan Lyon, Stephen Burr, Jonathan Squires, J. Sherwood, James Smedley, James Dennie,* Reuben Dibble, Nathaniel Spaulding, Samuel Bryant, Joseph Frost, Andrus Truby, Gideon Allen, Stephen Boroughs, John Dibble, Wm. Gay-

* Spelled in different records Dennil, Dennis, Donnil.

lord, Samuel Roberts, Tim. Pierce, Ebenezer Seely, Benajah Douglass, Samuel Hall, Peter Eastman, Thomas Harris, Joseph Kilborn, Samuel Kilborn, Timothy Collins, Joseph Allen, Daniel Allen, Eliphalet Seely, Jacob Patchen, Elizur Seely, Benjamin Osborn, Isaac Bissel, Samuel Smedly, Ephraim Smedly, Joseph Waller, Ebenezer Whitlesey, Samuel Butler, Thomas Ballard.

"Ten of the above had two rights each, and one three.

"Previous to the allotment of any of these proprietors' rights, a division of three hundred acres was set apart and located for each of the three important objects, viz., first, for a parsonage; second, for the support of a minister; third, for the establishment and maintenance of schools.

"It was also voted at this meeting empowering the committee previously chosen to lay out the Mill Brook land; to lay out at the mouth of the pond at the foot of Cream Hill what they shall judge proper for draining and damming said pond, as a further encouragement of building mills upon the stream that comes out of said pond.

"Voted, To sequester 30 acres of land on Mill Brook to encourage building a Mill or mills on said stream to be laid out by the Committee formerly appointed to lay out the Mill land.

"This privilege of the Cream Hill mill-stream, together with the sequestered land, was given to Mr. Mathew Millard, with liberty of damming and draining the pond and stream flowing out of it, he to build and maintain a good corn-mill upon said stream by the 1st of August, 1741, also a good saw-mill by the same time.

"Mr. George Holloway was chosen clerk in the place of Timothy Collins."

At a proprietors' meeting held May 8, 1740, it was voted to petition for town privileges and liberty to settle an orthodox minister, also to grant a tax for the settlement of a minister. It was voted to petition for extension of time for the payment of the rights.

THE EARLY SETTLERS.

The first settler in Cornwall was Mr. Peter Eastman, who came in 1738. It was at his house—location not known—that the first proprietors' meeting was held in the town. Mr. T. S. Gold, in his valuable "History of Cornwall," says,—

Up to the year 1740 there probably were no other than log houses in this town. About forty of these rude tenements were erected, usually upon the owner's land, and of course scattered very widely over the different parts of the town. The occupants of the dwellings we are enabled to learn, to a general extent, from tradition. Samuel Abbott, who was from Danbury (1792), lived near the place formerly owned and occupied by Mr. Birdsey, now owned by Rogers White (William Stratman, 1877). Daniel and Joseph Allen, from Litchfield (1740); one lived opposite the house of Col. Anson Rogers, and the other on the Joel Catlin farm (Harvey Baldwin, 1877). Eleazar Barritt, from Plainfield, lived near Pangman's, by Housatonic River. David Baldwin, from Litchfield, lived on Great Hill. John Blinn lived south of the Cotter place, near the Housatonic River. Thomas Ballard, from Plainfield, lived opposite Noah Rogers. John Clothier lived near Cotter's (Shepard, 1877), at West Cornwall. John Dibble, from Stamford, lived a little west of the Capt. Miles place, now Edward Kellogg's (A. Bennett, 1877). James Douglass, from Plainfield, settled on Cream Hill. His log house was located a few rods northeasterly from the late residence of Capt. Hezekiah Gold, which house he afterwards built about the year 1750, making this probably the oldest house in town now standing and still occupied. Reuben Dean was a celebrated hunter and doctor. He lived near Chandler Swift's (Ira Frink, 1877). He was from Norwalk. Woodruff Emmons came from Litchfield. He lived where Dr. Joseph North lately resided,—north of the residence of the late Carrington Todd. Nathaniel Green lived near the orchard of Capt. Miles, north of the ancient burying-ground. He was from Stamford. Thomas Griffis, from Litchfield. He lived on Dudley Town Hill, near the residence of the late Caleb Jones. John and George Halloway were from Middlebury, or Pembroke, Mass. They lived where Mrs. Ithamer Baldwin now resides. George died in 1750. He built the house used as a tavern in 1776, kept by Woodruff Emmons. Benjamin Hough, from New Milford, settled in the northwest part of the town. Thomas Harris was from Plainfield. He lived where the late Capt. Elias Hart resided (George Potter, 1877). Moses Harris, from Plainfield, lived near the late Capt. Clark's (William Bennett, 1877). Nathaniel Jewell, from Plainfield. He lived near the present residence of Mr. Fowler Bradford. Joshua Jewell, from the same place, lived on the present Maj. Pierce's farm. David Jewell, also from Plainfield, lived near the present residence of William Hindman, Esq. (Tyler Miner, 1877). Stephen Lee, from Litchfield, lived on Great Hill. Matthew Millard, from East Haddam, lived opposite the residence of the late Oliver Burnham, Esq. Samuel Messenger, from Harwinton, lived near the centre of town, now Mr. Johnson's. James Packett, from Danbury, lived in Great Hollow. Timothy Pangborn, from Stamford, lived a little north of Mr. Luther Emmons' place. Benoni Palmeter lived near the Baptist meeting-house (Elias Scoville, 1877). Thomas Tanner, from Litchfield, lived on the hill east of the late residence of the Hon. O. Burnham. He was grandfather of Tryal Tanner. Ebenezer Tyler lived in Cornwall Hollow, on the Samuel Johnson place. Jonathan Squires, from Plainfield, lived south of the residence of the late Riley M. Rexford. Reuben Squires, also from Plainfield, lived near the late Capt. Joel Wright's (T. Wilson, 1877). Phineas Waller lived near the late residence of Deacon Samuel Adams (Judson Adams, 1877).

These are all the residences of the first settlers of Cornwall, on the list of 1740, that are well authenticated.

In 1744 we find additional settlers:

Samuel Benedict, from Danbury, lived opposite K. Birdsey's.

Benjamin Dibble, from Stamford, near Seth Dibble's farm.

William Joyner, near R. M. Rexford's, on Cream Hill.

Amos Johnson, from Branford, near the late residence of Earl Johnson.

Thomas Orton, from Litchfield, lived near the Sedgwick farm.

Joseph Pangborn, from Stamford, lived near Hart's bridge, south of the mill, West Cornwall.

Samuel Robards, from Colchester, lived thirty rods east of Benjamin Catlin's (Niles Scoville, 1877).

Patrick Hindman, a foreigner, settled near John Hindman's (Tyler Miner, 1877).

Abraham Raymond, from Norwalk.

Joseph Peck lived where Stiles Peck last lived.

In 1748, Jonathan Hurlburt, east of Sedgwick's.

Jacob Bronson, from Norwalk, near the late William Stoddard's (Peter Fritz, 1877).

Israel Moss lived where Ezra Taylor lives; was a merchant.

The list for 1742 is the oldest extant, and a complete copy is here given. It is written on a single sheet of foolscap paper, having on one page C, I, K, E, F, D, R, in water-lines, and on the other a large shield, the design on which is not very plain. Whole number of polls, 52; horses, 43; cows, 52; oxen, 41; young cattle, 9; swine, 21.

GRAND LIST, 1742.

A.—Sam^{l} Abbott, one head, 18; two cows, 6; 2 3-year olds, 6; one mare, 3; one swine, 1.—34.

Dan^{l} Allen, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, two horses, 12; one 2-year old steer, 2; one yearling heifer, 1; five swine, 5.—46.

Joseph Allen, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, two horses, 12; one swine, 1.—39.

B.—Elea^{r} Barrett, one head, 18; one mare, two cows, 9.—27.

Benj^{a} Bissell, one head, 18; one cow, 3.—21.

David Baldwin, one head, 18; one cow, one horse, 6.—24.

John Blinn, one head.—18.

Tho^{s} Ballard, one head, one horse, one cow.—24.

C.—John Clothier, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two horses, 6; two cows, 6.—38.

W^{m} Chittester, one head, 18; two horses, one cow, 9.—27.

D.—John Dibbell, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, one horse, 9; one yearling, one swine, 2.—37.

Benj^{a} Dibbell, one head, 18; a house lot, 3; one cow, one horse, 6; one yearling colt, 1; one swine, 2.—30.

James Douglass, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, 6; one horse, 3.—35.

Reuben Dean, two heads, 36; two oxen, 8; three cows, 9; three horses, 9.—62.

E.—Woodruff Emmons, one head, 18.

F.—David Frisbie, one head, 18.

G.—Nath^{l} Green, two polls, 36; one ox, 4; one horse, 3.—43.

Thos. Griffis, two heads, 36; two oxen, 8; two cows, two horses, 12.—56

H.—George Holloway, one head, 18; five oxen, 20; two cows, 6; one horse, 3.—47.

John Holloway, one head, 18.

Benja^{a} Hough, one head, 18; two horses, one cow, 9; one swine, 1.—28.

Thom. Harris, two heads, 36; two cows, 6; one horse, 3.—45.

Moses Harris, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; one cow, three swine, 6.—32.

Samuell Horsford, one head, 18.

J.—Nath^{l}. Jewell, one head, 16; one mare, one cow, 6.—24.

Joshua Jewell, two heads, 36; two oxen, 8; three cows, 9; two horses, 6; one swine, 1.—60.

David Jewell, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; one cow, one horse, 6.—32.

L.—Rich^{d} Lovejoy, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, 6; one horse, 3.—35.

Stephen Lee, one head, 18; one horse, 3.—21 = 557.

M.—Math^{w} Millard, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; three cows, 9; horse, 3.—38.

Sam^{l} Messinger, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; two cows, 6; one horse, 3; one 2-year old, 2; three swine, 3.—40.

Peter Mallory, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; one cow, two horses, 9; one swine, 1.—36.

N.

O.

P.—James Pickett, one head, 18; two horses, one cow, 9.—27.

Tim^{y} Pangborn, one head, 18; one horse, 3; one cow, 3; two yearlings, 2.—26.

Benoni Palmeter, one head, 18.

Q.

R.—Sam^{l} Robards, one head, 18; one cow, 3; one mare, 3.—24.

T.—Tho^{s} Tanner, one head, 18; a yoak of oxen, 8; two cows, 3; one horse, 3.—42.

Wm. Tanner, one head, 18.

Eben^{r} Tyler, one head, 18.

U.

S.—Jonath^{n} Squier, three heads, 54; two oxen, 8; two horses, 6; one cow, 3; one swine, 1.—72.

Reuben Squier, one head, 18; two oxen, 8; one horse, 3.—29.

William Smiley, one head, 18 = 406.

W.—Phin^{s} Walker, one head, 18; one ox, 4; one horse, 3.—25.

John Young, one head, 18; one cow, 3.—21.

The sum of the several footings.....	46
	406
	557
	424
	1433

The sum totall of this list made by us,

JONATHAN SQUIER,
NATH^{ll} GREEN,
SAM^{l} MESSINGER, } Listers.

In 1745 there were in the list two less than in 1742, and three less than in 1744.

In 1748 there were seventy persons in the list, and the property amounted to £3054 18*s*. Jonathan Squier had the largest list of any one in town, being £109 18*s*. Matthew Millard stood next, being £99 2*s*. John Dibble was next, £93. Next was Thomas Orton, £79 14*s*. Next was Joshua Jewell, £77. The next was James Douglass, £68. Several were as low as £5.

The following record of families is condensed from Gold's "History of Cornwall:"

THE DOUGLAS FAMILY.—One of the most active pioneers in the settlement of this town was James Douglas. He came here, in 1739, from Plainfield. Cream Hill was his lot; it received this name from the superiority of the soil and the beauty of its scenery. This name was given to it, as town records show, before Mr. Douglas purchased. He bought two rights of Timothy Pierce, of Canterbury, an original proprietor, in 1738, for four hundred pounds; also, he bought fifty acres on Cream Hill, on which his first house was built. The fifty-acre lot was purchased of Jonah Bierce, of New Fairfield, who had bought it of Nathan Lyon, of Fairfield, an original proprietor.

James Douglas was brother of Benajah, an original proprietor in Cornwall, but who settled in North Canaan, being the ancestor of the Douglas family in that town, and great-grandfather of the distinguished senator, Stephen Arnold Douglas.

James Douglas and his wife, whose family name was Marsh, taught the first school in Cornwall, he teaching in the winter and his wife in summer. Cream Hill, before the woodman's axe was heard there, was covered with lofty trees of various kinds, the surface not being entangled with underbrush, as much of the forest in town was. Mr. Douglas was an energetic and public-spirited man. He expended much labor in opening a mine one hundred and twenty feet in depth for gold. Specimens of the ore were sent to Boston for analysis, from which small sums in gold were returned; but the expense of obtaining it was too great to make it a paying business. Another mine was wrought for silver sixty feet, with like results.

He is said to have wintered the first stock in town,—a horse and yoke of oxen. Heavy snows caught him unprepared. Deer were abundant; the boiled flesh made a nutritious soup for the cattle, which, with browse from the trees felled for the purpose, was their support. The horse refused both, but ate hair from the skins, and moss from the trees gathered in blankets.

Mr. Douglas, about 1748, erected a large two-story house, which, about two years after its completion, was unfortunately burned down, and he built the house now standing on the same ground, which he occupied till his death. This is supposed to be the oldest occupied house in town. Capt. Hezekiah Gold, son of Rev. Hezekiah Gold, who married Rachel Wadsworth, granddaughter of Mr. James Douglas, purchased this property about 1790 of Mr. Joseph Wadsworth, a son-in-law of Mr. Douglas. This house and farm is at present (1877) owned by T. S. Gold.

Farmers were then their own mechanics. The old tan-vat, where James Douglas tanned his own leather, was but recently filled up,—on the bank of the small stream now called the "Gutter," near his house.

Mr. Douglas had three sons and four daughters. The eldest of the daughters, Sarah, married Capt. Samuel Wadsworth; the youngest, Eunice, married Mr. Joseph Wadsworth; another, Olive, married for her first husband a Mr. Johnson, and after his death, Deacon Eliakim Mallory. The other daughter, Mary (or Rachel), married a Mr. Taylor, of New Marlboro', Mass. Two sons, William and James Marsh, having sold their property on Cream Hill, removed to Vermont, where some of their descendants at present reside. James Marsh married Rhoda, sister of Judge Burnham, of Cornwall. The other son, John, died in 1763, aged fourteen.

In the old cemetery at South Cornwall we find the tombstones of James Douglas and his wife thus inscribed:

"James Douglas, Died Aug. 18, 1785, æ. 74.
Mortals Awake
Your time review, think on Death, Eternity is near."

"Rachel, wife of James Douglas, died April 23, 1790, æ. 78.
Life how short,
Eternity how long."

THE WADSWORTH FAMILY.—Rev. Samuel Wadsworth was a minister in Killingly. He had three sons, who came to Cornwall about 1740,—Samuel, Joseph, and James.

Samuel Wadsworth married Sarah, daughter of James Douglas, and had only one child, Rachel, who married Hezekiah Gold. By her he received her father's farm on Cream Hill, which has passed by descent to the present owner, T. S. Gold. Samuel Wadsworth died Jan. 2, 1813, aged sixty-six. Sarah, his wife, died April 16, 1820, aged seventy-seven.

Joseph Wadsworth married another daughter of James Douglas, Eunice, and had three sons,—Warren, Samuel, and Douglas. About 1800 he sold his farm on Cream Hill to Hezekiah Gold, and removed to Goshen, Orange Co., N. Y.

James Wadsworth married Irene Palmer, and had a son, Deacon James Wadsworth, one daughter, who married an Ingersoll from Bethlehem, and a second daughter, who married Hawley Reed, of Cornwall.

Joshua Pierce, the father of Joshua, John, and Seth Pierce, and of several daughters, belonged to Pembroke, of Plymouth Co., Mass. He bought the place now occupied by Maj. Seth Pierce, May 17, 1748, consisting of three hundred and three acres, of Joshua Jewel. Joshua Pierce was the venerable ancestor of the Pierce family. He was a poor boy, put out to a hard master, who treated him with much unkindness and severity.

Dr. Jonathan Hurlburt came from that part of Farmington now called Southington, having bought of Timothy Orton one hundred and twenty acres in 1746. He is thought to have been the first that practiced medicine in the township. He was also a mechanic, and made plows. His son Ozias lived and died on the same place where his father did, a little south of the Sedgwicks. His brother Joab lived near him, and died some years before him. Both are buried in the old Cornwall Hollow Cemetery.

Mathew Millard, from East Haddam, was one of the early permanent citizens in Cornwall. He located and built on the west side of the street, opposite to the house of the late Judge Burnham. He was one of the largest land-holders in Cornwall; was a very respectable citizen, and was authorized to obtain a minister at the first town-meeting. Mr. Millard had but one child that lived to mature age, a daughter, Achsah. She married Elisha Steele, of West Hartford, called Deacon Steele, who, after the death of his father-in-law, occupied his house and homestead.

Samuel Messenger, of Harwinton, was one of the first settlers, a surveyor; a very active and useful inhabitant. His residence was on the spot where the Rev. Hezekiah Gold built and lived at the Centre. Mr. Messenger was here in the summer of 1739. He bought a whole right of Ephraim Smedley, of Woodbury, soon after the sale of the town in 1738.

According to town records, Mr. Messenger's son Daniel, who was born March 18 (old style), 1740, was the first birth of the early settlers of the town. Mr. Messenger, in four or five years, sold his place to his brother, Nehemiah Messenger, and he, in 1757, sold to one Joseph Mather.

George Holloway, from Pembroke, in Massachusetts, came with his brother John to this town from New Fairfield in the spring, 1740. He was the most prominent among the first settlers in office, character, and influence. He was directed by the Assembly to call the first town-meeting; was a justice of the peace, first town clerk, captain of the militia, and bore the title of Dr. Holloway.

John Clothier was one of the first settlers.

Samuel Abbott was one of the early settlers from Danbury. He located in East Street. He first erected a log house, and afterwards a large and commodious residence a few rods southwest of the house of the late Ebenezer Birdsey. Mr. Abbott was a very worthy citizen, and for several years a deacon of the Congregational Church. His children were Samuel, Abel, Nathan, Seeley, and Daniel, and a daughter, who married Jesse Jerrods, from Long Island.

Thomas Tanner, one of the original settlers, came from Litchfield, with his son William, being of age. Thomas settled on the old road east of the Burnham place, and died there; house since occupied by John Kellogg.

Jethro Bonney and his brother Perez came from Pembroke, Mass., about 1760. Jethro owned the Beardsley place, and afterwards the Judson place. Perez settled on Clark Hill, and had sons,—Perez, Titus, Asa, and Jairus.

The Burnham place was sold in 1757 by Rev. Solomon Palmer to Noah Bull, of Farmington. Judge Burnham bought the place in 1792 of Jerrett Kettletop, of New York City.

Oliver Burnham married Sarah, daughter of Noah Rogers (3d), and had children,—Oliver Rogers, Franklin, William, Rhoda, married Victorianus Clark; Mary A., married Rev. A. Judson; Clarissa, married Alvin North; Emily F., married Rev. John Clark Hart; Harriet, married Rev. Grove Brownell.

Dr. Russell came from Guilford; sold the Holloway house, in April, 1777, to Salmon, son of Woodruff Emmons.

Ebenezer Sherwood, son of John Sherwood, of Fairfield, a Baptist minister, and one of the early proprietors, in 1770 settled on the farm afterwards owned by Parson Stone, now (1877) the estate of John C Calhoun. He died in 1785.

Timothy Cole, from New Milford, married Rebekeh, daughter of old Sergt. John Dibble, lived south of Truman Dibble, and died in 1783. He was uncle of John and David Cole, who came from same town.

Jonathan Squires, an original purchaser of two rights, was another enterprising pioneer from Plainfield. In 1739 he settled on Cream Hill, southwest from Mr. Douglas' place, on the road (long since discontinued) leading from Rexford's to the grist-mill. He was a man of activity, and was frequently employed in the public business of the town. But few of the first settlers were more wealthy than he. A daughter of his married Mr. Samuel Scovill, grandfather of Jacob Scovill, Esq. Mr. Squires died in this place at an advanced age.

Thomas Rugg, in 1739, came from Woodbury and built a house on Rugg Hill, near the Housatonic River. As the "hard winter" set in, he left his wife and three small children and went to Woodbury to obtain supplies, expecting to be absent but a few days. Before he could return there came on a terrific snow-storm, which lasted many days. The scanty supply of food in the house was exhausted, and one of the children died from starvation; and they might all have perished from the same cause had not Mr. Douglas, living on Cream Hill, went on his snow-shoes to inquire after them. Finding them in this suffering condition, he brought them all on his ox-sled to his house, and kindly cared for their necessities until Mr. Rugg's return. This family, disheartened by their afflictions, returned in the spring to Woodbury.

Amos Johnson removed from Branford to Cornwall in 1742. He was accompanied by his wife and two sons, Amos and Solomon.

Amos Johnson (2d) was a captain in the Revolutionary war. He married Elizabeth Pierce, a daughter of Joshua Pierce. They had twelve children, of whom nine survived childhood, viz., Amos, Elizabeth, Timothy, Anna, Lucy, Samuel Pierce, Buckley, Urena, and Palmer.

Solomon married Eleanor Pierce, daughter of Joshua Pierce. Their children were Solomon, Eleanor, Abigail, Stephen, Seth, Lucy, and David. The two last named died in childhood. Of the remainder a number went West, and Eleanor married Col. Benjamin F. Gold. They had several children.

Nathaniel Carter came from Killingworth, and bought the Jones homestead of Barzillai Dudley, in Dudley Town. In March, 1763, he removed to what is now Binghamton, N. Y.

John and Benjamin Dibble were brothers, and among the first inhabitants of the town. They came from Norwalk. Benjamin, who was called Dr. Dibble, was a sort of a root or Indian doctor. He had two sons and several daughters. The sons were Israel and George. Israel was severely wounded during the Revolutionary war, at White Plains, rendering him decrepit for life. He had nine children, sons and daughters. His youngest son, Seth, lived at his father's house, and was an active business man.

George, the other son of Benjamin Dibble, lived to the age of eighty-four.

Among the early settlers, though not original proprietors, were three brothers, Samuel, Stephen, and Timothy Scoville,—spelt in the early records Scovel,—from Saybrook.

Samuel settled where Henry Rodgers now lives, building a house, probably of logs, just east of the present dwelling.

Stephen settled where Sylvester Scoville now lives.

Timothy settled just above the Mills place, north of Frank Reed's. These three lived and died where they settled, and are buried in South Cornwall cemetery.

From Stephen descended Levi, who was deaf and dumb, and Sylvester, his son, who still occupies the old homestead. Levi was a good farmer, a man of remarkable intelligence for a deaf and dumb mute, before they had any of the modern advantages of education. He had no difficulty in communicating with his neighbors by natural signs so apt that all could understand. He was a regular attendant at church, and, it was said, well knew what the minister had to say.

Timothy's children—Ira and Ithamar—moved West.

Samuel had a large family,—two sons by his first wife, Samuel and Jacob, familiarly known as "Uncle Jake." Both were Revolutionary soldiers, and were taken prisoners at the battle of Long Island, and confined in the terrible prison-ships, and eventually dismissed on parole. When they came home their clothes were so infested with vermin that they had to bury them.

Samuel settled on the "Cobble," and it is said that when engaged in piling up the stone walls which still stand there, talking to his four yoke of oxen, he could be heard at Cornwall Centre and down on Cornwall Plain.

A sketch of "Uncle Jake" is given among the "Heroes of the Revolution." Many stories of him are still extant. One time, while watching a redoubt, a British soldier being in the habit of coming out and slapping a portion of his person in contempt, he was appointed, as the best shot in the company, to put a stop to the performance. He watched his opportunity, and had the satisfaction of seeing the soldier keel off the parapet before the slapping process was half accomplished.

At one time he bet a gallon of rum that he could outjump the company (the ——— Connecticut), and won it by clearing thirty-six feet at two hops and a jump.

Oliver Wickwire came from New London County before the time of the Revolution. He settled on the old road, long since discontinued, running northeast from near Chester Wickwire's. His nearest neighbor on the south was James Douglas.

George Wheaton, Esq., came from East Haven, where he was born, in 1790. He died Nov. 24, 1865, aged seventy-five. He studied law with Judge Church, of Salisbury, was admitted to the bar in 1813, and settled as a lawyer in Cornwall. Mr. Wheaton was a well-read, exact lawyer, a prudent business man, and a close reasoner. He was a valuable man in town affairs, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens.

THE ROGERS FAMILY.—The pedigree of this family is traced back by records in the British Museum to Thomas Rogers, of Bradford, County of Wilts, sergeant-at-law, who died in 1485. He was great-grandfather of John Rogers, the martyr.

Noah Rogers (3d), with his brother Edward, moved to Cornwall from Branford in 1760.

Noah Rogers (3d), though relieved from military duty by defect in one of his eyes, was a volunteer at the time of the surrender of Burgoyne, and brought home a British musket as a trophy.

Noah Rogers (4th), born 1766, married Lydia, daughter of Rev. John Cornwall.

Capt. Edward Rogers was a lieutenant in the old French war, having received two commissions from George III., and an officer in the army of the Revolution; more particular mention of him is made in that record.

Hon. Edward Rogers, oldest son of Capt. Edward, was a graduate of Williams College; studied law at the celebrated law-school of Gould & Reeves, of Litchfield; married Sally Maria Gold, daughter of Hezekiah Gold; settled in the practice of his profession in Madison, Madison County, N. Y. He was a member of the New York State convention for framing the constitution for that State; was presiding judge of the Court of Common Pleas in Madison County for many years. Judge Rogers represented the district in which he lived in the Congress of the United States.

Col. Anson Rogers was widely known as largely occupied with public affairs, having held almost every important office in the gift of his townsmen. He was drafted in the war of 1812, and served the town as constable and collector for fourteen years in succession. It was said of him that "he never served a writ without making a friend." He was a zealous worker to secure the location of the church at North Cornwall.

Noah and Edward Rogers appear on the town records as purchasers of land in December, 1761. The principal pieces were bought of William Gould: those near the church in North Cornwall, now owned by Noah Rogers, and the estate of Anson Rogers, and a farm of six hundred acres lying in and on both sides of the Great Hollow; price twelve hundred pounds. The family has always been one of the most substantial in town, always reliable in every good word and work. Several members have received a liberal education, and are noted elsewhere, as Rev. J. A. R. Rogers and Ambrose Rogers, and in the other branch, Hon. Edward and Hezekiah Gold Rogers.

A family gathering was held Sept. 28, 1864, on the farm of Noah Rogers (6th). One hundred and twenty-five members of the family were present. After dinner, in which all heartily engaged, a historical address was given by Ambrose S. Rogers, of New Milford, to whom we are indebted for many of these facts. Then followed short speeches, anecdotes, etc. One incident, related by O. Rogers Burnham, is worthy of preservation:

"The Rev. Nathaniel Hawes, minister of the parish, became embarrassed, and was intending to sell his little house, when it was proposed to raise the seven hundred and fifty dollars he needed by subscription, in shares of fifteen dollars each. The citizens generally subscribed one share each; but two young girls in the bloom and beauty of maidenhood, daughters of Noah Rogers, had put down their names for two shares each. 'And how,' he asked, 'did they obtain the money?' 'By keeping school at one dollar a week! and thirty dollars then was more than ten times thirty now.'"

Anson Rogers said that his father, Edward Rogers, was a captain in the Revolution, and as the government script was valueless, he advanced two thousand dollars in gold to pay his men, which sum the government had never restored. Revolutionary relics of Capt. Rogers were presented, specimens of the handiwork of the mothers; but more interesting was a Bible printed in 1575, brought over in the "Mayflower." It had appended a "Book of Psalmes collected into English meter by Thomas Sternhold and John Hopkins."

By intermarriage in North Cornwall the Rogers blood is mingled in most of the leading families that now reside there, as the Harrisons, Pratts, Harts, etc.

The Pratt family were among the early settlers. The family moved to Cornwall about 1780. Among the sons was Jasper, the third child, born in 1756, and Minor, the youngest, born in 1768. These two sons were the only ones of the family who became permanent residents in this town.

Before the removal from Saybrook, Jasper Pratt had enlisted from that town, at the commencement of the Revolutionary war, into the Third Connecticut Regiment, and served in the army seven years and three months, or until the close of the war. For most of the time he was stationed in New Jersey, guarding the coast from foraging parties from New York, who were called "Cow-Boys." In one of these raids he was taken prisoner, and confined three months in the city, when an exchange of prisoners released him.

One winter the regiment was ordered to the banks of the Hudson River. The weather was cold, he, with others, was scantily clothed, their shoes were miserably poor, and blood from their feet was often left in their tracks. They suffered severely in that trip, but they endured patiently to the end that their country might be free.

In those days there lived on the premises now owned by Harvey Baldwin a man by the name of Samuel Butler. He came from Windsor, in this State, about 1775, with a family of several daughters and one son. Mr. Butler was in infirm health, and did not live long after coming to Cornwall. It was not long after Mr. Butler died before his wife was taken with the smallpox. She died and her remains rest under one of the old tombstones now standing in the meadow a short distance west of the North Congregational meeting-house. Three or four other persons, who died of the same disease about the same time, were also buried there.

Of the daughters, one was married to Ozias Hurlburt, one to Simeon Emmons, one to Samuel Demming; and it so came about that the care of the farm devolved upon Abigail and Thankful, the two youngest of the daughters, and they were efficient in working it. They sheared their own sheep, spun the wool, and wove it into cloth. They also themselves sowed the flax, and put it through all the necessary processes to get it into cloth. They disposed of considerable of their cloth for the benefit of the soldiers in the army, and took their pay in Continental money. They afterwards gave one hundred dollars of it for a sieve. Some of the linen cloth made by Abigail in those days was more than thirty years afterwards worn by one of her grandchildren, and was in good condition. Thankful Butler married a Mr. Fellows, by whom she had one son, Ephraim. Calvin Butler, who had a large family, and who owned a large farm in the northwest corner of this town, and who died about 1860, was a grandson of the aforesaid Samuel Butler. Soon after the war closed, Jasper Butler came to his Cornwall home, which was then on the south side of the road, opposite to where the foundation of Elias Scovill's former blacksmith-shop now stands, and near the Butler place. The Butler girls had a hog to kill. They did not understand dressing pork as well as they did flax, and they employed Jasper Pratt, then just home from the war, to help do it. On that occasion an intimacy between him and Abigail Butler had its starting-point, which resulted in their marriage in 1785,—"tall oaks from little acorns grow." The Butler property was sold, and they purchased from Noah Rogers a farm on Cream Hill, to which they removed. He died Feb. 24, 1833, aged seventy-seven years.

Chalker married Lydia, daughter of Deacon Noah Rogers, and had two children,—Russell R., born Oct. 15, 1816; Helen A., born Aug. 24, 1818, married Stephen Foster, of Morristown, N. J., who died March 10, 1863. She died in 1875.

Chalker Pratt was a man of influence in the community, ever ready to lend his aid to every good work, and an active member in the Church of Christ. He was the agent for the Cornwall Iron Company for a number of years, until about 1840, when, as the Housatonic Railroad drew near completion, he sold his farm on Cream Hill and removed to West Cornwall, where he had purchased land and erected buildings thereon, with reference to going into the mercantile business. He died Aug. 26, 1851, aged fifty-nine.

Russell R. Pratt married Mary E., daughter of John Cotter. She died May 1, 1849, leaving one child, Harriet C., who married Col. C. D. Blinn, of West Cornwall, a merchant, now residing in New Milford. The second wife of Russell R. Pratt was Mary W. Bonney, of Danbury, Conn., a daughter of Rev. William Bonney, of New Canaan, Conn. He was a native of this town, and during his early years lived on the premises now owned and occupied by Edwin White, on Clark Hill. Russell R. Pratt and Stephen Foster, under the firm-name of Pratt & Foster, established a successful mercantile business at West Cornwall in 1841. Upon the death of Mr. Foster, in 1863, the business was continued by his heirs, and now Mr. R. R. Pratt and R. P. Foster constitute the firm. Mr. Foster was a man of pleasing manners, great industry, indefatigable energy, and shrewd in his business plans. As a railroad contractor he was the first one in the construction of the Housatonic Railroad to break ground north of New Milford, which was done at the Deep Rock cut, near West Cornwall. The material interests of the church had his especial regard. His death, in the full vigor of life, was a serious loss to the church and community. Mr. R. R. Pratt, as an energetic business man, as selectman for seven years from 1856, as representative in 1858, as deacon of the church from 1854 to 1871, as superintendent of the Sabbath-school at West Cornwall since 1860, has filled, and still holds, a prominent position in the secular and religious interests of the town.

Widow Brewster came to Cornwall from Stratford in 1797, with two children,—George, eight years old, and his younger brother, Nelson. Her husband had been lost at sea with his vessel, of which he was owner and captain, three years before.

The Jones Family.—Caleb Jones died in Cornwall, Dec. 9, 1786, aged seventy-four years.

Zachariah Howe Jones, son of Caleb Jones, died July 31, 1817, aged seventy-two years.

Caleb Jones, son of Zachariah Howe Jones, died Aug. 3, 1854, aged seventy-two years. Jane Ann, only child of the above Caleb, was born May 17, 1814, and was married to John T. Andrew, Sept. 9, 1839, and resides in the village of Cornwall.

Zachariah Howe Jones removed from Wallingford, Conn., to Cream Hill, in Cornwall, and owned the farm since occupied by the late Deacon James Wadsworth. He afterwards removed to the south part of the town.

On the 28th of February, 1811, Caleb was married to Harriet Swift, daughter of Rufus Swift, and granddaughter of Gen. Heman Swift, of the Revolutionary army, the friend and at one time the host of Washington.

James Beirce, father of Joseph and James, came from Eastern Massachusetts, probably Pembroke, about 1739, and settled on the old road east of the Burnham place. He afterwards removed to Cornwall Bridge. From him the late Peter Beirce, a prominent business man and politician, and James Beirce, of Cornwall Bridge, are descended.

Ephraim Clark came from England early in the seventeenth century; his wife came from France in 1740, and they settled in Stratford. He came to Cornwall and bought most of the hill called, after him, "Clark Hill." He was taken sick with the measles, returned to Stratford, and died there. His four sons, David, Hezekiah, Silas, and Uri, settled on his lands. David had a son, William, who lived on the place now occupied by his son, William L. Clark. William was a man highly respected by his townsmen; had a family of six sons and six daughters, who grew to maturity. They are now widely scattered, one, William Leavitt, remaining on the old homestead; has one son and three daughters.

Deacon Victorianus Clark was the son of Capt. Nehemiah Clark, and brother of Pierce Clark. They had no relationship with the other family of Clarks.

Andrew Cotter was a blacksmith by trade, and emigrated to Cornwall from Haddam, and set up his shop in North Cornwall.

Henry Baldwin was a Revolutionary soldier from Saybrook, Conn. He served as a private during the war, and returned home at its close with one hundred and fifty dollars of Continental money in his pocket. This soon depreciated in value to such an extent that he offered the whole sum in exchange for a bushel of wheat, and was refused. Not discouraged by adversity, he soon after married Jane Shipman, a native of the same town, and emigrated to Cornwall, where he became the tenant of Deacon Noah Rogers, on the farm now owned by T. S. Gold, in Cornwall Hollow.

Dr. John Calhoun, son of Dr. John Calhoun, of Washington, came to Cornwall in 1792, and in 1804 was followed by his brother, Deacon Jedediah Calhoun, who located as a farmer in the southwest part of the town. Dr. Calhoun was a successful practitioner for forty-six years, and had a numerous family.

John C. Calhoun went as a clerk to Plymouth in 1832, and afterwards engaged there in mercantile business. In 1846 he went to New York, establishing the firm of Calhoun & Vanderburg. The firm was afterwards changed to Robbins, Calhoun & Co. As a business man he was eminently successful, rapidly accumulating a handsome fortune; but he was better known to us as a liberal-hearted Christian gentleman. His love for the quiet scenery of his native town induced him to purchase for a summer residence the old homestead of Parson Stone, in the village of Cornwall, about 1866. The enthusiasm with which he entered upon its improvement was only surpassed by his public spirit and liberality. The adornment of the cemetery at South Cornwall, upon which he expended one thousand dollars, and for the permanent care of which he gave one thousand dollars, securely invested, and the establishment of a town library, with a trust fund of two thousand dollars for its annual enlargement, are examples of his judicious use of the property committed to his stewardship. He died in New York, Nov. 26, 1874.

Ebenezer Birdseye, residing in the south part of the town, had a son, Victory, who received a liberal education and became a prominent lawyer, residing in Pompey, N. Y. He represented his district in the Congress of the United States, and was appointed an especial attorney to prosecute the abductors of Morgan. His son, Judge Lucius Birdseye, of New York, was a graduate of Yale, 1841.

Theodore Ives, brother of Cephas Ives, of Goshen, about 1800 came from that town, married a daughter of Noah Rogers (4th), and set up his trade at North Cornwall.

Rev. Mark Ives, son of Cephas, received a liberal education, and went as a missionary to the Sandwich Islands in 1836, and remained there fourteen years, when, on account of the failure of his health, he returned to this country with his family, and settled as a farmer in Cornwall.

John Dean was an early settler.

Ensign Nathan Millard, father of Joel Millard, settled on Cream Hill.

Rev. Gurdon Rexford, a Methodist minister, and his brother, Samuel Rexford, settled on Cream Hill towards the close of the last century.

Abiel Prindle, who lived near Cream Hill Lake, was the father of Warren and Joseph Prindle. He also had two daughters,—Alice, married Mr. Barnes, and Anna. Warren had sons, Samuel and Harmanus, who still survive and have families. Joseph and Anna lived to a good old age, but remained unmarried. Joseph was quite a character in his day. He was an indulged boy, who played truant, and grew up a slave to a hard master, even his own ungoverned passions. In his youth he had some ambition, and aspired to the study of Latin and to making poetry. One stanza will suffice:

"Dr. Frank,
He felt so crank,
He danced like a dandy, O!
He jumped so high
He hit the sky,
And thought he'd got Miss Pangman, O!"

Samuel Agur Judson came to Cornwall in 1794, with his sister, Sarah A., from Old Mill, Bridgeport, and bought the farm from Mr. Thorp where Harlan Ives now resides. He had one son, Samuel Wesley, and several daughters. A few years since he went to New York to live with his son, and died there in his eighty-ninth year.

Eli Reed was a native of Fairfield County. He was a goldsmith in the time of the Revolution, and resided in Poughkeepsie. He went to New York, designing to remove his family there, but died, leaving a widow and six children. Her name was Weed, and she went back to her friends in Fairfield County, afterwards removing with one of her brothers to Greenfield, Saratoga Co., N. Y. Two of her sons came to Cornwall.

Dr. Isaac Marsh was born in 1777, in Litchfield, where his ancestors had lived. His father and grandfather were also named Isaac. He studied medicine with Dr. Woodward, of Torringford, but, being of rather a nervous temperament, shrank from the practice of the profession.

William Stoddard came from Woodbury, married Mary Willis, of Cornwall, May 27, 1809, and settled as a manufacturer and farmer on Pond Brook, one and a half miles from West Cornwall.

Deacon Eliakim Mallory came from Hamden near the close of the last century, and settled where Julius Hart now lives.

The Smiths have never been very numerous in Cornwall. Rev. Walter Smith came from Kent in 1819, and in 1838 went to Ohio.

The Gold family was connected with the earliest settlement of the State. By these first settlers, for three generations, the name was spelled Gold, yet for some reason portions of the family have changed to Gould, yet most of those holding that name have no connection with the Golds.*

Rev. Cornelius B. Everest was a son of Daniel Everest, who lived south of the village of Cornwall. He was a graduate of Williams College; a faithful and acceptable preacher.

The name of Harrison has been associated with Cornwall from the earliest period of its history. Each generation has well sustained its part in the history of the town, and they have spread laterally into many families conspicuous among the present inhabitants, while their descendants are found in many of the States.†

John Bradford came to Cornwall from Montville, New London Co., about 1772; he bought and settled on the farm now occupied by Fowler Bradford; died in 1817, about eighty years of age; married Mary Fitch, of Norwich, Conn.; his children were named James Fitch, Rachel, Mary, Abigail, Rebecca, and Eleanor.

James F. Bradford was born May 1, 1767; was apprenticed at the age of fourteen to a tanner and shoemaker in Montville, Conn., and served seven years, and came to Cornwall soon after the expiration of his apprenticeship.

Coddington B. Crandall came from Goshen about 1826.

Joseph Chandler came from Danbury, Mass., in 1748, and settled where Agur Judson lived in 1845. He lived to be about ninety years. He had sons,—Benjamin, who was a blacksmith, went to Fairmouth,

* See biography of Hon. T. S. Gold.
† For detailed history, see biography.

Vt., and was killed at the battle of Bennington. Abner in 1774 sold his place to Jethro Bonney, and went to Piermont, N. H. Jonathan lived where Jabez Baldwin lived, and went to Piermont, N. H. Simeon, after 1754, lived at New Milford. A daughter married Ephraim Patterson, brother of Matthew.

The Kelloggs were also early settlers. (See biography of Frederick Kellogg.)

The name of Hart seems to be common to several nationalities. England, Scotland, and Ireland have their Harts. The origin of the name is not made known, perhaps from David's beautiful animal that panted for the water-brooks. The variety in spelling is not great; the prevailing is simply Hart, occasionally Hartt, Harte, Heart, Hearte. Tradition has it that three brothers came to this country early in its settlement, and the name is prominently connected with the settlement of various places.

"Honest John Hart," as he was called, was a son of one of the brothers, and was a signer of the Declaration of Independence, being a member of the General Congress from New Jersey.

John Hart, second son of Deacon John, born October, 1714, at Kensington, moved to Canaan, Conn., in 1740, and to Cornwall in 1763, where he became a large land-holder. He died Dec. 18, 1773, aged fifty-nine years.

Deacon Solomon, third son, born Oct. 1, 1724, moved to Cornwall in 1764, making many purchases of land on the river from Cornwall Bridge to Canaan line, also largely in the present Hart school district. He built the large white house which stood near the present site of Mr. Isaac Marsh's residence, which was called Hart's tavern, and the locality now West Cornwall was then known as Hart's Bridge.

Phineas Hart, of the sixth generation, third son of Deacon Solomon, born in 1758, did valiant service for his country in the Revolution. He was a pensioner of the general government. He married, and lived in Cornwall, where he had children,—Lot, Solomon, Mary, Experience, and Jane. He removed West, where his children remained. He died in Cornwall in 1728, aged seventy years.

Captain Elias Hart, fourth son of Deacon Solomon, was born May 11, 1759. He was a brave youth, and when the war for independence came, although scarcely sixteen years of age, he gave his services heartily to his country, and through seven campaigns unflinchingly faced the foe and met the privations of war. One inclement winter, when the smallpox was raging with fatal effect in camp, he inoculated himself, and thus came through this fearful scourge in safety. The inkstand he used after the war was a small metal flask taken from the enemy at Danbury. He served the town many years in positions of trust and honor, and received a pension till his decease, at the age of seventy-five, in 1834.

Titus, oldest son of Solomon Hart, was born in Farmington, June 4, 1754; came to Cornwall with his father at the age of ten years. He married Esther Hand, and lived in a house where Mrs. H. M. Hart's barn now stands.

Deacon Hart was largely identified with the religious interests of the town and Litchfield North Consociation; a man of strong mind and good sense. H. Milton was judge of probate, justice of the peace, surveyor, and in the winter months taught music in various places in the State. Nathan represented the town in the Legislature in 1860, and held many positions of trust in the civil and business affairs of the town; was also member of the State Board of Agriculture from Litchfield County, and its treasurer for several years.

Deacon Samuel Adams, of the Baptist Church, came to Cornwall from New Bedford in 1800. He first lived as a tenant in the Hollow; afterwards on Cream Hill, and finally bought a farm of Nathan Wickwire on Waller Hill. He enjoyed little opportunity of education, but was a man of decided opinions, and well informed upon all public matters. He served an apprenticeship as a wheelwright at Westerly, R. I. His father was a captain of a privateer in the time of the Revolution, and perished while in action, his vessel being blown up by the explosion of the magazine.

THE BEERS FAMILY.—England is credited with being the fatherland of the Beers, and the genealogical records of the family trace back to the feudal age, under the name of Beare, which was afterwards written Bears, with a coat of arms to correspond.* The family were represented in the English army during the reign of Charles I., and received a grant of land in the north of Ireland for services rendered, and a branch of the family permanently settled in that country in 1646. John Beers, the founder of the family in this country, was accepted an inhabitant of the town of Stratford, in Fairfield Co., Nov. 25, 1678. It is supposed he was accompanied by his wife and four sons.

Matthew Beers, youngest son of Joseph Beers, married Sarah Curtis, of Stratford, and left a family,—Curtis, Silas, Menzis, Otis, Lewis, Lucinda.

Curtis, eldest son of Matthew Beers, was born in Stratford, March 25, 1789. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to the shoemaker's trade, and three years after purchased his time, as was customary then, and engaged to Enoch Curtis to work at his trade in Darien, Ga., where at the expiration of two years he opened a boot and shoe store. In the summer of 1812 the store was consumed by fire, leaving him penniless, and in October, 1812, he came to Cornwall, and engaged with Capt. Nehemiah Clark in the curing of leather and the making of boots and shoes. Married Alice Curtis, of Stratford, Sept. 22, 1817, and in November of same year purchased, in connection with his brother Menzis, the house now occupied by

* The coat of arms are described as follows; Arms argent (silver); a bear rampant, "sable" (black); canton gules (red); crest on a garb lying fipwise (——) "or" (gold); a raven "sable" (black). Motto: Bear and forbear.

Menzis Beers at Cornwall. For several years they manufactured boots and shoes for the Southern market, a brother, Lewis Beers, taking charge of the business in Athens, Ga. In 1822 he purchased a farm of Luman Hopkins, near Cornwall Bridge, and removed there in 1826, and engaged in farming, which occupation he followed until his decease, March 10, 1848. He left a family,—Job W. C., born July 9, 1818; Henry L., born May 9, 1823; Sarah E., born Oct. 25, 1825; Victory C., born Sept. 25, 1832.

Henry L. Beers represented the town in the General Assembly in 1872 and 1876; was selectman for some years, and held many offices of trust.

Sarah E. married Hiram Pierce, of Thomaston, May 31, 1849; her only daughter married Dr. Edward Bradstreet, and is settled in Meriden.

Victory C. Beers married Sarah C. Harrison, daughter of Myron Harrison, June 2, 1862, and has one son, George H., born July 15, 1866. He was for several years a member of the Democratic State Central Committee; represented the Seventeenth Senatorial District in the Senate of 1870; was selected as chairman of the board of selectmen in 1876.

Menzis Beers, third son of Matthew, was born in Stratford, July 23, 1795; he permanently settled in Cornwall in 1817, and engaged with his brothers Curtis and Lewis in the curing of leather and the manufacturing of boots and shoes for the Southern market. They opened a store in Athens, Ga., under the name and firm of C. & M. Beers & Co. Married Laura, daughter of Capt. John Pierce, Jan. 1, 1820, and has two sons,—John W., born Jan. 15, 1822; Silas C., born March 13, 1827.

In 1840, Menzis Beers engaged in the mercantile business with F. Kellogg, at Cornwall, under the firm-name of F. Kellogg & Co., which continued two years; but in 1842 the firm of J. W. & S. C. Beers opened a store at North Cornwall for general merchandising and the manufacturing of gloves and mittens, which continued with several partners till 1860, when the business was removed to South Cornwall, under the firm-name of M. Beers & Sons.

John W. Beers represented the town in the General Assembly of 1857, and Silas C. was chosen town clerk and treasurer in 1852, which office he held continuously for fourteen years, and in 1867 he represented the town in the General Assembly.

Gen. Robert Sedgwick, one of the first settlers of Charlestown, Mass., was the progenitor of that family in this country. He was one of the most distinguished men of his time, and, according to the record, "was stout and active in all feats of war." This was in Cromwell's time, and the account of his services against the French and in other public positions is very complete. He died at Jamaica, W. I., May 24, 1656. He had five children, one of whom, William, married Elizabeth Stone, daughter of Rev. Samuel Stone, of Hartford, and had one child, Samuel, born 1667; died March 24, 1735, in his sixty-ninth year.

The Shepard Family.—Allen Shepard came to Cornwall from Newtown, with his family, in 1798. His son, Eliphalet H. Shepard, was born in Newton, 1789; married, July 7, 1813, Mary, daughter of Judah Kellogg; died Aug. 12, 1865, leaving four children,—George H., Charles N., who resided in Brooklyn, N. Y., and died, unmarried, at West Cornwall, July 23, 1876, Elbert, and Harriett.

Elbert, born May 2, 1824, married, May 31, 1846, Cynthia L., daughter of George Wheaton, and has one son, George W., born Dec. 25, 1854.

Mr. Shepard is a farmer, residing at West Cornwall at this time (1878); represents the town in the General Assembly, and has held many offices of trust. He is a Methodist, and a prominent supporter of that denomination; but his generous donation to the chapel at West Cornwall, and especially the gift from himself and his family of the location, will ever remain as a testimonial of their liberal Christian spirit.

Eliphalet Shepard was a Methodist, an earnest worker in that denomination; a man pure and peaceable, and much respected by his fellow-citizens.

Dr. Joseph North resided north of the Carrington Todd place, and practiced medicine for many years. He died Sept. 22, 1848, aged seventy-six.

Darius Webb came from Warren in 1832, as agent of the Cornwall Bridge furnace, where he remained about twenty years.

John T. Andrew, a native of the county of New Haven, was born July 19, 1811; graduated at Yale, 1839; studied theology in the Yale Theological Seminary, and graduated in 1842 with the highest honors of his class. Prevented from entering upon his chosen profession by bronchial disease, after waiting two years, spent partly in teaching a select school in Cornwall, and finding little improvement of his voice, he turned his attention to agriculture, and in 1847 purchased a farm near West Cornwall, and engaged in his new calling with great enthusiasm and success.

Woodruff Emmons became the owner of the Holloway house, and kept a tavern there during the Revolutionary war.

THE EMMONS TAVERN.

"One hundred years ago, in the centre of the town there was a tavern of some notoriety in its day, which stood near the summit of a high hill, overlooking, in a southern direction, a wide extent of country, embracing a beautiful valley.

"The building was distinguished by the peculiar architecture not altogether uncommon at that period in the construction of the better class of dwellings. Large massive scrolls and roses of carved work ornamented the tops and sides of the doorways, while the windows, of six-by-eight glass, were surmounted by heavy angular projecting caps. The doors were wrought with curvilinear styles and panels, surmounted also, like the windows, with the angular projecting caps. The body of the house was painted a light red, the windows and doors being trimmed with white. The large square chimney-top exhibited, neatly cut in a stone on its front side, the figures 1758, being the year in which the house was built. Few dwellings at the present day exhibit so elaborate a finish as appeared in its exterior. The interior was more plain. The best rooms, however, were finished with a dark, heavy wainscot, nearly half-way to the ceiling above, on three sides, while on the fourth the wood-work covered the whole. A plaster of lime mortar covered the remaining portions of the walls. On the chimney side of each of the front rooms there was a huge fireplace, with a wooden mantel-tree; in the wainscoting above there was inserted an immense panel some four or five feet in breadth. The remaining parts of the house were done with plain wooden ceilings, leaving the joists, which were neatly planed, naked overhead. The wood-work was painted either red or blue; the latter, being considered the most genteel color, was applied to the two front rooms of the first story, the one being used for the best room or parlor, and the other as the bar-room. In one corner of the latter was a space six feet square, parted off by a ceiling four and a half feet high. This inclosure was called the bar. Around the two posterior sides of the bar were placed several shelves containing various articles, of which the most conspicuous were several square bottles filled with different kinds of liquors. One was labeled "Old Holland Gin," another "French Brandy," and a third "Orange-peel Bitters." By the side of these stood drinking-vessels of various kinds, some of glass and others of pewter. A large conical loaf of white sugar, inclosed in a thick dark-purple paper, was also conspicuous, while beside it stood a large, round, covered wooden box, containing many broken pieces of the same ready for use. The furniture of the bar-room consisted of a large heavy oaken table, composed of a single leaf, one or two forms or benches, and some half-dozen splint-bottomed chairs.

"The house here described stood upon a terrace some three or four feet high, sustained on two sides by a wall of unhewn stones, the entrance being up a flight of large stone steps; the side-hill position of the building rendering this arrangement quite convenient. Just exterior to this terrace, and about thirty feet from the building, stood the sign-post, from the rectangular bar of which was suspended the sign.

"In front of this tavern was an open space or common, sixteen rods in width and forty in length, called the green; it was nearly destitute of trees, and furnished the ordinary parade-ground for the militia, and place for town gatherings on gala days or other public occasions. On the opposite side of the green from the tavern, and near the northwest corner, stood the meeting-house, a large and respectable-looking edifice, where all the inhabitants of the town usually met on the Sabbath. Fronting the extreme southern part of the common or green stood the parsonage of the Rev. Hezekiah Gold; about half a dozen other dwellings completed the centre village."

WHIPPING-POST AND STOCKS.

"About six rods from the tavern, and directly in front of it, near the traveled path, stood a wooden post about ten inches square and seven feet in height, placed firmly and perpendicularly in the earth. Near the ground a large mortice was made through the post, in which were placed the ends of two stout pieces of plank, five feet in length, lying edgewise, one to the other. The under one was made immovable in the post, while the upper plank was movable up and down by a hinge-like motion. Between the edges of these planks were four round holes, one-half of each hole being cut from each plank; the two half-circles when joined made an opening of the right size to embrace a person's ankles. On the outer ends of these horizontal planks were appended a stout iron hasp and staples, designed when in use to be secured in place with a heavy padlock. The fixture here described answered the double purpose of posting warnings for town-meetings or other public notices, as well as for a whipping-post and stocks."

CHAPTER XXXI.

CORNWALL (Continued).

Congregational Church, Cornwall—Congregational Church, North Cornwall—Cornwall and Sharon Baptist Church—Baptist Church, Cornwall Hollow—Baptist Church, East Cornwall—Methodist Episcopal Church, Cornwall Bridge—Educational—The Foreign Mission-School—Cream Hill Agricultural School—W. C. and Miss L. Rogers' School—Noah R. and E. Burton Hart's School—Young Ladies' Institute—The Alger Institute—Physicians—Cemeteries—Organization of Town—Representatives from 1761 to 1882—Soldiers of the Revolution—Soldiers of the Rebellion, 1851-65.

ECCLESIASTICAL.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, CORNWALL.

THE organization of this church is co-existent with the incorporation of the town. The town was incorporated in May, 1740, and at the first town-meeting, held on the first day of the following July, the first vote in regard to the religious welfare of the town, viz.:

"Voted, That the whole charge of Mr. Harrison's preaching amongst us, together with the charge of bringing him here and boarding him, we will pay out of the first tax that shall be assessed."

The Mr. Harrison mentioned had been here for a short time previously. He was the first preacher in the town. From whence he came or whither he went there is no record.

The next vote in this meeting was:

"Voted, We will send Mr. Millard to agree with a minister, and bring him to preach amongst us."

And also,

"Voted, That said Millard do advise the ministers what sort of a man to bring to preach amongst us."

At this meeting it was also

"Voted, That we think it necessary and convenient to build a meeting-house," which vote was unanimous to a man.

Mr. Millard not being successful in obtaining a preacher, seven weeks after that first town-meeting the inhabitants again assembled, 18th of August, and renewed their efforts for a minister, appointing a committee of George Holloway, Joseph Allen, and Nathaniel Jewell, to secure, as soon as possible, a preacher, to continue to them until the 1st of April, 1741,—that is, for seven or eight months. And this committee was directed to take the advice of neighboring ministers in the choice of such a preacher. At the same meeting it was "Voted, That we will build a meeting-house for public worship 48 feet in length and 38 in breadth, and 24 feet between joints."

Also,

"Voted, That George Holloway shall be an agent to address the General Assembly at New Haven, October next, to appoint a committee to state the place where the meeting-house shall stand."

Also,

"Voted, That David Rugg should be the chorister till we agree otherwise."

Also,

"Voted, That George Holloway shall read the Psalm."

Also,

"Voted, That we will meet for public worship at Mr. Samuel Messenger's house till the town order otherwise."

When and by whom the church, the articles of faith, and church covenant were formed are now entirely unknown; nor is it known who were the members comprising the church. Whether such organization was previous or subsequent to their first minister's preaching to them cannot be ascertained.

Whether any preacher was employed during the winter of 1740–41 is uncertain, but the people did not "forget the assembling of themselves together" in the worship of God, and David Rugg continued their stated leader in singing.

The Rev. Solomon Palmer, of Branford, Conn., educated at Yale College, who graduated there 1729, was in the town in the spring of 1741 as a preacher.

On the first Thursday of March, 1741, the people met according to an adjournment of a meeting three months before, and voted to hire Mr. Palmer to preach to them until the 1st of June as a candidate for settlement.

Ten weeks after, May 24th, the town met at the house of Samuel Messenger, and passed the following vote:

"That, with the advice and consent of the neighboring ministers, we will call the Rev. Mr. Solomon Palmer to a settlement with us in the gospel ministry in this place."

They added to this call:

"That we will give Mr. Palmer the following salary, to be paid in money equal in silver at twenty-eight shillings per ounce: For the first year, which is to begin at the day of his ordination, two hundred pounds, the half of which shall be paid at said ordination; the second year, one hundred pounds; the third, one hundred and ten pounds; and so rise ten pounds a year till it comes at one hundred and sixty pounds, to be paid annually so long as he continues in the work of the ministry in this place."

Soon after, the town granted Mr. Palmer fifty pounds additional to his settlement of two hundred pounds. In addition to his salary and settlement, Mr. Palmer was entitled to a whole right of land, or what was one fifty-third share of the town, the amount of which in land was not far from six hundred acres.

Mr. Palmer was ordained on the second Wednesday of August, 1741.

The first deacons of Cornwall Church were Jonathan Harris, who came from Derby and settled on Clark Hill, near Goshen, and Phineas Waller, who emigrated from New Milford, and whose residence was half a mile northwest from Deacon Nathan Hart's, on Waller Hill.

For twelve years and seven months Mr. Palmer remained peacefully with his flock, during which time the town increased in population very considerably. No records of the church of those years are extant, and no list of church communicants.

In March, 1754, Mr. Palmer declared, on the Sabbath, and to the great surprise of all his people, that his ordination had no validity, that he was an Episcopalian, and that he now renounced his ministry among them.

There were but few Episcopalians in Connecticut; a church of that denomination had been existing in Stratford, and in 1722 the Rev. Mr. Cutler, rector of Yale College, became an Episcopalian. After this there were a few more added to the number.

It is believed that several of Mr. Palmer's parishioners were at first inclined to think favorably of his change of opinion; but very few only continued so, for he claimed his land, which was granted to the first minister, but the people resented the claim as unjust, for he had deserted his charge. A lawsuit was commenced, but the matter was compromised, he giving up a part of his demand.

This controversy, it is probable, prevented the establishment of an Episcopal church in this town, for the people had held their pastor in high estimation.

Mr. Palmer went to England, was there ordained as a priest, and sent back as a missionary of the Church of England. He had an offer of a permanent settlement at Amboy, N. J., with an ample salary, but, from the reluctance of his wife to go thither, he remained in Connecticut. He preached at Goshen, at New Milford, and itinerated in various parts of the western section of the State.

Mr. Palmer derived no pecuniary benefit from leaving his parochial charge at Cornwall, but experienced the contrary.

For seventeen months after this defection of the first pastor the town had no settled minister.

Whether Mr. Palmer took away or destroyed the records of this infant church, or they were lost by the careless neglect of others, is unknown; not a scrap of such history is extant. It is not known whether any one preached in Cornwall except Mr. Gold until his installment. This was on the 27th of August, 1755.

The Rev. Hezekiah Gold was a native of Stratford, a descendant from a family highly honorable, being a grandson of the Hon. Lieutenant-Governor Nathan Gold, and a son of the Rev. Hezekiah Gold, of Stratford. His father, who was an evangelical pastor of the First Congregational Church of Stratford, advocated the cause of the revival of religion first referred to, and was a friend to Mr. Whitefield and to his associates. His son, who became the minister of this town, was educated at Yale College, where he graduated in 1751. He possessed a superior mind, having talents comprehensive and penetrating, by which he easily obtained a thorough knowledge of human nature, and of course able to acquire much influence with whom he associated. Until unhappy dissensions took place, in the latter part of his ministry, Mr. Gold's influence among the people and families of his charge was almost unbounded. In every concern, private and public, civil, military, and domestic, the advice and opinion of Mr. Gold was esteemed as highly important. During the former and greater part of his ministerial labors, a very large assembly gathered at the house of God on the Sabbath, which stood nearly opposite to the house of George Holloway, Esq.,—the house now owned by Ithamar Baldwin.

The following were the male members of Mr. Gold's church, April 3, 1783: Joshua Pierce, Caleb Jones, Woodruff Emmons, Amos Jones, Edward May, James Bierce, Joseph Pangman, Jacob Brownson, John Pierce, John Wright, Jacob Brownson, Jr., Nathaniel Swift, Zachariah H. Jones, Seth Pierce, Nehemiah Beardsley, Ralph Grimes, Timothy Brownson, Deacon J. Kellogg, Ketchel Bell, Lemuel Jennings, Dar. Everest, Ebenezer Symonds, Thomas Tanner, John Benedict, Austin Bierce, John Jones, Josiah Stephens, Seymour Morse, Elias Birdsey, Joel Wood, Amos Camp. Mr. Gold, the pastor, makes thirty-three.

Pastors.—The following is a list of pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Solomon Palmer, 1741–54; Hezekiah Gold, Jr., 1755–90; Hercules Weston, 1792–1803; Timothy Stone, 1803–27; William Andrews, 1827–38; Nathaniel M. Umston, 1838–40; Hiram Day, 1844–48; Ralph Smith, 1851–55; Ira Pettibone,* 1854–57; Stephen Fenn, 1859–67; Elias B. Sanford, 1869–71; N. A. Prince, 1872–74; Samuel J. White, 1875, present incumbent.

Deacons.—John Harris, Phinehas Waller, Benjamin Sedgwick, Samuel Abbott, date of appointment unknown; Thomas Porter, chosen Oct. 8, 1765; Elijah Steel, June 24, 1773; Judah Kellogg, Josiah Hopkins, June 20, 1776; Benjamin Gold, Abel C. Carter, July 9, 1812; Jedediah Calhoun, December, 1819; Victorianus Clark, March 4, 1831; Henry Swift, Silas P. Judson, July 21, 1839; Marcus D. F. Smith, Jan. 5, 1855; Robert T. Miner, George H. Swift, Jan. 6, 1867; Silas C. Beers, Dec. 13, 1868; Harlan Ives.

* Acting pastor.

The first resolutions passed by the people of Cornwall—in town-meeting assembled A.D. 1740—was to get a minister, and the second was like unto it, viz.: to build a "meeting-house." In due time the minister was obtained, and the house was commenced,—I will not say built: I think it never was built.

In 1745 the town passed a resolution accepting the house of the builders, so far as the work had progressed, and ordered that it be set apart to God for purposes of worship.

The house was only covered with shingles and clapboards, and in it the people worshiped, summer and winter, without fire, except what burned upon God's altar. The church was located at Cornwall Centre, a mile distant from this village.

In 1790 this church was taken down, enlarged, and put up again in this village, near where the liberty-pole now stands.

In 1840 or 1841 the old house was torn down and the present one built.

In 1874 a beautiful chapel was built upon the grounds upon which the old mission-house of the American Board once stood.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, NORTH CORNWALL.†

This church was organized in the fall of 1780‡ by seceders from the South Church. The first members were Andrew Young, Phineas Waller, Elijah Steele, Samuel Butler, Noah Bull, James Douglass, Marsh Douglass, David Clark, and Hezekiah Clark. Within two years the following were added, making, in 1782, thirteen members: Beriah Hotchkin, Noah Rogers (3d), Ethan Allan, Jesse Hyatt, Mrs. B. Hotchkin, Mrs. P. Waller. In 1805 the following were members of the church: Noah Rogers, Sr. (3d), Elijah Mallory and wife, Hezekiah Clark, David Clark, Jesse Hyatt and wife, Nathan Hart and wife, Thaddeus Cowles and wife, Titus Hart, Ichabod Howe, Silas Meacham, Mrs. Samuel Scovill, Sr., Mrs. Samuel Scovill, Jr., wife of Capt. Williams, Clarissa Irene Rogers, wife of Joseph Ford, wife of Philo Hawes, Mrs. Silas Clark, Abigail Hart, widow of John Hart, wife of Asa Emmons, Ira Gleason, wife of Joseph Hotchkin.

The first pastor was Rev. Samuel Bird, who remained, however, but a few months. The following is a list of pastors from the organization of the church to the present time: Rev. Samuel Bird; John Cornwall; Israel Holley, 1795–1801; Josiah Hawes,* 1805–13; Grove L. Brownell, 1817–18; Walter Smith, 1819–38; S. J. Tracy, 1838–39; Joshua L. Maynard, 1841–52; W. B. Clarke, 1855–59; Charles Wetherby, 1859–66; Jesse Brush, 1867–73. Charles N. Fitch, the present efficient pastor, was installed in 1874. Mr. Fitch is a graduate of Yale Theological Seminary, class of '73.

† Condensed from R. R. Pratt's historical address and Rev. N. Fitch's memorial sermon.

‡ Contributions to Ecclesiastical History of Connecticut gives date of organization 1782.

The deacons of the church have been as follows: Beriah Hotchkin, Phineas Waller, Hezekiah Clark, David Clark, Titus Hart, Eleakim Mallory, Nathan Hart, Noah Rogers, James Wadsworth, R. R. Pratt, E. D. Pratt, T. S. Gold, Egbert M. Rogers.

The Second Ecclesiastical Society was incorporated in 1804. The first church edifice was erected on the site of James D. Ford's homestead. In 1785 the second meeting-house was commenced on the site of the present school-house at Cornwall Centre. In 1790 the first house was taken down, and rebuilt in the vicinity of the present church at Cornwall. The present church was erected in 1826, and Jan. 11, 1827, was dedicated to Almighty God.

METHODISTS.

The new Methodist church at the Centre was erected in the year 1839.

Many pious and worthy ministers of the gospel have preached their one or two years in Cornwall since the first introduction of Methodism into the town.

BAPTISTS.

In the summer of 1800, Samuel Wadsworth, son of Mr. Joseph Wadsworth, then living on Cream Hill, and a grandson of Mr. James Douglass, was baptized by a Baptist minister in the Cream Hill Lake. This ceremony, from its novelty at the time, attracted a large attendance of people. There may have been Baptists here at an earlier day, but no accessible records furnish data of their existence in this town previous to the above date. Among the early Baptist preachers in Cornwall were the Rev. Messrs. Bates, Fuller, and Talmadge. Elder Fuller, the father of Mrs. Deacon Nettleton, had not a permanent residence in this town, but often preached at the house of Capt. Samuel Wadsworth on Cream Hill. He was peculiarly solemn and earnest in presenting his subject to his hearers, sometimes exciting to tears even the children, who would listen to him in breathless silence. His residence was in Kent, where some of his descendants yet remain.

ROMAN CATHOLIC.

A small Roman Catholic church was erected at West Cornwall about 1850.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, WEST CORNWALL.

The chapel at West Cornwall was commenced in 1877, and dedicated Jan. 3, 1878. It was erected at a cost of four thousand dollars.

CORNWALL AND SHARON BAPTIST CHURCH,†

for upwards of thirty years woven into the ecclesiastical affairs of the town of Cornwall, ought not to be overlooked in this history. The meeting-house, raised about 1820, in North Cornwall, is still standing (used as a dwelling, and owned by Hon. T. S. Gold). Its membership was from forty to sixty in its best days, and among its pastors we may mention Elders Samuel Ambler and Asa Talmadge, both of whom owned farms and supported themselves by that occupation, preaching on the Sabbath purely for the good they might do. The deacons were Samuel Adams and Elijah Nettleton. The church dissolved about 1843, but was the father of the church whose history follows this. Many of the members were, though the property was not, transferred. The records were burned in a fire that destroyed the house of Deacon Holmes. But two of the members are still living, one of whom adds to the records here given: "Though the books are burned and the house disused, many names are on a book that even the conflagration of a universe will not reach, for whom there was prepared a mansion in the heavens that 'faileth not.'"

BAPTIST CHURCH IN CORNWALL HOLLOW.†

On the 13th of November, 1843 (by the advice of Elder N. E. Shailer and Elder A. D. Watrous, missionaries under the patronage of the Connecticut Baptist State Convention), Zebulon O. Lawton, Elizabeth B. Lawton, Sarah A. Nettleton, and Jane E. Nettleton, baptized believers in Jesus Christ, publicly gave themselves to the Lord and to one another, by His will entering into a covenant.

In the constitution of the church, which was adopted March 25, 1844, at the house of Leighton Bradley, they adopted the name of the "North Cornwall Baptist Church," after the old society, a name that seems afterwards to have been changed by common consent to Cornwall Hollow Baptist Church.

According to custom among Baptists, a Council was convened at the house of Ransley Hull, April 17, 1844, "to examine our covenant and declaration of faith, and (if the Council think best) to give us public fellowship as a church." Sermon by Rev. G. B. Atwell from Acts xi. 26.

The house of worship, still in good repair, was built in 1845, and dedicated the same year.

We find that discipline was not neglected, and from the following example we judge that churches at the present time are derelict. After several church-meetings, in which the case came up, but was deferred for further council and prayer, after two separate committees had been appointed to confer with the offending member, we find the following record: "Heard

* Between the pastorates of Mr. Hawes and Mr. Brownell, Rev. Francis L. Robbins and a Mr. Hawley preached as candidates.

† Contributed by Rev. H. G. Smith.

the report of the committee appointed to visit —— ——. Report accepted. On finding from the committee that she was neglecting her covenant obligations with God and the church, and that she attended parties and balls, after mature deliberation, the church voted to withdraw from her the hand of fellowship."

Jan. 1, 1847, a number of members and others assembled at the house of A. B. Holmes, appointed Elder E. Doty moderator, and proceeded to organize a branch of the Cornwall Hollow Church, and received members. By a vote of the parent church shortly after, these were permitted to become members on the presentation of their letters.

A sad disturbance seems to have entered the church, owing to their action in regard to the misconduct of a previous pastor. A church-meeting was called, composed of all the members "in regular travel at the time." Confessions were sought from each as in their judgment the Lord required, and "they proceeded to travel onward in the capacity of a church," though bearing scars that time refused to heal. The resurrection body will come up without them.

In October, 1855, the pastor, Rev. William M. Simons, and wife and four members, withdrew to unite, with sixteen other members residing in and about Falls Village, in forming a separate church. Shortly after this branch became a church (the record does not say how long) it was beset by embarrassments, the minister removed West, and at length the church gave up the field, selling the property to the Congregationalists, who occupy the place.

The first pastor was Rev. N. E. Shailer, from Feb. 20, 1844, to March 1, 1845. This office he combined with that of general State missionary, preaching for them only when providentially in that vicinity. It was through his instrumentality largely that the society was formed. In this work he was assisted by Rev. A. D. Watrous, also State missionary.

The first settled pastor was John P. Barnett, who was settled April 1, 1845, and was to be "paid two hundred and fifty dollars for his labors." From March 1st to April 1st he was to preach "for the consideration of five dollars in money and teams to move his goods from Northeast." We find also on the records a document duly signed and countersigned, in which the above Barnett stipulates, for the specified sum, that he will "preach for the term of one year, twice on the Sabbath and once during the week, if requested by the committee." He was dismissed at the end of the year, and Elder Alfred Gates was chosen to succeed him. Jan. 13, 1849, we find his resignation accepted by a vote of the church. He appears to have been succeeded immediately by Rev. E. N. Jenks, who was the next pastor, until 1850, when they saw fit to give "Elder S. Gate a call, so long as the church will raise the salary." That was not long, as we find at the next annual meeting the committee was instructed to "supply the desk" the year ensuing. This, however, was fortunately done by securing, some time during the year, the pastoral labors of Elder William M. Simons, for we find at the next annual meeting they voted to continue him as their pastor. He was a laborious and efficient minister, and April 27, 1853, a Council ordained him to the work of the ministry in that place.

From this time onward the records are imperfect, but from 1854 to 1858 Rev. Thomas Benedict and Rev. E. Doty appear to have filled successively the pastoral office. May 22, 1859, George Pay was called to become their pastor, after ordination, which occurred on the 15th of June. He remained two years, after which Rev. Charles Y. Swan, Rev. George B. Atwell, Rev. A. H. Simons, and Rev. Mr. Jones supplied the desk, but the records are imperfect at this point. Dec. 23, 1863, the society voted to call Rev. L. W. Wheeler to the pastorate, which he filled two years.

From this time forward fifteen years the church was without a settled Baptist minister, and listened to the preaching of such men as Providence threw in their way, sometimes the Congregational minister in North Cornwall, and more often the Methodist pastor at North Goshen. During this time no church-meetings were held, many moved away, some died, and others connected themselves with neighboring churches. Their light nearly went out. From a membership of over a hundred it was reduced to four or five. Yet it was not to die.

In 1876 missionaries of the Connecticut Baptist Convention visited the place, which resulted in some awakening and additions to the church. This was followed in 1880 by Rev. H. G. Smith, pastor of the churches in East Cornwall and Bantam Falls, coming and preaching every two weeks, alternating with Rev. C. N. Fitch, Congregational pastor at North Cornwall. Now, 1881, Mr. Smith is acting pastor, preaching in his two other fields during the day, and in this place every Sabbath evening.

Before closing this history, there is one man whose work and worth, in connection with this church, demands more than passing notice. Deacon A. W. Lawton was received into membership from the North Cornwall Baptist Church, dissolved Dec. 12, 1843, and was "appointed to take the lead of religious meetings when there is no regular minister present." Shortly afterwards he was elected deacon, which office he sustained to the end of his life.

The following extracts are taken from an article which appeared in the Christian Secretary at the time of his death:

"DEACON A. W. LAWTON.

"Deacon Amos Wells Lawton died at his residence in Goshen, Wednesday morning, Feb. 16, 1881, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. He was born in Hopkinton, R. I., May 1, 1797. In 1828 he moved to Goshen, where he resided until his death.

"In the year 1843 himself and wife, with some half-dozen others, joined in organizing the Baptist Church of Cornwall Hollow, of which he became deacon, and so remained at the time of his death. As the most prominent of the organizers and supporters of the interest, he found and filled a sphere most useful and honorable. his house being the home of many of the members of the ministry of the Baptist denomination in the northwestern portion of the State, while many can attest the spirit of generous hospitality which always dwelt beneath his roof. He was ever identified with Baptist interests, and took an active interest in the Litchfield County Baptist Association, of which for many years he was the treasurer.

"He represented his town in the State Legislature of 1853, and held at various times most of the offices of trust and responsibility in Goshen, where the most of the years of his active life were passed."

COLLEGE STREET BAPTIST CHURCH, EAST CORNWALL.*

This church was constituted in the town of Warren, Nov. 15, 1787, under the name of the Warren Baptist Church, with the following members: Benjamin Dunning, Asahel Wedge, Samuel Sturdivant, Truman Beeman, Ely Dayton, John Lord, Ira Wedge, Salmon Wedge, Samuel Sturdivant, Jr., Isaac Dunning, Anna Beeman, Hannah Wedge, Mercy Dunning, Sarah Sturdivant, Hannah Raynold, Rachel Beeman, Abigail Pratt, Jerusha Thomson, Jemima Cogswell, Abigail Spooner, Anner Sturdivant, Sarah Merriman.

In 1790 the church consisted of eighty members, who were scattered in the town, Warren, Cornwall, Washington, Goshen, Kent, and Sharon. Jan. 28, 1793, eighteen of the members withdrew to form a church in Sharon. The erection of the first church edifice was begun in 1850, and on May 31, 1851, a resolution was passed changing the name of the church to the College Street Baptist Church of Cornwall. The church was dedicated June 19, 1857. Among the ministers who have officiated for the church were Isaac Root, Dodge, Howard, Beecher, Daniel Baldwin, Thomas Benedict, L. B. Hart, J. F. Jones, Richard Thompson, Jackson Ga Nun, C. W. Potter, J. Fairman, D. F. Chapman. Edwin D. Bowers was ordained pastor June 21st, although he had officiated from the 5th of the previous February. He was succeeded in June, 1878, by the present efficient pastor, Rev. H. G. Smith.

METHODIST CHURCH, CORNWALL BRIDGE.

It is impossible to ascertain when this church was organized. Among the first preachers were James Coleman, Benjamin Griffin, Samuel Cochran, Billy Hibbard, E. P. Jacob, J. J. Mathias, Nathan Emory, and Smith Dayton. Among the recent ministers may be mentioned Spencer H. Bray, Edward Bray, Benjamin A. Gilman, H. Q. Judd, Ira Abbott, L. L. Stone, and Robert Codling. The present (March, 1881) pastor is Rev. William Wake. The church edifice was erected in 1835. The present board of trustees are D. W. Manuel, John Hall, Leonard S. Whitcomb, Wilbur F. Harrison, Sebra Wells, Charles Hall, and Daniel Winchell.

The present board of stewards are Charles Hall, Wilbur F. Harrison, D. W. Manuel, and Leonard S. Whitcomb; superintendent of Sunday-school, W. F. Harrison.†

EDUCATIONAL.

A foreign mission-school was established in this town May 1, 1817, the object being for the education of foreign youth, to prepare them for becoming missionaries, schoolmasters, interpreters, and physicians among heathen nations, and to communicate such information—viz., agriculture and the arts—as should tend to promote Christianity and civilization.

It was opened under the management of Mr. Edwin W. Dwight, who served one year, and was succeeded by Rev. Herman Daggett. Mr. Daggett officiated six years, and was succeeded in 1824 by Rev. Amos Bassett, who continued until the school was abandoned, in 1827. Rev. Henry L. Vail was at one time an assistant teacher.

"The school," says Mr. T. S. Gold, in his "History of Cornwall," "was a decided success, as far as its original plan was concerned, and was closed because the opportunities of educating the heathen on their own ground were opened, thus rendering it unnecessary, and from the local opposition produced by the marriage of two Cherokee Indians with respectable white girls residing in the town."

The number of pupils in 1822 had risen to 34, representing the leading then known Indian tribes, and many of the Pacific Islands. Henry Obookiah, a Sandwich Islander, was a devoted Christian, and gave great promise of usefulness; but he died, while a member of the school, Feb. 17, 1818, aged twenty-six. A tablet erected to his memory in the cemetery at Cornwall bears this inscription:

"In
memory of
HENRY OBOOKIAH,
a native of
OWYHEE.

"His arrival in this country gave rise to the Foreign Mission School, of which he was a worthy member. He was once an Idolator, and was designed for a Pagan Priest; but by the grace of God, and by the prayers and instructions of pious friends, he became a Christian.

"He was eminent for piety and missionary zeal. When almost prepared to return to his native Isle to preach the Gospel, God took him to himself. In his last sickness he wept and prayed for Owyhee, but was submissive. He died without fear, with a heavenly smile on his countenance and glory in his soul,

Feb. 17, 1818,
Aged 26."

Thomas H. Patoo, another converted heathen, is interred beside him. His monument bears this inscription:

"In
memory of
THOMAS HAMMATAH PATOO,
a native of the Marquesas Islands, and a member of the Foreign Mission School, who died June 19, 1823, aged about 19 years.

"He was hopefully pious, and had a great desire to be qualified to become a missionary to his ignorant countrymen. But he died in hope of a better country.

"This stone is erected by the liberality of his Christian friends in N. Coventry, Conn., among whom he first found the Saviour of sinners."

* Condensed from a historical address delivered by William G. Fennell, Aug. 13, 1880.

† For history of Methodist Episcopal Church at Cornwall, see Supplement.

There were not only Chinese, Japanese, and Portuguese, but the Cherokee tribe of Indians was represented at this school. Two members of this tribe became enamored with two of the young ladies of the village, offered marriage and were accepted. This created a good deal of feeling, and finally ended in breaking up the school.

"Cream Hill Agricultural School was established in May, 1845, by Dr. S. W. and T. S. Gold, at their farm on Cream Hill, and continued till April, 1869, twenty-four years. At the beginning there were but four pupils, afterwards increased to twenty, the limit of the school. The object was to unite, with classical and scientific education, theoretical and practical instruction in agriculture,—to encourage a taste for the pursuits of rural life, to develop and strengthen the body as well as the mind. The results of the plan were eminently satisfactory, and we look with pleasure upon our pupils, scattered everywhere, in positions of honor and usefulness; but especially is the record of those who, in the opening of their manhood, took up arms in defense of their country our especial delight and pride, while with tender hearts we recall those who were permitted to offer their lives a sacrifice that the nation might live."—T. S. GOLD.

The Adelphic Institute was opened at North Cornwall by Ambrose S. Rogers in 1847, and continued until 1860, when it was removed to New Milford, and conducted until 1876. (See history of New Milford, elsewhere in this work.)

William C. and Miss L. Rogers' school was started by the former in 1852. He was subsequently succeeded by his sister, Miss L. Rogers. It continued about two years.

Noah R. Hart and his brother, E. Burton Hart, established a boys' boarding-school in West Cornwall in 1853. It was discontinued in 1863.

The Young Ladies' Institute, or "Our Birds' Nest," was founded in 1852 by Mr. H. T. S. Johnson, a prominent citizen of the town. This school had a successful existence, and says Mr. T. S. Gold, "The memories of 'Our Birds' Nest' are cherished by many scattered here and there in our land as among the brightest and happiest associations of their lives."

The Alger Institute was established in 1848, and named in honor of Charles Alger, of Hudson, N. Y. It passed through various hands, and was finally abandoned as a school.

(For present condition of schools, see County History.)

PHYSICIANS.

Most of those who have practiced medicine in Cornwall have been referred to elsewhere. Dr. Hollister, from Salisbury, resided at the Centre for several years, about 1830. Dr. John Scoville, after practicing at North Cornwall for fifteen years, about 1845 removed to Ashley Falls, Mass., where he now resides. Dr. Smith, from Kent, practiced at West Cornwall about 1843, and went West. Dr. Edward Sanford, from Goshen, resided at West Cornwall for nearly thirty years, till 1876, when he bought the residence of the late Dr. B. B. North, at South Cornwall, and continues his practice there. Dr. Elias B. Heady is now practicing at Cornwall Bridge. Sufficient to say of them that they have been faithful, and generally successful in affording such relief to suffering humanity as comes within the power of the physician to bestow.

In January, 1878, Franklin W. Hall, M.D., from New Haven, took up his residence at West Cornwall as a physician.

CEMETERIES.

The oldest burial-ground used in Cornwall was on the hill west of the present residence of Ozias Palmer. Few marked graves remain, as some bodies have been removed, and time has effaced the testimonials from others. Its neglected condition is discreditable.

The cemetery near South Cornwall has been occupied nearly one hundred and twenty years, as we find tombstones marked 1763, and some may be earlier. By the liberality of Mr. J. C. Calhoun, assisted by others, not only has this ground been enlarged and handsomely laid out, but provision has been made for its care in the future. Mr. Calhoun left one thousand dollars as a fund, the interest to be annually expended in the care of the cemetery.

Cornwall Hollow has the old cemetery on the hill, on the road leading to Goshen, west side, and the new one, opened early in the present century, near the Baptist church.

About fifty years since a small burying-ground was set apart near North Cornwall. This has since been enlarged. There is another in the southwest part of the town, near Cornwall Bridge, and still another in the southeast part, on the old Warren turnpike. A few stones still standing near the North Cornwall church mark the graves of some who died of small-pox. Others who died of the same disease are buried on the old Wright farm, on the old Sharon and Goshen turnpike, where a marble monument marks the burial-place of Capt. Joel Wright and family.

CIVIL HISTORY.

This town was incorporated in May, 1740. The following is a list of the representatives from 1761 to 1881:

1761–62.—Thomas Russell, Joshua Pierce.
1763.—Thomas Russell, Joshua Pierce, Amos Johnson.
1764–65.—Thomas Russell, Joshua Pierce.
1766.—Noah Rogers, Heman Swift, Thomas Russell.
1767.—Thomas Russell, Heman Swift.
1768.—Thomas Russell, Elijah Steele, Heman Swift, Thomas Porter.
1769.—Joshua Pierce, Thomas Porter, Thomas Russell.
1770.—Joshua Pierce, Thomas Porter, Heman Swift.
1771.—Heman Swift, Thomas Porter.
1772–73.—Thomas Russell, Heman Swift, Thomas Porter.
1774.—Thomas Porter, John Pierce, Heman Swift.
1775.—Heman Swift, Thomas Porter, Edward Rogers, John Pierce.
1776.—Edward Rogers, John Pierce, Thomas Porter, Judah Kellogg.
1777.—Edward Rogers, John Pierce, Judah Kellogg.
1778.—Edward Rogers, Judah Kellogg, Abraham Payne.

1779.—Judah Kellogg, Edward Rogers, Andrew Young.
1780.—Edward Rogers, Andrew Young.
1781.—Mathew Patterson, Noah Rogers.
1782.—John Sedgwick, Mathew Patterson.
1783.—John Sedgwick, Matthew Patterson, Andrew Young, Edward Rogers.
1784.—Andrew Young, John Sedgwick.
1785.—John Sedgwick, Matthew Patterson, Heman Swift.
1786.—John Sedgwick, Samuel Wadsworth, Heman Swift, Matthew Patterson.
1787.—Matthew Patterson, Heman Swift, Rev. Hezekiah Gold, Rev. John Cornwall.
1788.—Rev. John Cornwall, John Pierce, Samuel Wadsworth, Ebenezer Jackson.
1789.—Ebenezer Jackson, Samuel Wadsworth.
1790.—John Sedgwick, Ebenezer Jackson.
1791.—John Sedgwick, Dr. Timothy Rogers, Tryal Tanner.
1792.—John Sedgwick, Timothy Rogers, Isaac Swift.
1793.—John Sedgwick, Isaac Swift, Samuel Wadsworth, Tryal Tanner.
1794.—Samuel Wadsworth, Isaac Swift.
1795.—John Sedgwick, Ebenezer Jackson, Isaac Swift, Samuel Wadsworth.
1796.—John Sedgwick, Isaac Swift.
1797.—John Sedgwick, Isaac Swift, Judah Kellogg.
1798.—Elijah Steele, Jr., Tryal Tanner, John Sedgwick, Judah Kellogg.
1799.—John Sedgwick, Isaac Swift, Samuel Wadsworth, Judah Kellogg.
1800.—Judah Kellogg, John Sedgwick, Samuel Wadsworth.
1801.—Judah Kellogg, Oliver Burnham, Samuel Wadsworth.
1802.—John Sedgwick, Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1803-4.—Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1805.—John Sedgwick, Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1806-7.—Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1808.—Oliver Burnham, John Calhoun, Benjamin Gold.
1809.—Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1810.—Oliver Burnham, Benjamin Gold, John Calhoun.
1811-12.—John Sedgwick, Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1813.—Oliver Burnham, Noah Rogers, Reuben Fox.
1814.—Noah Rogers, Benjamin Gold, Oliver Burnham.
1815.—Noah Rogers, John H. Pierce, Oliver Burnham.
1816.—Oliver Burnham, John H. Pierce, Philo Swift.
1817.—Philo Swift, Oliver Burnham, James Alling.
1818.—Noah Rogers, Philo Swift.

After this the new constitution began to operate, and the representatives were chosen annually, not biennially.

1819.—Oliver Burnham, John H. Pierce.
1820.—Oliver Burnham, William Kellogg.
1821.—William Bennet, Samuel Hopkins.
1822-23.—Oliver Burnham, Samuel Hopkins.
1824-27.—Peter Bierce, Benjamin Sedgwick.
1828.—Seth Pierce, Jr., Peter Bierce.
1829.—Peter Bierce, John A. Sedgwick.
1830-31.—George Wheaton, Frederick Kellogg.
1832.—Benjamin Catlin, Frederick Kellogg.
1833.—Benjamin Catlin, Victorianus Clark.
1834.—Victorianus Clark, Philo Kellogg.
1835.—Philo Kellogg, Anson Rogers.
1836.—Caleb Jones, William Clark.
1837.—Caleb Jones, Myron Harrison.
1838.—Caleb Jones, Benjamin Sedgwick.
1839.—John C. Calhoun, Isaac Marsh.
1840.—Isaac Marsh, John R. Harrison.
1841.—John R. Harrison, Frederick Kellogg.
1842-43.—William Hindman, Edwin White.
1844.—John Scovill, John E. Sedgwick.
1845.—Edward R. White, Joseph Essex.
1846.—Carrington Todd, William Hindman.
1847.—Chalker Pratt, John C. Calhoun.
1848.—John Scovill, Myron Harrison.
1849.—Hezekiah C. Gregory, Reuben Wilcox.
1850.—Amos M. Johnson, Charles Lewis.
1851.—Edward W. Andrews, Isaac Marsh.
1852.—Isaac Marsh, Charles Lewis.
1853.—John R. Harrison, William Hindman.
1854.—Jacob Scovill, Henry Swift.
1855.—Sherman Barnes, Earl Johnson.
1856.—Jacob Scovill, Samuel S. Reed.
1857.—Ralph C. Harrison, John W. Beers.
1858.—Russell R. Pratt, Edward F. Gold.
1859.—Alvin B. Palmer, George H. Swift.
1860.—Nathan Hart, Jr., Rossiter B. Hopkins.
1861.—Dwight W. Pierce, Philo C. Sedgwick.
1862.—Stephen Foote, H. C. Gregory.
1863.—Marcus D. F. Smith, John McMurtry.
1864.—S. P. Judson, John McMurtry.
1865.—Robert T. Miner, E. Burton Hart.
1866.—Gad W. Smith, Solon B. Johnson.
1867.—Silas C. Beers, H. C. Crandall.
1868.—George L. Miner, Edward Sanford.
1869.—William H. Harrison, M. A. Nickerson.
1870.—William H. H. Hewitt, George C. Harrison.
1871.—Alanson Preston, Niles Scoville.
1872.—Henry L. Beers, Chester Wickwire.
1873.—Virgil F. McNiel, Robert N. Cochrane.
1874.—Luman Harrison, Smith Beach.
1875.—Myron I. Millard, George H. Crandall.
1876.—Henry L. Beers, Ralph I. Scoville.
1877.—William L. Clark, Ingersoll Reed.
1878.—Elbert Shepard, Amos Waterbury.
1879.—Daniel W. Manvel, James A. Cochrane.
1880.—Sebia Wells, James F. Reed.
1881.—Horace C. Hart, Russell Bierce.

SENATORS FROM THE TOWN, BEGINNING IN 1837.

1837-38, Peter Bierce; 1844-45, Philo Kellogg; 1847, Samuel W. Gold; 1855, George A. Wheaton; 1859, Samuel W. Gold; 1870, Victory C. Beers.

MILITARY HISTORY.

SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTION.

Phineas Hart was a pensioner. He lived to about eighty years. When over seventy he walked a journey in one week of over three hundred miles. He lived and died at a house on the Canaan road, a little north of James Reed's.

Capt. Edward Rogers, the father of Col. Anson Rogers, was an officer both in the French and Revolutionary wars. He held a captain's commission during the latter. He was a man of good judgment, genial manners, and kindness of heart. His papers, still in possession of his descendants, show his abundant labors, and, in lack of a complete list of soldiers furnished by Cornwall, we give a mileage list of his company, also an alarm list, which is marked as Capt. Rogers' company, though the names of other captains are attached to it. Some erasures and some additions on the list as here printed, in different ink, indicate it as having done duty for some time. This contains all the names on it:

An Abstract of the Mileage of Capt. Edward Rogers' Company, in the late Col. F. Gay's Regiment, returning at the end of the campaign.

Men's Names.	Discharged at	Returning to	Miles Distant.	s.	d.
Edward Rogers, captain	North Castle	Cornwall	77	6	5
Nathaniel Hamlin, lieutenant	"	Sharon	77	6	5
Hezh. Andrews, lieutenant	"	Canaan	87	7	3
Joel Hinman, ensign	"	Woodbury	55	4	7
Joshua Parmele, sergeant	"	Cornwall	77	6	5
William Avery, sergeant	"	Sharon	77	6	5
Jacob Williams, sergeant	"	Canaan	87	7	3
Simeon Barnes, sergeant	"	Woodbury	55	4	7
Timothy Doughty, drummer	Philipsborough	Sharon	83	6	11
Samuel Darrow, fifer	Norwalk	Canaan	70	5	10
Timothy Knapp, corporal	"	Cornwall	60	5	0
Gershom Dormon, corporal	North Castle	Sharon	77	6	5
Daniel Harris, corporal	Norwalk	Canaan	70	5	10
John Denmin, corporal	North Castle	Woodbury	55	4	7
Solomon Emmons	"	Cornwall	77	6	5
Francis Brown	"	"	77	6	5
Timothy Rowley	"	"	77	6	5
Joseph Brown	"	"	77	6	5
Daniel Harrison	"	"	77	6	5
James Wilson	Norwalk	"	60	5	0
John White, Sr.	Philipsborough	"	83	6	11
James Sterling	Norwalk	"	60	5	0
Ichabod Brown	North Castle	"	77	6	5
Benjamin Carrier	Philipsborough	Canaan	93	7	9
Roswel Fuller	North Castle	"	87	7	3
Aaron Brownell	"	"	87	7	3
Samuel Partridge	"	"	87	7	3
David Whitney	"	"	87	7	3
William Fellows	"	"	87	7	3
Peter Tooley	Norwalk	"	70	5	10
Asa Cole	"	"	70	5	10
Ebenezer Pardee	Dead.
Nehemiah Smith	Norwalk	Canaan	70	5	10
Asa Smith	"	"	70	5	10
John Whitney	North Castle	"	87	7	3
George White	"	"	87	7	3
David Lawrence	"	"	87	7	3
Uriah Williams	Norwalk	"	70	5	10
John Curtice	North Castle	"	87	7	3
Luke Rowland	Norwalk	"	70	5	10
Jonathan Blinn	"	"	70	5	10
Samuel Franklin	North Castle	"	87	7	3
Elisha Forbes	"	"	87	7	3
John Cusehoy	Dead.
Lewis Hurd	North Castle	Woodbury	55	4	7
Solomon Reynolds	"	"	55	4	7
Simeon Rood	Norwalk	"	40	3	4
Timothy Johnson	North Castle	"	55	4	7
David Franklin	Dead.
Andrew Coe	North Castle	Woodbury	55	4	7
David Douglass	In captivity.
John White (2d)	North Castle	Sharon	77	6	5
Samuel Lamson	Dead.
Elnathan Knapp	Norwalk	Sharon	60	5	0
Daniel Coon	North Castle	"	77	6	5
Cornelius Hamlin	"	"	77	6	5
Thomas Hamlin	Norwalk	"	60	5	0
William Robinson	North Castle	"	77	6	5
Joel Jackson	Norwalk	"	60	5	0
Asa Hamlin	North Castle	"	77	6	5
Shuman Abels	Philipsborough	"	83	6	11
Peter Pratt	North Castle	"	77	6	5
David Simons	Philipsborough	"	83	6	11
Gamaliel Pardee	Norwalk	"	40	5	0
David Hicock	North Castle	Woodbury	55	4	7
Adam Wagner	"	"	55	4	7
Daniel Potter	"	"	55	4	7
Nathan Bristol	"	"	55	4	7
Ephraim Herrick	"	"	55	4	7
Justus Johnson	"	"	55	4	7
Lemuel Gillet	Dead.
James Daley	In captivity.
William Jakways	Norwalk	Caanan	70	5	10
Samuel Sirdam	"	"	70	5	10
Isaac Cool	"	"	70	5	10
Samuel Williams	North Castle	"	87	7	3

A List of the Number and Names of such as are of the Alarm List who have their Abode within the Limits of the Fourth Company, or Train-band, in the Fourteenth Regiment in the State of Connecticut:

Col. Heman Swift,	Elijah Hopkins,	James McClary,
Capt. Thomas Porter,	Jonathan Crocker,	Nehemiah Barsley,
Lieut. Ebenezer Dibble,	Elnathan Patterson,	Silas Clark,
Lieut. Matt. Patterson,	Sherman Patterson,	Kitchel Bell,
Ensign Benoni Peck,	Hezekiah Barse,	Samuel Bassett,
Abraham Payne,	Josiah Patterson,	John Dibble (2d),
James Barse,	Samuel Sawyer,	John Dibble (3d),
Thomas Dean,	Sele Abbott,	Timothy Cole,
Hezekiah Carter,	Job Simmons,	Noah Bull,—
David Lindsly,	Jesse Jerrards,	38 in number.
Samuel Sawyer,	Rufus Payne,	—
John Millard, Jr.,	John McHannah,	33
Peter Rumer,	Samuel Abbott,	38
John Carter,	Jethro Bonney,	—
John Sprague,	Abel Abbott,	74 Capt. Rogers' company.

CORNWALL, 17th March, 1777. pr. JOSHUA PIERCE, Captain of the Company.

CAPT. ROGERS.

The subjoined order for teams shows that the pressure of military necessity was felt even among our hills:

"These Lines are to Sertify all whom it may Conserne that I the Subscriber was sent by Mr. Isaac Bauldwin A. D. Qt. to Edward Rogers with a desir for him to Procure ten teams in this Place to transport one Hundred Barrels of flower to Litchfield on next Sabooth Day. If the teams Cannot be procured no other way they must be pressed.

"pr. JOS. GREGORY.

"CORNWALL, April 9, 1779."

Gen. John Sedgwick was an officer in the war of the Revolution. He was superseded by Col. Heman Swift, which offended him to such a degree that he resigned his commission and retired from the army. He was a brave and good officer. For many years he represented the town in the legislature. His energy at the time of Shay's Rebellion, in 1787, saved our county from participation in the affair.

Col. Ethan Allen was the son of Daniel Allen, who resided in Cornwall, and, though it does not appear that Col. Allen was born here, yet most of his boyhood was spent here, and we rightly claim some share in the honor which attaches to his name. The residence of his father was on the corner south of the North Cornwall church, a large old house, torn down about 1830.

Gen. Heman Swift came from Kent about the year 1764–65, and settled on the road from Sharon to Warren and Litchfield, about half a mile southeast up the hill from the residence of his son, the late Rufus Swift, Esq. Early in life he was selected by his fellow-citizens for public service, both in a military and civil capacity. He was an officer in the old French war, and in the Continental army, having received a colonel's commission over Maj. John Sedgwick, which circumstance created a momentary excitement, and the major resigned his commission and retired from the army. But this breach of good feeling did not long continue. Col. Heman Swift continued in active service during most of the war of the Revolution. He was a personal friend of Washington, by whom he was held in high esteem.

Col. Swift's early education was very limited. This circumstance prevented the attainment of as high a position as otherwise he might have occupied. He was for many years after the close of the war a member of the Upper House of the State legislature. He possessed a noble personal appearance, and during the later period of his life bore the title of "General." He died in November, 1814.

Capt. John Jeffers was a Revolutionary soldier in the Continental army against the British and Indians. The military company which was under Jeffers' command, and which he often led to perform feats of valor, received the gentle appellation of "Hell-Hounds." When in 1812 war was declared by the United States against England, Jeffers made application to a distinguished member of Congress for a brigadier-general's commission in the army; but this request was not granted.

Few, if any, of the distinguished men who have borne an active part in the transactions of Cornwall since its first settlement would rank before the Hon. Oliver Burnham, whose late residence still remains, though in a dilapidated condition, about a quarter of a mile south of the North Cornwall church. His father, at the time of his death, was a resident of Cream Hill. The son Oliver served, while very young, as a soldier in the army of the Revolution, and in consequence of a wound produced at that time he received a small annuity from the government. He occupied the place of county surveyor for many years. For twenty or twenty-five years he represented the town in the General Assembly, usually in the House of Representatives, and served one term in the Senate. He held the office of magistrate until exempted by age, and served a short time as judge of the County Court. He was a native of Farmington, and born on Nov. 11, 1760. When he was fifteen years of age he enlisted as a soldier in the regiment of Col. Willis, and went in December, 1775, to join Gen. Washington's army, then near Boston. He served with distinguished credit during many hard-fought battles; was captured, and thrown into prison in New York, but finally escaped.

As a politician, Judge Burnham possessed much shrewdness and tact. For many years he probably held a greater influence in the affairs of the town than any other individual. His vigorous intellect remained unimpaired until he attained about fourscore years. Although partial to the Episcopal Church, he was a regular supporter of the Congregational society. He died in the eightieth year of his age.

Among the residents of Cornwall who took an active part in the struggle of the Revolution was Jacob Scoville. He served as a private soldier through most of the war, and in his old age received the benefit of a pension. He was a single man through his military service, at the close of which he married a Widow Emmons, whose first husband died in a prison-ship in New York.

THE WAR OF THE REBELLION.

Of the sons of Cornwall who gave their lives for their country three lie buried in the Hollow cemetery; one alone has a monument with this short epitaph:

"MAJ.-GEN. JOHN SEDGWICK,
Born in Cornwall Hollow,
Sept. 13, 1813.
Killed near Spottsylvania C.-H., Va., May 9, 1864."

Any attempt to do justice to the eminent services of Gen. Sedgwick must of course be a failure. "Among the distinguished heroes for the maintenance of the Union none held a more exalted position, or, dying, left a purer record on the page of our country's history, than Maj.-Gen. John Sedgwick."

In 1832, in a letter to Gen. Cass recommending young Sedgwick for an appointment at West Point, the late Mr. Gold wrote, "I believe, if permitted to enjoy that privilege, he would do honor to the institution, and become of some service to his country." Would that all our recommendations to public places could be as well honored. Graduating with honor in 1837, he was first engaged in the Seminole war in Florida; the next year, under Gen. Scott, employed in the removal of the Cherokees to their Western reservation; next we find him fighting in Mexico, under Taylor, Worth, and Scott. Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Puebla, Churubusco, El Molino del Rey, and Mexico herself witnessed his valor.

The war of the Rebellion opened while he was on the frontiers, beyond Pike's Peak. Called to the Army of the Potomac, the command of which was twice offered to him and twice declined, he fought at Fair Oaks, Antietam, Fredericksburg, and the battles of the Wilderness, till he met a soldier's death at Spottsylvania.

Notwithstanding his familiarity with scenes of blood and carnage, he was as tender as a father of his men; and though so long in public life, and removed from the scenes of his boyhood, his love for them, for his ancestral acres,—for they had memories of which a soldier and a patriot might well be proud,—his love for the simple pursuits of husbandry, was as strong as if he had never wandered from his native vale.

But Gen. Sedgwick was known as one who never forgot his ancestral home. The adornment of his paternal acres was his pride, and it was his hope and ambition to retire from public life, here to enjoy that quiet which his duties as a soldier prohibited. The same qualities which made him a good officer made him a good farmer, and his example and influence as a cultivator of the soil will be no less enduring than as a patriot soldier.

In 1858 the old Sedgwick residence, which had been so speedily rebuilt for his grandfather when it was burned by the Tories in Revolutionary times, was consumed by fire. Here Gen. Sedgwick built a noble mansion for his own occupancy; but it was a sad day to his friends and neighbors gathered there, May 15, 1864, to perform the last offices to the patriot dead.

In the same cemetery, with unmarked graves, rest Harvey Ford and Mr. Read, colored.

In the North Cornwall cemetery we find the names of Lieut. William H. Coggswell, died Sept. 22, 1864, aged 25 years, 2 months, and 23 days. He enlisted as private in the Fifth Regiment C. V., June 22, 1861, and was promoted in the Second Connecticut Artillery for gallant services, Sept. 11, 1862. He was in the battles of Peaked Mountain, Winchester, Cedar Mountain, Cold Harbor, and Opequan, and died from wounds received in last battle.

Crawford H. Nodine, son of Robert G. and Clara Hart Nodine, died of wounds received at the battle of Cedar Mountain, Sept. 3, 1862, aged 21.

Capt. Amos T. Allen, Co. C, Eleventh Regiment C. V., only brother of Susan Brewster, died of wounds received at the battle of Cold Harbor, July 6, 1864, aged 25 years. He was engaged in the following battles: Winchester, May 25, 1862; Cedar Mountain, Aug. 9, 1862; Fredericksburg, Dec. 12 to 15, 1862; Suffolk, April 24, 1863; near Suffolk, May 3, 1863; Swift's Creek, May 9, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 3, 1864.

Charles McCormick, born Sept. 15, 1836; died Sept. 17, 1865, from disease contracted in the service. He was a member of Co. I, Fifth Regiment C. V., and in the battles of Winchester, Cedar Mountain, Chancellorsville, and Gettysburg, and orderly-sergeant of his company, under Gen. Sherman, in all battles from Chattanooga to the surrender of the rebels under Johnson.

William Green, died March 29, 1874, aged 46; born in Sheffield, England.

Myron Hubbell, died at Alexandria, Va., Nov. 24, 1862, aged 38.

Edward Barnum, a native of Cornwall, though he enlisted elsewhere, died in 1875.

Edgar Elias, enlisted in the Eighth N. Y. Regiment, and served through the war. He died in Cornwall in 1875.

Soldiers buried in the cemetery at Cornwall.

Rev. Jacob Eaton, chaplain of Seventh Regiment C. V. I., died at Wilmington, N. C., March 20, 1865, aged 32 years; a volunteer in the war of 1861. A noble Christian patriot.

George W. Pendleton, a member of Co. C, First Connecticut Artillery; died while in the service of his country, at Washington, D. C., Sept. 11, 1862, aged 22 years.

Corp. Henry L. Vail, died at Winchester, Va., Nov. 3, 1864, by a rebel bullet through the neck and shoulder, aged 23.

John Hawver, died Aug. 1, 1868, aged 30.

Philo F. Cole, died Jan. 4, 1863, aged 27.

William R., son of Rufus and Mary S. Payne, died Feb. 20, 1865, aged 33.

William B. North, born June 25, 1835, died March 18, 1866.

Thomas Sherman returned at the close of the war with the Second Connecticut Artillery, and died in 1866.

Zina D. Hotchkiss, a member of Co. G, Second Connecticut Artillery, died in 1875.

The remains of five are buried in the cemetery in the southwest part of the town.

Albert Robinson, sergeant of Co. G, Second Connecticut H. A., died at Baltimore, Md., March 26, 1865, aged 33 years.

George Page, killed at the battle of Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864, aged 25. A member of Co. G, Second Connecticut H. A.

Lewis Sawyer, died at the city of Washington, Aug. 24, 1864, aged 24 years. A member of Co. G, Second Connecticut H. A.

Horace Sickman, a member of Co. G, Second Conn. H. A., died in Washington, July 19, 1864, aged 29 years.

Hermon E. Bonney, died at Philadelphia, June 28, 1864, aged 28 years. A member of Second Connecticut H. A.

I am indebted to H. P. Milford, of Cornwall Bridge, for the names of Cornwall soldiers in Company G, Nineteenth Connecticut Volunteers, afterwards Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, with some incidents of their history. Mr. Milford went as corporal, entering camp at Litchfield, Aug. 21, 1862, and was quartermaster-sergeant at the time of his discharge, July 7, 1865.

The following-named men were residents of Cornwall at the time of their enlistment:

Edward F. Gold, captain; John M. Gregory, lieutenant, lost an arm at the battle of Cedar Creek; Gad M. Smith became captain; Henry S. Dean, wounded at Cold Harbor; Henry P. Milford, Joseph Payne, killed at Cold Harbor; Myron Hubbell, died of sickness; Albert L. Benedict, Frederick Butler, Franklin B. Bierce, Jerome Chipman, Nelson Clark, Philo Cole, died; Josiah B. Corban, Patrick Delaney, Edward Hawver, wounded at Cedar Creek; Nelson T. Jennings, George L. Jones, David Kimball, Sydney Lapham, John Lapham, Elijah C. Mallory, Ralph J. Miner, Henry Peck, killed at Winchester; George W. Page, killed at Cedar Creek; Lucien G. Rouse, died; Charles R. Swift, Lewis Sawyer, died; Thomas Sherman, Charles H. Smith, Elisha Soule, killed at Cedar Creek; Patrick Troy, died from wounds received at Winchester; Allen Williams, died; Horace Williams, brother to the above; Robert Bard.

The following joined the company from Cornwall as recruits:

Herman E. Bonney, died; Albert H. Bailey, George W. Baldwin, John Hawver, wounded at Cold Harbor; John Christie, Hubert D. Huxley, Zinah D. Hotchkiss, Dwight A. Hotchkiss, father and son; Timothy Leonard, Paschal P. North, died; Nathan Payne, W. S. Palmer, Frederick J. Pierce, Swift B. Smith, John Tulley, William White, died; James H. Van Buren,—this was a boy in the drum corps; he was wounded in the leg at Winchester, had the limb amputated twice, and died of the wound.

I. S. Gould

Assistant Adjt.-Gen. Simeon J. Fox has kindly furnished me the names of recruits from the town of Cornwall from and after July 1, 1863. Those previously named have been stricken from this list.

FIRST ARTILLERY.

John Swift, Isaac Doughty.

SECOND ARTILLERY.

Newton W. Coggswell, John H. Taylor, Orville Slover, Horace Sickmund, William A. Slover, Norman Mansfield, Lorenzo Moseley, Frederick Saxe, Lockwood Waldron, John R. Thompson, George Burton, Henry M. Marshall, Sylvester Graves, Charles C. Bosworth, Patrick Ryan, James Adams.

FIRST CAVALRY.

Michael R. Oates, James McLane, Edward Suter, James Carey, John Brady, John McCabe, James Flood, William H. Benton, George B. Clark, William Rogers, Frederick Beam, James Kelly, John Boyd, John Kelly.

FIFTH INFANTRY.

Charles McCormick, Tracy A. Bristol, William H. McMurtry, Adam Coons.

SEVENTH INFANTRY.

Hiram F. Hawver.

EIGHTH INFANTRY.

Charles Dixon, John Williams, Peter Smith, Henry Root, Bennett Smith, Henry C. Smith, William Petri, Hiram Allen, William Murphy, Nelson Hart, Charles E. Dibble.

NINTH INFANTRY.

Wm. C. Wilson.

TENTH INFANTRY.

John Martin, Andrew Hall.

ELEVENTH INFANTRY.

Thomas Quinlan, Frederick Krellmer, Francis Ginnetty, Gustave Krall, James Armit, Joseph Moreau, Charles Marien, Pierre A. Guy.

THIRTEENTH INFANTRY.

Eugene Davidson, John McGowan, George Roraback, Henry S. Wright, Ira A. Davidson, Charles Richmond, Sylvester Titus, James H. Roraback.

FOURTEENTH INFAFTRY.

John Buckley, John McGarrick.

17th Regt., James Mills, James McDermott; 20th Regt, L. T. Drummond, Charles J. Brent; 29th Regt., John Watson, Peter Howard, Henry Johnson, George H. Green, and John Lepyon. Navy, Charles Dailey. Substitute, John Mahone.

Alvin H. Hart, sergt. Co. I, 5th Regt.; pro. to 2d lieut. Nov. 1, 1864.

Horace N. Hart, enl. in Co. I, 8th Regt., Sept. 21, 1861; must. out 1865.

John Mills, enl. at the same time with the above, and died in the service.

Henry Fieldsem, killed.

Edwin L. Nickerson, 15th Regt. Thomas A. Smith, James Wilson, and Charles Fairchild.

Charles D. Blinn went into the service as captain, and returned as colonel.

Lieut. Nettleton died at New Orleans.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

THEODORE S. GOLD.

The Gold family was among the earliest settling in Connecticut. Maj. Nathan Gold came from St. Edmondsburg, England, during the reign of Charles I., and was a land-holder in Fairfield in 1649, and in 1653 the purchaser of sixteen separate pieces of land in that town. He was one of the nineteen petitioners for the charter of Connecticut, granted by Charles II. in 1662, "which petition was signed by no gentleman unless he had sustained a high reputation in England before he came to this country." His only son, Nathan Gold, Jr., succeeded him as member of the Council, and held the office of lieutenant-governor for fifteen years.

Nathan Gold, Jr., married Hannah, daughter of Lieutenant-Governor John Talcott, one of the abovementioned petitioners. From this union came a numerous family. One son, Rev. Hezekiah Gold, of Stratford (Harvard, 1719), had a large family, mostly daughters, who have had many descendants prominent in the State. One son, Rev. Hezekiah Gold, of Cornwall (Yale, 1751), came to Cornwall as pastor of the Congregational Church in 1755. He was a farmer as well as minister, and, using his education to good purpose, he was called "the best farmer in his parish." His first wife was Sarah, sister of Hon. Theodore Sedgwick. They had four sons,—Thomas (Yale, 1778), a lawyer of Pittsfield, Mass. (a granddaughter was the wife of Henry W. Longfellow); Benjamin, a large farmer in Cornwall, whose descendants were so numerous that, at the death of his wife, they numbered over one hundred.

Benjamin Gold was for many years a deacon in the First Congregational Church in Cornwall, and held many offices of trust in the town. Two of his sons, Stephen J. and Job Swift, were successful inventors. Five of his grandsons served in the war of the Rebellion, viz.:

Edward F. Gold, of Cornwall, son of Benjamin F., captain Company G, Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery.

Henry Martyn Gold, son of H. Sedgwick, was killed early in the war.

Frank Boudinot, son of Harriet Gold, captain New York Mounted Rifles, died in consequence of his horse falling on him; a bold, dashing officer, much beloved by his men.

Theodore Freelinghuysen Vaill, son of Rev. Herman Vaill and Flora Gold, adjutant Second Connecticut Heavy Artillery, wounded near the close of the war; died of typhoid fever; author of the history of the regiment, and editor of the Winsted Herald. Joseph H. Vaill, his brother, present editor of the Winsted Herald, was an officer in the Eighth Connecticut.

Thomas Ruggles (Yale, 1786), an eminent lawyer of Whitesboro', N. Y. He was prominent in politics, and member of Congress from New York for about twenty years. He had several children, who sustained the good record of the family; Hezekiah, the youngest son, was a farmer. He married Rachel Wadsworth, granddaughter of James Douglas, one of the original proprietors and first settlers of Cornwall. This branch of the Douglas family has given many honored names to the county. He received by his wife a farm, of the original Douglas land, on "Cream Hill," where they settled, to which he added by purchase. His grandson, T. S. Gold, now owns and occupies his estate.

Dr. Samuel Wadsworth (William, 1814), only son of Hezekiah Gold, practiced medicine for twenty-five years in New York State and Goshen, Conn., returning to his farm in Cornwall in 1842. In 1845 he, in connection with his son, Theodore S. Gold, established the "Cream Hill Agricultural School." This was successfully conducted for twenty-four years. He was State senator in 1847 and 1859, and Presidential elector in 1857. Dr. Gold was a thorough student of medicine and a successful practitioner. He was a frequent contributor to the medical and other journals of the day. As an educator, he applied to good advantage his professional knowledge and ripe experience. As a farmer, he early recognized the necessity of clearing his fields of rocks for successful agriculture, and in 1823 was the first to attack the great bowlders that crowded Cornwall farms. The horse-rake and mowing-machine (in 1857) were first used in Cornwall on his "Cream Hill" farm. This was an impossibility in the original condition of the fields.

He was persistent in his efforts to promote the social, moral, and educational interests of the community, and lived to see many of his favorite projects realized. Improved roads and substantial schoolhouses remain as material monuments to his energy and public spirit. He died Sept. 10, 1869, aged seventy-five years.

Theodore Sedgwick, only son of Samuel W. and Phebe (Cleveland) Gold, was born at Madison, N. Y., March 2, 1818. He prepared for college at Goshen Academy, where his father then resided: was graduated from Yale in 1838, and spent three years after graduation as teacher of Goshen and Waterbury Academies, and as student of medicine, botany, and mineralogy at New Haven.

In 1845 the "Cream Hill Agricultural School" was established, and was successfully conducted, until closed in 1866, by Dr. Gold and Theodore. To a family school the household department is of the utmost importance, and a reference to this school would be incomplete without a passing tribute to the memory of Mrs. S. W. and Mrs. T. S. Gold, who by their kind interest for the comfort and welfare of the pupils and their self-sacrificing labors secured the affection of those in their charge,—a remembrance never to be effaced.

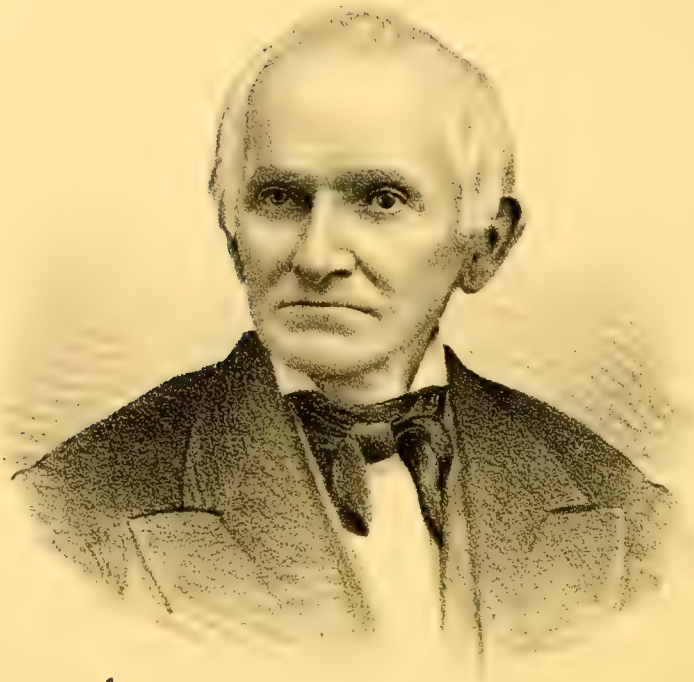
On Mr. Gold's farm of about four hundred acres it is probable that more has been done in clearing land from rocks, and in building heavy stone walls, than on any other farm in the State during the occupancy of one person. His favorite work has been the advancement of the general agricultural interests of Connecticut. In 1842 he, with others, formed the "Farmers' Club of West Cornwall." He has been its secretary from the first. He originated the movement in 1850 which resulted in the formation, in 1852, of the "Connecticut State Agricultural Society," and from its organization has held some official position connected therewith. In 1866, at the establishment of the "Connecticut Board of Agriculture," he was chosen its secretary, which position he yet holds. He is also one of the trustees of the "Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station," established in 1877. He was one of the editors of The Homestead, an agricultural paper published at Hartford from 1855 to 1861. Mr. Gold has held the office of deacon in the Second Congregational Church of Cornwall since 1872.

In public and private life Mr. Gold has shown untiring energy and ability. By public lectures, newspaper articles, and personal efforts he has kept at work in his favorite department. During the past fifty years the progress of agriculture has been most gratifying, and it is sufficient honor to any man to have been a participator and an efficient aid in this progress. Mr. Gold's "Cream Hill" farm shows this progress as much as any part of the State. The clearing and drainage of fields, the planting and care of orchards, the buildings, and, lastly, the roads and roadsides, all tell of industry, intelligent, patient, untiring.

In 1864, Mr. Gold, with the other corporators, procured from the General Assembly a charter for the "Connecticut Soldiers' Orphans' Home." This was located at Mansfield, and hundreds of orphan and destitute children shared its privileges. During the maintenance of the "Home," until 1877, Mr. Gold was its secretary. In 1878, Mr. Gold published a "History of Cornwall," an 8vo of 339 pages. He married, in 1843, Caroline E. Lockwood, of Bridgeport, who died in 1857, by whom he had five daughters. Of these three are now living,—Eleanor Douglas (Mrs. Charles H. Hubbard, of Hartford City, Ind.), Rebecca Cleveland (Mrs. Samuel M. Cornell, of Guilford, Conn.), and Caroline Simons. He married for his second wife Mrs. Emma Tracy (Baldwin), also a descendant of the aforementioned John Talcott. Their children are Alice Tracy, Martha Wadsworth, Charles Lockwood, and James Douglas.

Descended from an ancestry of educated and professional men (though never forsaking the soil, and never forsaking rural pursuits), Mr. Gold in choosing agriculture for a profession has yielded to his inherited tastes, and has only kept apace with the times, which now demands for the successful prosecution of agriculture a knowledge more varied and as exact as is required by the so-called "learned professions." When agriculture asserts its demand for educated men, then we shall have an education for the farm equal in breadth to that of any other calling, and then will end the cry, "Why do the boys leave the farm?"

Punctuality in every engagement, persistent industry, and honest purpose to do good work, and to do it well, are leading characteristics of Mr. Gold, and have



Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

Geo. C. Harrison

RESIDENCE OF GEO. C. HARRISON, CORNWALL CONN.

John R Harmon

led to the overcoming of many obstacles, and to a reasonable degree of success in the many duties connected with the industrial and moral advancement of the community in which he has been engaged.

THE HARRISON FAMILY.

The family of Harrisons were among the early settlers of the town of Cornwall, Conn., and their descendants are scattered all over the United States, from Maine to California. We quote the following from T. S. Gold's "History of Cornwall," Conn.:

"The Harrisons in the Hollow are the descendants of two brothers, Daniel and Noah Harrison, who removed into the town from Branford, in 1763. Daniel lived on the hill, where the Nettletons have since lived, and he was the father of Daniel, Jr., Joel, and Luther Harrison. He died when I was very young, and his was the first burial I ever witnessed. Noah Harrison, the younger brother of Daniel, I remember very well. He was the father of Heman Harrison, deceased, and of Edmund Harrison, still living at a very advanced age.* The old house which Noah Harrison occupied is still standing, and it looks as it did sixty years ago.† Mr. Harrison and his son Heman occupied the farm on which their descendants now reside. The father, Noah, was distinguished for his skill in subduing, taming, and breaking to the yoke wild young cattle. Noah Harrison lived to a good old age. His son Heman, whom I have mentioned, was distinguished for his quiet, industrious, thrifty habits, and seemed to be a timid, bashful man, very seldom speaking when he was in company, and was seldom seen abroad. He died at a comparatively early age.

"Daniel Harrison, the son of Daniel Harrison, of whom I have spoken, was a man of marked and positive character, which would make him a leading man in any circle in which he moved. He seemed to have been literally born to command, and his right to that precedence was always acknowledged by his neighbors.

"Those bearing the name have been, with scarcely an exception, freeholders and heads of families, thus becoming closely identified with the prosperity of the community where they have resided, building up happy homes, the secure foundation of the nation. They have been law-abiding citizens, and such has been their regard for law and the rights of others that it is doubted if there has ever been one of the name in this town, or their descendants, indicted for crime. All of those now residing in Cornwall of the name (except Myron Harrison, in the Hollow, who is grandson of Daniel, 2d) are descended from Noah Harrison, who came to Cornwall from Branford in 1763, in company with Noah and Edward Rogers. His first purchase of land was a fifty-acre lot, upon which he built the house now standing near the present residence of Luman Harrison, where he lived and died in 1823, aged eighty-six. He was a man of great resolution, and a great teamster with oxen. It is said that 'the crack of his whip could be heard at a mile's distance.' During the Revolution a troop of dragoon horses were wintered on his farm, and from the man in charge Mr. Harrison and others learned to braid those whip-lashes for which the neighborhood was so famous.

"Noah Harrison married Hannah, sister of Noah and Edward Rogers, and had children,—Edmund, born May 1, 1768; Heman and Luman; and by a second marriage, Hannah, married Elias Hart, and Amanda, married Oliver Burnham Hart.

"Edmund Harrison, as a pupil of Oliver Burnham, developed a taste for mathematical studies, and became a farmer of more than ordinary intelligence. He ruled his family well, both by precept and example; was temperate in all things; a strict observer of the Sabbath, and of unblemished moral character, and in public and private life bore the title of an honest man. One of his maxims was, 'What is worthy of thy remark remember, and forget the rest.' His grandson, George C. Harrison, enjoyed much of the society of his grandfather in his later years, and gives many reminiscences of him. In his eighty-seventh year he received injuries from a fall which rendered him comparatively helpless for the remaining eleven years; yet he was always cheerful, and by reading and conversation kept well informed in the knowledge of passing events, even to the close of life, Jan. 4, 1867, aged ninety-eight years, eight months, and four days. His memory held out to the last, and his apt quotations of poetry, from book and of local origin, enlivened his conversation.

"He married Ruth Hopkins, of Warren, and had the following children, viz.: Rufus, Noah, Myron, Chandler, Lucretia, John R., Hannah, and William H."

* Mr. Edmund Harrison died in 1866, aged ninety-eight years and four months.—T. S. G.

† The brown house, still standing, but unoccupied, near the residence of Luman Harrison. It is the oldest house in town.—T. S. G.

JOHN R. HARRISON.

A word in memory of John R. Harrison, who died at Cornwall on the 31st day of August, 1880, in the seventy-third year of his age.

The subject of this sketch was born in Cornwall, Conn., on the 23d day of September, 1807. He was the fifth son of Edmund Harrison, who died Jan. 4, 1867, at the advanced age of ninety-eight years, and grandson of Noah Harrison, who came to this town from Branford, Conn., in the year 1763, and who lived to the ripe age of eighty-six years.

His early educational advantages were limited, his only opportunities of instruction being those afforded by the common district school of the period. Reared in a large family, whose parents were in moderate circumstances, he early learned to labor, and formed the habits of industry and economy.

Endowed by nature in a marked degree, he possessed a spirit replete with energetic action, and a vigorous physical manhood of prepossessing appearance. At the age of nineteen years he entered the world's grand arena of conflict, to do and win in life's great contest, with no other resources but the strength of his arm and the power of his brain. With willing hands, ready to be employed in any honorable occupation, for six years he labored, the winter seasons being devoted to teaching and mental improvement.

In March, 1833, he married Miss Eleanor Bradford, of Cornwall, and had the following children: Geo. C., born May 19, 1840; Catharine, born Aug. 1, 1843, married Wm. H. H. Hewett, and resides in New Haven; Wilbur F., born Aug. 22, 1845; and John B., born Nov. 4, 1848, and resides in Ohio. In the succeeding October he entered into the mercantile business at Cornwall Centre, that being at that time the location of the Cornwall post-office, and the only one in the town, excepting one very near the Goshen town line in Cornwall Hollow (there are now six post-offices in Cornwall). He soon became closely identified with the business and interests of the town, and for a period of more than forty years has taken an active part in its councils, meriting the confidence and esteem of his fellow-citizens, being often called by them to offices of responsibility and to the care of important trusts, both of a private and public nature, having served the town for seventeen years as selectman, thrice as a representative in the General Assembly, fifteen years as treasurer of the town deposit fund, about thirty years as justice of the peace, and as judge of probate for the district of Cornwall six years.

As an earnest Christian and member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church in Cornwall, he nobly honored his profession. He took a very active part in the erection of the present church in 1839, and was the last survivor of the building committee organized for that purpose. In his faithful Christian life, by precept and example, he has been a pillar in the church of his choice all those years, and, like a mother bereft of her children, a bereaved church today mourns over its loss.

In a full age, after a long and useful life, he came down to his grave "like a shock of corn fully ripe," not a cloud or a fear dimming his vision, as, surrounded by his children and grandchildren, who will long remember his words of parting counsel, he closed his eyes to earth and passed to the unseen world.

The funeral obsequies were attended by a large concourse of relatives and friends on the 2d of September, 1880, at the First Methodist Episcopal church, and on that calm September afternoon, by loving hands, his remains were interred in the quiet, beautiful cemetery at Cornwall, where also rest the ashes of his fathers of two preceding generations.

As a kind father, as a loving and faithful husband, as a true and sympathizing friend and counselor, as a Christian citizen, his memory will long be cherished and revered by the community in which he lived.

Geo. C. Harrison, eldest son of John R. and Eleanor (Bradford) Harrison, was born in the town of Cornwall, Conn., May 19, 1840. His advantages for an education were such as the common schools of his town afforded, supplemented by several years at the "Young Ladies' Institute," at Cornwall, Conn., and one term at Amenia, N. Y. At nineteen years of age he began teaching, and followed it during the three following winters. He was reared on a farm, which honorable business he has continued to follow till the present time (1881). He now owns some three hundred acres, which is in a good state of cultivation, situated within one mile of the centre of the town of Cornwall. His buildings are very substantial; a view of his residence and surroundings may be seen in another part of this work.

In politics he is a Democrat, and as such is justly regarded one of the leading men of the town. In 1867 he was elected town clerk, and held that office for twelve consecutive years, and at the same time was elected town treasurer, and continued to hold the same till the present time. In 1870 he was elected to the State Legislature, and served one term. In 1876 he was appointed judge of probate of the probate district of Cornwall, and held the same position for four years, and for six years previous was clerk for his father, who was judge of probate for that time.

On the 21st of February, 1862, he married Mrs. Rebecca White, widow of Edward H. White, and daughter of Carrington Todd, of Cornwall, Conn. Of this union eleven children have been born, viz.: Cynthia R., Eleanor H., Geo. E., Charlotte H., Katie J., John R. (deceased), Ruth, Gertrude, Anna, Mary M. (deceased), and Mabel.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Cornwall, Conn., and he is one of the principal supporters of the same. Mr. Harrison has always taken a deep interest in Sabbath-school work, and he has been either teacher or superintendent ever since he was old enough. Mr. Harrison, with his interesting family, promises to rival his ancestors as a citizen worthy of the trust and confidence of his fellows.

MYRON HARRISON.

Myron Harrison belongs to a family that has been associated with Cornwall from the earliest period of its history. He was of the third generation in town. Noah Harrison, grandfather of Myron, came to Cornwall from Branford among the earliest settlers in 1762. Edmund Harrison, father of Myron, was born in Cornwall, May 1, 1768. Myron Harrison was born Sept. 25, 1800, and received such educational advantages as the town afforded at the time. Was apprenticed at an early age as merchant's clerk, and at the expiration of his term of service formed a partnership with Peter Bierce, at Cornwall Bridge, and engaged in the mercantile business and the manufacture of iron. For half a century he was well known in most of the towns of the county for his quick perception and decision, strict integrity, and careful business habits; was appointed a justice of the peace soon after reaching years of majority, which office he held continuously until debarred by age. Having a natural taste for questions of law, he soon became a celebrated justice, and was often appointed by the courts to hear causes. For years he was called upon to transact most of the legal business of his section, and was ever found a careful adviser and safe counselor, and his reputation for drafting legal papers was such that lawyers hardly thought it safe to attack them.

His strict integrity and business qualifications called him in many places of trust and responsibility, all of which he discharged satisfactorily. During his life he assisted in the settlement of eighty-six estates. Was selectman of the town seven years, postmaster at Cornwall Bridge sixteen years; elected a member of the General Assembly in 1837, and was re-elected in 1848, serving upon important committees each session,—that of corporations in 1837, and railroads in 1848; county commissioner six years, and United States assistant assessor for eight years. For nearly half a century he was an active and influential member of the church at Cornwall Bridge, and was an example of temperance and sobriety, and was ever found ready to aid with his whole influence every good work. Mr. Harrison was a remarkably active, as well as genial and social, man, of dignified but unassuming manners, quick at repartee, and always ready with an anecdote to illustrate his position and points. Myron Harrison married Charlotte E. Calhoun, daughter of Dr. John Calhoun, June 2, 1830. Ralph C., son of Myron, was born Oct. 22, 1831, married Juliet Waite, and has three sons; George L. was born May 5, 1835, and Sarah C. was born Oct. 31, 1840, and has two sons.

Myron Harrison

Frederic D. Kellogg

He died Sept. 19, 1872. Ralph C. graduated at the Wesleyan University and Albany Law-School, and is now a partner in the firm of Tarbox & Harrison, one of the leading law-firms of San Francisco. George L. is general passenger and traveling agent of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad; and Sarah C. married the Hon. Victory C. Beers, and is still living at Cornwall.

FREDERICK KELLOGG.

The Kellogg family date their ancestry in this country to 1654, when Joseph Kellogg was made freeman at Farmington. In 1659 he removed to Boston. He was a weaver by trade. In 1661 he removed to Hadley, Mass. He was a lieutenant in Philip's war, and at the Falls fight he commanded the Hadley soldiers. He died in 1707, then having fourteen adult children. Of his sons, John lived at Hadley, Martin at Hatfield and Deerfield, Edward at Brookfield, Mass., Samuel at Hartford, Conn., Stephen at Westfield, Mass., Nathaniel at Hadley and Amherst, Ebenezer and Jonathan at Colchester, Conn., and Joseph at Hatfield.

Joseph, the first-named above, seems to be the first of the Kellogg family in this country. There was at the same time (1654) a Daniel Kellogg at Norwalk, Conn. He had a large family.

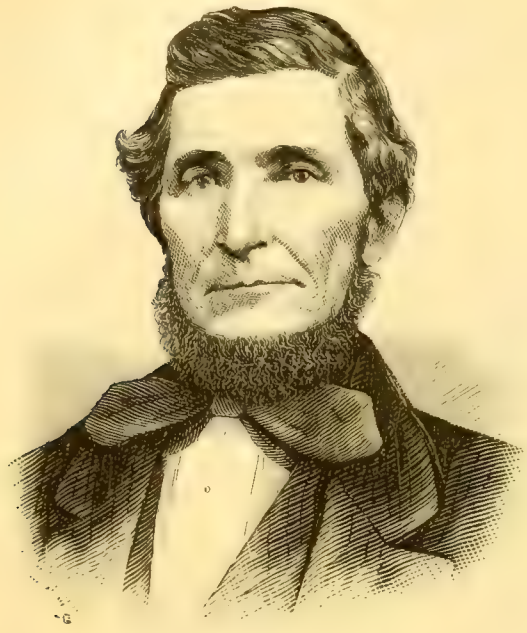
Judah Kellogg, from Colchester, graduated at Yale, 1763, taught school in Stratford, where he married Mary Tomlinson, an aunt of the late Governor Tomlinson; came to Cornwall in 1774, and bought one hundred and sixty acres of land, with a small house, of Stephen Royce. Here he lived till his death, in 1820, aged eighty. He represented the town in the General Assembly the first four years of his residence here, and was justice of the peace for a long period. Was deacon of the church. He was chosen clerk in 1776, and held till 1810. William, his oldest son, succeeded him as clerk, and at his death Frederick, the fourth son of William, was chosen to the office, which he held till 1845, the clerkship having been in the family sixty-nine years.

William Kellogg had four sons, two of whom died young. Philo, the eldest son, was a farmer, and owned and occupied the site of his grandfather Judah. He was a partner in the firm of P. & F. Kellogg for twenty years. He represented the Seventeenth District in the senate of Connecticut two terms, and was a representative from Cornwall two years. He was appointed judge of probate at the organization of the district, and held the office two years. He died in 1862, aged sixty-eight.

Frederick Kellogg, the youngest son of William, was a merchant; in 1829 he succeeded his father as town clerk, which office he held uninterruptedly for sixteen years, and was four times elected to the same office at various times afterwards. In 1852 he was appointed judge of probate for the district of Cornwall, which office he held, with the exception of two years, till constitutionally disqualified. In 1841 he was appointed county commissioner, which office he held for three years. From 1830 to 1841 he represented the town of Cornwall in the Legislature four years. Is still living, enjoying his faculties of both mind and body, and the fruits of his industry and frugality.

Frederick Kellogg was married, Sept. 14, 1829, to Ruth R., daughter of Dr. John Calhoun, of Cornwall. Four children were the result of the union, viz.: Wm. F., Chas. C. (deceased), Sarah F., and Mary. Wm. F. is a wholesale grocer in Chicago,—firm of Kellogg & Barrett,—and has resided in that city for over twenty years.

John Kellogg, the second son of Judah, resided in Cornwall, and died at the age of seventy-seven. He raised a family of ten children, seven sons and three daughters. The entire family emigrated to the Western States, viz., Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Kansas, and have become prosperous citizens.



Lucius, the third son of Judah, settled at Oyster Bay, L. I., where he became an eminent physician.

EDWIN WHITE.

Edwin White was born in North Cornwall, Sept. 21, 1806, and is seventh in line from Elder John White, one of the first settlers of Cambridge and Hadley, Mass., and Hartford, Conn., and who came from England in 1632. His father, Elias White, Jr., born Dec. 7, 1775, came from Upper Middleton, Conn. (now Cromwell), to Cornwall. He was a shoemaker, and died Aug. 12, 1811, aged thirty-five years. He married Cynthia, daughter of Capt. Edward Rogers and Hannah Jackson, his wife. Capt. Rogers was one of the first proprietors of Cornwall, a lieutenant in the old French wars, and a Continental officer in the Revolution, and as Continental scrip was worthless, advanced two thousand dollars in gold to pay his men, which amount was never restored. He was an impetuous, active man, a sterling Christian, and made more of an impress on his town during his life than probably any other citizen. They had four sons,—Comfort (deceased), Edward Rogers, Edwin, and Elias (deceased). Mrs. White was born Dec. 8, 1782, and died Sept. 12, 1813.

Edwin White was quite young at the death of his parents, and was placed with Andrew Cotter, with whom he stayed until he was seventeen. He then learned the hatter's trade of Benjamin Catlin, of North Cornwall, remaining with him until of age. He then worked for him about another year, when, in company with his brothers, Comfort and Edward Rogers, he purchased the place now occupied by him in Cornwall, and became a farmer. Sept. 13, 1837, he married Laura, daughter of Stephen and Abigail (Drake) Whedon, of Winchester. Their children are Frances Abigail, Laura Isabella, Edwin Augustine, and Cynthia Josephine. About 1854, Mr. White bought the other interest in the farm, and has since resided there, adding by purchase until he now owns two hundred and fifty acres of land. He makes a specialty of manufacturing "pine-apple" cheese, and his work in this is highly spoken of and brings a high price. Mr. White has held the various town offices, and represented Cornwall in the Legislature of 1842–43. He is Democratic in politics, and cast his first Presidential vote for the electors on the Andrew Jackson ticket. He is a worthy representative of the thrifty New England farmer,—hard-working, prudent, hospitable, and held in high esteem by his neighbors. He belongs to that old-fashioned class whose word is as good as their bond, and does not believe in having a dollar unjustly acquired. Both Mr. and Mrs. White have belonged to the Congregational Church for years, and are now members at Goshen. Edwin A. is a college graduate, and is now a law student.

Edwin White

EZRA DWIGHT PRATT.

The Pratts of Cornwall are descended from Lieut. William Pratt, who came to America, about 1632, from Stevenage, Hertfordshire, England. His line runs back to Thomas Pratt, who died in Hertfordshire in 1539. With one or two breaks, bridged by tradition, the records lead, with almost certainty, to Sir William Pratt, who in 1191 was a favorite officer under Richard Cœur de Lion in the Holy Land. Lieut. Pratt accompanied Hooker's company from Cambridge, Mass., in 1636, to find a home in the Connecticut Valley. They settled where Hartford now stands, and Lieut. Pratt drew lots on what is now North Main Street in that city. In 1637 he was one of the expedition which annihilated the Pequod tribe of Indians, and was for his services voted one hundred acres of land by the General Court. In 1645 he removed to Saybrook, became a large landholder, and for thirteen years represented that town in the Legislature. Following his line to the fifth generation, we find David Pratt, born about 1725. He married Jerusha Chalker, had nine children, and removed to Cornwall about 1780. Miner Pratt, born in 1768 (his son), although quiet and unostentatious, was a man of untiring energy, sterling integrity, and active in church, schools, and all public and benevolent objects. He married (1795) Mary Ann, daughter of Deacon Eliakim Mallory, and had four children, —Harriet (Mrs. D. L. Rogers), Eliakim M., Ezra Dwight, and Almon Bradley. Miner was a lad of twelve years when his father moved to Cornwall, and labored hard with him and an older brother on the new farm. On arriving at age, Miner desired to "go West,"—i.e., to New York,—as his brother did, and offered to sell his interest in the home for a very small sum; but his father felt so badly, desiring him to remain and take care of his parents and the homestead, that he stayed, became a hard-working farmer, and was prospered. He died in 1846, full of years and Christian graces.

E. D. Pratt

ISAAC MARSH.

Ezra Dwight Pratt was born Nov. 26, 1810; was educated at common schools; began teaching when but nineteen years old, and taught winters, with but few intermissions, until he was fifty years old. He has always been a farmer, and a successful one. He married, July 1, 1846, Anna Aurelia, daughter of Deacon Ebenezer Rood, of Torringford. Their children were Mary Aurelia, Dwight Mallory, Harriette J., and Hubert Miner. From 1854 to the present time, with but little intermission, Mr. Pratt has been deacon of the North Cornwall Church, and by his Christian character, and the co-operation of his amiable and benevolent wife, has done much work in its service, and is justly considered one of its pillars. Their children show the result of true Christian training. Dwight M. graduated at Amherst (1876), and is now an efficient pastor of the Congregational Church at Higganun, Conn. Blest with a comfortable share of this world's goods, this worthy couple have never considered themselves aught but the trustees of part of God's property, and, with a lavish hand, they have always contributed to the cause of the Master, whether in the form of missions, education, or church requirements. An old acquaintance says of Deacon Pratt, "The history of North Cornwall Church would be incomplete without a portrait and sketch of Deacon Pratt." Honored by his church, beloved by his family, and esteemed and respected by his fellow-townsmen, Deacon Pratt has the satisfaction of knowing that he has thrown no discredit on the name he bears, and that his descendants bid fair to keep its character high.

David Pratt's third son, Jasper, had, before coming to Cornwall, served seven years and three months in the Revolution, was captured by the British, and endured all the severe privations of a Continental soldier. He married Abigail Butler, and had three children,—Hannah, Chalker, and Abigail. Chalker married Lydia, daughter of Deacon Noah Rogers, and had two children,—Russell R. and Helen A. (Mrs. Stephen Foster, deceased). Chalker was a man of influence, and an active Christian. He was agent for the Cornwall Iron Company for some years, and about 1840 moved to West Cornwall, and became prominent there. He was a careful, methodical man, and was much esteemed. He died in 1851, aged fifty-nine years. His son, Russell R., born 1816, was educated for a merchant, and, after some trade in a small way, with good promise, established in 1841, with Stephen Foster, the firm of Pratt & Foster, which had for years a large and successful trade. This firm became the centre around which all the business of West Cornwall swung. Pratt & Foster headed all enterprises of business, all subscriptions (whether for church purposes or benevolent objects), bought all things the farmers sold, and sold everything that they wanted. Mr. Foster died in 1863, and the firm-title was continued until (through the pressure of the hard times) it was compelled to make an assignment. Mr. Foster was of pleasing manners, great industry, and indefatigable energy, and made many friends. Gold's "History of Cornwall" says of R. R. Pratt, "As an energetic business man, as selectman for seven years from 1856, as representative in 1858, as deacon of the church from 1854 to 1871, as superintendent of the Sabbath-school at West Cornwall from 1860, he has filled, and still holds, a prominent place in the secular and religious interests of the town.

ISAAC MARSH.

Dr. Isaac Marsh was born in Litchfield in 1777. His ancestors had long resided in that town. His grandfather and father were also named Isaac. He studied medicine with Dr. Woodward, of Torringford, but, being of rather a nervous temperament, shrank from the practice of his profession. He was for a time a druggist, but temporarily took up the business of farming, and finally followed it for life. He married in 1803, and, in 1820, bought a farm in Cornwall of Rev. Asa Talmage, located near the Housatonic River. This was two miles north of Hart's Bridge, now West Cornwall. There was then but one house at the "Bridge,"—the "Hart House," standing on the site of the present residence of Mrs. Isaac Marsh. Dr. Marsh died in 1829, aged fifty-two years.

Isaac Marsh (4th) was oldest son and last surviving one of a family of seven children. He was born Dec. 15, 1803, in Litchfield, and came to Cornwall with his parents. He was educated at public and private schools in Litchfield and Sharon, and made his home with his father until he was twenty-six years of age. After he was of age he was engaged in teaching during the winter for several years, teaching seven successive winters in what was then called the "West District" of Cornwall. Shortly after the formation of "The West Cornwall Iron Company," in 1834, Mr. Marsh entered its employ as clerk, and remained many years. He was afterwards book-keeper for Pratt & Foster, merchants at West Cornwall. He was appointed station-agent for the Housatonic Railroad at West Cornwall in 1843–44, and held that position, first for four years, and afterwards, at different periods, as his failing health would admit.

Mr. Marsh was town clerk, and performed labors of that office, as he did everything, with faithfulness. He was chosen to represent Cornwall in the State Legislatures of 1839–40, 1851–52, and discharged that duty to the great satisfaction of his constituents.

He was an earnest and good Christian, although not connected with any church organization, was an efficient and valued laborer in the Sabbath-school, and not found wanting in assisting any good or charitable object. He was a man of firm convictions, not swayed about by every popular wave of excitement. Positive in his nature, he carefully considered everything from the standard of justice, and never from that of expediency. He was noted for his loyalty to his friends, and never did malice or suspicion whisper aught against his integrity. In both public and private life he was modest and unassuming in his manner, courteous and gentlemanly in his demeanor, firm and unflinching in the discharge of his duty, and energetic and indignant against any appearance of chicanery or fraud.

Mr. Marsh married, Nov. 29, 1843, Nancy, daughter of Ransom and Lydia (Burtch) Smith, of Sharon. Mr. Smith was son of David Smith, who was born in Litchfield in 1752; married, in 1774, Sarah North, of Goshen; moved to Massachusetts, where his oldest son, John, was born about 1775. His next son, David, was born in Goshen about 1777, and so were Horatio (who became a prominent man and State senator), Ransom, Molly (Mrs. Aaron Cartwright, of Sharon), and Gad. Gad became a popular Methodist clergyman, and died young. Ransom, born Feb. 22, 1782, had a common-school education, and became a farmer, removing to Sharon, with his father, about 1800. He married, Nov. 15, 1810, Lydia Burtch, of Goshen, and afterwards purchased the place where D. F. Smith now resides, and resided there until his death. He held various town offices, was a quiet, unostentatious man, firm to principle, and successful in business. He represented Sharon two years in the General Assembly of Connecticut. He reared a family of eight children, all born on the same place,—John N. (deceased), Nancy (Mrs. Isaac Marsh), Appleton R., Elbert R. (deceased), Mary (Mrs. David S. Potter, of Thomaston), Charles C., Martha (deceased), and J. Ransom. He died June 10, 1857, much regretted.

Mr. Marsh, at the time of his marriage, was employed in the railroad office at Bridgeport, but removed to West Cornwall as station-agent soon after, as above stated. In 1847 he built the house where for over thirty years he and his wife have made their home, and where she now resides. He died Jan. 29, 1879, and the vacuum caused by his death cannot be filled by another.

THE NOAH ROGERS FAMILY.

Noah and Edward Rogers appear on Cornwall town records as purchasers of land in December, 1761. The principal pieces were bought of William Gould, and were some of the best in the town. For the past one hundred and twenty years the Rogerses have been among the prominent and useful people of Cornwall. The pedigree is traced back by records in the British Museum to Thomas Rogers, of Bradford, county of Wilts, sergeant-at-law, who died in 1485. He was great-grandfather of John Rogers the martyr.

John Rogers the martyr was born about 1500, married Adigan Pratt, of Brabant, and had eleven children,—Daniel, John, Ambrose, Samuel, Philip, Bernard, Augustine, Barnaby, Susan, Elizabeth, and Hester. John, the son, married Mary, daughter of William Leete, of Everden, county of Cambridge. Thomas, grandson of the martyr, came over in the "Mayflower," and was the probable ancestor of the Rogerses of Cornwall, although by the burning of the old town records of Huntingdon, L. I. (where the first of the name settled about 1640, after moving from Plymouth Colony), a link or two of written testimony is lacking. Tradition, and the circumstances surrounding the possessors of the name, however, conclusively bridge the chasm, and Thomas was doubtless father of William, whose son Noah was the first to bear the name borne continuously for six generations in the family.

Noah[1] and his brother John bought large tracts of land in Branford, Conn., and removed thither in 1667, and were among the original proprietors of that town. Noah[1] married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael Taintor, a native of Wales. (Mr. Taintor belonged to the first church organization in Branford, and the church covenant then signed is in his handwriting.) Their children were Mary, John, Josiah, Hezekiah, Noah,[2] Elizabeth, and Ann. Noah[1] and Noah[2] filled various important positions in the political and religious organizations of Branford, and served their day and generation well and faithfully. Their residence in Branford came to be known as "Noah's Ark," their land, "the Ark land," and the road by their door, the "Ark road." Noah[2] married Elizabeth Wheeler. Their children were Abigail, Temperance, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Noah,[3] Edward, and Harriet.

Noah Rogers,[3] born in Branford, Conn., May 8, 1732, married, Oct. 23, 1765, Rhoda, daughter of Deacon Daniel Leete, of Guilford (fourth generation from Governor William Leete), and, with his brother Edward, moved to Cornwall in 1760, selling their lands in Branford, and in 1761 purchased six hundred acres here. Noah Rogers[3] was one of the leading men of the town from his arrival; entered into every enterprise for the development and advancement of Cornwall with a wonderful enthusiasm and energy. He built about the first saw-mill, probably started the first or second grist-mill, and at the same time that they were in operation had several iron forges also working. He assisted in road-making, bridge-building,—in everything where a resolute and indomitable nature could find expression. He was emphatically a man for the times, and the impress made by him upon the town is felt unto this day. Exempted by loss of one eye from military service, he volunteered to serve in the colonial army; was present at Burgoyne's surrender, and brought home a British musket as a trophy. Mr. Burnham, in his address at the Rogers' gathering, says he also went to Danbury to assist in repelling the British, and he was probably at the battle at that place. He was one of the thirteen original members of the Congregational Church organized in 1780. Gen. Charles F. Sedgwick, in an address at North Cornwall, July 19, 1876, thus speaks of him: "I remember him as a very old man, who was constant in his attendance at meeting, portly in his physical dimensions, and regarded as a patriarch of the parish. He was probably the most wealthy man in the society, and his benefactions, and those of his descendants here, have done much to give strength and stability to the concerns of the parish." His children were Sarah (Mrs. Oliver Burnham, married Oct. 17, 1787), Clarissa Irene (Mrs. Prentice Williams, of Stockbridge, Mass., married June 8, 1808), Rhoda (Mrs. Andrew Cotter, married Nov. 11, 1792), Noah,[4] Abigail (Mrs. Asahel J. Bradley, of Stockbridge, Mass., married June 15, 1796), and Amanda (Mrs. Theodore Ives, married Nov. 22, 1821). He died Oct. 17, 1810.

Noah Rogers[4] was born in Cornwall, Oct. 13, 1766. He married Lydia, daughter of Rev. John Cornwell, for his first wife. Their children were Daniel Leete, Abigail, Lydia (Mrs. Chalker Pratt, married Nov. 19, 1815), Rhoda (Mrs. Julius Hart, married Jan. 7, 1819), John, Noah,[5] Abigail (Mrs. E. M. Pratt, married Sept. 14, 1829). His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Hon. John Wilson, of Perth, Scotland. Their children were Eliza (Mrs. Rev. Augustus T. Norton, married Nov. 12, 1834), Ambrose S., Amanda (Mrs. Rev. A. B. Pratt, married Aug. 11, 1841). His third wife was Mrs. Abigail Whedon, of Winchester. He died Sept. 28, 1839. He was known as Deacon Noah Rogers, and was a man of great enterprise, of wisdom, good judgment, and prudence. He filled at different times the various offices of the town, represented Cornwall in the State Legislatures of 1813–15, and 1818. He was a man of sterling worth and true Christianity, and no man living in his day was more willing to help every good cause, and his plentiful means were used liberally to that end and the relief of the suffering. He paid a large share of the cost of erecting the church at North Cornwall, besides furnishing a large proportion of the timber and lumber, and always, when there was a lack of funds to pay the minister's salary, supplied the deficiency.

Mr. O. Rogers Burnham, in the address above alluded to, thus speaks of him: "We used to call him 'Uncle Noah,' a man who went about doing good, especially among the poor. Unostentatious, his benevolence was proverbial. He was a patriot and a philanthropist. If there was a poor sick man, woman, or child in town, he was sure to be at their bedside, and he never went empty-handed. If he was seen on a cold winter morning jogging along with a bundle under his arm, the question was at once asked, 'Who is sick?' I do not hesitate to say that he has done more, directly or indirectly, for this society than any other man that ever lived. Look at your beautiful meeting-house! Who headed the subscription-list with five hundred dollars cash? It was he. Who gave the grounds? It was he. Whose groves were ransacked for the best sticks of timber to build it with? They were his. Look at your beautiful burying-ground! Who gave it, regardless of destroying two of the best building lots in town? 'Twas he. Who fenced those grounds with trifling remuneration? 'Twas he. I recollect that my father and he once represented the town together in the Legislature. I told my father I didn't see that 'Uncle Noah' made many speeches. 'No,' said he; 'but he made a good member. He worked hard for his constituents, and always voted right.'"

Daniel Leete Rogers was born in Cornwall, Feb. 13, 1791, and married Harriet, daughter of Miner and Mary Pratt, Oct. 1, 1816. Their children were Henry Leete, born Feb. 4, 1819; Daniel Mallory, born Feb. 28, 1821; Egbert Maltbie, born Feb. 11, 1823, died Feb. 8, 1876; Mary Elizabeth (Mrs. Theodore R. Ives), born Oct. 24, 1824; Miner Pratt, born Feb. 14, 1827, died Jan. 20, 1864; Harriet Cordelia, born Aug. 7, 1828, died July 10, 1831, and was the first one buried in North Cornwall cemetery; Dwight; Abbie, born Feb. 28, 1834, died Oct. 4, 1874; and Harriet, born June 13, 1838.

D. L. Rogers inherited his father's executive ability, and was frequently called to places of public trust; he was selectman, etc. He was a model farmer. He bought a farm which looked the poorest in the town, and made it, by his diligence, care, and attention, one of the best. It is now occupied by his son Dwight. After the death of his father he became one of the chief supporters of the church, and was ever prominent in good works. In a letter to Hon. T. S. Gold, published in Gold's "History of Cornwall," Rev. Wm. B. Clarke, a former pastor, has these pleasing words: "My first acquaintance was with the family of Mr. D. L. Rogers ('Uncle Leete,' as I became accustomed to hear him called), where I stayed during casual visits that preceded my settlement. Later my home was with his brother, Mr. Noah Rogers.[5] Highly as I valued those men at that time, my experience since has even enhanced my estimate of their worth. They were very free from small prejudices, and could be relied on to do their part liberally when any good cause required. I remember well one instance, which will show how well they had maintained a generous spirit amid the enforced frugality of a farmer's life. A Mr. Smith, a man of small means, had a factory for tanning skins, which Mr. John Beers worked up into gloves and mittens. The tannery took fire one night and burned down. A company of us rode down the next morning to the scene of the disaster. After a few expressions of condolence, Mr. Beers drew up a subscription-paper, and headed it with one hundred dollars. This was quite proper, as Mr. Beers' own business was largely dependent on the factory. He turned to 'Uncle Leete' with the question, 'What will you do?' The answer came, in his deliberate, solid way, 'You may copy those figures for me.' Mr. Noah Rogers subscribed fifty dollars. A few moments secured the success of the movement, and Mr. Smith was comforted." D. L. Rogers died Aug. 11, 1869.

It is curious that the intermarriages of Pratts and Leetes with the Rogerses in the present generations have precedents away back in the early English days, where the same intermarriages are seen. Two of the children of D. L. Rogers having married with the Leetes of Guilford, it would seem not inappropriate to show the character of the family so intermingled with the Rogerses.

William Leete, of Midlow, Huntington Co., England, was bred to the law; was a clerk in the Bishop's Court at Cambridge; became a Puritan, gave up his office, and came to New England in May, 1639. He was one of the first settlers of Guilford, Conn. (and his son John is said to be the first white child born there); was one of the pillars of Mr. Whitefield's church; received the highest honors which the colony of New Haven, and afterwards that of Connecticut, could give. From 1651 to 1658 he was magistrate of Guilford, and one of the court of magistrates of New Haven Colony for years. In 1658 he was chosen Deputy Governor, which office he held to 1661, when he was elected Governor. He held this position till 1664, when New Haven Colony was united with Connecticut. Upon this union he was elected magistrate, and from 1669 to 1676 held the office of Deputy Governor, at which time he was elected Governor, which position he held till his death, April 16, 1683. "For forty years," says Dr. Trumbull, "he was magistrate, Deputy Governor, or Governor of one or other of the colonies. In both colonies he presided in times of the greatest difficulty, yet always conducted himself with integrity and wisdom." He secreted for several days the judges Whalley and Goffe. He left a numerous family, and his descendents have occupied the highest positions in various parts of the country.

Henry Leete Rogers married Nancy Clark, Feb. 16, 1842. Their child, William Leete, was born July 29, 1846. Mary E. Rogers married T. K. Ives, May 14, 1845. Their children were Roger Leete, born Jan. 23, 1852; Dwight Williams, born April 8, 1855; Theodore Bradley, born Nov. 18, 1856, died Dec. 8, 1856; Frederick, born Feb. 21, 1859, died Oct. 8, 1874; Mary Eliza, born July 4, 1868. Daniel M. Rogers married Philena Knapp, Jan. 7, 1851. Their children were Jared Leete, born Nov. 3, 1851, died Sept. 21, 1860; Daniel Owen, born Feb. 6, 1854; Mary Harriet, born Jan. 20, 1856; Noah Cornwell, born Feb. 13, 1859; Sarah Philena, born April 10, 1861; John, born November, 1866, died 1867. Harriet Rogers married E. Walter Leete, Oct. 10, 1861. Their children are Abbie Louisa, born Oct. 20, 1862; Edward Rogers, born Dec. 17, 1864; William Smith, born Oct. 22, 1867; Sarah Talcott, born Oct. 25, 1871.

Dwight Rogers, born Aug. 3, 1832, married Lucy L. Leete, Dec. 16, 1863. She is seventh in line from Governor Wm. Leete, the line of descent being Wm. Leete and Anna ——, John Leete and Mary Chittenden, Pelatiah Leete and Abigail Fowler, Daniel Leete and Rhoda Stone (these were parents of Rhoda Leete, who married Noah Rogers[3]), Ambrose Leete and Miranda Chittenden, Miner Leete and Lucinda Norton, Edward L. Leete and Sylvia Fowler, who were parents of Mrs. Dwight Rogers. Their children are Dwight Leete, born Dec. 11, 1866; Nellie Lucretia, born Nov. 12, 1868; Harriet Fowler, born Jan. 22, 1872; Miner Pratt, born March 19, 1874; and Sylvia Abbie, born Nov. 11, 1877.

Mr. Dwight Rogers is truly a representative farmer. He owns one of the best farms in Cornwall, and his choice Devonshire cattle are a pleasure to the eyes of all beholders. By inheritance and his own industry he is in possession of a fine property. He is an active supporter of all good works, and worthy the name he bears. He is, as are nearly all the descendants of Noah Rogers, a believer in Christianity, and a member of the church at North Cornwall. He is thoroughly upright in character, prompt in meeting his business obligations, liberal to the full extent of his pecuniary ability, and receives, as he deserves, the esteem and confidence of the community.

Noah Rogers[5] was born at Cornwall, May 12, 1803, and was the third son of Noah Rogers[4] and Lydia Cornwell. He received the advantages of a common-school education. He declined the offer of a college course, which he felt would naturally have taken him into some profession. He enjoyed out-door life, and preferred to remain upon the homestead and follow the quiet avocation of farm-life. He was very fond of farm-life, and was never known to regret his choice. He seemed to have a special regard for each field through its associations. Previous to his death there were considerable forests upon his farm, which were his special delight. He seemed to have an actual affection for the fine old trees, etc. He had great respect for his ancestors, and was anxious to honor them, and endeavored by precept and example to instill right principles upon his posterity. He was a man of integrity and large heart, great Christian charity and liberality. The last act of his life was one of charity to a neighbor. His hospitality was proverbial, and apparently boundless. He was never more happy than in entertaining his friends, and the humblest applicant was never turned from his door. He never sought office, but was selectman for two or more years; was always found upon the side of right and the public good. Physically he was a man of great endurance. He died very suddenly, on the evening of June 23, 1862, without ever having employed a physician or experienced a sick day in his life. He married, in 1829, Catharine Rebecca Clark, daughter

Doughty, Photographer, Winsted, Conn.

Dwight Rogers

SYLVESTER H. BARNUM.

Sylvester H. Barnum was born April 3, 1803, in Kent, Litchfield Co., Conn. (This engraving represents him at fifty years of age.) He was a son of David and Rachel (Hoyt) Barnum. His father was a son of David, one of the first settlers of Danbury, and who afterwards became one of the original three proprietors of Kent, moving thither in 1752.

David, Jr., was born in Danbury, Conn., and moved to Kent with his father, and became one of its early settlers. He had seven children,—Ebenezer, Delilah, Abigail, Lydia, Sylvester, David, and John, all born in Kent. In 1811 he removed to New York. Sylvester was at that time eight years of age, and was bound out to a farmer of Kent to remain until he was of age. His life was a hard one; poorly fed, thinly clad, and worked like a brute, the young lad twice sought refuge in flight; the first time he was overtaken and carried back, and the last returned voluntarily and stood his hardships until released by operation of law. During the entire thirteen years he received but three months schooling. When he became of age he went to see his sister (Mrs. Martin Cole) at Cornwall. His entire capital consisted at that time of the not-very-good suit of clothes on his back. He worked for Mr. Cole and his brother, on the farm and in the saw-mill, for two years. There he became acquainted with Lucy Ann Stone, whom he married June 29, 1826. Her parents were Eli and Eunice (Crissey) Stone, formerly of Kent. Mrs. Barnum was born Nov. 22, 1804, in Canaan. Mr. Stone was born May 16, 1775, and died Oct. 9, 1845; Mrs. Stone was born May 22, 1776. For the first year after marriage this worthy young couple, commencing life with nothing, worked at different places by the week and month to gain sufficient money to provide for housekeeping. They did this and also earned enough to purchase a small house and two acres of land in what is now West Cornwall, then Hart's Bridge. Still working hard, Mr. Barnum purchased forty acres of land, mostly woodland, on which he began to make charcoal and farm in a small way. These avocations he followed for about thirty years. He never kept a place long, but bought and sold rapidly, making something on each. At various times he was the owner of three places in Cornwall, five in Sharon, three in Washington, one in New Milford, and one in Canaan. During fifty-one years of married life they moved twenty-five times, and never but twice to places he did not own. He was careful, prudent, economizing, and made money. He had an able, practical wife, who was a true helpmate for him, and for over half a century they worked together in harmony, and at their golden wedding, June 29, 1876, over three hundred guests participated.

Mr. Barnum would never accept public office; shrank from making himself conspicuous, but had a generous heart and an open hand, and more than one young man now grown up received assistance for which they reverence his memory.

He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Sharon, and a liberal supporter of Christian movements everywhere. Mrs. Barnum has been for years a member of the Congregational Church of North Cornwall.

They had six children,—Elizabeth, Lydia, Louisa J., Eli, Delia, Lucy. Mr. Barnum died April 26, 1867, much respected. At his death but one child, Elizabeth, was living. She was born in Cornwall, Dec. 9, 1827; married, April 6, 1847, Lewis O'Cane, of Sharon. They now live in Canaan, and have four children,—Celia (Mrs. Wallace Pierce), Luana (Mrs. Chas. Keeler), Ette, and Louisa J. Mrs. Pierce has one daughter, born in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1871.

Charles A. Shepard

of William Clark, who survives him, and is a woman of strong, though unostentatious, character.

There were five children,—William Clark, Lydia Rebecca, Harriet Eliza, Catharine Amanda, and Noah[6].

William C. Rogers was born June 2, 1830. He left his home at the age of eighteen, and went to Elizabethtown, N. J., where he taught school. From there he went to Brooklyn, N. Y., and was principal of a public school until 1853. Then he returned home, and April 13, 1853, married Eliza M. Scoville, daughter of Jacob Scoville, and established a boarding-school for young ladies at North Cornwall, which proved very successful. In 1854 he was offered a position with the Cornwall Iron Company; so he left the school in charge of his sisters and accepted the position of agent for the company. In 1856 he went into business with Pratt & Foster, West Cornwall, where he remained until 1864. Then he removed to Norwich, N. Y., and again engaged in the iron business. He was also interested in oil speculations in Kentucky, where he died, Sept. 26, 1867. He was a man of very genial nature, great popularity, and large executive ability; was a man of Christian character; was superintendent of Sunday-school, etc.; stood high in the community. Had children,—Isabel M., born at West Cornwall, July 12, 1854, married Eugene Wickwire, Oct. 15, 1874; Kate Ingersoll, was born at West Cornwall, Sept. 21, 1857, married H. S. Andrews, Jan. 17, 1880; Hattie Beecher, born at West Cornwall, Feb. 7, 1862, died in infancy; Eliza Scoville, born at West Cornwall, April 13, 1863, died at West Cornwall, Sept. 27, 1875; William Noah, born at Norwich, N. Y., Dec. 18, 1864.

Lydia Rebecca Rogers, born Jan. 10, 1834, married George P. Bradley, of Stockbridge, Mass., April 14, 1859. Has children,—Edward Ernest Bradley, born Feb. 8, 1862; George Irving, April 24, 1864; Mary Louise, Aug. 31, 1869. Mr. Bradley is a farmer, a man of high standing in Stockbridge, where he formerly kept a select school for boys.

Harriet Eliza, born Jan. 8, 1839, married H. B. Crosby, of Paterson, N. J., Dec. 6, 1876. Children,—Henry Barrett Crosby, Florence Lyon Crosby. Mr. H. B. Crosby is a very prominent and wealthy merchant of Paterson, and a man of very marked character every way.

Catharine Amanda, youngest daughter of Noah Rogers, born at Cornwall, Aug. 6, 1843, married John B. Sedgwick, April 14, 1863. Had children,—Hattie Sedgwick, born at Cornwall, Aug. 31, 1866; Sarah Adam Sedgwick, born at Cornwall, Dec. 24, 1867.

John B. Sedgwick was a man of unusual promise, —a nephew and namesake of Gen. John Sedgwick. He died in New Jersey, Oct. 18, 1867, leaving the two little girls spoken of above. They were the special objects of love and pride for both the Rogers and Sedgwick branch of the family. Catharine A. Sedgwick married, July 11, 1878, L. R. Stelle, Esq., of Saugnoit, N. Y., near Utica. He is a prominent silk manufacturer. Noah Rogers,[6] born Jan. 25, 1845, married Ann Elizabeth Dudley, of Bath, N. Y., Sept. 21, 1865. Children.—Noah,[7] born Jan. 26, 1872; David Clark, born June 12, 1877, died in infancy; Harry Lloyd, born Feb. 7, 1879.

Noah Rogers[6] retains the ancestral homestead, in which he takes great pride and delight, improving it from time to time, as opportunity offers, etc.; in season of 1880 built a new barn, in place of the old one, that is said to be the best in the town. In earlier years always had a desire for business life, but his father having died when he was only seventeen, and his brother William being away from home, Noah remained there until he was twenty-seven; then went with Pratt & Foster, and took charge of their produce departments. He remained with them two years, and was then admitted a member of the firm, which was styled Pratt, Foster & Rogers. After one year he left them, went to Bridgeport, and established the first produce commission house in that city, in 1875. From very small beginning he has built up a large business, and is now among the heavy and leading merchants of Bridgeport. In the spring of 1881, Mr. George Morford joined him, and the firm became Rogers & Morford. A house like this was one of the needs of the town, because the surrounding country is not very productive, and the bulk of the goods consumed here must come from abroad, hence their success. They endeavor to carry out in their business the good principles of their ancestors,—honesty, fair dealing, and integrity.

Mr. Rogers is of pleasing appearance, and has a magnetism that gains him hosts of friends. No one in Cornwall ranks higher than he in all the qualities of successful manhood, while in all that tends to elevate, improve, or benefit society he is a foremost worker. He may be justly called one of Cornwall's worthiest sons, carrying the family reputation with no tarnish from his conduct, and upholding by his character the good name his ancestors have always borne.

Noah[7] was appointed, at the semi-centennial, in 1876, of North Cornwall Church, one of a committee to arrange for the proper celebration of its centennial day.

CHARLES N. SHEPARD.

Charles N. Shepard, son of Eliphalet and Mary Shepard, was born in Cornwall, Conn., April 27, 1820. His grandfather, Allen Shepard, came to Cornwall from Newtown in 1798, with his wife and children, of whom Eliphalet was one. He (Eliphalet) was born in Newtown in 1789, married Mary, daughter of Judah Kellogg, July 7, 1813, became a farmer, and died Aug. 12, 1865, leaving four children,—George H., Charles N., Elbert, and Harriet. He was a Methodist; an earnest worker in that denomination; a man pure, peaceable, and much respected by his fellow-citizens. George H. moved to Brooklyn, N. Y., and married, June 3, 1840, Hannah Woolsey. They had one child, Phebe. Mrs. Shepard died June 20, 1841, and Mr. Shepard married again, Oct. 7, 1847, and had five children,—Charles Edward, Jesse Woolsey, Elizabeth Silliman, Mary Cynthia, and George Augustus. Elbert, born May 2, 1824, married, May 31, 1846, Cynthia L., daughter of George Wheaton, and has one son, George Wheaton, born Dec. 25, 1854. Elbert is a farmer at West Cornwall, has held many offices of trust, and in 1858 represented Cornwall in the State Legislature. He is a Methodist, but, while contributing to that denomination, is still liberal to others, and gave the site of the chapel in West Cornwall, which, as Gold's "History of Cornwall" says, will ever remain as a testimonial to the liberal Christian spirit of his family. Harriet married Morris Tuttle, Oct. 14, 1867. She still resides in Goshen. Charles N. received an academic education at South Cornwall, and remained on the farm until he was eighteen, when, preferring a mercantile life to agriculture, he began his preparations for it by becoming a clerk in a store at Woodbury, remaining there three years, and familiarizing himself with the details of a business life. From Woodbury he went to New York City, and, after an experience of several years as clerk and book-keeper in a wholesale house, entered into partnership with Hudson Hoagland and established a wholesale provision store. This was successfully conducted, and in a few years' time passed entirely into Mr. Shepard's possession. He was an excellent business man; was very successful, and accumulated a handsome fortune. The steady and absorbing attention he was forced to give to his business in process of time caused his health to fail to such an extent that he relinquished trade and returned to Cornwall, and made his home with Elbert. He never recovered his health, and died at West Cornwall, July 23, 1876. Mr. Shepard was a very exemplary man, a regular attendant of the Methodist Church, and, judging from entries in his diary, kept for years, he lived a Christian life. He was a Democrat in politics.

CHAPTER XXXII.

GOSHEN.

Geographical—Topographical—The First Settlements—The Laying Out of the Town—New Bantam—Goshen—Trouble between the Town and the Colony—The Mob—Committee of Investigation—Settlement of the Controversy—The First Grant and Survey—The Surveyor—The College Farm—Division of the Town into Rights—First Proprietors' Meeting—The First Birth—The First Meeting-House—The Pioneer Minister—The Pioneer Taverns—Location of Early Settlers—Pioneer Merchants—The First Saw- and Grist-Mill, etc.

THE first settlement in Goshen was made in 1720, and in 1722 individuals of Hartford and Windsor came on and laid out the township then called "New Bantam." It was changed to Goshen by an act of the General Assembly in 1737. It is deemed advisable in this connection to reproduce the admirable address of the Rev. Grant Powers, A.M., delivered at Goshen, Sept. 28, 1838. It is the first printed history of the town, and is an invaluable production:

"These individuals claimed their right under the towns of Hartford and Windsor, which brought on a violent conflict between the colony and these towns. In October of 1722, while the Assembly were in session at Hartford, some of the trespassers were arrested, and imprisoned at Hartford, but a mob was raised, the jail broken open, and the delinquents were set at liberty; and so violent was the opposition of these towns to the acts of the Assembly that the civil authority was unable to execute the laws of the land. Finally, the Assembly, feeling the disastrous consequences of a protracted warfare of this nature, did, in the autumn of 1724, appoint a committee to investigate all the claims, and report thereon, that the difficulty might be amicably settled. This committee spent nearly two years in the investigation, and then reported that a division of this territory be made, giving one-half to the towns of Hartford and Windsor, and one-half to the colony. Hartford and Windsor should have the eastern division, and the colony the western. In May, 1726, the Assembly adopted substantially the report of the committee, and subsequently secured to these towns, Hartford and Windsor, by patent, all the disputed lands east of Litchfield, Goshen, and Norfolk, and retained the western section, viz., Goshen, Norfolk, Canaan, Cornwall, Kent, and Salisbury; and thus an affair was adjusted which had retarded the settlement of these towns and threatened the whole colony with disastrous consequences.

THE FIRST GRANT AND SURVEY.

"At the October session of the Assembly in 1726, a grant of three hundred acres of land in this town was made to James Wadsworth, Esq., of Durham, John Hall, Esq., of Wallingford, and Hezekiah Brainard, Esq., of Haddam. What the consideration was for this grant does not appear: probably it was for services rendered the colony. This survey was made by John Hitchcock, April 28, 1731. The northwest corner of this special grant was east of the road opposite the brick house of Capt. Jonathan Wadhams, and south of the school-house. The west line of the grant, running south three hundred rods, intersected the north line of Litchfield thirteen rods west of the north and south road, that passes the house of Harvey Brooks, thence east on Litchfield line one hundred and sixty rods. Thence north three hundred rods, and then west one hundred and sixty rods to the northwest bound, already described, near Capt. Wadhams. This grant has always borne the appellation 'the Squires Farm' because the three gentlemen to whom the grant was made all had the title esquire attached to their names respectively. It is said that the house owned and occupied by the widow and heir of the late Isaac Wadhams stands in the central part of the Squires Farm. But at the time of this survey the town had not been laid out by government, and was denominated Western Lands, or New Bantam, the Assembly not regarding at all the laying out of the town by Hartford and Windsor in 1722. But at their session in May, 1731, they enacted that their Western lands should be laid out into five townships, and appointed their committee to perform this business. The report of this committee as it respects this town bears date Oct. 15, 1731, describing the limits of the same, making the south line four miles and one hundred and ninety-six rods, the west line nine miles and sixty rods, the north line four miles and eighty-six rods, and the east line eight miles and one hundred and forty-six rods, showing that the south line is ten rods longer than the north line, and the west line two hundred and thirty-four rods longer than the east line. Soon after these towns were laid out the trustees of Yale College applied to the Assembly for a grant of land in aid of this institution, and in 1732 they made a grant of fifteen hundred acres to the trustees, three hundred acres in each of the five towns so recently laid out, and in January, 1737, the College Farm—so called—in this town was surveyed and its boundaries established. The dwelling-houses of Messrs. Asa, Leverett, and Cephas Ives stand upon this grant, and also the house at the turnpike gate leading to Cornwall. On the 13th of October, 1737, the Assembly enacted that the township called Goshen should be divided into fifty-three rights, exclusive of former grants, referring to the Squires Farm and college. Two of the fifty-three rights were to be appropriated to the ministry, one of them to be the property of the first settled minister, and the other to remain for the support of the ministry in all after-time. And a third right was to be for the support of schools. Fifty rights would remain for the proprietors of said township. The Assembly then resolved that this township should be sold in so many rights, at public auction, at the court-house in New Haven, to the highest bidder, commencing on the first Tuesday in December next (1737), and to be continued by adjournment until all the rights were sold. The conditions required of each proprietor were, that he or his agent should, within two years from the date of his purchase, enter upon his premises, build and finish a house thereon, no less than eighteen feet square, and seven feet between sill and plate; clear, subdue, and fence six acres of said land, and continue to dwell thereon for the space of three successive years (unless prevented by death or unavoidable Providence), commencing after the expiration of the two years in which the specified conditions were to be performed; and, furthermore, he must perform all orders and duties, and pay all taxes granted. If these conditions were performed, then his deed was valid; but if any part of the conditions was omitted (extraordinaries excepted), his title was void and of no effect.

"It seems that during the winter, spring, and summer of 1738 the rights were all, or nearly all, disposed of, and that a meeting of the proprietors was called at the house of Capt. John Buel, in Litchfield, on the 27th of September, 1738. This Capt. John Buel, or Deacon Buel, as he is generally called, was one of the first settlers of the town of Litchfield, and deserves special notice in this place on account of the interest he took in the settlement of this town, and the interest his descendants have held in it to this day. He with his wife Mary came from Lebanon, in this State, to Litchfield in 1720, and lived on Town Hill, north side of West Street, and seventy rods west of the county jail. He was distinguished for his piety and active benevolence. A brief anecdote of him will tell the whole story. In 1740 or 1741 there came a man from Cornwall in the depth of winter to purchase some grain for himself and family, who were in great need. He was directed to the house of Deacon Buel as being the man most likely to have grain to sell. The man called at the house and inquired if Deacon Buel lived there, and whether he could purchase a little grain for his family. Deacon Buel asked him if he had money to purchase the grain. He replied that he had some. 'Well,' said the deacon, 'I can show you where you can procure it.' Going with the stranger to the door, he pointed out to him a certain house, and said, 'There lives a man who will let you have the grain for your money. I have some grain to spare, but I must keep it for those who have no money!'

"Nearly all, if not all who bear the name of Buel, in Litchfield and Goshen, are the descendants of this same Deacon John Buel. We have his grandson with us to-day, Capt. Jonathan Buel, aged eighty-five.

"On the 27th of September, 1738, the proprietors of this town assembled at the house of Deacon John Buel, Litchfield, agreeably to appointment. Capt. Joseph Bird, of Litchfield, was chosen clerk, and Deacon John Buel was chosen moderator. After being fully organized, they adjourned to meet at the same place at eight o'clock the next morning, one hundred years ago this morning. Here let us pause for a moment's reflection. How eventful were the doings of this meeting! Upon the acts of this body were suspended the settlement of this town, the manner of its settlement, and much of its prosperity to the present time. Nor will our descendants cease to be influenced by these incipient steps for ages to come, and may not to the end of time.

"Whether our fathers were sensible of the importance of their proceedings to unborn generations or not, yet we may learn that we never act for ourselves exclusively, but that others are to be affected for good or for evil by our influences to the latest generation, and probably to eternity!

"The adjournment of this meeting on the 27th to the 28th of the month was doubtless that they might arrange matters so as to transact business with greater dispatch the next day. We understand that each proprietor of one right in the town owned one fifty-third part of the town, exclusive of the Squires Farm and College Farm, but no man's right was yet located. And that each might have as fair a chance as possible in his location, they agreed that but one hundred acres to each right should be located at that time, and that no one should select more than fifty acres until all the others had selected their fifty acres upon their respective rights. The method adopted to locate each man's fifty acres was this: there were fifty-three slips of paper cut and marked from No. 1 to 53. These papers were put into a hat or box, and the proprietors drew out one paper each, and according to the number the individual drew so he stood in the choice of his first fifty acres. The man who drew No. 1 had a right to select his fifty acres in any part of the town not encroaching upon the two farms specified. He who drew No. 2 held the next choice, and so on to 53, an individual being designated to draw for the ministerial and school rights. But in the choice of the second fifty-acre lots to each individual proprietor there was no drawing for a choice; for it was agreed that he who had the last choice in the first division should have the first choice in the second division; so that he who had the first choice in the first division had the last choice in the second division. These preliminary steps being taken, the proprietors met on the 28th, appointed a committee for laying out the lots when chosen, and drew for their choice of lots. Aaron Cook drew No. 1 and had the first choice, Daniel Richards the fifty-third. The meeting was then adjourned to the first Wednesday of December next, at 8 o'clock A.M., to meet at the house of Joseph Bird, in Litchfield, and the proprietors hastened to Goshen, each to search out and locate his future home, and where he should repose his mortal part. This is the day we celebrate at the distance of one entire century from those hardy adventurers. From this period we date the regular settlement of this town; and whatever degree of interest we may feel on this occasion, we may rest assured our venerated fathers felt far more. They had to select for themselves and for theirs. Their personal interest and comfort were in a good degree involved in their choice. The labor of converting a wilderness into a fruitful field, and into smooth and green pastures, was theirs. Far distant was the day in their vision when the sun, with unobstructed rays and mellowing influences, should look down upon their soil as at this day. For a long period they could hope for the necessaries of life only, with a few conveniences and no luxuries, unless they were derived from the chase! They knew the toil of felling the towering trees of the forest, of making roads, building bridges, erecting mills, fences, habitations, barns, school-houses, and a house for worship; and it will appear in the sequel that these first settlers contemplated all these things from the commencement of their enterprise. Now, notwithstanding this was a peculiar race of men, prepared by the providence of God for bold and arduous undertakings, yet must they not have felt an interest and a solicitude while entering this forest for the first time which we do not and cannot feel? Yet they were sustained and directed, and by the strength of their arms, and the perseverance of their labors, we their descendants are placed in the lap of ease and plenty. I have stated that Aaron Cook drew No. 1, and had the first choice in the first division of lots. He chose—and we honor his choice—the south part of Town Hill, whereon now stand the brick house of the late Col. Moses Lyman, and the house of his son, Samuel Lyman. Daniel Richards, who was last in choice in this division, chose the land lying southeast of Narshapogge Pond, now injudiciously called West Side Pond, and it embraced the land whereon now stands the three-story house known by the name Hudson house. I say this pond is injudiciously called West Side Pond, because it is entered in all ancient conveyances by its Indian name, Narshapogge, and because it is much more definite in its Indian name than in its present name; for who that was not well acquainted with the use of terms here could decide which pond was meant by the term West Side Pond, whether it was this pond, or the one a little south of it? Beside, the Indian name is a much more dignified name; and as it was prior to the one now in common use by thousands of years probably, it ought to be retained as a memorial of a mighty race that have passed away to make room for the more civilized, but more effeminate European! And what is said of this pond applies with equal force to her sister a little south, which was called in the Indian tongue Marshapogge, but is now called Tyler Pond. Who for a moment can balance in his judgment in regard to the euphony of these two names? Not one. We say, then, let them bear their original names, and the names they hold in our records, and not attempt to filch from the poor Indian the right which God and nature gave him, to imprint the seal of his own language upon those everlasting hills, lakes, ponds, and streams! Pardon me this digression and I will proceed. I have said this day one hundred years this town was settled by its proprietors, but these were not the first English inhabitants within this town. I have already spoken of the Squires Farm, and given its boundaries at the southeasterly part of the town, lying on Litchfield line. It is upon record that, in February, 1734, James Wadsworth, Esq., sold his one-third part of the Squires Farm to Ebenezer Luke and Isaac Hill, all of Wallingford, of this State; that in February, 1736, there was a division of the whole farm between the owners, and that the southern third part fell to the share of said Hill. It appears, also, that in 1737, Ebenezer Hill came on to the west part of this south third of the farm, and built him a small framed house on the ground now improved for a barn-yard by Harvey Brooks. The house stood east of the road as it then ran, but west of where it now runs. This same season, 1737, Benjamin Frisbie bought of Luke Hill his third of the one hundred acres, divided between the said Hills, and built him a house a little north of the house of Ebenezer Hill, on the same side of the road. These two houses might have accommodated some few of the proprietors of the town while attending to the location and survey of their respective lots, but by far the greater portion must have reposed at night on the lap of indulgent nature, and slept under the protecting wing of high heaven.

"I will here remark that the first English child born in this town was called Billious Hill, son of Isaac Hill, one of the original proprietors. He was born at the house of Ebenezer Hill, by Harvey Brooks', as already described.

"I shall not attempt to describe the location and survey of each lot successively as the business proceeded, but shall advert to the fact that the proprietors held two meetings more at Litchfield before they were convened at Goshen, at which meetings they proceeded to make further divisions of land upon the same plan that was adopted at the first meeting. The first proprietors' meeting at Goshen was on the 13th of May, 1740, at the house of Joseph Hickock, on East Street, where Nathaniel Stanley afterwards lived. And here we may take our leave of the meetings of the proprietors as distinct meetings from the town, although they have held occasional meetings in their corporate capacity to the present time.

"The first town-meeting ever held in this town was on Dec. 6th, 1739. John Beach was chosen moderator, and Samuel Pettibone town clerk. John Beach, Samuel Pettibone, Nathaniel Baldwin, Samuel Towner, and Benajah Williams were chosen selectmen. Moses Lyman was chosen collector and treasurer. The place of this meeting not being specified, it is supposed that it was held at their meeting-house, standing a little east of north from the dwelling-house of Erastus Lyman, Esq., and four or five rods southeast of the yellow building denominated Mechanic's Hall, the spot we have now visited in solemn and grateful procession. This first meeting-house was built of rude materials. The butt end of a large white-ash tree, felled, composed the principal part of the wall on one side, and piled logs, with a covering of bark, completed the sanctuary. And does this appear small in our view, almost provoking a smile? It was great in the sight of God! It was the best they could do, and more than many of them enjoyed for their own shelter. It was the expression of their hearts, and an earnest of what they would do in time to come. It was saying that the God of the Pilgrims was their God, and should be the God of Goshen as far as it might depend on them. I would that that house now stood! How often would we steal a solitary walk thither, and in the holy stillness of evening go round her inclosures, think of the generation that congregated there, their fervent devotions, their prayers for covenanted mercies upon their posterity, and their present rest on high! And while thus musing would not the fire kindle in our own hearts, and should we not praise God that our fathers loved him, and gave us this precious example of dedicating to him the first fruits of their hearts and of their hands!

"But notwithstanding our fathers had thus early a house for God, they did not always improve it. It was of course much open between logs, and there were no stoves. It was, therefore, not fitted for worship in the severity of winter. Besides, there were no roads for the weak and tender of their congregation to travel in from different sections of the town. They therefore adopted the plan of carrying the gospel to the people, by appointing the public worship of God in different parts of the town; and at this first town-meeting they passed a vote that the 'selectmen should ascertain the places for holding the meetings for the public worship of God.' At a town-meeting, Jan. 11, 1740, it was voted to hire a minister on probation, and that Nathaniel Baldwin, Samuel Towner, and Samuel Pettibone be a committee to go after a minister, with full power to agree with him. It seems that this committee were successful in obtaining Mr. Stephen Heaton, of New Haven, to be their candidate; for in April, 1740, the town voted him a call to settle with them in the gospel ministry, and specified the settlement and salary they would give him. The call was not immediately accepted, and in September following it was renewed to him, with some addition to the former proposed salary. This call was accepted, and Mr. Heaton was ordained November, 1740, at the house of Capt. John Beach, on East Street, east side of the road, opposite to the present dwelling-house of Eber Bailey.

"The town, at their meetings preparatory to the settlement of Mr. Heaton, had voted that it was necessary to build a meeting-house, and Nathaniel Baldwin was appointed to solicit the General Assembly for a committee, to be appointed to decide on the spot where the new meeting-house should stand. It appears further, from the records, that the General Assembly, agreeably to the request of the petitioners, did appoint a committee of three from the town of Hartford to fix on the site for a meeting-house, and that the said committee did come out and set the stake where the house should stand some time in the summer of 1740, and that after some delay and embarrassments the second meeting-house in the town was raised and covered in the year 1744. It was a house forty-six by thirty-four feet, and twenty feet between sill and plate. It had two galleries, one above the other, and when it was finished was painted yellow. It stood a little northwest of this house, and a little south of the house that was removed in 1832, the south side of the third meeting-house coming within four feet of the north side of the second house. There are some two or three present who remember this second house, which was removed in 1770.

"I will now, for the satisfaction of the present generation, and with a view to impress us all with the truth that the fashion of this world passeth away, present you this town as it was in 1745. I am indebted for these statistics mainly to Deacon Lewis M. Norton, of this place, whose unwearied and persevering effort in this cause for years entitles him to the lasting gratitude of his townsmen and to a more substantial reward. We will return, then, to the south part of the town, where we have already been in the history, and commence with Capt. Jonathan Buel, son of Deacon John Buel, of Litchfield, and father of Capt. Jonathan Buel, now of this town. His house stood upon the line between Litchfield and Goshen, on the west side of the north and south road, as it now runs. In the house lately owned and occupied by Elias Buel, a little south of Harvey Brooks, on the east side of the road, lived Ebenezer Hill, Jr., son of the Ebenezer Hill whose house we have already located in Mr. Brooks' barn-yard. This house of Ebenezer Hill, Jr., lately occupied by Elias Buel, was built in the summer of 1741, and is the oldest house in the town. This Hill and Capt. Jonathan Buel kept tavern alternately for a number of years. Buel would keep two years, and then Hill two, for the accommodation of those who were going to and from 'Western Lands.' About half-way between the house of Ebenezer Hill, Jr., and the house lately occupied by Elisha Buel, now by Watts Brooks, stood the house of Asa Hill, another son of Ebenezer Hill, first mentioned. A little north of the present house of Watts Brooks, near the flat, stood the house of Benjamin Frisbie, already described as the second house, built in 1737, on the Squires Farm. A little north of Frisbie's house, as we ascend the hill, and precisely where stands the house of Joseph Beardsley, lived John Dibble, with a numerous family from Wallingford. Afterwards, John Dibble, Jr., kept a store in the house for several years, and then built him a store, about ten rods south of his house, near the house of Frisbie, and traded there. It was called the red store, because it was painted red. Proceeding north until we come to within four rods southeast of the present brick house of Samuel Ives, and there lived Noah Wadhams, from Middletown, the progenitor of all those who have ever lived in Goshen bearing the name of Wadhams. He was prosperous in business and reared a numerous family. About twenty-eight rods north of Noah Wadhams lived, on the west side of the road, Jeremiah Howe, from Wallingford. He was the progenitor of all the families by the name of Howe in Goshen, and of many in Canaan. The next neighbor to Howe, at the north, was Samuel Pettibone, from Simsbury. His house stood a few feet north of the present brick house of Thomas and Hiram Griswould, on the same side of the way. He was the first lawyer in Goshen, and for some time was State's attorney. He was much employed in the early business transactions of the town; but being overcome and thrust down by the strong man from the West Indies, he terminated his earthly existence at the old house formerly occupied by Harvey Brooks. About one hundred and fifteen rods north of the house of Pettibone, on the west side of the road, stood the house of Christopher Grimes, from Wallingford, the old well still designating the location of his dwelling. North of the house of Grimes, and about sixty rods south of the house long owned and occupied by Deacon Augustus Thomson, but now owned by Abraham Norton and his son William, stood the house of Gideon Hurlbut, from Wethersfield, on the east side of the road. Hurlbut was a substantial man, and pious. He reared a numerous family, and has one granddaughter still living in the town,—Lorana, the wife of Andrew Norton, Sr.

"A few rods north of Hurlbut's, and on the west side of the road running north and south, and north of the road then leading to Town Hill, stood the house of Zachariah Curtis, from Wethersfield. The Town Hill road came into West Street road at that time, between Gideon Hurlbut's and Curtis', forty or fifty rods south of where it now comes in. North of Curtis', and opposite to the house of Abraham Norton, on the west side of the road, stood the house of Benjamin Phelps, from Windsor. He soon afterwards sold to Timothy Gaylord, of Wallingford, father of the late Joseph Gaylord, and grandfather of Joseph Ives and Willard Gaylord. This Timothy Gaylord was killed in the old French war,—was shot through the head by an Indian as he stood behind a tree, and was moving out his own head to obtain a shot at the Indian. The next house north, on the west side of the way, near where now stands the barn of Truman Starr, was the house of John Wright, who had a numerous family. He is the ancestor of those who bear the name of Wright in this town. A little north of this, on the same side of the way, and a little north of the late Woodruff house, stood the house of Deacon Gideon Thompson, from New Haven. This house was palisadoed against the Indians. The manner of fortifying a house was this: they dug a deep ditch around the house, placed logs perpendicularly in it all around the house, leaving a space only for a gate. The logs were placed close together, sharpened at the top, and extended eight, ten, or twelve feet above the ground. The earth taken from the trench was then returned, and beaten down until the logs stood firmly; and this, with a gate well secured, was a tolerable defense against a sudden attack from the Indians. It is needless, perhaps, to say that the Indians did not deal in artillery. At this house a town-meeting was held in May, 1741. He was one of the first deacons in the church, being appointed at the time of the organization of the church, in November, 1740, before the ordination of Mr. Heaton, or very soon afterwards. He was the first representative from this town to the General Assembly, 1757, and, in 1759, he died at Hartford while a member of the Assembly. He was the grandfather of Jonathan Thomson and Deacon

Augustus Thomson. From this house of Deacon Gideon Thomson there was no road open either north or west in 1745, but all was forest, with the exception of a settlement in Canada Village, so called.

"In 1739 or 1740 the said Benjamin Frisbie, of the south end, moved into that place, and built him a house a few rods north of the present house of Augustus Miles, Esq. In 1742 he built a saw-mill, where stands now the woolen-factory, and soon after he built the first grist-mill in town. This stood a little distance from the saw-mill, and occupied the ground which is now improved as a tannery by George Miles. Undoubtedly the inhabitants of this village are indebted to this same Frisbie for the name of their village, and that the Connecticut Historical Collections have the truth in the case. Capt. Jonathan Buel, who can remember eighty years, says that it was called Canada as long ago as he can remember, and he always understood that it came by its name as stated in the Collections, viz., that this Frisbie was ever talking about removing to Canada, but never went. The wags of his time being wearied with his story of Canada, told him he should live in Canada, and if he would not remove to Canada, they would bring Canada to him, and from that time they called the place of his residence Canada. West of Canada Village, in 1745, there was no road and no settlement until we came to Cornwall. We will return, then, to Town Hill. Here were but three families, and all southwesterly of them in this town was wilderness. On the top of Town Hill, on the west side of the road, and a little south of the present dwelling of Gen. Moses Cook, stood the house of Joseph Curtis, from Wethersfield. He had a numerous family. He sold out in 1750 to Daniel Cook, father of the present Moses Cook, Sr., who still survives. About twenty-five rods south of Gen. Moses Cook's present dwelling, on the east side of the road, stood the house of Joseph Cook, from Wallingford, father of Daniel Cook, and grandfather of Moses Cook, Sr. Joseph Cook lived here until the time of his death, Nov. 7, 1764.

"South of Curtis', and about midway of the hill on the west side of the road, stood the log house of Deacon Moses Lyman, from Northampton, Mass. His son, Col. Moses Lyman, afterwards built the present brick house now owned by the Hon. Moses Lyman, on the spot where stood the house of Deacon Lyman. This first house was built upon elevated underpinning, and the windows were made high in the walls of the house, to prevent the Indians from firing into the windows in case the family were invaded by them. But this Deacon Moses Lyman was cut off in the midst of his years, and in the midst of his usefulness, Jan. 6, 1768, aged fifty-five. He had a protuberance of the bone in one of his limbs, submitted to amputation, and after one month's slow but incessant bleeding he expired. I have seen a printed sermon, delivered on the occasion of his death, by the Rev. Mr. Newell, which shows that the church and town were in mourning by this bereavement. They felt, as did the young prophets at Elijah's removal, that the Lord had taken away their head man from among them. And from all that I can learn of the aged now living concerning him, he was a great blessing to the town. He came from Northampton, then the centre of theology and active piety in New England. He had sat under the ministry of the celebrated Jonathan Edwards, seen and felt the power of those great revivals, and he was eminently prepared to bless a new settlement. Whatever his hand found to do of benevolence and usefulness he did with his might; and as a beneficent Providence had given him the ability to bless, so he imparted. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon him, and he caused the widow's heart to sing for joy! His rest is undoubtedly glorious! We have with us to-day three grandchildren of this man, Moses, Samuel, and Erastus Lyman. He has here a great-great-grandchild, who is the tenth Moses Lyman in regular succession, and the first son born in each successive family, and the first-born in every family, with one exception. It has been said that Town Hill received its name on account of the early impression that there would be the centre of the town. It is more probable they thought that might be the centre of a south parish, when the north part of the town became a parish and the southwest part became settled. At the north side of this Town Hill we find a collection of water called Dog Pond. This received its name from the simple fact that Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, of the north part of the town, lost his dog there by drowning in 1738. The circumstances are not mentioned, but it is probable that the event occurred while the old hunter was in the chase. Leaving Town Hill on the north side, and passing east towards Samuel Pettibone's, now Thomas Griswold's, and just before we reach the bottom of the hill, we see a saw-mill, a little at our right, on the south side of the road, which is supplied with water taken by a small canal, from the natural channel made by the waters which flow from Dog Pond. This mill was built in 1742, by Benjamin Phelps and others. Proceeding on eastwardly by Samuel Pettibone's, and crossing the meadow precisely as the road now runs, we shall come to the house of Zacheus Griswold, from Windsor. His house stood a very little north of the present house of the widow and heirs of John Griswold. He was the father of all those inhabitants of this town who have borne the name Griswold. He lived more than one hundred years, and his wife attained to just one hundred. His daughter-in-law, the wife of his son, Giles Griswold, still survives, and has attained to her ninety-ninth year. A little farther to the north and we come to the house of Abel Phelps, from Simsbury. It stood a few feet southeast from the present dwelling of Beebe Wadhams. He and his son Abel occupied the house for many years. Proceeding north, we do not find a habitation until we reach the residence of Capt. Samuel Thomson, from New Haven. His house stood on the west side of the north and south road, near the present store of Moses Lyman, Jr. The road from West Street came into Middle Street where it now does, and, proceeding east by the first meeting-house, at the old ash-tree, proceeded directly to East Street, and came out nearly opposite to the road that comes in from Torrington. On the south side of this east and west road, and ten rods east of Mechanic's Hall, on Middle Street, lived Amos Thomson, from New Haven. Deacon Gideon Thomson, Samuel Thomson, and Amos Thomson were all brothers, or near relatives. Proceeding north on Middle Street till we come to the garden now improved by Simmons Scovil, and here we find the site of the dwelling of Rev. Mr. Heaton, the first minister of the town. This garden belongs to the house and lot now owned by Nelson Wadhams, of Canada Village. There was no other house between Mr. Heaton's and the second meeting-house already described. At this date there was no road directly east from the meeting-house, and none directly west. There was no house from Amos Thomson's to East Street, and none on Beach or Lucas Hill. There was a road open to West side, so called, but no house from the meeting-house till we come to the house of Timothy Tuttle, which stood on the east side of the road, nearly opposite to the present house of his granddaughter, Mrs. Huldah Tuttle. He was an original proprietor in the town, from Wallingford, and reared a numerous family. Some thirty or forty rods north of Tuttle's we come to the house of Daniel Richards, from Hartford, of whom we have already spoken. His house stood a little northwest from the present three-story Hudson house. He was the grandfather of the present Russel Richards.

"Passing onward to the northwest till we cross the outlet of Narshapogge Pond, we come to the house of Caleb Beach, standing near where Russel Richards' house now does. He was from Wallingford. At the Barnam house, south of the West-side graveyard, lived Daniel Harris, Jr., from Wallingford. No descendants in town. A little west from the last-mentioned place, and in the present garden of Lewis C. Wadhams, on the east side of his house, stood the house of Benjamin Deming, from Middletown, father of Wait, Elias, and Jonathan Deming. Still farther north, about sixty rods, on the east side of the road, stood the house of Thomas Marvin, from Litchfield. He was an original proprietor in the town, but did not remain long here. Near the house long occupied by Philo Collins, and now by William Miles, stood the house of Benajah Williams, from Stonington, an original proprietor in two rights. He did not remain long in town, but sold his large and beautiful farm, of more than four hundred acres, to Ephraim Williams, of Wethersfield, whose son, Jacob Williams, came and lived on it. Pursuing this road north until we come to the present new house of Acros Lawton, we come to the house of Jonah Case, from Simsbury, an original proprietor. From this house north all was wilderness and no road. There was no house north of the meeting-house and west of Humphrey's lane until we came to West-side Street, already described. We must return back then to the Centre, and before we go to East Street we must visit the beautiful hill of Andrew Norton, Jr., three-fourths of a mile southeast from this house. On the east declivity of this hill, on the south side of the road, and about fifteen rods east of the old house of Andrew Norton, Jr., stood the house of Lenus Ward, from Wallingford. In the autumn of the year of which we are now speaking—1745—Ward sold out to William Walter, who brought up a family there, and from him the Walters in Goshen have descended. At a little later date than the time of which we are speaking came David Norton, from Durham, and built a house on the north side of the road, on the top of the hill, almost on the same spot where now stands the new house of Andrew Norton, Jr. He was a young man of unusual enterprise and of substantial character. He was the father of David, Eber, Oliver, John, Anna, Alexander, Andrew, William, and Miriam, three of whom continue to this present time, Alexander, Andrew, and Miriam. He was, however, taken away in the midst of life and usefulness. He was greatly interested in the building of the third meeting-house in 1769. On Monday he labored very hard in getting in large stones for the foundation of that house. He was taken suddenly ill, and died on Thursday, aged forty-four; so that, like David of old, he was not permitted to see the house his heart was fixed upon. Not only his family, but the town felt their bereavement.

"At the south end of East Street we come to the place of Cyprian Collins, the fourth son of Rev. Timothy Collins, of Litchfield. In the spring of this year Rev. Mr. Collins purchased land at that place, and some time afterwards sent his son Cyprian to clear the land and build upon it, with the promise of a future deed. The first house of Cyprian Collins stood on the west side of the road, near the horse-shed of Capt. Timothy Collins. His second house was the one now owned and occupied by Capt. Timothy Collins. This Cyprian Collins had a numerous family, and was the ancestor of all who bear the name of Collins in this town. He had following children, Ambrose, Triphena, Amanda, Philo, Anna, Lauranda, Rhoda, Cyprian, Phebe, and Tyrannus, and all these lived to become heads of numerous families. Cyprian Collins was a frugal and an industrious man, and a firm patriot in the Revolution. In the early period of his life he owned the covenant, as it was called, and brought his children to baptism, and was always a regular attendant on divine worship. And here it may not be inappropriate to remark, for the benefit of the rising generation, that the practice of receiving persons of moral life into a half-way relation to the church had obtained extensively in New England at that day. The applicant for this relation was required to profess his belief in the fundamental principles of the gospel promise to lead a sober life, and to train up his household in the things of religion. If he would do this he might bring his children to baptism, and yet not consider himself a member of the church or come to the communion-table, and not even consider himself a regenerate person. This will explain what we have further to say of Mr. Cyprian Collins. Notwithstanding he had owned the covenant, had his children baptized, and ever been a regular attendant on the instituted means of grace, yet in old age his attention was powerfully arrested to the spiritual concerns of his soul; he realized that he was a great sinner, cast himself upon the mercy of the Saviour, and, as we trust, obtained eternal life. At the age of seventy-five years he made a public profession of religion, and to the close of his life gave pleasing evidence that he was indeed a child of God.

"I will here remark, that in 1745 there was no road from Litchfield to meet East Street road, for I find that at a town-meeting in 1749 a committee was raised to 'treat with Litchfield men about their laying a road to meet our East-side road.'

"Leaving the place of Cyprian Collins, and proceeding north, we come to the house of Benoni Hills, standing near the northwest corner of the present barn of the late Samuel D. Street. The road then ran west of this barn. Benoni Hills was the father of Zimri and Col. Medad Hills. About nine rods west of the present house of William Lyman, the late residence of Capt. Jonathan North, and west of the road as it then ran, stood the house of Joseph North, from Farmington. He was the father of Dr. Joseph North, Ezekiel North, and others. This house was palisadoed, or fortified, against the Indians. A little farther north, and just where the barn stands which was lately owned and improved by Dudley Henderson, stood the house of Capt. Samuel Hinman, an original proprietor, from Litchfield. This house was built in the fall of 1738. About thirty rods north of Hinman's and a little south of the turnpike road, as it comes into East Street from Sharon, stood the house of Stephen Goodwin, from Simsbury. Here Goodwin kept tavern some years. Afterwards he built about twenty rods southeast, and there he kept a tavern. Of this man we shall hear again when we come to the war of the Revolution. A few feet north of the present brick house of Joseph Goddard, built by Birdsey Norton, Esq., stood the log house of Deacon Ebenezer Norton, from Durham. A few years afterwards he built the house which stood a little northwest of the present brick house, and in this he lived until his decease. This Deacon, or Esquire, or Col. Norton, for he bore these several titles at the same time, was a distinguished character in his day. No man, perhaps, with the exception of Deacon Moses Lyman, was ever more loved and honored by the people of this town than he. He was a member of the General Assembly twenty-six sessions, in times that tried men's souls. And he would have been called to discharge those duties still longer, but his increasing infirmities induced him to decline all public services. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, of this town, and their children were Miles, Aaron, Elizabeth, Ebenezer, Rachel, Marana, Nathaniel, Olive, and Birdsey. They have three grandchildren now living in town, Abraham Norton, Deacon Lewis M. Norton, and Elizabeth M., the wife of Joseph Goddard. He departed this life March 15, 1785, aged seventy. She died April 16, 1811, aged eighty-nine. Their descendants at the time of her death were two hundred and eight. Four of them were great-great-grandchildren.

"About thirty rods north from the house of Deacon Ebenezer Norton, and a little northeast of the red house once occupied by Deacon Samuel Norton, and now owned and occupied by Adam Bently, stood the log house of Samuel Norton, from Durham. This house was palisadoed against the Indians. Ebenezer, Samuel, and David Norton were brethren, the sons of Samuel Norton, of Durham.

"Proceeding north we come to the dwelling of Nathaniel Stanley, from Farmington. His log house stood about two rods northwest from the northwest corner of the present house, so long occupied by his grandson, William Stanley, and his great-grandson, Deacon George Stanley, but now owned by Adam Bently. He came to this town in 1742, and purchased the lot of Joseph Hickock. He died March 2, 1770, attaining to more than ninety years.

"A few rods northeast of the East Street burying-ground, on the east side of the road, stands the same house which stood there in 1745, and is one of the oldest houses in the town. It was originally the house of Barnabas Beach, eldest son of Capt. John Beach. Daniel Miles, Esq., succeeded Mr. Beach. It was long known as the residence of Samuel Chapin, Esq., and is now the home of widow Emily Chapin. On the same side, about twenty rods southeast of the dwelling of Jesse Beach, stood the house of Adna Beach, second son of Capt. John Beach. He had a numerous family, was once a representative to the General Assembly, and was the grandfather of Jesse Beach. A little north of the house occupied by Norman Austin, on the same side of the way, stood the house of Edmund Beach, the third son of Capt. John Beach. His family was numerous. Upon the death of Deacon Ebenezer Norton, he was chosen to succeed him in the office of deacon. Three times he was sent a representative to the General Assembly. His house has remained until recently, and its place may yet be seen.

"A little at the north of the old house now spoken of, on the same side of the way, opposite to the house of Eber Bailey and north of the road running east, stood the house of Capt., or Deacon John Beach, the place already spoken of as the one where the Rev. Mr. Heaton was ordained. This was the old hive where issued nearly all the families bearing the name of Beach in this town. Deacon John Beach was from Wallingford, an original proprietor in two rights, and came to this town in 1738 with nine sons, Barnabas, Adna, Edmund, Linus, Amos, Jacob, John, Roys, and Baldwin. Being thus blessed with a quiverful of arrows, he commanded respect. First and last he sustained all important offices in the town. Four times he represented this town in the General Assembly. We may suppose that Deacon Beach, with his nine sons, would not, in the first instance, erect a mean cabin. This, with the considerations that there was no meeting-house fitted to the occasion of an ordination in 1740; that there was no road from East to Middle Street worthy of being called a road; and that East Street was at that time more thickly inhabited than any other section of the town, is explanatory why Mr. Heaton was ordained at the house of Deacon John Beach. I will remark here, that Deacon John Beach had a brother, Samuel, who settled in Litchfield, and gave name to the north and south street that is called Beach Street. He was the progenitor of those families of that name in that neighborhood. I will also say that Jacob Beach, the sixth son of Deacon John Beach, was the father of the present Francis and Julius Beach, whose joint ages amount to one hundred and fifty-six years, and are with us to-day.

"From Deacon John Beach's house we proceed north till we come to the garden of Robert Palmer, on the east side of East Street and on the south side of the road leading eastward, and there stood the house of Samuel Towner, from Waterbury. He was an original proprietor, but did not remain long in town. Just north of Towner's house, and near the spot where Robert Palmer's house now stands, stood the house of John North, from Farmington. He did something as a merchant there. He built what was called the blue house, deriving its name from the color of its paint. It stood precisely on the spot where now stands the house of Robert Palmer. This house was struck by lightning in the afternoon of the 6th of June, 1767, in a tremendous tempest of lightning, thunder, and rain. All were struck down in the house, and two men, James Rice and Martin Wilcox, were killed. This Martin Wilcox was a young man, pious and much beloved. The house seemed instantly on fire in various places, and the bodies of these men were nearly consumed before they could be taken from the flames. The terror produced by this Providence was so great that the ancients speak of it with awe to the present day. About twenty rods at the north of the blue house, on the west side of the road, stood the house of John Thomson, Jr., from Wallingford. His father was the original proprietor. John Thomson was the progenitor of the Thomsons in the north part of the town.

"North of John Thomson's, and fifty rods southeast of the yellow house built by Asaph Hall, Esq., stood the log house of Elkanah Hall, from Wallingford. His father, David Hall, was the original proprietor in two rights, but he never lived in Goshen. He afterwards was killed by a ball at Fort George, in the old French war. Asaph Hall, Esq., succeeded Elkanah at the log house, and lived there until he built the yellow house, and there lived until his death, about thirty-eight years ago. Asaph Hall was a talented man, and possessed the confidence of the people of this town. Twenty-four times between 1773 and 1792 he sat in the General Assembly. He was then called Capt. Hall. For many years he sustained the office of magistrate, and was a firm friend to his country.

"And now we come to the house of Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, one of the first characters of that day. He was originally from Guilford, but came first to Litchfield, and at the settlement of this town he purchased two rights and came to Goshen in 1739. His house stood on the west side of East Street, and on the south side of the narrow road leading to Humphrey's lane, a few rods southwest from the brick house of Asaph Hall. He was eminently a man of God, and was highly esteemed both in the church and in the town. Twice was he sent to the General Assembly. He was at first a deacon in the church at Guilford, then at Litchfield, and as soon as the church was organized here he was appointed one of their first deacons. He married, while yet in Guilford, Elizabeth, the sister of Abraham Parmele, the progenitor of all the Parmeles in Goshen. Deacon Baldwin, his wife, and his eight children all had a standing in this church, and although all of them have long since gone from this world, yet our faith sees them members of the church triumphant and glorified, the father saying, 'Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me!' The names of their children were Nathaniel, Elizabeth, Samuel, Brewen, Anne, Sarah, Lucy, and Rachel. The late Isaac Baldwin, of this town, was the son of Nathaniel Baldwin, and grandson of Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin.

"The late Brewen Baldwin was grandson of Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, and son of Samuel Baldwin. But the late Daniel, Stephen, and Elisha Baldwin were grandsons of Timothy Baldwin, of Guilford, brother of Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin. On the east side of the road, and nearly opposite to Asaph Hall's brick house, on the north side of the road which leads to Hart Hollow, stood the house of John Smith, from Farmington. Here he commenced trading, and was the first merchant in the town. After about two years he removed to the Towner house, just south of Robert Palmer's, and next he came to the lot on which Erastus Lyman, Esq., now lives. He built a large house between Mechanic's Hall and the house of Esquire Lyman, afterwards called the Kettle house. He for some years made potash on the little stream at the foot of the hill, east of this house, and from this circumstance the stream derived its name, Potash Brook. The little children who resort to this place in the summer months, when out of school, to catch tadpoles, or porwigles, may remember how they come to say, 'Come, let us go to the Potash.' Abigail, the daughter of this Mr. Smith, married the Rev. Abel Newell, the second minister in the town.

"We return to East Street, and proceeding north from Smith's house we come to the present store of Putnam Bailey. Here stood the house of Timothy Stanley, the brother of Nathaniel Stanley, of whom we have spoken. He came into town in the summer of 1742, from Farmington. His descendants are numerous, but are scattered abroad in the several States. From this house there was a highway existing in name, a little distance north of the present house of Collins Baldwin, but the whole country north and east was yet in possession of the tenants of the forest. Nature vegetated, blossomed, matured, and fell without the friendly hand of culture, and without imparting directly a single blessing to civilized life.

"In Humphrey's lane, as it is called, a road running parallel with East Street, south of the north meeting-house and a little west of East Street, there were two families. On the west side of this lane, about ten rods from where the road from the meeting-house comes into the lane, stood the house of John Wilcox, from Farmington. Daniel Wilcox, from Simsbury, was the original owner. The posterity of this John Wilcox have now become numerous. John Flavel Wilcox is his descendant. The other family in this street was Samuel Humphrey. His house was thirty or forty rods south of Wilcox, on the east side of the road as it now is, but on the west as it then was. Humphrey was an original proprietor from Simsbury. He had eighteen children by four wives, —ten sons and eight daughters,—and his posterity are very numerous, and have ever well sustained the reputation of their worthy progenitor. Indeed, it is thought that the descendants of this Samuel Humphrey are more numerous, by far, than the descendants of any other man who ever lived in Goshen.

"We have now but one more location to notice. It is that of Abraham Parmele, from Guilford. His father was the original proprietor, but never came here to live. His son came on at the settlement of the town. His house, when built, stood about one hundred and thirty rods northwest of Whist Pond, on the north and south road running west of the pond, and near where the east and west road from Robert Palmer's comes into the Pond road. The first year he labored on this lot all alone, but boarded with his uncle, Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin, of East Street. The next year he had a wigwam and boarded himself; and he had a bed, too, for returning from Guilford in the spring of that year, he brought with him a bag of grass-seed, which was far more elastic and downy than the floor of his cabin. On this he reposed at night, secure from the wolves that howled around his tenement. It is said of young Parmele, that his axe was heavy but he knew it not. It fell thick and strong. The sound thereof was from early morn until the stars appeared, and the sturdy sons of the forest lay around him as windfalls! But although he was thus enjoying single-blessedness in the stillness, grandeur, and sublimity of a deep forest, yet it seems he did not think it good for man to live alone always, and believed there must be a helpmeet for him somewhere. In the summer of 1745 his house went up, an indication of a revolution in his domestic establishment, and in May, 1746, Mary Stanley, the fourth daughter of Nathaniel Stanley, of East Street, was legally constituted associated head of the establishment. This was an honorable and a happy union. They had ten children; nearly all of them, with the parents, became pious, and two of the sons entered the gospel ministry. This was the father of our much-loved friend and father in the town, Nathaniel Stanley Parmele, who still survives the successive attacks of the most formidable disease which falls upon our race, apoplexy. I have several times mentioned Whist Pond, in the vicinity of Mr. Parmele's. This pond derives its name from an old Indian of that name, who came every year alone from Farmington, and spent the season in hunting around the pond, and fishing and bathing in it, but who was finally drowned in its waters. I will here remark that Gun-Stock Brook, in the north part of the town, derived its name from the fact that curly maple grew plentifully upon its banks, which was much used during the war of the Revolution in the manufacture of stocks for muskets.

"I have now presented you with a map of this town as it was when the original proprietors were fairly settled on their lots. And we can hardly fail to see that some parts of the town were then as thickly inhabited as at this day. This was the case with West Street all the distance to Litchfield line. It was so on West side from Timothy Tuttle's to the house of William Miles, and on East Street, from Cyprian Collins' to Putnam Bailey's store.

"We will now bring into view some of the civil and ecclesiastical affairs of the town at the same time of which we have been speaking, 1745. It seems that at an early period the inhabitants of the north part of the town were sensible of the disadvantages they labored under from the location of the meeting-house in this place, and that they commendably labored for one of two things,—either that the second meeting-house should be located farther north, or that the town should be divided into two parishes. And this was the cause of a committee being appointed by the General Assembly, in 1740, to come to this place and decide where the house should stand. And we can scarcely doubt but that it was in view of another ecclesiastical society existing at the north that the stake for the second meeting-house was placed here; for no man in his senses could suppose that a house for worship here would give equal advantages to the north with those imparted to the south. Accordingly, we find a vote passed at a public town-meeting, on the 10th of December, 1745, expressing their willingness for the town to be divided into two ecclesiastical societies, as soon as the north should stand fifteen hundred pounds on the grand list, and the dividing line should be through the centre of the town, running east and west. This appears to have been satisfactory at the time, and the north and south proceeded on in their original relation; and, indeed, nothing appears on record to show that this subject ever alienated the feelings of the brethren of the church, or that it ever interrupted the community of feeling between families naturally allied. But at this early period of Mr. Heaton's ministry among the people of Goshen, dissatisfaction arose in the minds of many in regard to him, and early in the year 1746 we find one of the most loving, modest, and polite invitations for Mr. Heaton to leave them that may be found, I think, on history. The vote stands thus: 'Voted, that we will choose a committee to treat with our reverend pastor about some reasonable and loving terms of agreement, so that the door may be opened, if he in his wisdom shall think fit, to seek for an orderly dismission from the work of the ministry in this place, or to treat with him about making some suitable alterations.'

"Mr. Heaton, it seems, was not equally pacific and loving towards his people, but retained his relation to them as a pastor seven years longer. The reasons for this dissatisfaction are nowhere publicly stated, but it may be supposed that the pressure of the times, together with their recent origin and expenditures, contributed something to this uneasiness; for we have arrived to that period when the inhabitants were visited with the greatest calamity they ever were called to experience,—I mean what is termed the old French war.

"We will now look at some of the domestic transactions of the town from 1745 to 1754. At a town-meeting, Feb. 16, 1747, it was voted to pay Timothy Stanley thirty shillings, old tenor, for killing a wolf. April 22, 1747, the town forbids the selectmen paying the Rev. Mr. Heaton any money. Jan. 4, 1748, the town raise a committee to lay out a road four rods wide from the meeting-house north to Canaan. Sept. 19, 1749, a committee is raised to look out a road from Deacon Gideon Thomson's (opposite the present house of Truman Starr, Esq.) to Frisbie's mills, in Canada, and to Cornwall. April 8, 1751, it was voted that Samuel Pettibone, Esq., be an agent to petition the General Assembly for a county in this part of their government. I would here remark that until 1751 these Western towns were all included in the county of Hartford, but this year the new county of Litchfield was created. In June, 1753, the Rev. Stephen Heaton was dismissed from his pastoral relation to this church and people, and steps were immediately taken to procure preaching. It appears that Mr. Abel Newell was their first candidate upon Mr. Heaton's removal; that he received a call to settle with them in 1754, but did not receive ordination till 1755. The town stipulated to pay Mr. Newell fifteen hundred pounds settlement, old tenor, within three years of his ordination,—five hundred pounds annually for three years. His salary for the first year was to be equal in value to one hundred bushels of wheat, to sixty-six bushels of rye, and to two hundred and one bushels of Indian corn; and then to rise forty pounds per annum, old tenor, in the same proportion to said grain, till the salary should amount in value to one hundred and twelve bushels of wheat, to one hundred and thirty-four bushels of rye, and to two hundred and twenty-five bushels of Indian corn, and then his salary was to remain fixed at that sum.

"There is nothing especially interesting in the public transactions of the town from 1755 to 1765. There is one vote of the town in 1762 which may be humiliating to our present feelings, and yet it confirms what I have already stated in regard to the pressure of the times in the new settlements at that period, and shows how the views and feelings of men will differ at different times in regard to the morality of things, according to the light they have on those subjects. The vote reads thus: 'Voted to choose an agent for said town, to prefer a prayer to the General Assembly at their session in May next, praying said Assembly to grant to said town liberty to raise the sum of two hundred pounds, by a lottery, for the making and mending highways in said town, under such regulations as said Assembly in their wisdom shall think proper.' Another vote, Jan. 12, 1763, will show us the price of different kinds of grain at that time: 'Voted to give the Rev. Mr. Newell, for his services in the ministry in this town the year past, for wheat, four shillings per bushel, and for rye, two shillings and nine pence per bushel, and for Indian corn, two shillings per bushel.'

"April 21, 1768, 'Voted, forty-nine to twenty-two, that a new meeting-house is needed. July 3, 1769, Voted to build a new meeting-house for public worship at the place affixed by the County Court in said town. Voted, that said meeting-house be sixty-four feet in length and forty-four in breadth, and that Ensign David Norton, Lieut. Parmele, and Zacheus Griswold be a committee to carry on the business of building said meeting-house.' This third meeting-house was raised in the spring of the next year, 1770, giving twenty-six years for the existence of the second meeting-house, and sixty-two years for the third, as that was removed to make way for the present house in 1832. In the autumn of 1771, November 15th, Ensign Elisha Blinn was appointed first chorister, Fisk Beach the second, and Miles Norton the third, at a regular town-meeting.

"I would here stop to speak of certain appendages to that meeting-house, and to many others in the country at that day. They were called Sabbath-day houses, or noon-houses. The object of these houses was to furnish the owners of them, and such of their friends as they were disposed to invite, with a warm retreat in winter, during the interval between forenoon and afternoon public services. And we must bear in mind that at that day a stove in a meeting-house was a thing unknown and unthought of. These houses generally consisted of two rooms, ten or twelve feet square, with a chimney in the centre between them, and a fireplace in each room. They were generally built at the united expense of two or more families. Dry fuel was kept in each house, ready for kindling a fire. On the morning of the Sabbath the owner of each room deposited in his saddle-bags the necessary refreshment for himself and family, and a bottle of beer or cider, and took an early start for the sanctuary. He first called at his Sabbath-day house, built him a fire, deposited his luncheon, warmed himself and family, and at the hour of worship they were all ready to sally forth, and to shiver in the cold during the morning services at the house of worship. At noon they returned to their Sabbath-houses, with some invited friends, perhaps, where a warm room received them, the fire having been in operation during the morning exercises. The saddle-bags were now brought forth and their contents discharged upon a prophet's table, of which all partook a little, and each in turn drank at the bottle. This service being performed, and thanks returned, the patriarch of the family drew from his pocket the notes he had taken during the morning service, and the sermon came under renewed and distinct consideration, all enjoying the utmost freedom in their remarks. Sometimes a well-chosen chapter or paragraph was read from an author, and the service was not unfrequently concluded by prayer; then all returned to the sanctuary to seek a blessing there. If the cold was severe, the family might return to their house to warm them before they sought their habitation. The fire was then extinguished, the saddle-bags and the fragments were gathered up, the house locked, and all returned to their home. There were no less than four of these houses standing around the third meeting-house at once, three on the north side of the road, west of the present blacksmith's shop, and one south, by the town post, between the brick school-house and H. N. Lyman's store. The Sabbath-house that stood by the present town post was owned by Deacon Moses Lyman and Capt. Jonathan Buel, father of the present Capt. Jonathan Buel. The one farthest east, on the north, was owned by Deacon Ebenezer Norton and his brother, Samuel Norton. The next west of them was owned by Deacon Nathaniel Baldwin and Samuel Baldwin, and the third was owned by Nehemiah Lewis and Adna Beach.

"I am now in the history of the town, 1772, when a road was laid out directly west from the meeting-house to Elisha Thompson's house, standing near the present cider-mill of Ira Thompson."

CHAPTER XXXIII.*

GOSHEN (Continued).

Among those noble men and women who first planted themselves at Boston and its vicinity in 1630, were found some who five years later were lured away from the Massachusetts colony by what they heard of the rich meadow-lands lying on the banks of the Connecticut River. In the three towns of Hartford, Wethersfield, and Windsor they made their home. In two years they numbered three hundred souls, and just at this point they were compelled to fight the sons of the forest.

Five of their men at work had been murdered by the Pequots, and history hardly shows up more heroic men than the ninety men, old and young, from that little colony of three hundred, who sprang to arms, attacked those treacherous Pequots, and almost annihilated them. Doubtless there were some among these ninety heroes whose grandchildren one hundred years later helped to change the dense forest that covered these hills into a fruitful field.

But we turn now to those who the following year, 1638, settled in New Haven. They were mostly families, possessing considerable wealth, from London and its vicinity. They were decided in their religious character, and well fitted to found a truly Christian colony. They were followed the next year by another colony of similar culture, who planted themselves in Guilford and its vicinity. To us it seems a novel bargain that they made with the Indians in 1639, giving them thirteen coats for the land of the seven towns of New Haven, Branford, Wallingford, East Haven, Woodbridge, Cheshire, and North Haven. These towns of Wallingford and Guilford, then settled, were the towns from whence, ninety-nine years later, came most of the fathers of Goshen.

These colonies of Connecticut possessed a most liberal charter, granted them by Charles II.; and while almost all the surrounding colonies gave up their charters, our fathers, inflexible as a rock, never yielded up theirs to the hand of any tyrant. Thus our commonwealth grew in wealth and population, governing themselves almost as freely as now, their General Assembly meetings for two sessions each year in Hartford and New Haven; and the men gathered there in our early history would no doubt compare favorably with those of our own time.

In the year 1737 our native town, like most of those around it, was an unbroken wilderness. It was not, so far as we can learn, the permanent home of the red man, although in some seasons of the year his hunting-ground. Goshen, with the six towns lying north and west of it, were called "Western Lands," belonging to the Connecticut colony.

In October, 1737, the Assembly ordered that these

* This chapter was contributed by Deacon Edward Norton, being condensed from an address delivered by him at Goshen, July 4, 1876.

seven townships be laid out and sold at auction, the town of Salisbury to be divided into twenty-five rights, and the towns of Goshen, Norfolk, Canaan, Cornwall, Kent, and Sharon to be divided into fifty-three rights each. Each town must reserve one right for the first settled minister, one for the permanent future support of the ministry, and one for the schools; and no permission was given to encroach upon the three hundred acres in each town granted to Yale College.

Eleven years before—viz., in 1726—three gentlemen of Wallingford, Durham, and Haddam, all magistrates, had received for some service rendered, or possibly as a gift, three hundred acres of land lying in the wilderness now called Goshen. In 1731 they surveyed it, but did not occupy it themselves. A few years later, certainly as early as 1737, it was occupied, and there must have been two dwellings erected upon it by Benjamin Frisbie and Ebenezer Hill. This was called ever afterward the "Esquire's Farm." The time for the selling of the township of "A," or Goshen, as it was soon after called, was fixed by the Assembly to be the first Tuesday in December, 1737.

Purchasers appeared during that winter and the following spring and summer; and we find in our first record that one Thomas Marvin was paid for warning the first meeting of the purchasers the large sum of seven pounds ten shillings. In what way he warned it we do not know; but perhaps he traveled about the State, and notified them all to assemble in Litchfield on Sept. 27, 1738.

And now let us look in upon the fathers of Goshen assembled at the house of Capt. John Buel in Litchfield on that September day. It was a meeting fraught with interest not only to them, but to the thousands of their descendants who have since been born and reared here, and whose remains repose in the cemeteries of Goshen, or are scattered among the cities of the dead in our broad land. What would we not give to-day could we in reality look upon those men of the past! We should gaze upon a group of thirty men or more, fourteen of whom had wended their way hither from Wallingford, three from Guilford, three from Simsbury, and one from each of the towns of West Hartford, Windsor, Stonington, Lyme, and New Haven, while six of the number were already located in Litchfield. There seem to have been sixteen absentees, whose interests were intrusted to a committee appointed for the purpose, as well as to take care of the three public rights. After a brief preliminary meeting, they adjourned to the next morning at "8 of y^{e} clock." That was the morning of Sept. 28, 1738, and, according to the record,—

"Y^{e} s^{d} meeting was opened according to adjournment above s^{d}, and it was then voted by said purchasers in s^{d} meeting, that we will proceed to lay out Two Divisions of Land in s^{d} township of Goshen, viz.: Two fifty-acre Lots to Each Right or Whol share, each Lot to be equal to fifty acres of y^{e} Best Land, and Hee that Draws y^{e} last Choice in y^{e} First Draught, shall have y^{e} First Choice in y^{e} second division, and so on successively back, according to y^{e} Draught of Choice, until it comes to Him who made y^{e} first Choice, or had y^{e} First Draught."

We next find them drawing by lot their numbers from 1 up to 53. It was a drawing in which there were no blanks, for No. 53, as well as No. 1, drew himself a farm of about four hundred and eighty-three acres. The town, nine miles in length by four and a half in breadth, would give them fifty-three such farms.

But, unlike the first persons who came to Litchfield in 1715, who first purchased that town of the Indians for the sum of fifteen pounds, and afterwards, in 1718, had to pay the colony only the trifling sum of one and three-quarter farthings per acre, or about seventeen and one-half shillings each for a farm of four hundred and eighty-three acres, these fathers of Goshen had to pay into the treasury of His Most Gracious Majesty's colony of Connecticut the sum of one hundred and thirty to one hundred and eighty pounds each. It is evident that few, if any, of them were able to pay down for their land, and bonds with security were required of each.

We cannot surely know the value of the pound sterling then. If we assume a pound to be the same then that it was in the salary stipulated to be paid the first minister two years later,—viz., twenty-eight shillings, to be accounted one ounce of silver Troy weight, making a pound about eighty-three cents,—then our fathers paid about twenty-six cents per acre for the lands of Goshen.

But we can in imagination see them that September morning, after their lots were all drawn, making their way through the wildwood to Goshen. They would naturally pause a few moments at the two houses already standing, near where Mr. Watts Brooks now lives, where Mr. Hill and Mr. Frisbie had located themselves. Another house stood on East Street, built by Mr. Samuel Hinman, and we do not know how many of them found a temporary home at these three houses during the time of selecting their future homes. Now we lose sight of them until they next meet in Litchfield, three months later, Dec. 1, 1738, at which time they again resort to lot, and in the same manner as before draw for choice, and locate third and fourth divisions of land. This dividing up of their four-hundred-and-eighty-acre rights into ten divisions, to be drawn at five drawings, gave them more opportunity to know the quality of the lands in the town.

Again they are hidden from our view until they meet in Litchfield, Sept. 26, 1739, and at this meeting they, like Abraham of old, provide a place where they may bury their dead. It is thought there had been a death in the family of Mr. Hill in 1737; but in our little colony, now organized, in Goshen there had been three deaths in the July previous to this meeting, in 1739. They were all children of Mr. Christopher Grimes, whose home was one-quarter of a mile south of Mr. William Norton's house. Abraham Grimes, thirteen years of age, headed a procession oh, how long!—a procession which has been marching on ever since to the graveyards of Goshen. He was followed by a brother, who died five days after, and a sister three weeks afterward.

The first child born in Goshen bore the novel name of "Billiores Hill." The date of his appearance is not known, but it was before 1739.

At the same meeting, in October, 1739, they appointed Capt. Benajah Williams as their agent to present a memorial to the General Assembly. This memorial does not appear on any old record in our town, but the following is copied from the manuscript records of the colony at Hartford, and gives us light in regard to the progress made in our settlement at this date:

"To the Honorable General Court of His Majesty's Colony of Connecticut, Sitting in New Haven in s^d^ Colony, the memorial of y^e^ Proprietors of y^e^ Township of Goshen, humbly sheweth

"That your Honor's Memorialists, Purchasers of s^d^ Township, in pursuance of y^e^ orders and Direction of this Assembly, have been endeavoring to settle and improve y^e^ Lands in s^d^ Township, and accordingly, fourty of y^e^ Proprietors are now Living in s^d^ Township, and y^e^ Rest are preparing to do likewise, but for want of the authority and privileges and favors usually granted to new places, are not able to proceed in promoting the General good of y^e^ place as we desire. Therefore, in confidence of the favor of Honorable Assembly towards us in these matters, we humbly Request that you would be pleased to grant to us the following particulars, viz.:

"That we may be invested with, and have and enjoy, the priviledges and authority of a Town, as is usually granted to other Towns in the Government.

"2, that a tax of fourty shillings a year upon each right, for four years next coming, may be Levyed and collected of each proprietor for y^e^ support of a minister in s^d^ Place, and

"3^dly^, in as much as y^e^ time of payment for y^e^ s^d^ Rights is about come, and by Reason of y^e^ Rumours and Reports of a war, many of us are Defeated of a method we proposed to raise money to Pay for s^d^ Rights, we humbly request y^e^ favor of this Court in Lengthening y^e^ time of payment for s^d^ Rights upon interest, either on y^e^ present or other security, as your Honors shall Judge Just, or otherwise Grant such other relief and encouragement to us in forwarding y^e^ settlement and advancement of y^e^ interest of s^d^ place.

"and we as in Duty bound shall ever pray,

"Benaijah Williams,
"Agent for s^d^ Proprietors.

"New Haven, Oct. 16, 1739."

We next come to the period of the first town-meeting of Goshen, which was lawfully warned and held in Goshen, Dec. 6, 1739. From the record of this meeting, the fathers of Goshen seemed to have made great progress during the short space of one year. They appointed five selectmen, two constables, three grand jurors, three listers, three surveyors of highways, one collector of taxes, who was also treasurer (Moses Lyman, who had come from Northampton during the year), one town clerk (Mr. Pettibone, a lawyer), three horse branders, whose duty it was to mark all animals, so that owners could know them in the absence of fences, there being on record sixty-six different marks in Goshen, three fence-viewers, one leather-sealer, three men a committee to exchange land to accommodate for highways; two men were given permission to build town pounds, and the selectmen were "instructed to ascertain the places of holding the meetings for publick worship of God."

One month later, Jan. 11, 1740, at another meeting, they voted to "hire a minister to preach the gospel in s^d^ town, and that s^d^ minister come among us as a probationer." They added some names to the lists of officers appointed in December, and also appointed "Othniel Gillett as a grave-digger," and made a red oak-tree, which stood not far from the house of John H. Wadhams, to be a "sign-post for the year ensuing."

The winter passed, to some the first, the second to others, spent in Goshen, and they met April 21, 1740, and extended a call to Rev. Stephen Heaton to settle here as a minister, offering him one hundred and ten pounds as a salary, besides fifty pounds in labor, to be worked out at five to six shillings a day. At the present value of silver per ounce, this salary and labor together made about one hundred and thirty-three dollars. They also sent a committee to the Assembly with a petition that they would send a committee to fix the location of a meeting-house.

In November of that year Mr. Heaton was ordained at the house of Capt. John Beach, on East Street, the spot now marked by a tree transplanted there in 1876.

Thus was our town fairly started on its career in two short years, and just at this point we are again indebted to our colonial manuscript records for the following paper, without which we might never have known the difficulties our fathers encountered:

PETITION FOR RELIEF.

"To the Hon. General Assembly of his Majesty's English Colony of Conn. in New England in America, now convened and sitting in Hartford in s^d^ Colony (May, 1741).

"The Humble Memorial of David Whitney, of Canaan, Agent for s^d^ Town, Samuel Pettibone, of Goshen, Agent for s^d^ Town, Timothy Hatch, of Kent, Agent of s^d^ Town, and George Halloway, of Cornwal, agent of s^d^ Town, in behalf of themselves and the rest of the purchasers who have settled, and are actually inhabiting s^d^ Towns. Humbly Sheweth that the Memorialists purchased there in the several above named Towns of the Governor and Company of this Colony, or of those who purchased the same, so that either as first purchasers or at second hand, we are become indebted in many considerable sums to the Governor and Company, and the times of payment are expired or very near. That the settling of new Towns is ever attended with very many and great difficulties, but it has happened in respect to the memorialists that their settlement has been attended with Greater Difficulties and distress than there ever was known an instance of in this colony, for, may it please your Honours, the unparalleled Extremity and severity of the Last winter has not only totally exhausted all the little stock of provisions and necessary supports of Life which we had purchased and procured from other sources, at great pains and cost, but has occasioned us to expend our money which we had set apart and depended upon to pay our purchases and for the support of our family's and Creatures, and after all our Lawful endeavors, Divine Providence has so far frowned upon us that a very great part of our Stock of cattle, sheep, and swine are dead, and the very truth is, that many of the settled inhabitants amongst us, when we lay ouselves in our beds, have nothing to depend upon but the care and Goodness of a merciful and omnipotent Being for our next day's provisions and support.

"These Difficulties are all well known to your Honours, with many other Difficulties and Distresses we are under, though your Hon^rs^, we hope, have not had that fatal experimental knowledge thereof which we have felt. These things, may it please your Honours, have rendered it utterly impossible for us to make payment of the Bonds we have given the Gov^r^ and Company for our purchases by the time limited for the payment of the same.

"So that if your Honours should be strict to demand the same of us which is due, we can have no other view but the utter ruin, &c., of our Towns and plantations, notwithstanding we have in Truth and Fidelity, used all Lawful and honest ends, and to Conform ourselves to the act of this Colony respecting our Rights and Settlements. Moreover, we Humbly observe that there were many of the first purchasers of Rights who have made merchandise of their Rights to their great advantage, and there are many large tracts of Land in our Towns belonging to non-settlers, or non-resident proprietors, and those bearing little or no Burthen amongst us, but have the value of their Lands equally increasing with ours, casts a double Burthen upon us in respect to the settlement of ministers, building meeting-houses, &c., and we cannot but think it very reasonable that the Lands of such non-settlers should be taxed Double the Lands of the Settlers.

"And we beg leave further to show, that we are the Frontier Towns at the nearest corner of the Government, north and west, and if it should happen that there should be a Warr with the French and Indians (which God of his mercy prevent), we shall be most exposed of any of the Towns in the Colony. Wherefore, we are encouraged, from the wonted Goodness of this Honorable Assembly, to pray your Hon^{rs} to grant us the following Things for our Relief and Redress: first, that your Hon^{rs} would lengthen out the time of the payment of our Bonds for our Purchases, or forbear us of payment of the same till the time limited for our settlement is expired, and that your Honors would remit the interest of the money for such forbearance.

"2^{dly}. That your Honors would lay a Tax upon the Lands of non-resident Proprietors for the support of the Gospel and building meeting-houses in the above mentioned Towns, dowble the Tax of the Lands of the settlers, or for as much per acre on the Right and as long as your Honours in Wisdom and Justice shall think fit.

"3^{dly}. That your Honours would grant unto each of the s^{d} Towns a Town stock of powder and Lead, as much as your Honours shall think fit and convenient.

"4^{thly}. That your Hon^{rs} would upon the publick charge of the Colony Give unto each of s^{d} towns a full Colony Law-book.

"And your Hon^{rs} Humble and Distressed memorialists as in duty bound shall ever pray, &c.

"DAVID WHITNEY, SAM^{L}. PETTIBONE,
"TIM^{Y} HATCH, GEO. HALLOWAY,
"Agents.

"HARTFORD, May 19, 1741."

Hardly five years had passed after Mr. Heaton's ordination before we find upon the record a most courteous opening of negotiations with him, as follows:

"Voted, that we will choose a Committee to treat with our Rev. Pastor about some reasonable and loving terms of agreement, so that the door may be opened, if he in his wisdom shall think fit, to seek for an orderly dismission from the work of the ministry in this place, or to treat with about making some suitable alterations."

But the first minister had no idea of abandoning his place, and remained pastor until 1753, when he was dismissed, but continued to reside in Goshen until his death in 1788.

THE PATENT.

In 1745 the town applied to the Assembly for a patent giving to us town privileges. It was not given until Oct. 2, 1749, as we suppose, for the reason that some of the fifty proprietors had failed to comply with the conditions of their purchase. They were required to enter upon their land within two years, and build and finish a house eighteen feet square and seven feet between sill and plate, and clear, fence, and subdue six acres of land, and to remain thereon for three successive years. Failure on the part of some to do this, or to pay for their purchases, may have delayed the desired patent, which bears the signature of "Jonathan Lare, Governor," and,

"By virtue of the power vested in him and the Colony of our late Sovereign, King Charles 2nd, of blessed memory, it confirms to them their possession to the woods, the timber, the trees, underwoods, lands, waters, brooks, ponds, fishing, fowling, mines, minerals, and precious stones within and upon said Town; to be held of his Majesty, his heirs, or successors; or of his Majesty's manor of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent, and Kingdom of Great Britain, in free and common socage, and not in capite, nor by Knight service yielding and paying. Therefore unto our Sovereign Lord, the King, his heirs, and successors, only one-fifth part of all the ore of Gold and Silver, which from time to time, and at all times hereafter shall be gotten, had, or obtained thereon, in lieu of all service, duty, or demands whatsoever."

The fathers of Goshen never had occasion to send any of the gold or silver ore to his majesty, and it is doubtful whether any of the fines due to the sovereign for killing the king's deer in Goshen were ever collected, for in April, 1741, it was voted to give Daniel Harris, Sr., Benjamin Frisbie, and Daniel Harris, Jr., that part of their fine for killing deer which belonged to the town. Five years later they voted thirty shillings to Timothy Stanley for killing a wolf.

Frequent changes occurred in our town, and it seems likely that about thirty of the forty-six original proprietors who purchased the fifty rights remained here, or were represented by their sons, during the first ten or twenty years of our history. The others sold their rights to men who came to reside in Goshen, as in the case of Mr. Lyman, who came from Northampton in 1739; Ebenezer and Samuel Norton, from Durham in 1739; John Wright, from Wethersfield in 1742; Mr. Griswold, from Windsor; Nathaniel and Timothy Stanley, from Farmington in 1742; Benoni Hills, from Durham in 1741; Noah Wadhams, from Middletown in 1741; John North, from Farmington in 1745; and soon after many others.

Passing on a few years, to 1756, our colony was eighteen years old, and we now for the first time learn our population from the first census. We numbered 610 inhabitants; Litchfield, 1366; Hartford, only 2926; New Haven, 5085; Windsor, 4170; while Middletown, the largest place in the colony, numbered 5446.

THE FRENCH AND INDIAN WAR.

This was soon after the commencement of the French and Indian war, which lasted from 1754 to 1762. It is impossible to know at this distant day the names of all who served His Majesty George III. during those eight years. We have, however, the names of twenty Goshen men, three of whom were killed, four died of sickness, and one was severely wounded and kept a prisoner five years. These eight men, out of the little band of twenty, deserve more than a passing notice. Of the three killed, Lieut. Timothy Gaylord was the first to fall. He made his will before he left Goshen, in the early spring of 1758, and took his last look at his home cirele, among whom were two little boys, afterwards enrolled in our Revolutionary army. But he never saw his little son Joseph, who was born soon after he left home (who was the father of Capt. Willard Gaylord), and who at the age of eighteen was fighting, with his brothers, in our Revolution. Lieut. Timothy Gaylord fell by an Indian's hand in the defeat of Gen. Abercrombie,

July 9, 1758. Col. Bezaleel Beebe, of Litchfield, who was fighting near him, and, like him, sheltered behind a tree, had just spoken to Gaylord, and was looking at him for a reply, when he observed a sudden break in the skin of his forehead, and the lieutenant instantly fell dead. A few days after, Col. Beebe and his friends were able to come again upon that ground, and the brave officer who had left his home in Goshen was still there, and was buried hastily, their bayonets being all they had with which to dig his grave.

